The hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), the education spokesman, I understand, for the Opposition, said that the strikers should go to arbitration, which self-evidently must be right. I hope that we shall hear the same call from the shadow Secretary of State for Transport, and the deputy leader of the Labour party, who is sponsored by one of the striking unions. I should also hope to hear the same call from the shadow Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. New Labour laws to make strikes easier are exactly what the country does not want—and the Government will ensure that it does not get them.

Mr. Blair: Given that, as we speak, talks are taking place both here between the British and Irish Governments and in Belfast in respect of the peace process, after what, by common consent, must be judged the most damaging two weeks in the affairs of Northern Ireland since August 1994, does the Prime Minister agree that there are three essential foundation stones for rebuilding support for peace? The first is that the two Governments renew their relationship of trust, based firmly on the Anglo-Irish Agreement, the Downing street declaration and the other negotiated agreements between them that remain intact and valid. Secondly, all sides must demonstrate their complete commitment to the rule of law and the Government their even-handedness in its application, whether in response to the threat of violence by those engaged in marches, or the evil punishment beatings that claimed their latest victim last night. Thirdly, all parties to the talks on Northern Ireland should move from matters of procedure to matters of substance as soon as is humanly possible, so that we can show the people of Northern Ireland that the constitutional path to peace has life in it, hope in it and, indeed, is the only sane route to the future.

The Prime Minister: The past 14 days have certainly been extremely difficult for everyone in Northern Ireland, as the right hon. Gentleman said. I shall try to respond to his three points. During the past few years, the British and Irish Governments have worked very closely together. It is important for the success of the talks that that co-operation continues, and it is this Government's intention that that co-operation shall continue. The Irish Government and the British Government do not, of course, agree about every issue under discussion, but I believe that our relations are strong enough on Government-to-Government and personal levels for those talks to continue, even while we seek a solution to the disagreements before us. That is what we are seeking to do.

Of course I agree with the right hon. Gentleman that the rule of law needs to prevail in Northern Ireland, as it does elsewhere in the United Kingdom. The scenes that we have witnessed over the past few days—the violence, the intimidation and the aftermath of those scenes—are wholly unacceptable and should have no place in Northern Ireland or anywhere else in the United Kingdom.

As to the future and the talks, I entirely agree that progress so far has been inadequate. It is our intention to try to ensure that the talks move forward rapidly from talks about procedure to talks about substance.

Our intention will be to try to turn the setbacks of the past couple of weeks into a positive advantage as the talks resume, and we will bring all our strength to bear to achieve that.

Mr. Yeo: In view of the remarkable transformation of Britain's competitive position, which has been brought about by our opt-out from the European social chapter and the virtual elimination of strikes, does my right hon. Friend share my astonishment that a political party that claims to be seeking office should not only boast about its intentions to burden British business with the European social chapter obligation but cannot even unite its Back Benchers in condemning today's strike on the London underground?

The Prime Minister: I agree with my hon. Friend about the United Kingdom's competitive position at the moment. It is very important that we remain competitive in the areas to which he has referred, as well as others.

I think that I heard the deputy leader of the Labour party say a moment ago, "What about your social conscience?"—

Mr. Prescott: His social contract.

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman does not seem roundly to condemn today's strikes, which are damaging our competitiveness, as I believe he should. No doubt his relationship with his sponsors prohibits him from doing so.

Q3. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 July. [36437]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Hughes: On the day when the Cabinet has apparently decided to start a new campaign to clamp down on public expenditure, beginning once again with freezing the pay of public sector workers, which it has no doubt done to try to pave the way for tax bribes for its supporters before the election, what does the Prime Minister say to parents in my borough who find that the secondary school that their children attend is having to go to the British American Tobacco company for sponsorship to the tune of several hundred thousand pounds? Is it acceptable that the Government have so underfunded public services to try to produce tax cuts that schooling has become dependent on profits from tobacco sales, when under-age smoking is at its highest level for 10 years?

The Prime Minister: The hon. Gentleman knows that he is making a silly point. He also knows about the growth in expenditure on, and provision for, education over recent years, the dramatic increase in spending per pupil and the improved educational opportunities that now exist. As for pay in the public sector, our view remains that set out by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor last September—that pay and price increases should be offset by efficiency savings. That has been our policy for some time, and we renewed it this morning.

Sir Michael Marshall: Can my right hon. Friend tell us what information Her Majesty's Government have received about the crash of the Trans World Airlines airliner last night? Will he take the opportunity to express the sympathy of the House to all involved, and to reaffirm that, if terrorism is involved, international co-operation must be accelerated and that this country will play a full part in that process?

The Prime Minister: I can certainly confirm my hon. Friend's last point. As yet, we have received no solid information about the cause of the dreadful crash that occurred a few hours ago. A great deal of examination is taking place, and as soon as I have further information I shall ensure that the House is aware of it. I have of course conveyed the sympathy of the House to the American Government, and told them that if they feel that we can assist in any way, we shall be happy to do so.

Q4. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 July. [36438]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Ainsworth: To return to the leaked Treasury document, is the Prime Minister aware that his right hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood)—I believe that he is the Prime Minister's right hon. Friend again—said this morning on the radio that some of the ideas in the leaked document would be included in the manifesto? Can the Prime Minister tell us which ideas—the privatisation of roads, cuts in post-16 education, the scrapping of old-age pensions, or the complete dismantling of the welfare state?

The Prime Minister: The hon. Gentleman stood up to ask that question immediately behind a shadow Chancellor who proposes to cut child benefit for 16 to 18-year-olds and take about £1,000 from every family with two children of that age who want to go into further education. If the hon. Gentleman is worried about manifesto pledges, he should worry about his own side's manifesto pledges, which would take child benefit away from people, raise extra taxes in Scotland and increase trade union rights so that there can be more strikes—and no doubt more sponsorship for the Labour party. Instead of talking drivel about policies that are not Government policies, he should concentrate on the drivel that is the policies of the Opposition.

Q5. Mr. Amess: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 July. [36439]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Amess: Does my right hon. Friend agree that yesterday's welcome news that unemployment has hit a five-year low—[HON. MEMBERS: "In Basildon?"]—is in part due to the Government's reforms to curb trade union policy? Is not new Labour's policy—[HON. MEMBERS: "For Basildon?"]—to give privileges to trade unions, which no previous Labour Government would have done, further proof that new phoney Labour—[Laughter.]—would destroy the economic success of this country with dangerous new policies for Basildon, Southend and the rest of the country?

The Prime Minister: As ever, my hon. Friend speaks for the country as well as for Basildon and Southend, West. There is no doubt that yesterday's news about jobs was extremely good. We are now into the fourth successive year of falling unemployment. There is also increasing growth in new inward investment.

Mr. Janner: They are fiddled statistics.

The Prime Minister: The hon. and learned Member shouts about statistics. They are new jobs. He may regard them as statistics, but I see them as new jobs. I welcome inward investment and new jobs, even in the hon. and learned Gentleman's constituency. I welcome them in any constituency. How he can refer to them as statistics when they are people's hopes, livelihoods and futures, I cannot imagine. However, the policies to which my hon. Friend referred would damage the lives, opportunities and futures of the hon. and learned Gentleman's constituents and everybody else's.

Q6. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 July. [36440]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave a few moments ago.

Mrs. Campbell: Will the Prime Minister say in public what the Foreign Secretary told the positive Europe group of Tory Members last Monday: that there will be no toughening of the Government's stance on Europe—the Prime Minister is shaking his head already—that there will be no ruling out of a single currency and that there will be no additional demands for the repatriation of powers from Europe?

The Prime Minister: I shall tell the hon. Lady exactly what my right hon. and learned Friend told my hon. Friends. He set out the policy in the public document that determines our negotiating posture for the intergovernmental conference—precisely and in detail. If the hon. Lady has not yet read it, I invite her to do so as she will find it a clear-cut and excellent document.

Mr. Tracey: Does my right hon. Friend share my dismay at the fact that a group of Opposition Members should publicly support the striking tube train drivers who are grinding London to a halt and costing Londoners and London commerce millions of pounds? Does he agree that the public must be deeply angered by the irresponsible action of union members and the last-minute pussyfooting by the Leader of the Opposition in not condemning the strike?

The Prime Minister: I have not seen a great amount of support for opposition to the strike from Opposition Members. No doubt the opposition to the strike will be clearly expressed by every Front Bencher over the next few days. Not only will there be a request that the parties go to arbitration—which is surely self-evidently right—but there will be a clear-cut condemnation of a strike that is causing a great deal of difficulty for many innocent people and damaging the industries concerned. When will we get that condemnation from the Opposition?

ROYAL ASSENT

Madam Speaker: I have to notify the House, in accordance with the Royal Assent Act 1967, that the Queen has signified Her Royal Assent to the following Acts:

City of London (Approved Premises for Marriage) Act 1996

Henry Johnson, Sons & Co., Limited Act 1996

Belfast Charitable Society Act 1996

Business of the House

3.30 pm

Mrs. Ann Taylor (Dewsbury): May I ask the Leader of the House for details of future business?

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. Tony Newton): The business for next week will be as follows:

MONDAY 22 JULY—Proceedings on the Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill.

Consideration of Lords amendments to the Housing Bill.

TUESDAY 23 JULY—Opposition Day [20th allotted day]. Until about 7 o'clock, there will be a debate on the future of the welfare state, followed by a debate on the role of the voluntary sector in British society. Both debates will arise on Opposition motions.

Consideration of any Lords amendments which may be received to the Broadcasting Bill [Lords].

WEDNESDAY 24 JULY—Until 2 o'clock, there will be debates on the motion for the Adjournment of the House, the first of which is the three-hour general debate that precedes a recess.

Proceedings on the following Bills, which are consolidation measures: Education Bill [Lords]; School Inspections Bill [Lords]; Deer (Scotland) Bill [Lords].

Debate on the accelerated slaughter programme, on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

Motion relating to the draft code of conduct for Members.

Motion on the Central Railway Order.

The House may also be asked to consider any Lords messages which may be received.

The House will also wish to know that, on Tuesday 23 July, there will be a debate on documents relating to the common fisheries policy in European Standing Committee A.

Subject to the progress of business, it will be proposed that the House should rise for the summer Adjournment on Wednesday 24 July, until Monday 14 October.

The provisional business for the first week back after the summer Adjournment will be as follows:

MONDAY 14 OCTOBER AND TUESDAY 15 OCTOBER—There will be a debate on a Government motion to approve the defence estimates 1996 (Cm 3223).

WEDNESDAY 16 OCTOBER—Until 2.30 pm, there will be debates on the motion for the Adjournment of the House.

Debate on a motion to take note of the outstanding reports of the Public Accounts Committee, to which the Government have replied.

It will also be proposed that, on Tuesday 15 October, there will be a debate on the Merger Regulation in European Standing Committee B.

Details of the relevant documents will be given in the Official Report. [Tuesday 23 July: European Standing Committee A—European Community Documents: a) 7833/96; Common Fisheries Policy: Multi-Annual Guidance Programme (MAGP IV). b) Unnumbered; Common Fisheries Policy: Restructuring of the Community Fleet. c) Unnumbered; Conservation of Fishery Resources: Technical measures. d) Unnumbered; Fisheries Agreement: Mauritania. e) Unnumbered; Fisheries Agreement: Angola. f) Unnumbered; Fisheries Agreement: Sao Tomé e Principe. g) Unnumbered; Annual Report on Multiannual Guidance Programme for the Fishing Fleet at the end of 1995 (MAGP III). h) 7701/96; Common Fisheries Policy: Satellite-Based Vessel Monitoring System. Relevant European Legislation Committee Reports a) to g) HC 51-xxv (1995-96). h) HC 51-xxiii (1995-96). Tuesday 15 October: European Standing Committee B—European Community Document: Unnumbered; The Merger Regulation. Relevant European Legislation Committee Report HC 51-xxvi (1995-96).]

The House will wish to know that, subject to the progress of business in the period after the recess, the House will meet for prorogation on Thursday 17 October. The new session will be opened on Wednesday 23 October. As I have already announced, the Budget will be on Tuesday 26 November.

Mrs. Taylor: May I thank the Leader of the House for that response, including the long-term information that he has given? May I also thank him for finding time for a debate next Wednesday on the code of conduct, as that will be of assistance to the House?

The Leader of the House has announced that there will be an Adjournment debate on Wednesday on BSE. Will he confirm that the Government intend that that should be a time-limited debate, and will he tell us whether that limit is an hour and a half? Will he ensure that the Minister opening the debate spells out at the beginning the implications for British farmers—and, in turn, for the European bank—of the failure on the part of the Government to lay the BSE orders on slaughter and compensation?

Many people, both inside and outside this House, will not think that a general debate of an hour and a half is an adequate substitute for the action that was promised. What has happened to the orders, as it was clear that they were to be laid and were to come into effect before the deadline agreed with the EU of 1 August this year?

It is always difficult to ask for extra debates so close to the recess, and I do not intend to do so. But it is right to ask for a clear statement about the decisions that may or may not have been made by the Government on MOD procurement. Can we have a statement on the progress of the £4 billion-worth of important defence procurement orders that are currently being considered by the Government?

There is very real concern among hon. Members on both sides of the House and among people throughout the country that those orders, which the Government have determined are vital to Britain's security, are being repeatedly postponed. Is that not jeopardising tens of thousands of British jobs in the defence interests, and damaging the interests of the armed forces? Does the Chancellor of the Exchequer intend to postpone defence orders until next year's public expenditure round? If so, will that not cause great uncertainty for the defence industry and for the services? This is an urgent matter, and Parliament should be told of the Government's intentions.

Finally, there is one issue of concern at the end of the Session that is uniting hon. Members as very few do. That issue is the future of the BBC World Service.

Is the Leader of the House aware of the evidence that the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave to the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs this morning? That evidence clearly shows not only that the BBC has been at fault because it has not consulted properly on the matter, but that Ministers have allowed the situation to drift.

Does the Leader of the House agree that, although politicians should not interfere in the day-to-day operational decisions of the BBC, the question of the future of the World Service is no mere operational matter? As the Foreign Secretary will meet the chairman of the BBC governors next Wednesday, which may be too late for any statement to the House, will the Leader of the House assure us that Parliament will have an opportunity to have an input into that vital decision, and that no final decision on the future of the World Service will be taken until Parliament has had the chance to have a say, even if that is after the recess?

Mr. Newton: I shall take those points in reverse order. I certainly accept that the future of the World Service, which is held in such high regard not only in this country but around the world, is not simply an operational matter, although operational issues are also involved. For that reason, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary, as the hon. Lady has already mentioned, intends to have discussions with the chairman of the BBC next week, and he has made it clear that he will want to be satisfied that any changes meet our concerns. I shall bring the hon. Lady's comments in the latter part of her question to my right hon. and learned Friend's attention.

On the subject of defence equipment contracts, a decision will be announced as soon as the assessment of the various bids has been completed. It is hoped that it will be possible to make announcements before too long, but the programmes are large and complex, and a wide range of factors must be considered.

I can confirm that I intend that the debate on the accelerated slaughter programme should last for one and a half hours. The purpose is to enable the Minister to report on the situation, as I think the House would expect, before the recess, but, if the hon. Lady followed the exchanges that took place during Agriculture questions, she will know my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture made it clear that compulsory slaughter will not take place until the House has had an opportunity to debate the order.

I am grateful to the hon. Lady for her kind words about the debate that I have announced on the draft code of conduct for Members, and, once again, I thank her for the contribution that she has made to the preparation of that code. I also thank her for her kind words about the advance information I have been able to give about key dates for people's diaries.

Sir Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): As the confusing and worrying statement by the American authorities yesterday about global warming has created a reaction in some of our constituencies that varies from panic to indifference, would it not be helpful if a Minister could make a statement next week about the exact nature of the problem of global warming and what can be done? That would help us all, because the issue worries many people.

Mr. Newton: My impression is that a wide variety of information is available on the subject, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has put much effort into those matters for a long time. I will bring my hon. Friend's specific query to my right hon. Friend's attention.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): The announcement of forward business is welcome. It seems to me that we will nearly complete business before the summer, and perhaps the Leader of the House will soon be able to go a step further and give fixed dates for the start of the parliamentary year, instead of the nonsense of a three-day spillover, followed by a week off, after which we start all over again.

The Leader of the House has announced the general accelerated slaughter debate next Wednesday. That is welcome, but can he tell us whether we will definitely debate the order during the spillover, whether all the aspects of the scheme will be in the order and be debatable—including compensation—and whether the House will be able to make a decision on the matter, so that the ban can be lifted by the Government's self-imposed deadline of the beginning of November?

Mr. Newton: As I said, those matters were pretty extensively covered in Agriculture questions. I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman was here, but I followed them from afar, although not very far afar. I am not in a position to add to what my right hon. and learned Friend said or to what I said a moment or two ago, but the debate on Wednesday will provide an opportunity for the Minister to set things out more fully.

Sir Roger Sims (Chislehurst): What form will the debate on the draft code of conduct take? Will it be on a motion under which the House is expected to approve the code in toto, or will there be an opportunity to table amendments?

Mr. Newton: The debate will take place on a motion inviting the House to approve the code and the guidelines, and, like other such motions, it will be open to amendment. Whether those amendments are selected is a matter for higher powers than me.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): Does the Leader of the House recollect that it was Sir Richard Scott's view, in paragraphs D4.40, D4.42, D6.69 and F4.68 of his report, that, if questions from me on the detail of Lear Fan and Colchester Lathes had been properly and truthfully answered, the whole course of events would have been very different? Therefore, I ask him, why on earth has he put on today's Order Paper "Notice of Motion for an Unopposed Return" in the name of the President of the Board of Trade, "Export of Defence Equipment and Dual Use Goods to Iraq"? Is that about cover for legal challenge, and if so, cover for legal challenge from whom?

Mr. Newton: As the hon. Gentleman says, the motion was placed on the Order Paper by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, and it certainly is connected with the fact that today, what I understand are about 20,000 pages of documentation following on from the Scott committee report are being published in CD-ROM form. I will bring the question to the attention of my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): May we have a debate on the planning system as it relates to the accelerated culling programme, and specifically the provision of incinerator plants, so that I can raise with the House the alarm, and despair in many cases, of thousands of my constituents at what are fortunately informal proposals at present to site such an incinerator plant in my constituency at Stourport? Last week, the proposals brought forth a public meeting, attended by 1,000 people, and there will be a further public meeting this weekend, attended by a similar number.

Mr. Newton: My hon. Friend will understand that I would not wish to be drawn into commenting on a specific local planning controversy, but I will ensure that his remarks are brought to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): Today's amazing news is that, of the 1.5 million people who were robbed by the pensions industry by being missold personal pensions and being persuaded to leave their good-quality occupational pensions and the state earnings-related pension scheme, only 7,000 have been offered any recompense, because of the wicked obstructionist tactics by the pensions industry.

How can anyone propose to privatise more pensions when we know that the story is that private pensions provide very poor value, and that the pensions provided by the state earnings-related pension scheme and national insurance are well run and highly efficient, and provide splendid value?

Mr. Newton: I do not accept the hon. Gentleman's point about personal pensions, which is a wild generalisation, but I have no wish to enter into an altercation with him. The Government do support the Securities and Investments Board's initiative to secure redress for the relatively small number—

Mr. Flynn: One and a half million.

Mr. Newton: Relatively small in comparison with the number of people who have personal pensions. That is the point that the hon. Gentleman does not acknowledge.

The Government support the SIB's initiative to secure redress for the relatively small number of people who stand to lose as a result of the misselling of personal pensions, and we and the regulators are working together to remove the difficulties. We certainly intend that anyone who is found to have lost financially because of misselling will get redress, and that anyone who wants their case reviewed can have it reviewed.

Mrs. Jacqui Lait (Hastings and Rye): What opportunities will there be for a debate about the management of budgets by local authorities such as East Sussex, so that we can advise them how to live within their more than generous budgets?

Mr. Newton: I cannot immediately think of an opportunity for my hon. Friend, but if she were to appear on Wednesday morning, she might be able to put the point to me then. I shall then see whether I have a better answer than I have now.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): Does the Leader of the House accept that two reasons in particular would justify recalling Parliament during the long summer recess: first, Northern Ireland, where certain developments could clearly take place; and, secondly, public spending cuts? Will he pledge that, in those circumstances, he would seriously consider a request for the House to return?

Mr. Newton: The Government have shown several times in recent years that, if we judge it necessary to recall the House, the House is recalled. The hon. Gentleman would not expect me to speculate about possible circumstances now. I find his reference to public expenditure a little odd, because the public expenditure round does not conclude until well after the House returns from the recess.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): Does my right hon. Friend accept that those of us whose constituencies have a substantial dairy industry are concerned that next week's debate on the selective cull is too short—just one and a half hours? Many of us want to tell the House how seriously our dairy farmers take the selective cull, and about the damaging impact that it will have on the rural economy for a long time.

On the question raised by the shadow Leader of the House on defence procurement, will my right hon. Friend assure me that those of us who are deeply interested in that matter—Avro International is on the periphery of my constituency—and concerned about the Nimrod 2000 package, will be advised as soon as a decision is made? I see that the Minister of State for Defence Procurement is on the Front Bench.

Mr. Newton: I note both my hon. Friend's points. I assure him that his request to the Ministry of Defence has already been heard.

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): Further to the point raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) about the Ministry of Defence contracts, will the Leader of the House tell the Secretary of State for Defence that my constituents are extremely anxious about the replacement of the maritime patrol aircraft and the continuing delays? Will an announcement be made before the recess so that Members of Parliament concerned about that matter may have a chance to respond to those decisions?

Mr. Newton: I am beginning to think that it might be appropriate if my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement took my place in answering those questions. At any rate, he has clearly heard the questions.

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Mid–Staffordshire): My right hon. Friend will be aware that, on Wednesday, I shall present a ten-minute Bill called the Union Flag Bill to promote the flying of the Union Jack. May we have time for a debate on devolution, as some of my hon. Friends say that, given Labour's devolution policies, under a Labour Government we would have no British flag left to fly?

Mr. Newton: As I have said before, that would be an excellent subject for debate. I merely note with interest that the Opposition have not considered the subject significant enough to use their Supply day next week to discuss it.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray): I recognise that the Minister of State for Defence Procurement cannot take the place of the Leader of the House, but may I again emphasise the importance of the decision that will be taken on defence procurement? Why have members of the media in this House been running round today saying that British Aerospace has been allocated a contract, and that a statement will be made this afternoon, yet, when hon. Members such as myself contacted the Ministry of Defence, we were told that no such information was available?

Exactly what is going on at the Ministry of Defence, and may we have a statement at least tomorrow to try to resolve that problem? The Leader of the House shares my interest in the defence procurement jobs that are available.

Mr. Newton: The hon. Lady is right on her last point. I have already referred the general thrust of her question to my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement. I am not in a position to explain the behaviour of the press.

Mr. Rupert Allason (Torbay): Bearing in mind what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said this afternoon about the tragedy of the jumbo jet crash earlier today, does my right hon. Friend think that it is appropriate to announce an opportunity to discuss tourism, particularly the impact that aircraft safety has on tourism, as soon as possible—either during the short time that we are back or immediately thereafter?

The United Kingdom is the world leader in aircraft safety. For example, it has recently made enormous strides in developing blast-resistant and blast-absorbing material for cargo holds. Is my right hon. Friend aware that airports in the United Kingdom lead the world in providing facilities for the scrutiny of passengers' luggage, thereby ensuring their security? Does he think that it is appropriate for us to have a debate linked to aircraft security, bearing in mind how long it is since we last had a debate on tourism?

Mr. Newton: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for reminding hon. Members—and, I hope, a wider audience—of some very important points about this country's record on these matters. I think it is obvious that I would not be in a position to arrange such a debate in what I have announced so far. However, I do not spurn the idea, and I will bear it in mind in the new Session.

Mr. George Foulkes (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley): I represent many of the workers at British Aerospace in Prestwick and I add my name to those who want an oral statement before the House rises.

This has been a fascinating afternoon—I am glad that I have been in the House. Given all the Royal Assents that were announced earlier by Madam Speaker, the fact that the business to the middle of next week has been announced and the fact that the business for the spillover includes no legislation, will the Leader of the House confirm that the Government have cleared the decks for an October election? Would it not be wise for the Government to say that there will be an early election, which would save Her Majesty and the country the time, the effort and the money of a farce of a Queen's Speech by a lame duck Government that will never be implemented?

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made the position on the first matter entirely clear several times. So far as the second point is concerned, while it would be improper for me to reveal to the hon. Gentleman—despite his charm—the content of the Queen's Speech, I assure him that it will be a substantial, worthwhile and important programme.

Dr. Robert Spink (Castle Point): Could we have a debate next week to explore the possibility of the non-sector fishing fleet, such as that which operates around the coast of Essex, retaining its track record on decommissioning as the producer organisations currently do? During that debate, we could also explore the possibility of phasing out quota hopping and giving quota exemptions to the smaller boats, particularly those under 8 m. I am delighted that the Government are now well disposed to all these ideas.

Mr. Newton: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's words. While I cannot be absolutely certain that his points will be relevant, I draw his attention to the debate that will take place on documents relating to the common fisheries policy in European Standing Committee A on Tuesday 23 July. I remind the House that any hon. Member can take part in the debates if they wish, but they cannot vote, should that be necessary.

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle): Has the Leader of the House had time to look at the Order Book? If so, has he had time to study early-day motion 1192?

[That this House expresses its concern that the forthcoming franchise specification for the West Coast Main Line may fail to provide for the operation of high speed trains; notes that the modernisation and renewal of the West Coast Main Line will only restore the line to 1970s standards and is already costed and included within the base line Core Programme funded through existing and future track access payments; expresses dismay at the current lack of information about the costs, sources of funding and specification for any upgrade to provide for both high speed passenger and piggy back freight operations; further notes that the tender specification for the franchise is due out in October 1996; and, therefore, urges the Chairman of Railtrack, the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Secretary of State for Transport to use their individual and collective endeavours to deliver an upgraded, high speed West Coast Main Line capable of providing journey times between London and Liverpool/Manchester of two hours and between London and Glasgow of four hours.]

The early-day motion is signed by 67 hon. Members. It refers to the upgrading of the west coast main line. Will the Leader of the House allow us to debate this issue next Thursday—I see that Thursday is a clear day? This is important, because a decision will be taken before the House reconvenes in October.

[Mr. Eric Martlew]

We need a high-speed and reliable line on the west coast, which competes with the line on the east coast. If public money is not put into the scheme, and if there is not a commitment from the Government, we will end up with a low-speed, reliable line, and the west coast of Britain will be disadvantaged. We need trains that will travel from Manchester to London in two hours, from Carlisle to London in three hours and from Glasgow to London in a maximum of four hours. Can we have a debate next Thursday?

Mr. Newton: I cannot undertake to extend the sitting to a debate next Thursday on that matter, important though it is—I understand why the hon. Gentleman has raised it. Our position is that Railtrack and the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising are working closely together in order to determine the way forward, although quite a lot of work is still to be done. The coming months will be very important in developing the upgrade project to the point where the Government can take a decision. I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will bear in mind the hon. Gentleman's concerns.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): I congratulate my right hon. Friend on arranging a debate on the selective cull to coincide with the shadow Cabinet elections. I ask him also to arrange for an early debate on early-day motion 1185.

[That this House expresses its full support for all those who are now engaged in re-establishing the right, in a free society, of withdrawing their labour in pursuit of their basic rights against unjust managements, and, in particular those postal workers, London tube drivers, Derbyshire firefighters, Merseyside dockers, Hillingdon hospital cleaners, and others; and calls for solidarity with them by all members of the public who depend on the services which working people provide.]

Then, on a day when a million Londoners are inconvenienced by the tube strike, I could point out that the hon. Members for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford), for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone), for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard), for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms Abbott), for Tottenham (Mr. Grant), for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) and for Bow and Poplar (Ms Gordon) have expressed their support for the strikers and their indifference to the suffering of their constituents.

Mr. Newton: I congratulate my hon. Friend on beginning with a very neat point and going on to make a vigorous one. It is properly made, and I hope that it will be registered outside, as well as inside, the House.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Would it be a good idea for the relevant Minister to make a statement next week on pay for real workers, as opposed to Members of Parliament and Cabinet Ministers who have lined their pockets in the past seven days? Is it not squalid and hypocritical for hon. Members to talk, within seven days of their massive salary increases, about a pay freeze for the real workers, and about pensioners and others receiving not more than a 3 per cent. increase?

Is it not hypocritical for Tory Members, such as the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo), to condemn those people who are fighting to improve their wages and conditions, having carried out properly constituted ballots in accordance with Tory party law? Is it not high time that the Government showed a little decency and morality and told people, "If MPs and Ministers can get through the pay barrier, the same should apply to workers and to pensioners"?

Mr. Newton: I assume that the hon. Gentleman has not forgotten that the Government, through me, recommended a rather different outcome last week: that the House should restrain itself to a 3 per cent. increase. I make the point that the hon. Gentleman appears to be directing his remarks to, among others, about 140 Labour Members.

Mr. Jim Cousins (Newcastle upon Tyne, Central): I draw the attention of the Leader of the House to the remarks he made during a debate on parliamentary procedure last Thursday night. He said that many people in the United Kingdom find Parliament very remote, and that it is valuable to take Parliament and parliamentary Committees and sessions to those people, so that Parliament is more alive and more accessible to them and to their needs. What proposals does he offer the north of England in that respect? If he has such proposals, I assure him that Union Jacks will be flying in Newcastle.

Mr. Newton: I note the hon. Gentleman's comments. I think that he has paraphrased my remarks rather loosely, but I do not have the text before me. He will be aware that I was speaking about the position of the Grand Committees in relation to Scotland and Wales, and about enabling those Committees to conduct hearings in those countries. I think that that is rather different from the point he makes.

Mr. Walter Sweeney (Vale of Glamorgan): In view of the risk of increased unemployment, higher taxes, the handing over of many of our remaining powers to Brussels, the risk of the break-up of the United Kingdom and of a reduction in law and order, does my right hon. Friend agree that time should be found to debate the dangers of new Labour?

Mr. Newton: We may see some of those indirectly, and no doubt unintentionally, during the Opposition day on Tuesday 23 July. I can only suggest that my hon. Friend might come along and try to expose as many of those dangers as he can.

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): Will the Leader of the House arrange for a Minister to come to the House to explain that, despite the employment legislation passed by the House, it is the view of Her Majesty's Government that democratic ballots should be overturned at the whim of whichever political party happens to be in power at the time?

Mr. Newton: I have arranged for the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to be here next Wednesday, and the hon. Lady might like to put that question to her.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): May I support the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) in his call for a debate on the increase in pay for Members of Parliament and Ministers, because it would be an opportunity to highlight the fact that Ministers voted neither for the vast increase in pay for Members of Parliament, nor for the increase in pay for Ministers, about which he carefully gave the opposite impression? Furthermore, when it came to which Lobbies were occupied, it could be highlighted that those in the Lobby for a large increase in pay were overwhelmingly Labour Members, and those in the Lobby against a large increase in pay were a vast majority of Conservative Members.

Mr. Newton: The hon. Member for Bolsover(Mr. Skinner), not for the first time—he clearly does not mind—put himself in a rather dangerous position in relation to the people behind him.

Points of Order

4.5 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, of which I think that you have notice from Madam Speaker, which is also a point of curiosity. It refers to the notice of motion for an unopposed return.

It may be within the recollection of the House that Sir Richard Scott, in paragraphs D4.40 to 4.42, D6.69 and F4.68, came to the conclusion that, had detailed questions that I put on Lear Fan and Colchester Lathes been properly and truthfully answered, the whole course of events in relation to the inquiry on arms exports to Iraq would have been somewhat different.

Therefore, forgive my curiosity in asking about this CD-ROM. Why is it that this notice of motion has appeared on the Order Paper at the very fag end of the Parliament, when it was laid on 15 February? Why was it not under the usual Orders of the Day and Notices of Motions? Doubtless there is some explanation, but the Chair will forgive us being suspicious that this suddenly appears when perhaps Parliament has its mind on rather different matters. Surely it could have appeared much earlier.

Technically, it is not all that difficult to produce a CD-ROM. If there had been any will to make all this available, surely we could have had it by April or May, rather than waiting until July.

Some of us are curious about the substance and content of the CD-ROM. We know that it is the technique of Governments to leave such things to points in time when they are least likely to be looked at. I have no idea what the substance is, but I think that there is justification for being rather suspicious about this extraordinary parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Geoffrey Lofthouse): I will try to satisfy the hon. Gentleman's curiosity. The notice of motion is in the usual place on the Order Paper. With all his experience, the hon. Gentleman knows that the decision about when such motions appear is a matter for the Government.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. As you may know, earlier today I applied to Madam Speaker under Standing Order No. 20 for an emergency debate on the problems on the London underground, which have inconvenienced a million Londoners and put at risk—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must not refer to a failed application under Standing Order No. 20.

Mr. Dalyell: Of course you are right, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Of course it would be a matter for the Government, but the Leader of the House has done us the courtesy of remaining. Perhaps he will explain the procedure and why it was left so late.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already answered the hon. Gentleman on this point of order. I am not aware that the Leader of the House wishes to reply.

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. Tony Newton): It might be helpful if I explained one factor, which the hon. Gentleman might wish to bear in mind. This is the first time that a proposal to publish in CD-ROM has been made, and it has entailed detailed consideration by various domestic Committees and the House of Commons Commission before the arrangements could be made.

Mr. Dalyell: Is it in order to ask the Leader of the House a further question? Which Committee—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. Gentleman is continuing his point of order—I assume he is—he should address it to me, not to the Leader of the House. The answer is the Administration Committee. I do not think that I can be of any further assistance to the hon. Gentleman on this point of order.

Mr. Dalyell: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. This all appears to have happened by alchemy. Who are these Committees? Which Committees decided that this should happen? This is a very curious matter—it really is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Committees are appointed by the House. In fact, there have also been written answers about it. I can go no further to help the hon. Gentleman this afternoon.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I do not know whether you are aware of the considerable difficulty that quite a number of hon. Members have found in getting to the House this afternoon owing to the extreme traffic congestion outside, which affects not only hon. Members but—more important—our constituents who have to come in to London to work. If we are not allowed to use Standing Order No. 20, what means do we have to raise this important matter?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is again questioning a failed Standing Order No. 20 application, on which I have ruled. It has not been brought to my notice that any hon. Members who wish to be in the House today have found it impossible to do so.

ESTIMATES DAY

[3RD ALLOTTED DAY]

ESTIMATES, 1996-97

Class I, Vote 1

British Forces (Bosnia)

[Relevant documents: Fifth report from the Defence Committee of Session 1995–96, House of Commons Paper No. 423, on the British Forces in Bosnia and the Government reply thereto in the Sixth Special Report of Session 1995–96, House of Commons Paper No. 592, and the Government's Expenditure Plans 1996–97 to 1998–99—Ministry of Defence (Cm 3202).]

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That a further sum not exceeding £6,228,158,000 be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to complete or defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending on 31st March 1997 for expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on: personnel costs, etc of the armed forces and their reserves and cadet forces, etc; personnel costs, etc of Defence Ministers and of certain civilian staff employed by the Ministry of Defence; movements, certain stores, supplies and services; certain spares and maintenance; plant and machinery; charter of ships; certain research; lands and buildings; works services; certain contingent liabilities; certain services provided by other Government departments; some sundry services, subscriptions, grants and other payments, including those abroad, including assistance to foreign and Commonwealth governments for defence-related purposes; and set-up costs, loans and funding to trading funds.—[Mr. Arbuthnot.]

4.12 pm

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside): I thank the House for the privilege of being invited to introduce this debate on British forces in Bosnia. It is certainly timely because of the elections that are due in that country in the middle of September. It is an appropriate subject for an estimates day, as class I, vote 1 is entirely related to defence expenditure, and we shall be asked to vote an extra £6.25 billion from the Consolidated Fund to meet additional defence costs.

I was interested to hear the exchanges during business questions and noted the fact that many of them related to procurement matters. I was also interested to pick up from the Board a letter from my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement, which makes an announcement about LPDs—landing platform docks. I am sure that the House will be delighted to hear that the Secretary of State is to make an announcement today about replacements for HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid, for which the House, and certainly the Select Committee on Defence, has lobbied for many months.

I am told that the contract to build both LPDs is to be placed with GEC Marine at the Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. shipyard in Barrow-in-Furness. No doubt £450 million of what we shall be voting today will be used to assist the MOD's important purchase. Perhaps, when he winds up the debate, my hon. Friend the Minister of State will tell us a little more about the number of jobs that the order will provide, and about when the ships are likely to come into service; but I think that the House will applaud the Government's determination to ensure that our country retains an amphibious capability.

I thank my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces for his note telling us that he would be unable to stay until the end of the debate because of pressing engagements of an international nature. It is good to see that he is here for the beginning.

The Defence Committee visited Bosnia between 22 and 24 April this year, just after the D-plus-120 Dayton deadline for withdrawal to military barracks had been largely met. Its report has been published as our fifth report for this Session, and the Government's reply, which the Committee received, has been published as the sixth report.

Last October's ceasefire in Bosnia was described by the United States peace envoy Richard Holbrooke as "not peace, but a big step forward."

The purpose of today's debate is to give the House an opportunity to review progress in the peace process, and in particular the continuing role of British forces in Bosnia, which is described in our report. Since the ceasefire, the Dayton peace plan has been signed by the countries involved, and by the warring parties in Paris on 14 December last year. The agreement maintains a single unitary Bosnian state within internationally recognised borders, with Sarajevo as capital, but divided into two semi-autonomous entities, the Muslim-Croat federation and Republica Srpska—the Serb Republic.

The peace implementation conference held in London last December saw Carl Bildt appointed as high representative to take charge of the civil side of the peace agreement and co-ordination of the civil and military operations. On 20 December—the so-called D-day—authority was transferred from the United Nations protection force, UNPROFOR, to the NATO implementation force, known as IFOR, and Bosnia was divided into British, United States and French multinational military zones, known as MND—multinational division—north, MND south-west and MND south-east.

I think that it was with relief that our British troops in UNPROFOR took off their blue berets and put on brown helmets. It then became clear to everyone that they meant business. This debate gives the House an opportunity to pay tribute to those forces. Anyone who has visited them—as the Defence Committee has done not just this year, but for the past four years—cannot fail to be impressed by the skill, professionalism and enthusiasm with which individuals and units carry out their tasks. The relative calm in Bosnia this year should not make us forget the real dangers that British forces have faced in the past, and the potential risks that they still face. The House will recall that, since 1992, 24 British soldiers and four aid workers have lost their lives while serving in the Bosnian theatre.

When IFOR took over from UNPROFOR, British troops moved quickly to open up crossing points across the former confrontation lines, and to demonstrate the new mandate under the Dayton agreement. That decisive action set the tone for the completely new style of operations being undertaken by IFOR, with a clear set of military rules and a single politico-military chain of command. It did not have that under the UNPROFOR arrangements.

The Committee was impressed with how soldiers of the Queen's Royal Hussars had deployed with their Challenger 1 tanks to a disused factory at Bosanski Petrovac, both to deter anyone tempted to resort to military force and to reassure people seeking to rebuild their homes and lives. That increased military capability is a key feature of IFOR—tread softly, but carry a big stick. A good example of soldiers getting job satisfaction was how the men and women of the Royal Engineers built bridges, restored power supplies and helped local people to clear minefields. They were putting into practice what they were trained to do and could see how the local population benefited.

No tribute to the British forces in Bosnia would be complete without referring to our allies who work alongside them. In April, the Committee visited American, Dutch and Canadian forces. The close co-operation was striking, and the subtle differences between styles of operation and the emphasis placed on creature comforts were clear.

Fifteen NATO countries are involved in the IFOR operation, but there are also 15 countries that do not belong to NATO. The operation in Bosnia has allowed countries such as those that are members of "Partnership for Peace", which have aspirations to join NATO, to demonstrate how well they can operate militarily under the NATO umbrella. Of the non-NATO countries, the Russians have the largest number of troops on the ground. It was quite something to meet a Russian colonel taking orders from an American general. That shows how far we have come since the iron curtain came down in 1989.

We were given one clear example of the risks faced by soldiers serving with IFOR. On the day that we visited the Dutch battalion at Novi Travnik and its medical facilities—which, I regret to say, were at that time, although not now, rather better than ours—a soldier from that unit lost a leg in an explosion in a minefield. Between 3 million and 6 million mines are estimated to have been laid in Bosnia. They will have to be cleared. That is a major job with the funding of which European Union countries can help. It may be too late to speed up the operation this year, but a fully supported effort next spring is badly needed. It was also clear that without the repair work and support of our forces, especially the Royal Engineers, the £332 million humanitarian aid effort could not have been delivered.

What has been the effect of the Bosnian operation on the Army? IFOR shows how British armed forces may operate in future. The UK contingent is tailor-made for the task, drawing together a wide variety of front-line and support units to meet the specific needs of peacekeeping in Bosnia. That means that we must plan for a much wider range of possibilities than in the past and we need the flexible command systems that enable the right combinations of forces to be put together for a particular mission at short notice.

We were struck by the effectiveness of the headquarters in Sarajevo of the so-called ARRC, the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps, under the command of a British general, Lieutenant General Sir Michael Walker. Its multinational NATO headquarters, based in Germany, is led by Britain and 60 per cent. of its general staff are British. The bulk of them are engaged in communications. Quite apart from the contribution of British forces on the ground, the provision of a significant British element amounting to a high proportion of ARRC's communications facilities is a major part of the UK's participation in IFOR. While such a varied operation, involving a wide range of units, must be good for training, the disadvantage of having so many soldiers involved in peacekeeping missions is that training for their essential war role of high-intensity combat can suffer.

The Committee has seen no evidence to show that it is wise or practical to train our armed forces solely for peacekeeping roles. Not only have we had to deploy tanks and major artillery to Bosnia to ensure peace enforcement and the protection of our soldiers, but the discipline, organisation and command required to carry out high-intensity operations are still needed for a mission such as IFOR. As the Committee's report notes in its opening paragraph, 10,500 British troops are serving on the ground in Bosnia—more than one tenth of the trained strength of our Army.

The Territorial Army volunteers and reserves made a significant contribution to the British presence in Bosnia. Between 500 and 600 soldiers have filled a variety of posts to bring Regular units up to full operational strength. They include sappers, Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers personnel, signallers, military police, logistics personnel, catering and pay staff. We applauded the valuable work done by those volunteers, their employers' tolerance in releasing them and the way in which the Ministry of Defence has adjusted its arrangements for call-up and bounty in the light of experience in Bosnia. The enactment of the Reserve Forces Act 1996 will help still further.

With further commitments overseas and other units preparing for, or recovering from, service in IFOR, more than one third of our Army is committed to operations worldwide. As we saw from the "Statement on the Defence Estimates", we now have deployments in more than 33 countries. As a consequence, for many units, tour intervals between deployments have dropped well below the target level of 24 months, training for other missions has suffered and a substantial proportion of the United Kingdom's communications facilities are unavailable for other tasks. Our report concludes that in the wide range of post-cold-war scenarios in which our armed forces might be needed, either a prolonged peacekeeping mission such as IFOR is too large a task, or the Army is too small.

Are there any weaknesses to be identified in the Bosnian operation? While the logistics operation to support British forces in Bosnia is impressive, during its April visit, our Committee identified and reported some weaknesses. As a result, the Government decided to purchase two containerised operating theatres, to fund the provision of bottled water for British troops, to improve access to welfare telephones and to enhance the capability of logistics communications. Those small areas of difficulty highlight a shortage of UK campaign stores.

We saw that the American and Dutch forces had better accommodation and facilities than those of the British soldiers. For those reasons we concluded that, if the UK is to be involved in peacekeeping missions in future, the Ministry of Defence clearly has to acquire and maintain a greater quantity of campaign stores to meet a variety of eventualities. We also suggested that the Ministry of Defence needed to show a faster response to meeting unforeseen needs for supporting soldiers in the field—including access to welfare telephones.

All armies march on their stomachs—ours certainly does. We noted that while American troops were dependent for the first three months of deployment on their famous MRE—meals ready to eat—which members of the Committee had brought back home and tried, with mixed results, British forces were being served three hot meals a day from the start of the operation. It was clear that other countries serving in Bosnia were envious of the quality of food being supplied to our forces.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): I think that other hon. Members want to thank the members of the Committee for the work that they have done. Often, colleagues remain absolutely unpraised for having worked very hard on the House's behalf. Armies may march on their stomachs, but they also march on their feet. To speak anecdotally, I have been told by a constituent that the British footwear is nothing like as good as that of the Americans. Did the Committee see any evidence of that? Should there be an improvement in footwear for such operations?

Mr. Colvin: That is a useful intervention. I can confirm that the Defence Committee has expressed concern about footwear for very many years and has noted in earlier visits to Bosnia that British soldiers were buying other countries' military footwear—often Canadian footwear, which is a good design. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister can confirm that, as I have been told, something has now been done about footwear. I believe that the Army has at last agreed on a new design of boot. I see that my hon. Friend is itching to get to his feet—no doubt not wearing the new footwear. Perhaps he can enlighten the House.

The Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Nicholas Soames): I endorse what the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) said about the hard work of the Select Committee, which has clearly produced a very valuable report. What he said about footwear was certainly true in the past, but it is now very much untrue. The new design of footwear for the Army is, by common consent, as my hon. Friend would agree, by far the best that it has ever been. Indeed—I am sure that he will want to comment on this later—this generation of soldiers are the first who have worn with pleasure on operations the kit with which they have been issued.

Mr. Colvin: I am delighted that my hon. Friend was able to confirm what I said. I thank him and the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) for their kind remarks about the Defence Committee. Not only do we go out to find what is happening on the ground, but I have a feeling that we have a reputation for producing more constructive reports than any other Select Committee.

Sir Russell Johnston (Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber): I remind the hon. Gentleman that he said that other contingents were envious of the food served to the British Army. Is that also true of the French contingent?

Mr. Colvin: It was indeed true. We did not have an opportunity to sample the French food. Had we had such an opportunity, we probably would not have been able to take advantage of it, because we had fed so well with the British troops. I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention.

This debate is about estimates, so it is appropriate to ask who pays for the IFOR operation in Bosnia. The latest estimates of the additional cost of British forces serving with IFOR is £85 million for 1995-96 and £120 million for 1996-97. This is a debate on expenditure, so it is appropriate to ask where that money will come from. In previous years, under UNPROFOR, the additional cost was borne by the Foreign Office and eventually reimbursed by the United Nations. The cost of IFOR is currently being borne by the Ministry of Defence. Although that may make sense in the short term, it could have serious implications for defence spending on other projects.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the Select Committee on 12 June that he would seek reimbursement from the contingency reserve only if the cost of IFOR took defence spending this year over the planned level. That means that if non-IFOR expenditure by the MOD falls short of the planned target for the year—often the result of delayed equipment purchases—the MOD will bear the full cost of IFOR. The result of that must be that permission to carry over any underspending from this year to next year will be affected. Thus, the cost of Bosnia will almost certainly be at the expense of other defence spending—probably on equipment, and as was mentioned in business questions, we are awaiting announcements on a number of major procurement decisions. When we were visiting Washington, we noted that the United States had introduced a contingency element in the Pentagon's budget for such peacekeeping operations, and I believe that the United Kingdom should do the same.

A debate on Bosnia at this time would not be complete without some reference to war criminals. Some have questioned whether the British forces in IFOR should actively seek to arrest them. It is only fair to put on record the difficulty for force commanders of actively seeking out indicted men such as Messrs Karadzic and Mladic. In so far as their whereabouts are known, those two individuals are heavily protected, and any attempt to arrest them would inevitably involve the IFOR soldiers in fighting in which injuries and loss of life might occur. Judging by past experience of arresting Bosnian Serb generals, such an incident could pose a serious threat to stability, which would affect not only the personal safety of the soldiers but the path through the precarious elections now due, through to eventual peace in Bosnia.

We therefore concluded that it would be reasonable in the short term for IFOR to afford a higher priority to maintaining peace in Bosnia than to the active pursuit of war criminals, but that people suspected of such crimes would not be able to hide for ever.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): I pay tribute, as I have done before, to the British forces in IFOR. However, does the hon. Gentleman accept a viewpoint different from the one that he has expressed, which is in the Committee's report? That viewpoint is that there will be and can be no lasting peace in former Yugoslavia unless the war criminals are brought to justice. Bearing in mind the fact that the crimes and atrocities that those people have committed are some of the worst since the Nazis committed their crimes, also in Yugoslavia, as well as elsewhere, should not a different instruction be given, despite all the difficulties that the hon. Gentleman has mentioned—an instruction that those notorious war criminals should be brought to justice?

Mr. Colvin: There is every difficulty in doing so at the moment, but the House would wish that those people could be brought to justice before the deadline date for elections on 14 September, because their presence at that time could have a disruptive effect on the elections. From a personal point of view, I agree with the hon. Gentleman that their being brought to justice is essential for the long-term prospects for peace in Bosnia.

What about the future? It is almost certain that, before the House returns after the summer recess, Bosnia is bound to have featured heavily in the news. We should not be deluded by the relative peace so far into thinking that the British forces serving there are safe. In two months' time, the elections are due to be held in Bosnia, and the sheer mechanics of running them will place added strain on the peacekeeping forces and pose greater risks for them.

In a country in which four fifths of the population no longer live in the place where they were registered to vote in 1991, soldiers are bound to become involved in potential clashes as people try to return to areas where they are unwelcome. If the Minister of State for Defence Procurement catches your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, perhaps he will bring us up to date with the arrangements being set up by the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe for the elections.

In the early stages, it was thought that people would have the right only to go back and vote in their original towns, but it is now proposed that they have an alternative—to vote where they currently live. That will present all sorts of difficulties for the 1 million or so Bosnians now living overseas, and the House would welcome the opportunity to be told about the election arrangements.

Whatever the results of the elections, it is clear that IFOR will not be able to withdraw completely by the end of its mission on 20 December. Judgments will have to be made after the elections on the scale and pace of the reduction in the peacekeeping forces. That makes some successor force almost inevitable. We believe that it should continue to be a NATO-led force and that it should involve the participation—at least on an equal basis—of the principal countries involved in IFOR.

Precipitative withdrawal before a lasting peace was established would be disastrous for Bosnia. That is why, even if our armed forces are overstretched without commitment, they must continue—perhaps on a smaller scale.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): My hon. Friend asked who ultimately would meet the cost of the British contribution to IFOR in Bosnia. Will he continue to ask questions about the cost of an on-going presence in Bosnia? Will he join me in speculating as to whether the costs that we have to meet from the defence budget might be holding up other decisions such as that in respect of the requirement by the RAF of a replacement maritime patrol aircraft, which is particularly important to British Aerospace? The project would create thousands of jobs and benefit hundreds of firms in the north-west. Does he feel that current costs may prejudice the taking of such an urgent decision?

Mr. Colvin: No. I congratulate my hon. Friend on getting in yet another plug about a procurement decision of considerable interest to his constituency, which will affect jobs in his region.

[Mr. Colvin]

However, other factors are far more significant for the defence budget. For example, the rumours—and they may be no more than that—of cuts in the defence budget of some £400 million, which may have exercised the minds of members of the Cabinet who were discussing the matter this morning, are more relevant.

The House should note with some disapproval that only six months after the House debated last year's defence estimates and approved the expenditure for the year, the Government lopped some £600 million off that budget. I very much hope that if and when the House approves this year's defence estimates—immediately after the summer recess—the Government do not then cut the figure still further. No doubt my hon. Friend the Minister of State will address that if he is called to speak.

In conclusion, the House will want to see the Dayton process bear peaceful fruit. Our forces in Bosnia are second to none in their contribution to that end. They have earned the respect of other nations in IFOR and they deserve and are receiving the wholehearted acclaim and support of the House and the nation.

4.42 pm

Dr. David Clark (South Shields): First, let me associate myself with the concluding remarks by the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin). I am pleased to participate in today's debate on the excellent report by the Select Committee on Defence under the chairmanship of the hon. Gentleman. On behalf of the Opposition, I am grateful to hon. Members on both sides of the House who served on that Committee.

It is appropriate that the House should debate Bosnia when so many British troops are participating in IFOR and we are just over half way through the Dayton peace process. Indeed, today's debate is particularly relevant at this critical stage in the preparations by various groups in Bosnia for elections there in October. Only last month, I had the opportunity to visit Bosnia for the fifth time to assess whether any changes had been made since the Select Committee published its report.

I join the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside in saying that no visitor to Bosnia can fail to be impressed by the calibre and the professionalism of our forces. They are simply world class and their value as peacekeepers and enforcers is now universally recognised. I refer not only to the Army, the Navy and the Air Force but to the men and women of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary who take our stores out to Bosnia and who are now stationed in Split harbour. They are often forgotten and they deserve our thanks.

It was also impressive to see the NATO integrated command structures, which have been honed and practised for almost 50 years, working so effectively and harmoniously. In the south-west region, the Canadian and Dutch troops operating under the command of a British general—General Mike Jackson—could be British in every military sense, such is their integration and their understanding of the command and control structure. Even the troops of non-NATO countries, such as the Czechs—who aspire to NATO membership—and the Malaysians, have no difficulty in adapting to the NATO structure. That bodes well for the future. It is certainly encouraging that our taxpayers' money has not been wasted—deterring aggression from the east in the past and now attempting to bring peace to various parts of the world.

I was also impressed by the change in rules. Those of us who saw the operation of British troops under UNPROFOR were at times unhappy. There was a feeling that they did not have the necessary rules of engagement or equipment, but that has now changed. The more robust rules of engagement, backed up by the larger numbers, and the different mission objective, supported by a heavier deployment of weaponry, have meant that the IFOR operation has been much more effective in its peace enforcing role.

To put it bluntly, the presence of a large, imposing Challenger tank sitting on the roadside sends a significant message, especially to people who have become almost blasé about the use and presence of force. They understand force; unfortunately, they have had to live with it for four years—but the projection of power remains important. That is one lesson that we have all learnt from our experiences in Bosnia.

The Select Committee referred to a number of shortcomings, especially in the provision of certain basic utilities such as water, welfare facilities such as telephone provision and the medical facilities available to our troops. I am pleased to report that when I was in Bosnia just last month, I thought that considerable improvements had been made. Obviously, there are still difficulties, and I shall return to them in a moment.

At the main camp at Banja Luka there are problems with the water supply, but it must be appreciated that the water supply also serves the civilian communities. At times of peak demand, problems are created by an extra 5,000 people using that water. Our troops have said quite rightly that, if there is any difficulty in supplying both the hospital and the troops, priority will go to the civilian hospital. That is right and we all understand it. We appreciate that there are problems and our soldiers accept that.

Having said that, I believe that there is one aspect on which there is a slight difference between the two sides of the House although, by and large, we have a consensual approach to the operation in Bosnia. The Government's "Front Line first" policy is one of the reasons why we are having difficulty in supplying basic utensils in Bosnia. The supplies that are needed for a small, static war are very different from those required for a large, mobile war. If Ministers read the historical records and reports on the subject at the turn of the century by Sir Charles Calwell, they will find that that problem was understood then. Troops based in the same position—even in a small war—for perhaps 12 months will obviously require more support and supplies than troops moving on every two weeks and becoming used to a more challenging life. I hope that Ministers will take that lesson on board.

Another factor alluded to by the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside and by the Select Committee was overstretch, and there is no doubt that that exists. If one keeps going back to Bosnia, one cannot help but see the same regiments and detachments, and that is a matter of concern. That overstretch has been manifested in two ways. First, there are worries about the reserves, a large number of whom are doing vital work. By and large, they are enjoying their work and they feel proud of what they are doing. I gather that there are about 600 reserves with our forces in Bosnia—a lot of troops.

The reserves were still unconvinced that the Reserve Forces Act 1996 will guarantee that a job is available to them when they return to civilian life. I hope that their fears are wrong and that the Act will provide that guarantee. I hope that Ministers will continue to monitor the matter, which has been raised with me time and again. I will be surprised if members of the Select Committee have not heard about it as well.

The second manifestation of overstretch, as outlined in the report, was that certain personnel—especially specialised personnel—were being sent back to Bosnia repeatedly. I met a reservist—a linguist—who had been back to Bosnia every six months for four years, and heavy demands are being made on other specialised personnel. If a person is being sent back to Bosnia regularly, it gives him insufficient time for training and recuperation, or time with his family. That is vital for the morale of the forces.

For example, there appears to be a particular problem with the availability of armed recce regiments, such as the Light Dragoons, whom I met when I visited Bosnia previously. It has been suggested to me—I recognise the delicacy of the situation—that only two regiments with an armoured recce capability can be deployed to Bosnia. If that is the case, I hope that the Minister will look at the matter. I am not asking for a reply this afternoon, but the situation needs to be monitored. The Royal Engineers are suffering similar problems, and the Select Committee singled out them and the Royal Signals as corps that are beginning to find that they are being sent back time and again. I hope that the Minister will give an assurance that he will monitor that.

As the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside said, the military objectives of Dayton have been concluded—largely successfully. We are now into the next stage of trying to rebuild civilian society, and that is much more difficult. We want to resettle areas and get it across to people that peace offers a better life than war. We have had to change some of our military thinking, and we have reintroduced psychological operations. I have no problem with that, but it was a form of operation that the British Army lost its ability to conduct after Malaysia. It needs to be done, as we must get the message across to the civilian population.

What I find encouraging about the operation in Bosnia is the liaison between G5, the military-civilian role of the Army, and the Overseas Development Administration as they try to bring normality back to civilian life and the infrastructure. Our troops are doing a brilliant job in that respect, and they are getting a great deal of satisfaction from helping people to get their lives back to normal. I talked to people where the forces had brought together those who laid mines on either side and had worked with them to de-mine their own minefields. That is a positive long-term activity.

The hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside referred to the efforts to reconnect water and electricity supplies, and the repairing of roads and the rebuilding of bridges—all of which are vital. Nevertheless, the small things that make civilian life worth while are also important. In this field, first-class arrangements are being developed in Bosnia between the ODA and the military.

I must pay tribute to the skilled work of the ODA's permanent representative, Dr. Gilbert Greenall, and I shall refer to the system that is so important to the military, to the ODA and to the people who benefit from it. The ODA and the forces have arrived at a system that is simple and speedy in delivery. If Army personnel come across a particular problem, they can make an approach to Dr. Greenall, who will visit the site and make an assessment of the problem. If the ODA's criteria are met, he has the facility to release money immediately to tackle the problem and action can be achieved in weeks, if not days. What might cost £20,000 in two months' time can be done for £2,000 sooner.

For example, I was shown the town of Mrkonjic Grad—I know Select Committee members visited it. In the town, a hospital was completely gutted and had had all its facilities removed. It is now being put back into civilian use. The Croats had driven out the Serbs—not a single Serb was in the town—but, under Dayton, it was given back to the Serb community, and 10,000 Serbs moved back. When they did so, they found that the Croat troops had looted the town and chopped everything up.

As the Serbs moved back, a public health risk was created because refuse was piling up and no facilities were available to deal with it. When the local mayor was approached by the Army and asked why they did not do something about it, he said that the refuse wagon needed to collect the refuse had had its tyres shot out and its battery removed. Our Army was able to alert the ODA, and Dr. Greenall was able to visit the area. Within days, money was given for tyres and a battery and the refuse wagon was on the road again. The Serbs were able to begin to look after their own affairs. That is the sort of urgent action that I thought was good not only for the recipients, but for our soldiers. They were seen as facilitators in trying to restore a civilian way of life.

I hope that the major indicted war criminals—Karadzic and Mladic—will be apprehended soon. It is not a question of if they will be apprehended but when, and I should have thought it would be in his own best interests for Karadzic to hand himself over to the authorities. That may sound strange, but it is only a matter of time before he is apprehended. He would do himself the world of good if he gave himself up.

I shall conclude by giving the same message as the Chairman of the Select Committee. So far, this mission has been a success, but the peace is fragile. Indeed, it may become more fragile in the light of the news that the United States has given authority to start training Bosnian Government troops and Croatian troops. If we walk away in December, there is every chance that the war will begin again. There must be some form of IFOR 2. I hope that our United States allies will stay in Bosnia. We shall use our best endeavours, as will the Government, to persuade the Americans that they must remain.

In the worst scenario of the Americans refusing to stay, I hope that, as long as the European nations of NATO feel that they should stay, our Government will contribute to the European NATO force. I accept that the current strength of the force cannot be maintained—the divisional-size force of 10,500 is too many—but we might be able to find sufficient troops for a brigade-size force of 7,000. I hope that we shall participate.

We cannot abrogate our responsibility. Too much blood has been shed. If we walk away in December, all that blood will have been shed in vain. We shall have to go the extra 12 months for peace. I am delighted that that point is supported by paragraph 68 of the Select Committee report. I endorse that part of the report and almost every recommendation made in it. Once again, I thank all members of the Select Committee for such an excellent job of work.

5.2 pm

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): I am delighted to follow my hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) and the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin). I thank hon. Members who said that we did a splendid job, which was in no small part due to the leadership and wisdom of the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside. I am very grateful to him.

We visited Bosnia in April. It is a rapidly moving situation in a volatile part of the world. What we saw in April does not apply now. It was clear from the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for South Shields that some of the problems about which I was worried—humanitarian relief and the inflow of civilian money—are being tackled, but others remain. We were concerned because, although our forces had assisted the civilian populations, there was no evidence that international money was getting to where it was needed—out in the towns and villages. We were concerned, for instance, that there was no planting in the countryside because there were no tractors—the retreating sides had taken them. We were concerned that there would be no harvest. I am unaware of the current position, but I hope that serious work has been done to alleviate that problem.

We were concerned that, despite the fact that we had the best-fed troops in the field from day one—that is always so, and if anyone has tried "meals ready to eat" they will know why there are raids on our canteens whenever the Americans, French or anybody else can get near them—there were shortfalls. We found, for example, that because of logistics delays, equipment had been lying around for ages awaiting parts. Perfectly good bathroom and toilet facilities had been lying around for months because the connecting pipes had not been delivered. The computer and communications system to back up the logistics was not working, and if anything was needed somebody had to jump in the car and drive 40 miles across the mountains to drop a note in.

I pay the highest tribute to the men and women serving not only in the British Army, but in all the armies participating in IFOR. The hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside mentioned the fact that, when we went to see the Americans in Tuzla, there were a couple of Russian colonels in the American battle headquarters, and we were seen off by a Russian general under their command.

We asked our people, "What are the Czechs like?" They replied,"They are super, smashing, professional people to work with who are doing a great job and working extremely hard at it." I cannot praise them too highly.

Where we do have a problem is with the Dayton accord itself. I think that it was too ambitious. The out date of December is not achievable. Our military have achieved all the military tasks, but other tasks have not been met. The money for reconstruction work was not finding its way there, but I am glad that that is no longer true. There is still a long way to go.

The people in Bosnia—the Bosnian Serbs, the Bosnian Muslims and the Bosnian Croats—are lovely people. I remember holidaying there in the balmy days of my youth and meeting the people. The trouble is that they love us but hate each other. That will not change overnight. We know that from the history of the Balkans and, tragically, from our history in Ireland too. We must be prepared for that. Having spent the time, money, effort and lives that we have thus far, we should be prepared to spend a little more time to try to achieve some stability, because I do not believe that the elections will bring stability.

My hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) asked about war criminals. Our report was written in April, but the warrants were issued only last week. The context in which we wrote our report has changed dramatically. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for South Shields: if Karadzic and Mladic thought about it, they would walk across the lines now and say, "We give up." They will be caught, because they cannot hide for ever, and the crimes on which they have been indicted cannot be forgiven—ever. They must face up to the fact that they will be caught and punished, and correctly so.

I have witnessed things that will live with me for the rest of my life, such as the fact that a thug can walk into someone's home and say, "Get out by the morning or you are dead, and if you are not out by the morning we will burn the house down around you." On one visit, we saw body bags being taken out of a house—the horror of man's inhumanity to man. They are the same people. The only difference between the Muslims, Serbs and Croats is their history. Ethnically, they are the same people.

It is worrying that people hark back to the evils of the battle of Kosovo in, I believe, the 12th century. The Serbs have never achieved such greatness since, and they look forward to the future. Another worrying portent for the elections is that, unfortunately, the moderate opinions that are widespread in all the communities in Bosnia are not represented by the people who appear to want to stand as candidates.

We must try to reconstruct the country, we must try to keep it peaceful and we must do our best to help the people's future. British forces, whether they were in the Bosnian Serb sector, the Bosnian Croat sector or the Bosnian Muslim sector, were regarded as the guarantors of the safety of the people living in that sector. They were not playing favourites. That is true of all the units in all the sectors.

We must make the commitment that people will be given another chance to rebuild and to survive. We know that the ultimate objective of the leaders in Republica Srpska is to unite with Serbia to form greater Serbia. We know that the Croatian Bosnians and the Muslim Bosnians have their own problems. We know that the potential for fighting and division continues. We know that hunger and deprivation exist.

Our interpreters were local people. Some of the things that they did were amazing. One would find a local Croatian girl, employed as an interpreter, working in a Serbian area, voluntarily teaching two hours a day in the Serbian school because there was no schoolteacher in the village. Things like that are not talked about. We must support and develop them, but we can do so only if we make the commitment to the people not to walk out of there in December and leave them to their own devices.

The trouble is that it is an American presidential election year, and domestic American politics are intruding. It is essential for the future of IFOR that it is international and that any continued force has an American ground force element. It would not be credible internationally if it did not, and it would not be right if we did not raise that matter unequivocally in the House.

Mr. Dalyell: My hon. Friend is one of the most technically competent Members of the House of Commons. My hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) mentioned land mines. Those of us who heard Sir Hugh Beach of the all-party land mines group know the extent of the problem of identifying and doing something about land mines. Does my hon. Friend have any solution?

Mr. McWilliam: That is an important, thorny problem.

We were told that some youngsters in Sarajevo had learnt how to dig up anti-personnel mines and that they throw them in the river so that they go off there, and that someone else down-river catches the fish killed by the explosion. That is a stupid, highly dangerous thing to do.

Because of the construction of the forces that were operating—working on the Warsaw pact methods of organisation when there were hostilities—the average infantryman would wander out with 12 anti-personnel mines strapped around his body, instructed to lay them out as a defensive perimeter. When he withdrew, he was supposed to dig them out and come back. Unfortunately, what has happened does not accord with the Geneva convention, because there was, and is, no accurate map of the minefields. Some of such records as exist are in Split, and the Croatian Government there deny their existence.

The solution is to spend money training former Yugoslav army sappers of whatever persuasion to clear mines. We cannot do it; we do not have enough sappers to do that highly skilled job. The mines are extremely difficult to clear. The anti-personnel mines are plastic. The only metal in them is the size of an ordinary pin, so no normal detection method works. The Americans are using remote-controlled mine clearance vehicles, but they do not get them all either. The mines do terrible damage, especially to children. I would not willingly walk off a metalled road anywhere in that country at the moment; it is that unsafe.

A huge international effort is needed to clear the mines. The best people to do the work are the people who laid them, but they need training. We need to spend money on the manpower to train them.

Bosnia is a beautiful country, and always was. It happens to be at the crossroads of conflicting civilisations, and it has been for a long time. By and large, however, the Bosnians got on pretty well until Germany forced recognition of Croatia far earlier than any country in that area should have been recognised. That is what blew it up. We all know that. It is too late now. There is no point in crying over spilt milk, but we are responsible in that we acquiesced in that decision. We must take that responsibility by ensuring that we make the commitment to continue peacekeeping in Bosnia.

I wish to conclude by quoting paragraph 80 of the Select Committee report.

"We conclude that in the wide range of post-Cold War scenarios in which the armed forces might be needed, either a prolonged peace-keeping mission like IFOR is too large a task or the Army is too small."

We ignore that conclusion at our peril. It is either too large a task or the Army is too small. The extent of the overstretch that our forces feel is not fair or right, and it must be stopped.

5.16 pm

Sir Russell Johnston (Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber): I congratulate the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on the informed and balanced way in which he introduced the debate, and on the work that he does in the Defence Committee. In the absence of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fife, North–East (Mr. Campbell), who would usually do this sort of thing, I warmly welcome from this Bench the decision to go ahead with replacements for HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid, an announcement about which the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside spoke at the start of his remarks.

The hon. Gentleman did not speak exclusively about the role that our troops play in Bosnia. I shall speak more widely later, but before doing so I shall repeat what all hon. Members who have so far spoken have said about the excellence of the standards that British troops are maintaining, and the very effective way in which troops from different countries are combining and working with one another under the NATO umbrella. That is a matter for congratulation and pleasure.

Many hon. Members have spoken about Dayton, because it represents the background to what our troops may or may not be called on to do in future. Dayton stopped the guns firing. That was a very good thing, but it has other not so desirable aspects.

I vividly remember a special meeting of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe immediately after David—now Lord—Owen had been appointed to operate on behalf of the European Community. He had been in Croatia and witnessed one of the occasions when refugees were driven by the Serbs across into Croatia. Many of them were shot in the process. He had been extremely moved by the experience, and he made a long and passionate speech lasting nearly an hour and a half, much of which was unscripted—to the horror of his officials. He said that all the refugees must return to their homeland, that we on the continent of Europe must never allow such events to be perpetrated and that we would not rest until the last refugee was rehoused in his own home. Some of us were wondering who would achieve that.

The Dayton accord has authorised ethnic cleansing and separation with what the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside described, technically correctly but in reality not so near the truth, as a "unitary state". I fear that few, if any, refugees have returned, and I do not see them returning in the near future. Current events in Herzegovina, Croatia and Republica Srpska mean that the separation will last for a long time.

Everybody has said, rightly, that IFOR has been much more effective than UNPROFOR. That is simply because its mandate is much more effective, and that must be maintained. As my right hon. Friend the leader of the Liberal Democrats said in an article that he wrote shortly after a recent visit to Bosnia, the problem with UNPROFOR was that it had no choice between using a light tank and having a strategic air strike. There was no graded capacity for response. That is different in IFOR's case, and it is desirable to sustain that difference.

[Sir Russell Johnston]

Many hon. Members have referred to war criminals. I agree that Karadzic and Mladic should come to justice, but it is not easy, and to pretend otherwise is silly. Who appointed Mladic? Who sustained Karadzic during the period of ethnic cleansing? The answer is President Slobodan Milosevic. So is not he a war criminal in the same way? The disagreement, which has been publicly aired, between the views of Carl Bildt and the Americans about what we should do now shows the practical difficulties and uncertainty about, first, the effect on the Serbs of seizing those two gentlemen and, secondly, the effect on the Muslims of doing nothing. One is caught between those two positions.

We must remember that, if Karadzic and Mladic are taken to The Hague, the people they will leave behind in charge will hold exactly the same views as them. I remember meeting Biljana Plavsic, the lady who has already practically replaced Karadzic officially. I sat in a tree while, 200 yds away, a mass grave of Serbs who had been killed by the Croats was dug up. I knew that she was a tough lady but on that occasion I felt that she was vulnerable. She told me how various members of her family had been killed. She does not disagree with Karadzic about anything and we must face the fact that there are deep divisions in the community which will not go away for a long time.

Several hon. Members have raised the issue of how long IFOR will stay. My hon. Friends and I find it unthinkable that IFOR should withdraw. As the Minister knows, the French Foreign Minister has already suggested extending IFOR's stay for at least two years. We should support that suggestion. As the hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) said, it was never realistic to think that matters could be resolved in a year.

At the beginning of September last year, I was in the Pentagon on a Western European Union visit. We heard a presentation by a general about Bosnia and what the Americans intended to do. The President had said that it would all be over by December and I said, "Who are you kidding? That is not possible. Don't tell me that you will pull out just when, I hope, you are beginning to make a mark on stability in the region." The poor general was tied by official White House policy, but I could see that he was extremely unhappy because it was never realistic to think that it would all be finished in a year. Despite the fact that the matter is, as the hon. Member for Blaydon said, ensnared in American presidential election politics, I do not think that the Americans will withdraw, and I am sure that we will lend all our efforts to ensuring that they stay.

There are two arguments about staying. The first is that no announcement should be made until after 14 September. The second is that, according to the advice of the military, for planning reasons, the beginning of September is effectively the latest that we can announce what we intend to do. Staying would also have a positive effect on the election process.

Although most people recognise that there is official uncertainty, Governments have basically accepted that IFOR will continue, although it has not been officially announced. Staying would have a positive effect on the elections of 14 September, while the opposite would encourage—if they need encouragement—the nationalists, who will dominate the elections in any event.

The hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) referred to the extremely good work done by the Overseas Development Agency in conjunction with the Army. I agree that it has done some excellent work and deserves great praise for it. I have not been to Bosnia recently, but I expect to be a Council of Europe monitor at the elections. Most people who have been there recently believe that one of the notable failures arising out of Dayton is the failure to send a police force to Bosnia.

When my right hon. Friend the leader of the Liberal Democrats was there recently, military people told him that having some British policemen there might be as valuable as having troops—in certain circumstances, even more valuable. As the United Kingdom has yet to send even one policeman to Bosnia, will the Minister way whether we are trying to do something about that? It would be a valuable contribution to controlling lawlessness, which is a deep and continuing problem in large areas on both sides of Bosnia.

As the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside said, the basic message to emerge from the debate is that we are proud of the work that our armed forces are doing in Bosnia. It is of great value. Although it costs a certain amount, a renewal of fighting would cost even more. That is why I repeat my basic point: we should decide now, in conjunction with our allies, that IFOR will continue for at least two years.

5.29 pm

Mr. Calum Macdonald (Western Isles): I am not a member of the Defence Committee, but I have read the report and I admire its technical expertise. I have a great interest in the subject of today's debate. I welcomed the Defence Committee's conclusion about the future of IFOR and whether there should be a follow-on force. I believe that there will be a follow-on force. It has been raised as an open question, but I think that the decision makers have already made up their minds—and that they had probably made up their minds at the outset of the operation. The timing of the decision is no coincidence: it will come shortly after the United States presidential election. Once the election is out of the way, a follow-on force to IFOR will be announced.

I believe that whether there will be a follow-on force is not the real question—the real question is what the follow-on force will do and whether it will continue to work on what is essentially a minimal mandate. If that continues, it could lead it to acquiesce in what will be the creation of three apartheid statelets on the European mainland. Are we going to grasp the nettle and look again at the force's mandate and try to match the military force of IFOR with the political will to make a reality of the Dayton principles?

I have seen the British forces at work on a number of visits to Bosnia over the past few years, both as a member of UNPROFOR and as a member of IFOR. I went to Banja Luka during the Whitsun recess and I had a useful discussion with the British forces commander, General Mike Jackson. My impression of the soldiers has always been the same, whether in UNPROFOR or IFOR: they are extremely keen about their task, highly motivated and well informed, and extremely capable and good at the job that they are asked to do. They are succeeding in accomplishing their present mission with the same brilliance that they have displayed on other occasions.

However, I believe that they are capable of doing a lot more—they need the right kind of political direction and the right kind of political will behind them.

Hon. Members have mentioned the shortcomings of UNPROFOR, which preceded IFOR. We have to look hard at what went wrong with UNPROFOR because of the damage that was done to the reputation of the United Nations. We must not let the credibility of NATO be damaged in the same way by a future failure of the IFOR mission. I believe that if we do not look again at IFOR's mandate, the credibility of NATO will be damaged in the long term.

It is helpful to look back at the failure of UNPROFOR, which culminated just over a year ago in the fall of Srebrenica to the Serb ultra-nationalist forces. However, we now know that they were not purely Serb forces and that tanks from the Yugoslav army participated in that onslaught. Srebrenica was a United Nations safe area and it was defended by European soldiers—by Dutch soldiers—but they were incapable of stopping the onslaught, and we now know the consequences as they have been recently recorded in gruesome detail at the international tribunal in The Hague.

What could have been done to prevent Srebrenica and the other massacres in the preceding three or four years? How could we have rescued UNPROFOR from its predicament at an earlier stage? The answer was given by General Rupert Smith in August 1995, when he co-ordinated air and artillery attacks on the Bosnian Serb army. Contrary to everything that we have been told about the dangers of another Vietnam, the Bosnian Serb army was routed at the first serious use of force against it. If I had any doubts about that, they were dispelled when I visited Banja Luka earlier this year and I was told by the local Serbs how convinced and frightened they were at the time that their town was about to fall to Croatian and Bosnian forces.

Banja Luka is the largest town in the Bosnian Serb territory—without it, there could have been no real credible Bosnian Serb state. In other words, we were within a week of seeing the collapse of the Bosnian Serb regime and the complete defeat of General Mladic and of Radovan Karadzic. At the last minute, the offensive was halted—thanks, many believe, to British diplomatic intervention which persuaded the Americans to back off and which persuaded the Croatian and the Bosnian Governments to back off as well. It seems that British diplomacy could not save Srebrenica but it managed to save Banja Luka.

In the course of saving Banja Luka, we saved Mladic and Karadzic to another day—and the consequences of that plague us to this day in the form of an ultra-nationalist regime still in power in the Serb entity and Mladic and Karadzic still in control of the levers of power. That is the real crisis, the real problem, facing British soldiers now based in Banja Luka and it is a direct consequence of the shortcomings and failures of a year ago.

We have heard a lot of warnings about the dangers of mission creep in Bosnia, but I believe that mission erosion is much more dangerous: by failing to take on the continuing defiance of the ultra-nationalists, the credibility of the IFOR mission—and therefore the credibility of IFOR and, by extension, NATO—is being steadily undermined and eroded. Mission erosion has happened in the Serb suburbs of Sarajevo, where the Serbs were allowed to burn and loot with impunity before the handover to the Bosnian Government. That is still happening in the same suburbs today, with the few Serbs who bravely decided to remain being hounded out by thugs and Muslim nationalists because they are not getting protection from the international police task force, which is afraid to patrol at night because IFOR will not protect such patrols. That is mission erosion.

Mission erosion happened in Mostar when the European Union capitulated to threats and intimidation by the criminal gangs who control west Mostar. I remind hon. Members that gangs fired 18 shots at the car of the European Union administrator. The response of the European Union was to capitulate and to agree to the demands to shrink the main central district of Mostar. That is mission erosion—that is credibility erosion.

Sir Russell Johnston: While I agree with the hon. Gentleman, he should give a little more credit to the brave efforts of Hans Koschnik, the German European Community administrator, who did his utmost to try to bring the two communities together and only gave up in despair.

Mr. Macdonald: I concur with what the hon. Gentleman has said. My dismay is that all this good work was ultimately let down and undermined by the failure of European Union Governments to back the solution that he had put his name to, and for which he literally risked his life.

Mission erosion is occurring in the Serb-controlled territories where Muslims continue to be cleansed from their homes. Other refugees are prevented by force from visiting the graves of their relatives. Civilian crowds supposedly gather to prevent the visits from occurring, but those crowds comprise policemen who change into civilian clothes, grab clubs and return to threaten the refugees. Mission erosion is already occurring in that indicted war criminals—who according to the Dayton agreement should not hold appointed or elected offices—remain in charge of the Government and army of the Serb entity.

Although great efforts have been made to secure a ceasefire in Bosnia, I am afraid that the Dayton agreement will become a dead letter. I emphasise that that is the fault not of the British forces or of IFOR, but of the European Governments and of the Americans, who lack the political will to back those forces in Bosnia which wish to build a multi-ethnic democratic society. We must not forget that 200,000 Serbs still live in Bosnian federation territory—controlled by what some people refer to as the Muslim Government. And tens of thousands of Serb refugees from the Krajina have signed petitions in Belgrade seeking to be allowed back to the Krajina, even if it means living under the Croatian Government. People want to return to their homes: the pull of that region is very strong.

IFOR has managed to create a stable ceasefire zone in Bosnia, but that success is temporary. The space that has been created must be filled with democratic and multi-ethnic values and principles or in time it will be reclaimed by the forces of ultra-nationalism and ethnic cleansing. I believe that it is impossible simply to maintain the status quo and to allow a second force, IFOR 2, to assume the role that IFOR has played in the past few months. We either move forward into mission expansion or we go backwards into mission erosion.

[Mr. Macdonald]

Moving forward means three things. First, it means the arrest of Karadzic, Mladic and the other ethnic cleansing ringleaders. I acknowledge the difficulties associated with that, but if 60,000 NATO troops cannot arrest them, who will? Moreover, the outgoing commander-in-chief of the NATO forces, Admiral Leighton Smith, has said that he is willing to perform the task if he is directed to do so.

Secondly, if we are to move forward, elections in the Serb and the Croat entities must be suspended until they are guaranteed to be free and fair. There is no point in holding fraudulent elections. I believe that we should support the views of Ambassador Frowick regarding the need to prevent the Serb Democratic party from participating in the elections until we get rid of Radovan Karadzic.

Thirdly, we must see the gradual, but systematic and progressive, return of those refugees who wish to go back to their villages and towns. That must occur under the protection of IFOR, and then of IFOR 2. I believe that IFOR 2 will find that it must either help those refugees to return and provide protection for them, or prevent them from returning. That is the choice that it will face.

Finally, moving forward into mission expansion means that there must be the political will and resolve to enforce the Dayton agreement, which has been sadly lacking so far.

5.44 pm

The Minister of State for Defence Procurement (Mr. James Arbuthnot): I congratulate the Liaison Committee on its choice of subject for today's debate. I have listened with interest to the contributions from all sides, and I am proud to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the tremendous achievements of the British service men and women who have served with such distinction in support of the IFOR operation, and previously with UNPROFOR.

In the course of the debate, my hon Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) and other hon. Members have referred to the Defence Committee's recent report on its visit to Bosnia. I shall respond to as many points as I can. I welcomed the Committee's visit, and I echo the comments about the high quality of its work. Visits by Ministers and Members of Parliament help to show our forces that they are very much in our minds, and that their excellent work is receiving the attention and acknowledgement that it deserves.

But let me first say a few words about the major part played by British forces in the highly successful IFOR operation, which has already achieved all the key military objectives in the Dayton peace agreement. The United Kingdom contribution to IFOR is a substantial one: initially, we provided some 11,500 troops on the ground, with a further 3,000 Royal Navy and Royal Air Force personnel offshore and in Italy. Subsequent adjustments to NATO's naval and air force levels, together with reductions in initial surge deployments and good housekeeping, reduced those totals to 10,500 and 1,000 respectively.

I can announce today that, following further good housekeeping measures and rationalisation of assets, made possible by the success of the operation and the benign environment in theatre, we have been able to reduce our numbers further. Our ground force contribution currently stands at around 9,200. Following the lifting of the arms embargo and the suspension of Operation Sharpguard, the RN and RAF contribution was reduced to some 500. The United Kingdom remains the second largest contributor after the United States.

The initial deployment of the United Kingdom contingent was, in itself, a notable success. Between 4 December and 18 January, some 6,600 personnel were transported to theatre, all by RAF aircraft. Their equipment went by sea. The decision not to move by land was vindicated by the significant delays experienced by other nations which chose that option.

In our case, despite difficult weather conditions at Split airport, the deployment was completed 24 hours ahead of schedule. I am sure that right hon. and hon. Members will agree that that is a great credit to the movements staffs of all three services. Their hard work, and that of other support staffs, often goes unsung—indeed unnoticed—by the media who tend to concentrate on eye-catching stories on the ground in Bosnia. However, without them, the operation would not have been possible, let alone successful.

The success of our deployment, which owed so much to the splendid work of Lieutenant General Sir Rupert Smith and Lieutenant General Sir Michael Walker—both of whom have been mentioned—contributed greatly to the remarkably efficient transfer of authority from UNPROFOR to IFOR. That was essential to ensuring that the parties respected the fragile ceasefire and got on with meeting their obligations under the peace agreement.

Most British personnel are in multinational division south-west. This British-led division has successfully presided over the largest transfer of land—the so-called anvil—under the peace agreement. From the very start of the IFOR operation, with commendable enterprise and resolve, British Army units seized the initiative and moved deep into Bosnian Serb territory. They thereby established themselves throughout their area of responsibility on both sides of the former confrontation line, in order to show presence and to secure IFOR's freedom of movement.

The divisional HQ has subsequently transferred to Banja Luka, in Republica Srpska, to reinforce IFOR's coverage of Bosnia as a whole and further stabilise the situation on the ground. It is the only IFOR divisional HQ in Bosnian Serb territory.

Building on the successful approach of our UNPROFOR contingents before them, British forces are performing splendid work at the local level throughout their area of responsibility. Besides implementing the peace agreement, ensuring freedom of movement, and providing general security, they are building up civilian confidence on all sides, helping to solve local problems and undertaking many local projects.

UK troops are also working in close co-operation with the Overseas Development Administration in a most highly praised initiative which is helping to restore normal life for the local people. Nearly 400 projects have been identified under this £4.5 million programme—more than 50 projects have already been completed. British engineers are helping to rebuild schools, hospitals, kindergartens, bridges and roads. They are also helping to restore essential services such as electricity and water.

Let me give the House just three examples. In towns such as Mrkonjic Grad, Sipovo and Banja Luka, British engineers are currently working to restore some 25 schools, the Neames bridge is being rebuilt, and, across the so-called anvil area, the scene of terrible destruction, engineers are working to restore the electricity supplies. That excellent work, which does not attract the applause it deserves, is giving the local people hope and confidence for the future.

The overall land operation is being most ably led by HQ ARRC, which is largely British-manned, and commanded by Lieutenant General Sir Michael Walker. The HQ's performance, in its first operation, is a source of great satisfaction to the UK and to NATO allies working alongside us.

The House will be heartened to know that our forces are demonstrating the virtues of initiative, determination and discipline that are the hallmark of the British armed forces and which have made them admired and respected around the world. They—and the country at large—can be justifiably proud of their achievements. Only last week, the IFOR commander, Admiral Smith, was fulsome in his praise of HQ ARRC, of General Walker, and of the performance of British forces as a whole.

I turn now to the Committee's recent report, introduced so knowledgeably today by my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside, and to some of the references made to it in the course of our debate.

I was grateful for the report's own acknowledgement of the contribution made by UK forces to the success of IFOR. The Committee recognised that they are "continuing to do an excellent job."

The Committee also paid tribute to our forces' professionalism, and adaptability in carrying out their "difficult task". I fully concur with that judgment.

The report does, however, voice a number of concerns over living conditions for our troops in theatre and the logistics support for the operation. Some of these concerns have been raised in the course of today's debate. I propose to address these points, in which I accept that there is some substance, but it is important to set this in the right context.

It is fundamental that operational factors must be taken into account in establishing priorities in the transport of equipment and stores to theatre. At the outset of the IFOR operation, the requirement quickly to deploy combat-capable troops to help secure the ceasefire in Bosnia outweighed the need for tactical base infrastructure. But as the mission has developed, it has been possible to devote greater priority to campaign facilities.

Any comparison in that respect with UNPROFOR must recognise that UNPROFOR had some three years to set in place its accommodation arrangements. Moreover, as I mentioned earlier, UK forces needed to move quickly into Bosnian Serb territory at the outset of the IFOR operation, in order to show presence on both sides of the former confrontation line. UNPROFOR had not previously operated in Serb-held territory. There was accordingly no existing base infrastructure to occupy. Furthermore, the area of the so-called anvil, into which British forces deployed, had suffered severe devastation and major population movements.

There should be no illusion that British troops on an operational deployment can expect to find all mod cons in the field, particularly in what was only recently a war zone. That said, where there have been shortcomings in conditions, action has been taken or is in hand to rectify them, as we have set out in our response to the Committee's report. Let me give a few examples.

Until late in the planning process, it remained unclear exactly where UK and other units would be deployed in Bosnia, and therefore what accommodation would be needed. Nevertheless, in anticipation of a shortfall, the purchase of accommodation units and Arctic tents was approved as soon as the peace agreement was signed, and in advance of the operation. Because of the lead times for delivery, accommodation units were not available in theatre at the start of the deployment. But construction has continued in recent months in order to ensure the provision of essential base facilities as the pattern of deployment has become clearer.

In the case of warm clothing, some units' specific operational roles included the possibility of an Arctic deployment. Those units were already equipped with winter clothing on their initial deployment. For other units, the purchase of warm clothing was approved in advance of the operation, but production lead times were up to six months. However, I am pleased to inform the House that the latest range of all-weather Army clothing, combat soldier 95, has just been released into service, and those units serving in Bosnia have been given priority for issue.

The issue of welfare telephones has been a source of much concern. When British troops first deployed into multinational division south-west, many found themselves in locations not served by the telephones installed during the UNPROFOR operation. The work undertaken to rectify that deficiency has been described in the Government's response to the Committee's report. A further tranche of telephone equipment was deployed to theatre last month, and the company which is carrying out that work expects to complete installation by the end of the month.

More than 95 per cent. of British troops in former Yugoslavia will then have access to welfare telephones. In the circumstances of this deployment, that is no mean achievement. The remaining personnel are located at sites where the permanent installation of telephones is not commercially viable. Arrangements have been made for such personnel to visit the nearest welfare telephone facilities regularly.

My hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside raised the question of elections and the OSCE work on elections. The OSCE has made arrangements with key capitals where there is a concentration of refugees for them to vote in absentia. Refugees are entitled to register to vote in absentia in their place of residence in 1991. If they wish to vote elsewhere, they must do so in person. OSCE arrangements are well advanced for the elections. IFOR is lending assistance wherever possible, such as with transportation, area security and planning support.

My hon. Friend also asked about the cost of the Bosnian deployment. In paragraph 28 of the Government's response, we say:

"The Government notes the Committee's recommendation that the additional costs of UK participation in IFOR should not be borne on the Defence Budget. A decision whether any costs should fall to the Reserve in FY1996/97 can only be taken when the implications of containing the costs of the IFOR deployment within the Defence Budget become clearer much later in the year."

[Mr. James Arbuthnot]

I am grateful for what my hon. Friend said about LPD replacements. These are good news for Barrow and for the many sub-contractors throughout the country who will benefit from these orders. They will help to sustain about 2,000 jobs in the United Kingdom, and they are very good news for the armed forces as well.

Mr. Keith Mans (Wyre): In connection with the new orders, can we expect any further announcements in the next week or so, bearing it in mind that a number of orders are pending and that parts of the armed forces, having taken the pain over redundancies and reductions during the past three or four years, are looking forward to gain from new equipment?

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have heard what my hon. Friend has said. I have no doubt that others will have done so, too.

I hope that I have covered most of the points raised by the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), one of which related to tour intervals. We fully recognise the strain that can be placed on soldiers and their families by too-frequent operational tours. We aim for a reasonable interval between them, but it has to vary from unit to unit, and according to Army commitments such as Northern Ireland and Bosnia. The long-term strength of the Army is, of course, kept under review in the light of changing circumstances.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned in particular tour intervals for Royal Engineers and Royal Signals units serving in Bosnia. I acknowledge that both those corps are heavily committed at present. We have taken steps to reduce the pressure in these areas in the short term by the use of reservists, and in the medium term by increases in Regular manpower establishments in specific areas. We are also reviewing our engineer support to other commitments.

A question also arises in relation to light reconnaissance units. I acknowledge that they too have a short operational tour interval. We are taking action to correct that with the creation of a third light recce regiment next year, and I am confident that that will improve tour intervals.

The hon. Members for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) and for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) and others asked about a follow-on force. IFOR has to concentrate on the task in hand, particularly during the run-up to elections, and much remains to be done to ensure that IFOR continues to succeed. It is right to put aside speculation as to what might happen next year, and apply ourselves at the moment to the challenges to be faced in the next six months.

I entirely agree with the hon. Member for Blaydon that IFOR experience demonstrates that transatlantic co-operation is essential, and it would be difficult to contemplate a United Kingdom contribution to any post-IFOR force without substantial US ground forces.

The hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) made a wise speech, which I have come to expect from him every time I listen to him. He raised a point about war criminals, which was also mentioned by others. The Government strongly support the work of the international criminal tribunal for former Yugoslavia. We have always stressed the importance of bringing to justice those responsible for serious violations of international law in Bosnia and elsewhere in the former Yugoslavia. The primary responsibility for handing over war criminals rests with the parties themselves, and we urge them to do so.

But IFOR also provides considerable support to the tribunal, and the tribunal has said that it is satisfied with this level of support. IFOR will detain any indicted war criminals with whom it comes into contact in the performance of its mission and if the circumstances permit. Although IFOR does not have a mandate to hunt down indicted war criminals, it is increasing its presence throughout Bosnia in preparation for the elections, and that will impose a further constraint on the movement of indicted war criminals.

I conclude by looking ahead. The IFOR mission and the UK contribution to it has been a conspicuous success, but much remains to be done. We must put aside speculation as to what will happen next year. Instead, we need to concentrate on what remains to be achieved this year.

Mr. Winnick: I apologise to the Minister and the House that I was absent for much of the debate, but I was here at the start, and intervened during the speech of the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin).

Will the Minister say whether there is an on-going debate about the possibility of a different Security Council resolution about war criminals—namely, that they should be apprehended? Perhaps in the next few weeks we shall see such a change. Perhaps the Minister will comment on press speculation along those lines.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I do not want to say more than I have already about war criminals, except to echo a point made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, which I think was repeated this afternoon by the hon. Gentleman: that there can be no lasting peace in Bosnia unless indicted war criminals are brought to justice.

Four key challenges remain to be dealt with. We must assist the Bosnians in the reconstruction of their country, so that they can see the benefits of peace. We must facilitate the return of the 2.5 million people displaced from their homes. There must be free and fair elections. The organisation is for the Bosnians themselves, but they will need help.

In answer to the point movingly made by the hon. Member for Western Isles, the people of Bosnia must choose to live together. They have stopped fighting, but to date they have shown little sign of reconciliation. These tasks are primarily for their civilian organisations and, most importantly, the people of Bosnia, but, within the limits of its military task, IFOR will do all that it can to assist, for the duration of its mission.

United Kingdom forces will continue to play their full part in this, and I have every confidence that they will do so to the impressively high standards that they have achieved from the outset of the IFOR mission. They will tackle their demanding task with all the more courage and determination in the knowledge that they enjoy the confidence and support of the House and the country at large.

6.9 pm

Mr. Colvin: With the leave of the House, I shall briefly respond to some of the remarks made by hon. Members this afternoon.

I thank my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the speedy way in which he responded to the recommendations of the Committee and our call for welfare telephones, bottled water, better logistics and medical facilities in theatre. That was greatly appreciated by our forces.

My hon. Friend referred to the very successful rapid deployment of our forces. That reiterated what the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), the Opposition spokesman, said, when he drew attention to the need to be prepared to deploy rapidly to any part of the world in support of United Nations or NATO operations. I remind Her Majesty's Government that we still have difficulty over heavy lift transport, and some of the deployments to former Yugoslavia could not have been undertaken without assistance from our American allies. That goes not only for airlift, but for heavy lift by sea.

When I went down to the military port at Marchwick in my constituency to see our troops depart, I was told that they were waiting for American transports to arrive to convey them to Bosnia. That should be dealt with—and I know that Her Majesty's Government already have plans for the lease of two ro-ro ships.

The hon. Member for South Shields referred to overstretch. No one else has mentioned it, but it has a tremendous impact on the recruitment of service men and women. We are short of staff in all three services, particularly in the infantry, which has some 4,000 vacancies. We must bear that in mind. I was pleased that the Overseas Development Administration was acclaimed for the work that it is doing in the former Yugoslavia. We had first-hand experience of that work, and congratulate Dr. Greenall on his achievements.

The hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam), who is our technological expert on the Committee, had a number of things to say about the Dayton accord and whether it was too ambitious. He and other hon. Members questioned whether the deadline of 14 September was over-optimistic. The important thing is that that deadline puts pressure on everyone to deliver. I only pray that the elections, when they take place, are seen by everyone—especially the Bosnian people—to be free and fair. If they are not, we shall still have a difficulty.

It is unthinkable that IFOR should withdraw before there is a satisfactory conclusion. Although no one will make any promises, I think that it is an open secret that there will be an on-going presence—IFOR 2, perhaps. It is essential for it to be a NATO presence. We must not revert to the old United Nations command structure that proved so unsatisfactory.

Let me say in its defence that the United Nations had never had to mount such an operation before; nor, for that matter, had NATO. NATO had been prepared for an eyeball-to-eyeball confrontation with the former Soviet Union in rather different circumstances, but its command and communication structures showed themselves capable of responding to a completely new situation. That is greatly to NATO's credit.

This afternoon, the House has demonstrated the same consensus and unanimity as that traditionally achieved by the Select Committee. I only wish that that was a more regular feature of our exchanges on other matters.

Class VI, Vote 1

Housing Need

[Relevant documents: Second report from the Environment Committee of Session 1995–96, on Housing Need, House of Commons Paper No. 22-I, the Government's response thereto (Cm 3259) and the Department of the Environment Annual Report: The Government's Expenditure Plans 1995–96 to 1997–98 (Cm 2807).]

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That a further, revised sum not exceeding £3,083,844,000 be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to complete or defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending on 31st March 1997 for expenditure by the Department of the Environment on Housing Revenue Account Subsidy; slum clearance, repairs and other improvements to private housing; payments to the Housing Corporation; the transfer of local authority estates to new landlords; accommodation for the homeless and special needs accommodation; housing management and mobility; rent officers and Rent Assessment Panels; grants for the provision of gypsy sites; grants to home improvement agencies; asylum seekers' special housing grant; for research projects, including European Community programmes; publicity; and for sundry other housing and construction services and projects.—[Mr. Curry.]

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): I am grateful for the opportunity to talk about the Environment Committee's report on housing need, which is an important issue.

I thank all those who submitted evidence to the Committee. A Select Committee—certainly, the Environment Committee—depends a good deal on the quality of evidence, and the willingness of those who submit it to come before the Committee and answer questions. I also thank all the staff in the Select Committee office—including Steve Priestley, the Clerk—for helping us to marshal the evidence and organise our activities. I am also grateful to our specialist advisers, Christine Whitehead and Peter Chapman, who gave us invaluable advice and helped to steer us into the crucial areas of investigation. Finally, I am grateful to the Committee itself, which worked in a very co-operative way.

Let me express particular appreciation to my predecessor in the Chair, the hon. Member for West Hertfordshire (Mr. Jones), who is now the Minister for Construction, Planning and Energy Efficiency. I say that for two reasons. First, I have some reservations about the way in which Select Committees work. They depend on a Government majority within them, and the Government sometimes try to influence their workings and, perhaps, to encourage them not to become too deeply embroiled in some of the more controversial issues.

Between 1983 and 1992, the Committee produced some excellent reports on "green" issues, but during that time it never examined local government finance—for instance, the whole question of the poll tax—or housing, because its then Chairman felt that on such controversial matters the Select Committee would not work particularly well. I was very pleased when the hon. Member for West Hertfordshire became Chairman, and agreed—perhaps as a result of a little pressure from Opposition Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford)—that we should try to examine some of those more controversial issues. In 1993 we were very successful, managing to consider the question of the Housing Corporation and housing associations and producing what I considered to be a useful report.

One of that report's key recommendations was for the Government to publish again their estimates of housing need. I was disappointed by their response, in which they said that they were still not prepared to publish the figures. I was very pleased that the hon. Member for West Hertfordshire had joined the Government when, relatively soon after that, he obviously remembered the report of his Select Committee and was part of the process that produced the Government's figures for housing need.

I have always felt a little sympathy for the Government. First they are castigated for not publishing the housing need figures; then, as soon as they publish them, they are told that the figures are wrong. If we are to have a proper debate in this country about three issues, we must have those housing need figures. First, there is the sheer importance of meeting housing need effectively. As the introduction to our report states,

"Shelter is one of the most basic human needs. Being without a home is a catastrophe. Not only are the roofless deprived of the means to improve their lot: an address holds the key to employment, credit, goods, support, and services."

When we quote statistics, we should bear in mind the number of individuals who do not have adequate housing. It is easy for those who live comfortably to forget them. The first reason why housing need is an important issue, then, is the human tragedy that lies behind it.

Secondly, providing housing takes up a substantial proportion of the resources of both individuals and the nation. That proportion has tended to grow. Back in 1960, individual households spent about 9.5 per cent. of their income on housing; the figure has now risen to about 15.8 per cent. Some of those who are in the least adequate housing—in poor furnished rented accommodation—spend more than a quarter of their income on housing costs. While Government expenditure on housing provision, particularly the provision of social housing, has tended to decline, expenditure on housing benefit has risen dramatically. Thus the second reason why it is important that we have a clear idea of housing need relates to the personal and national allocation of resources.

Thirdly, we need to know about housing need because if we need more houses, we need to decide where they will be built. There is also the question of planning, which spills over into matters such as public transport. Low-density housing affects public transport. Such issues are important. We must also protect the countryside. We do not want it to be built over. Thus the three reasons why we need to understand housing need are: individual needs, allocation of resources and the planning implications.

On resources, the central question is: how long will the problem last? The Select Committee appreciated that the Government published the figures up to the year 2006, but we wanted them to publish figures up to 2011 or, possibly, 2016. I regret that the Government have not been able to accept that recommendation. I understand that the further into the future the estimate, the more difficult it is to make. The longer estimates may turn out to be pretty inaccurate towards the end, but they can give us an idea of the trend.

It is important to understand the trend. By analogy, if one is swimming against the current, it helps to know when the current will change. One's behaviour will be different if one knows that the current will change in five minutes from one's behaviour if one knows that it will never change. It would help if the Government would examine predicting beyond the year 2006. If housing need continues in an upward curve, we shall have to behave in a way different from how we would behave if, after the year 2006, the figure started to fall. Will we be trying to meet a need that has peaked or a continuing one? I hope that the Government push further forward their housing need predictions, if not tonight, then certainly over the next few months.

The Committee received much evidence that the Government's estimates have not taken account of unmet need. I was pleased that paragraph 39 of the Government's response hinted that they might be changing their attitude and that future studies would try to make more of an estimate of unmet need. I also noticed that they criticised the Committee for not putting a figure on unmet need, which I accept, and that they tried to argue that unmet need was falling. They suggested that the number of people sleeping rough was declining. I do not have much confidence in that view, because my experience from Greater Manchester and from walking around London is that the problem is not declining.

The Government say that fewer people are having to be put into bed-and-breakfast accommodation and that the figures for overcrowding have gone down. The statistics may be correct, but they were not much supported by the evidence that the Committee received—and certainly not by my constituency experience. At this stage, I do not want to argue too much about who is right and who is wrong. I want to impress on the Government the fact that we need a calculation of unmet need.

In considering housing need, it is crucial that we examine existing stock. There has been a tendency in the House to bandy about the idea that local authorities have a lot of empty properties. That is a myth. The evidence to the Select Committee was that the majority, although not all, of local authorities had got to grips with the problem and were doing well. The good ones at least were reducing the number of empty council properties. I am afraid that the Government, especially the Ministry of Defence, were not doing quite so well; we shall have to watch what happens in the next few months in respect of that.

The number of empty privately owned houses is an intriguing question. With the downturn in the housing market, that number has tended to increase. How many empty owner-occupied, or perhaps owner-unoccupied houses do we need to have a properly regulated housing market? It is pointed out, especially by people who are worried about building lots of new houses all over the countryside, that if all the owner-occupied houses—I am getting tangled; perhaps I need another phrase—were occupied, we would not need to build so many houses. How many houses need to be empty to allow people to move around the country?

The next question is: how many houses are in the wrong place? That fundamental question has not had much attention. In some areas, there is almost a surplus of houses. People find it difficult to sell their houses because the jobs have disappeared, and councils find it difficult to let houses. In allocating resources, we must decide whether to take steps to ensure that the jobs go to those areas or whether to help people to move to such areas for retirement or other reasons rather than having to build more and more houses in areas where there are employment opportunities.

How many houses in the existing stock are of the wrong type? The Select Committee received much evidence on the problem of bed-sits. Some housing associations, and certainly some local authorities, were enthusiastic about building bed-sits in the late 1950s and 1960s. They were aimed especially at elderly people, with the idea that they would not want large dwellings to look after and would be happy with bed-sits. Many of them were happy in the 1960s, but increasingly, elderly people are not happy with them. They prefer to have bedrooms separate from their living rooms and often would prefer two bedrooms, especially in the case of couples where one has an infirmity and does not sleep well. Such problems need to be tackled. Bed-sits are becoming increasingly difficult to let.

I am critical of Stockport council in my constituency, and of one or two others, which, perhaps because of the pressure not to have empty properties, are keen to let bed-sits to people who come off the housing waiting list. Those people sometimes have drug-related problems. They may be alcoholics or have psychiatric problems. They would be difficult neighbours. I could make a pretty good fuss about it if such people lived next to me. But it is unfair when they are put into bed-sits next to elderly people who have enough problems coping with day-to-day life. In considering the existing stock, we must remember that many bed-sits must be remodelled if we are to get the best use out of them and not produce major problems.

My last point on the existing stock is that some social housing estates, because of the way in which they have developed, are unpopular. Perhaps the Government have not spent enough money, but they have allowed local authorities to spend considerable amounts in implementing the estate action scheme and other schemes to reinvigorate some of the estates. Some of those schemes have been extremely successful and some of them will give long life to those estates. Some of them have had spectacularly large sums spent on them but, five or six years later, we cannot see the benefit of that expenditure.

In the Chamber we have, over the years, become hung up on whether or not properties are owned. We tend to take the view that if someone owns his property, he looks after it and if he is a tenant, he does not. I can think back to minutes of meetings of tenants' associations in my constituency in the 1950s and 1960s—although they were tenants, they behaved as if they owned the estate. The idea of ownership—whether a property is bought using a mortgage or whether rent is paid—is important.

When the Select Committee visited Sandwell and one or two other places, it saw tenants' representatives—tenants' enablers. The schemes that have implemented housing renewal on council estates and have involved the tenants, have been successful. I only wish that the same had happened in parts of my constituency in Stockport. The housing manager, Mr. Hilton—who has just been promoted—was very good at getting the Government to give the council permission to spend money, but he never overcame the problem of management. I am disappointed, because I do not believe that the tenants in some areas of my constituency feel that the estates are theirs or that they have responsibility. They tend to feel that it is the housing manager's estate and behave accordingly.

The Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration (Mr. David Curry): I agree with what the hon. Gentleman has said about ownership. One important factor is the way in which the estate is designed—its physical shape. It is much easier for someone who lives in a more conventional street with neighbours, in a classical setting, to feel a sense of ownership than it is for someone living in a high-rise block, which is part of a series of blocks with wasteland between each one. That is why one of the key factors of the estate action and estate renewal programmes has been to consider the overall design and to accept elements of demolition; in that way, we can create a physical environment that gives people a greater sense of ownership.

Mr. Bennett: I accept what the Minister says—there is considerable evidence to support that view. If estates are redesigned and properties taken out, the available stock is reduced. The redesign may make the stock better, but if there are to be more demolitions—in order to achieve what the Minister has just suggested, more demolitions may be necessary—we may need to build more houses or build between blocks. We should house people in dwellings that are people-friendly, not people-unfriendly. The Minister should do a little more work on weighing up the consequences of repair as opposed to rebuild. I am worried that there are some tower blocks and deck access schemes where it might be better value for money in the long run to start again rather than to try to make the existing dwellings people-friendly.

Another aspect of existing stock that concerned the Committee was that of red lining. I do not want to become involved in arguments across the Chamber about whether it was a great idea in the 1980s to encourage many people, particularly council tenants in high-rise blocks of flats, to buy their property. It has happened and, having happened, I am worried about the number of people who are finding it difficult to resell their property. There is nothing worse on a council estate than to have many houses that are well looked after and two or three houses or flats that are neglected or empty and look a mess. It is particularly upsetting if those properties are owned by individuals who have simply walked away from them.

In the 1980s, the building societies were keen to let people have mortgages on some of the properties; now, the building societies have lost their enthusiasm for lending money. The building societies have let this country down on too many occasions. In the 1960s and early 1970s, they were reluctant to lend money on old, Victorian properties, some of which were good value for money. On that occasion, the local authorities acted as the lender of last resort and made it possible to borrow on those properties. Interestingly, more recently, the building societies have taken over responsibility for many of those mortgages from local councils. Having shown enthusiasm for providing mortgages for residents in big blocks of flats, it is unfair of the building societies to withdraw that support, and doing so causes a great deal of hardship. One crucial factor when considering housing need is the analysis of existing stock, of which we must make as good a use as possible.

[Mr. Bennett]

Have the Government made a correct estimate of total housing need? Points that I have made about housing stock suggest that I believe that the Government's estimate is too low. One of the Committee's most difficult tasks was to come up with the right estimate. We fudged it and said that we thought that, on the whole, the Government's estimate should be at the top of the range rather than towards the bottom.

In response to the Select Committee's report, the Government attempted to justify their figures. They said that if we continued to build at the rate of about 60,000 social houses per year, that would be perfectly all right. The Government achieve their own target, but that target is low. The Government's excuse is that we do not need as many social houses provided by the public sector, because the private rented sector is doing better than we thought.

I am worried about the private rented sector—I am not against it in principle, but I am worried about some of it. The evidence in my constituency shows that some of the private rented sector consists of poor-quality housing. If it was cheap, poor-quality housing, we might be able to say that the Government had found a good bargain. But I am worried because much of it is poor-quality housing—people have to live in inadequate housing—but it is dear and it is paid for out of housing benefit. The tenant gets a poor deal; the Government get a poor deal because housing benefit amounts to a big bill.

The private rented sector has also grown, but only temporarily, as a result of the number of people who have found it difficult to sell their property, so have rented it out. I do not think that all those cases should be dealt with as if they provided social housing. If someone rents out a house in one part of the country and cannot sell it, when he moves to another part of the country, he has to rent rather than buy. That process does not contribute to social housing. I accept that, sometimes, when property is difficult to sell, people move into it as social housing and receive high housing benefit to pay for it. We need more information about the private rented sector before the Government can justify their low estimates.

Mr. Michael Stephen (Shoreham): The hon. Gentleman has rightly drawn attention to the problem of the high prices being paid by the public, through housing benefit, for sub-standard housing in the private sector. How does he propose to tackle the problem? Would he suggest limiting housing benefit to a certain amount according to the property's condition? What other method would he suggest?

Mr. Bennett: I do not want to return to the time when we subsidised housing as opposed to people, but we may have gone a little too far in the direction of subsidising the individual, which has produced the poverty trap. In this debate, I simply want to illustrate that that was one of the areas that concerned the Select Committee. We are worried about the estimates. We understand the Government's argument about the private rented sector, but at this stage, we need more information.

What I am coming to—this is not strongly recommended by the Select Committee—is that if we are to try to push up the number of social houses that we are building, we must consider a pretty fundamental question: where will the money come from? I would certainly argue very strongly that, although the Government are looking for tax cuts in the autumn, if they have any spare money, an awful lot more ought to be going into housing.

I say to my hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich, on the Front Bench, that, although he has a scheme for building more houses from capital receipts in the first one or two years of a Labour Government—if he is a little inefficient, it might go into a third year—we must consider firmly where the money will come from after that. We might be able to reduce the amount that is being spent on housing benefit by getting people back to work. The minimum wage may throw some people off housing benefit.

I would argue, although I shall not expand on it tonight, that we should weigh up the Treasury rules and the fact that there has been too much pussyfooting around about where the money comes from. If a country is investing in housing that will be of long-term benefit, such expenditure should not be treated in quite the same way as borrowing money to pay social security bills or other expenditure. That is not in the Select Committee's report; it is very much my view. One of the advantages of the Government publishing figures and of this debate is that we can argue in other areas of public expenditure that housing need must be met.

One issue that came out strongly in evidence to the Select Committee was special housing need. It is very obvious that the elderly and other groups of people need special housing. One of the most interesting things that the Committee found concerned lifetime homes. We were invited up to York by the Joseph Rowntree trust to look at some of the houses that it was developing, which were designed so that people with disabilities of one sort or another could adapt them at a very small extra cost. I am not saying that such houses are the whole solution. The Government have been considering building regulations and how far houses should be designed to be friendly to adaptation by people who live in them for short or lifelong periods. I hope that those regulations will come out fairly soon.

Where will the houses go? There was much technical argument in Committee on how far it is possible to measure housing need looking downwards from a national perspective and how far it can be considered from the bottom up. One of my disappointments is that it is not possible to get the two figures to meet to see what is happening. There was much evidence that those two approaches should be merged and that there should not be such a top-down approach.

One of the crucial questions is how many new houses we need. Paragraph 16 of the Government's response says that there will be a discussion document. The Secretary of State for the Environment has been going around the country saying that 4.4 million new homes need to be built. Where should they go? I hope that the Minister will be able to tell us when that discussion document will be published, so that we can have a proper debate on it. I suggest that the method for planning housing in London ought to be considered for other areas. The London housing capacity survey is quite important.

It is important that much of the new housing is built on brown-field sites. I congratulate the Government on the fact that almost 50 per cent. of new housing is being built on such sites, but I suggest that they should work the figure up even higher. I have some reservations about what a brown-field site is. I am not quite sure whether Stonehenge counts or not. There is a little evidence that some of the sites that are classified as brown-field sites do not have quite the grime of the gasworks with which we would associate the term brown-field site.

As the first paragraph of the Select Committee report says,

"The Government's declared aim is 'a decent home . . . within reach of every family'".

That ought to be the nation's aim, but our report makes it quite clear that we have a very long way to go to meet it.

6.45 pm

Sir Irvine Patnick (Sheffield, Hallam): I join the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) in his tributes to the people he mentioned. I know that he is a modest person, but if he will permit me, I should like to pay tribute to him. He rules our proceedings in Committee in a fair and frank manner. I do not intend, however, to follow his remarks. I want to travel a different route, but I hope that we reach the same destination.

When a witness mentioned forecasting future housing need while, as a member of the Environment Committee, I was taking evidence on housing need one day, my memory flashed back to many years ago to when I was but a mere house building contractor. Later on, I remembered a time years ago when I was trying to complete a form—I think that it was from the Government—on forecasting how many houses I would build in that quarter, bearing in mind mortgages, overdraft, land availability and, if they were ever built, whether they would sell in the prevailing economic climate. Oh yes, I remember the Labour Government well. All had to be taken into consideration. In addition, I think that there were penalties if the form was not returned on time. Furthermore, a check had to be made on the previous form that I had completed. It was a time-consuming crystal-ball job, which was not very scientific bearing in mind the fact that there were no computers, spreadsheets and all of today's tools of the trade.

This was a time when bricks had to be unloaded by hand and were not delivered on pallets, when concrete and mortar were mixed by hand and not delivered on site, and when plastic drainage pipes were in their infancy. Window frames were timber and eaves, gutters and rainwater pipes had just started changing from timber and cast iron to plastic. That was only 25 years ago.

Around that time, municipal housing gave way to a new style of accommodation. The traditional housing, which my right hon. Friend the Minister refers to as classic-style dwellings, was terrace blocks. Four blocks, six blocks and eight blocks, as they were called, were being replaced by high-rise, high-density blocks. The life expectancy of such dwellings, which wasted a vast amount of communal land around them, was limited. I watched many being built, and lived to see many demolished.

In Leeds, a most famous block of flats—Quarryhill flats—which was reputed to be the largest in Europe, had a built-in waste disposal system. If my memory serves me correctly, those flats were demolished because the cost of replacing the waste disposal system and putting the flats back into good repair was too great. Even then, municipal authorities had to outdo others and build even bigger and better blocks than other towns. Such rivalry continues today.

I recollect a light rail system being built in Manchester, and Sheffield following with its own system. The building of Supertram in Sheffield created chaos on the streets, and I imagine that there is a huge shortfall between the £240 million Government grant and the project's actual cost. Incentives to ride on such facilities, such as park and ride, need to be addressed. Many cities are on the starting blocks waiting to introduce their own light railway systems, which are truly no different from the high-rise, high-density concept—but I digress.

Houses in terrace-type blocks had their own front and back doors, and their own gardens to the front and rear. Access to the backs of all the houses was gained by way of a covered passage. The semi-detached houses on those "classic" estates were much sought after. Some of those council estates exist today. They are still very popular, and many of the houses have been bought under the Government's right-to-buy legislation.

During the period when compulsory purchase and slum clearance were in vogue, I became a member of Sheffield city council and of its housing committee and public works committee, the latter under the chairmanship of the hon. Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton). A former chairman of Sheffield housing committee, the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley), was then a Member of Parliament.

At that time, the Parker Morris standards determined the facilities and the plumbing, and whether a property could be improved at reasonable cost. Thus, dwellings that could have had a long life were demolished in the name of progress, and their occupants dispersed over the city. Communities were broken up, and the small shops that served the area were either demolished or had to close.

That was the start of a new environment in which traditional values were lost. I accept that not all the dwellings that were cleared were capable of being improved. Some would have had to be pulled down anyway, but many of the dwellings, with a damp-proof course inserted, new electrics, and a plumbing system coupled with a bathroom and kitchen, would have had a passport into the next century and onwards.

Meanwhile, high-density blocks of concrete flats with flat roofs invaded. If I had to select one such site as an example of that era it would be the Kelvin flats in Sheffield, which will be known to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson), who is now in the Chamber. I remember canvassing those flats during an election campaign. The open decks turned into wind tunnels, making them freezing places. If one knocked on a door and waited, the tenant came up the steps to the front door—usually up the steps of the flat next door. Millions of pounds were poured in to try to improve those flats, but eventually the decision was made to demolish them all.

Some of the properties that had been removed to make way for the flats would still have been around, not only today but for many years to come. They had in-built durability, and we have yet to ascertain the durability of the dwellings built in the 1950s and 1960s.

[Sir Irvine Patnick]

The demolition of the original properties created the problem of breaking up communities, for many houses had been replaced by fewer dwellings—flats that were not readily accepted in an area not used to communal life in blocks of flats. That was all the fault of the nature of the planning brief in those days.

I recollect with fond memories that, on a popular estate—one of the estates that the Minister would describe as "classical"—it was possible to guess the age of the occupants of the houses. The names on the electoral roll were the giveaway, because they were no longer in vogue. The state of the garden too, gave a clue in most cases, letting us know that the residents were elderly, and might have moved out if there had been a smaller property nearby to move into. The four, six and eight blocks could have been converted into self-contained flats, with central heating and a lift on the outside of the block, which would in turn have released the other dwellings for other residents to use.

That would have increased mobility, yet most old people, rightly, wish to stay in their existing homes. Who can blame them? A good friend of mine aged 91—I am sure that he will not mind my mentioning him—has recently lost his sight. Last Saturday, he managed to find his way to my home, and after a long chat I offered to walk him back home to his wife. It was not far.

When we arrived at my friend's home, he mentioned his concern about the garden, and I asked if I could look at it. Hon. Members must not imagine that it is a large garden. We had to go down some steps—six in all. My friend counted them out, and informed me that some were wider than others. Then he pointed out where his roses, his soft fruit and his lawn were. Despite his blindness and disability, my friend had his memories and was at home. Move him, and he would be totally lost.

When I was in the house building industry, the sites were either green-field sites or infill plots. Today, our planners, like the Chairman of the Environment Committee, the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish, call them brown-field sites. The planners advocate making better and more imaginative use of existing buildings and empty homes.

The planners also advise that projections of housing provision should be subject to further examination as part of the preparation of a development plan, saying that we must ensure that up-to-date information is used, and should even take into account information on demographic and housing market trends, as well as land availability. House builders and councils will in future have to monitor the supply of land, while advice on the affordability of housing is spelt out in policy planning guidance note 3—PPG3.

Rural areas can be affected by "in-migration", which is a new word to me. Today, local authorities are advised to make use of existing housing stock and to reduce the number of empty dwellings. That is advice that a council such as Sheffield could take on board.

Last year in Sheffield, there were 330 properties vacant for up to three weeks, 363 vacant for between three and six weeks, 810 vacant for between six weeks and six months, 324 vacant for between six months and one year, and 219 vacant for more than one year—a total of 2,046. Those are the Audit Commission's figures, not mine.

In the Government's response to the Committee's report, it is said that, although the void rate is about 2 per cent., that includes properties in need of extensive renovation before they can be used, and properties awaiting demolition. Nationally, the number of local authority void properties awaiting minor repairs or letting averages just over 1 per cent., yet the percentage of Sheffield local authority dwellings unlet is 2.85 per cent., and the percentage for Yorkshire and Humberside is 1.95 per cent. Another interesting fact is that the average time taken to relet in Sheffield is 48 days.

The recommendation of today's planners is to encourage the conversion of larger under-occupied dwellings into flats. That takes me back to what I said before about terraced houses. It is a funny old world. Planners also advocate the conversion into dwellings of suitable non-residential property, such as former mill offices, warehouses and empty space above shops, and recycling vacant, under-used and previously developed land in urban areas. That advice could be followed by Sheffield development corporation in the lower Don valley—by building houses where factories used to be.

In rural areas, infill sites in rural settlements, when appropriate to their character and structure, may be a solution, but without incursion into the green belt. More is the pity that the planners of yesteryear were not given that simple advice, which today we can all go along with. If they had been, we would have a larger stock of what an old Sheffield alderman, a former chairman of the housing committee who is no longer with us, called units of accommodation.

It has been an enjoyable experience for me to return to talking about building, albeit for a short time. I welcome the Government's response to the Select Committee report on housing need, especially the fact that they accept that the published estimates are but work in progress, and that they are working on a way of improving estimates of the demand for housing.

I also welcome the fact that the Government fully recognise the importance of improving their understanding of the factors that affect the number and type of households that are formed, and I await with great interest their discussion document, which will examine trends.

The Select Committee commented on empty dwellings. It is true that the performance of local authorities as landlords, with all their vacancies, leaves a lot to be desired. That factor is taken into account and used in the housing revenue account subsidy calculation, in recognition of the rental income that is lost to authorities. The proportion of local authority properties that are void while awaiting letting averages just over 1 per cent.

As I have already said, the private and public sectors must grow together to ensure that accommodation is available for our needs both today and in the future. I would have commented on many other aspects of the Government's response to the Select Committee report, but I know that others are waiting to speak.

In conclusion, the advice that planners are giving us today could result in yet another change in housing accommodation. Who knows whether, in years to come, the properties that were recommended to be converted from industrial use to dwellings may return to their former use so that the housing wheel will have gone a full cycle.

Mr. Greg Pope (Hyndburn): I enter the debate with some trepidation, given the number of members of the Environment Committee present and the fact I am not a member of that Select Committee.

I begin by warmly welcoming the Committee's report on housing need. It demonstrates the scale of housing need in the United Kingdom and the extent to which the Government have underestimated it. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on his wide-ranging introduction to this evening's fairly brief debate and say with some consternation that I found little to disagree with in the speech of the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir I. Patnick). I was interested in his recollection of canvassing deck access flats in Sheffield, and their later demolition. I trust that there was no correlation between his canvass returns and the decision to demolish the flats.

As a member of the housing committee on Blackburn borough council, I recall taking the decision to demolish deck access flats many years before local authorities had paid for them. The decision was made on the correct grounds—people did not want to live in them. The hon. Member for Hallam may share my view that the decision to build the flats in the 1960s was understandable. When faced with the squalor of urban housing in the 1960s, many local authorities did what they thought best and built high-density housing, some of it deck access. It turned out to be a tragic mistake, but there is no point in trying to allocate political blame.

I shall address a narrow part of the report—that relating to private sector disrepair—but I am not making a partisan speech. The Government attempted to address the problem in recent legislation and, to be fair to them, they recognised some of the deficiencies inherent in the existing grant system. In 1993, the Department of the Environment noted that the mandatory grants system had given rise to unsustainable financial pressures, and in 1995 it stated that "mandatory grants have created unrealistic expectations. The demand for grants has exceeded the resources available."

That is a masterly understatement in respect of my constituency.

Also to be fair to the Government, some of the measures that they have introduced over the past few years have been an improvement on what went before. For example, there is fairly general recognition that housing renewal areas were an improvement on housing action areas and general improvement areas. It is a pity that, when the Government first flagged up the idea of housing renewal areas before the 1987 general election, they implied that the scheme would attract extra Government support. It has never been forthcoming.

It is now clear that, even with housing renewal areas, the mandatory grants system was failing. Many local authorities—including mine—have not been able to meet the huge demand for mandatory grants and, therefore, comply with the law. The Department of the Environment concluded that "the main problem with the arrangements is that, while resources remain finite the system has turned out largely demand led."

Nowhere has that been shown more starkly than in my constituency.

Most of the housing in my constituency—and in east Lancashire generally—was constructed during the industrial revolution. Although it served its purpose well, there is little doubt that, as towns expanded, houses were built fairly rapidly and, inevitably, some corners were cut.

Much of the original housing remains. More than half of the houses in my constituency were built before the first world war. That is not unusual in the urban parts of Lancashire and Yorkshire. Decay in those properties has been unavoidable, and there are now around 9,500 homes in need of statutory intervention because they are unfit for habitation. Another 5,500 homes need immediate assistance to avoid becoming unfit in the near future. So, 15,000 homes require serious renovation. The Minister would not disagree that it is broadly unacceptable in this day and age that 15,000 families in my constituency should live in sub-standard housing.

It is interesting to note that, in response to the Department's consultation paper, the Association of District Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities stated:

"if the Government's proposals are implemented"—

they are now in the process of implementation—

"conditions in the private sector will inevitably continue to deteriorate and more people on low incomes will be condemned to live in officially uninhabitable accommodation, with the associated consequences for related policy areas such as ill health and area regeneration."

The Government have placed local authorities in a dilemma. Until now, they have stated that mandatory repairs have to be carried out on properties, otherwise the local authority can be hauled before the local government ombudsman, but they are not prepared to fund even a fraction of the cost of meeting that requirement. If local authorities spent money that they did not have, however, there is no doubt that the Government would seek to have the councillors surcharged. Local authorities are in a no-win situation.

The Government are now in the process of extricating themselves from that appalling mess by removing the mandatory duty on local authorities to provide home improvement grants for people whose properties fail the fitness standard. That is all well and good for the Government, but where does it leave my 15,000 constituents who are in housing need and the hundreds of thousands of people throughout the country who face similar difficulties?

Many people recognise the scale of the problem. The Select Committee heard evidence that there are 1.5 million properties that are unfit for human habitation in England alone. They include 157,000 homes without heating other than portable heaters, 272,000 homes without adequate ventilation, 165,000 homes without a bathroom and 150,000 homes that do not meet the bedroom standard for space. The director of the House Builders Federation told the Select Committee that unfitness in the private sector was both "a significant problem and one that is not easy to resolve."

I agree.

Some housing is simply beyond repair, and in those circumstances clearance is the only option. My local authority is far from unique in having insufficient resources to clear such properties to make room for regeneration. As time passes, an increasing number of properties fall into that category and certain areas are desperately in need of clearance.

[Mr. Greg Pope]

My constituency suffers from the well-known problem of clearance blight. People know that their properties need clearing, as does the council, but they cannot sell their houses, and the local authority does not have the resources to demolish them. That has led to an increasing problem nationwide, but especially in east Lancashire. People simply give up hope and abandon their low-value, privately owned terraced houses. As a result, void properties that are privately owned fall into disrepair and are abandoned while—even in constituencies such as mine where homelessness was unheard of 15 years ago—there is an increasing problem of homelessness.

The School of Advanced Urban Studies in Bristol produced a report in 1994 that concluded that there was a "crisis in housing renewal", and which went on to say that there was "a continuing problem of unfitness and disrepair on a substantial scale, and that in addition to this enormous backlog, other properties will continue to fall into disrepair in the future".

The residents of those properties are entitled to ask the Government this: if they could not access improvement grants when they had a mandatory right to them, how on earth can they access a grant when that right has been removed? That is a matter of real concern in my constituency, and to the 1.5 million people who live in sub-standard housing. The Government should be concerned about that, but instead of facing up to the problem, they are running away from it.

I wish to refer briefly to public sector housing, about which the Committee took evidence. There is not a great deal of public sector housing in my constituency, where more than four out of five homes are privately owned, but many of the council estates have been greatly improved in the past few years. To be fair to the Government, the estates have been improved because the council has been able to work in partnership with the Government in the estate action programme. More than 1,000 properties in my constituency have benefited from that programme. I know what a difference it has made to many of my constituents, and I pay tribute not only to the Department of the Environment and the Minister, but to the local authority.

Sadly, the fact remains that a large number of properties—a similar number, in fact—have not benefited from estate action and they are in desperate need of investment and renovation to bring them up to the minimum standard. The problem, which must be repeated throughout the country, is with estates that have not been renovated—the estate action programme seems to have stopped but, as far as I am aware, nothing meaningful has been put in its place.

I have been trying recently to help the residents of the Sands estate in Rishton. Residents of that estate are in appalling housing need. One told me a week ago that a person would have to be absolutely desperate to accept a house on that estate. There is no way in which the local authority can access resources to help those people out of their desperate problems. I hope that the Minister will address the matter in his winding-up speech. What will to happen to people in such circumstances?The only avenue open to them at the moment is for there to be a voluntary stock transfer of estates such as the Sands from ownership by the local authority to a housing association. That is fine, and I have no ideological hang-ups about it—my constituents who are in housing need could not, in the end, give tuppence about who the landlord of their property is. All they want is to know whether their properties will be improved.

I wish to make a point to the Minister that is neither ideological nor party political. It is far from satisfactory when the only option open to people in estates such as the one to which I have referred is to transfer ownership of the entire estate from one sector to another. Surely it would be better to put in place a funding mechanism not dissimilar to those that the Government have put in place in the past few years to provide some kind of home for people in such housing need.

Acute housing need is, without doubt, the greatest problem faced by millions of our fellow citizens. In 1996, it cannot possibly be right for 1.5 million people to be living in properties that the Government accept are unfit for human habitation. The House does not have the opportunity to debate issues such as housing anywhere near often enough, and I am grateful to the Select Committee and its Chairman for providing us with the opportunity to debate the issue tonight.

Mr. Roy Thomason (Bromsgrove): First, I declare an interest as a consultant to a building society and to a firm of solicitors, both of which inevitably have property matters relevant to their activities, although neither of them, nor any client of the solicitors, has invited me to express an opinion in the debate.

I welcome the opportunity to discuss housing as a major issue and, in particular, the Select Committee report. Housing is and always will remain at the forefront of political debate, and policies related to it are deeply contentious and go to the core of social division and the distribution of wealth. The Select Committee was probably extremely courageous to take on this subject, and it is a tribute to the co-operation of all members of the Committee that the report has received almost unanimous endorsement. I hope that cross-party co-operation within the Environment Select Committee will continue despite a temporary setback.

After the provision of food, shelter for oneself and one's family is the most vital human need. It is estimated that the average cost of housing is now about 15 per cent. of disposable income. There has been a sharp increase in that figure in the past few years, but that is reflective of the sacrifices that people are prepared to make to acquire the home of their choice.

The first issue to address in a debate of this kind is the definition of housing need itself. Is it limited to those who simply want a better home? That would certainly be reflected by the expression "housing demand", but "need" goes to a narrower definition. The Committee chose not to be limited to the other extreme—those totally lacking any dwelling at all—as that would have been far too narrow. However, there are clearly individuals or families living in overcrowded conditions, lacking basic amenities or with no reasonable home available at all, and it is they who can be said to have a housing need.

There are difficulties even on the margin of that definition, particularly those who are sharing with their parents. Sometimes the space will be adequate and the amenities satisfactory, but they will still want a home of their own, which they may have difficulty in achieving. The key additional component is, therefore, that they also cannot afford a market price, whether to rent or to buy. Inevitably, that led the report to concentrate on social housing, rather than exclusively on owner-occupation.

In considering the number of additional units that may be required, it is necessary to look at the historic position. There are clearly large numbers of people currently seeking alternative accommodation, many of whom may rightly claim a need. Should the estimated future provision required take into account that backlog, or simply address the numbers year to year, that is, keep pace but not reduce the backlog? In part, the historic backlog is also dependent upon estimating the numbers of those who live in sub-standard housing—a difficult estimate, compounded by some who do not want to move. We have heard examples of that from my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir I. Patnick).

The next issue to consider is the expected level of owner-occupation. If owner-occupation is to increase as a proportion of the stock—as it has done substantially in the past two decades—less provision will be required for new household formations in the social housing sector. Conversely, fewer buyers will lead to a greater requirement for social housing. Most of us, myself included, tend to support the Government's argument that the total number of owner-occupied households is likely to rise by about 3 per cent. in the next few years to a total around, or just exceeding, 70 per cent. That takes account of those who wish to move into owner-occupation, either from adequate rented accommodation or on new household formation, coupled with right-to-buy applicants.

The right to buy remains a substantial force, and applications remain considerable. Against this figure, we must take into account those falling out of owner-occupation, particularly through repossession. The number of repossessions has fallen since the peak in the early 1990s caused by difficulties within the property market. The rise in house prices in recent months—particularly since our report was published—suggests that negative equity may be increasingly something of the past. However, it would not be unreasonable to assume that there will still be a number of repossessions, even if that is below current figures. In addition, demolition of sub-standard stock that is currently owner-occupied will have some impact on the figures.

The next factor we had to consider in calculating owner-occupation numbers relates to changes in tenure caused by social adjustments. Thus, as people live longer, there will be a tendency for them to move into sheltered accommodation or residential care from traditional owner-occupation.

The figure for owner-occupation, showing a small but still significant increase, takes into account all those factors. Thus there remains a strong determination among people generally to own their own homes. All the indications show that at least 80 per cent. of the population would like to be home owners, even if some, for financial or other reasons, will not be able to achieve it. Despite the temporary unpopularity of home ownership caused by falling property prices, there is no real indication that there has been a shift in people's desire to own their own home—the concept that the Englishman's home is his castle and the ambition to be its owner remain dear to our national psyche, and they appear to be almost as strongly held in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Another important aspect of social change that we had to consider was the desire of young people to set up home more quickly than has been traditional. Many of us did not feel that it was appropriate for public resources to be devoted to the provision of homes for young people the moment they cease to be schoolchildren. They may have some need to establish themselves, but scarce public funds should not be made available to provide homes in those circumstances.

The exception must be particularly vulnerable youngsters, such as those leaving local authority care and others in similar circumstances. I was impressed by one scheme based in London which was making provision for young people in this situation. However, as a general rule, it is clear that while the earlier maturity of young people will create additional housing pressures, we should not expect them in general to be accommodated in social housing subsidised by the taxpayer or by fellow tenants. They will have an impact on household formation numbers, but they should not generally lead to increasing social housing demand.

As the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) mentioned, the Government estimate that up to the year 2001 there will be an annual need for between 60,000 and 100,000 units of social housing. The Government believe that a target figure towards the lower end of that range would be appropriate as slight under-provision will create demand for private rented accommodation and lead to more investment in housing for rent. The Government have estimated the figures on the basis that the number of households in England will rise by 4.4 million over the next 20 years as a result of factors such as increased life expectancy, higher net immigration, changes in marital status and co-habitation, and general growth in the rate at which people form independent households.

We received other estimates of the number of social housing units that will required. Most were in the range of 60,000 to 100,000 units, with 120,000 probably being the largest. The Government are therefore talking of pitching the figure towards the lower end of their range, somewhere below what is considered by most observers to be the likely need, but they are not that far out, particularly if they are correct in their expectation that there will be new investment in housing. Indeed, that could ensure that the gap is made up.

That new investment, therefore, will be critical to the equation. It is imperative that housing investment trusts are a success and that private sector capital is introduced into the letting market. Some units will not be suitable for people who are able to afford only social housing rents—with or without housing benefit—but it is clear that the attraction of public sector investment in the lower range of private rented accommodation will be a vital component if pressures are not to build to an unacceptable level.

I am convinced that the Government are right in believing that that can be achieved, but they will need to monitor developments in the field closely and be prepared to step in to encourage more private investment if it appears to be failing to make up the anticipated substantial supplement to the social housing stock that is required.

[Mr. Roy Thomason]

Flexibility is therefore important, and I hope that my right hon. Friend the Minister will be able to assure us later that he will continue to keep the position under review.

Little can be said about housing generally and housing need in particular without referring to planning implications. Whether provision is for social housing or for owner-occupied housing, land must be found. I represent a constituency that is particularly sensitive to development proposals. We are bordered by the west midlands conurbation and our neighbours are Solihull, Birmingham and Dudley. To the south lies the expanding town of Redditch, and Kidderminster, which has grown substantially in recent years, is not far away.

With major transport links running through the constituency, the Bromsgrove area has become a particularly popular place in which to live. Part of its popularity, as with so many other similar places, is its semi-rural nature. If we allow further development within the green belt, which covers most of the constituency, that attractive quality will be lost. This view is not simply driven by the short-term and selfish attitude of those who wish to protect their own position—the NIMBY principle—but is more about retaining green lungs around our cities and ensuring that we do not have long and continuously developed corridors of development stretching out across the countryside so that for many city dwellers a view of a field becomes a rarity.

We must ensure that our planning policies are designed to retain open areas around our cities. If that is to be achieved, it follows that there will be continuing pressure on land available for development. I therefore particularly welcome the Government's determination to ensure that 50 per cent. of new development will take place on brown-field sites. The target is not terribly ambitious, however, as the Select Committee discovered, for existing levels of development are not far from that already—itself a point worth noting.

I hope that Government planning policies will move increasingly towards the encouragement of more development on brown-field sites. I should like to see a target set of 60 per cent. instead of 50 per cent. by not much past the turn of the century. We need to introduce new life into our cities to ensure the redevelopment of derelict and contaminated land. These are not cheap and easy sites to develop. Any developer knows that a green-field site is cheaper to build on and easier to sell. If planning is about ensuring that we have a reasonable way of life and protecting our environment, this issue must be addressed and we must improve the urban landscape as well as the rural one.

It was fascinating that in the course of our inquiries we discovered evidence to suggest that the creation of new housing is leading to greater demand. Simply put, the more houses that are built, the more people are prepared to occupy them. Thus, early household formation may be encouraged by more property being available to buy or to let. If that scenario is true, and it is a fascinating one, it is a powerful argument to suggest that there should be restrictions on new development.

Mr. Bennett: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that much of the evidence vigorously denied that proposition?

Mr. Thomason: I agree that the point was subject to much dispute, but it is worth drawing it out in the debate. It was an interesting and fairly innovative point that, rather like building roads, the more that is done the more demand is created. I have some doubt about the validity of that evidence and of the argument put to us, but more thought needs to be given to the point and I hope that the Government will research it in the future.

It is important in planning terms to differentiate between affordable—and therefore social—housing, and that built for the private sector. Density requirements imposed by planning authorities will tend to encourage the development of low-cost homes, but planning knows no distinction between social and other housing. I am sure that that is right. I would be concerned that the creation of a special planning use categorised as for social housing purposes would lead to the construction of ghettos, rather in the manner of the huge council estates that were developed in the 1950s and 1960s. Much more should we see a mixture of housing in low-cost developments, with planning authorities using their powers to impose conditions to direct that a proportion of new developments should contain social housing.

We cannot reasonably differentiate between local authority, housing association and private sector accommodation. What really makes a property a social one is whether it is affordable. We still have no clear definition of what affordable means. Indeed, the whole of this debate is surrounded by terms that are extremely difficult to define. Clearly, however, affordable tends to suggest that it is within the reach of the vast majority of the population.

I hope that the private sector will be increasingly able to respond to the need for affordable rented accommodation so that the trend may be away from bricks and mortar subsidy and towards subsidy of the individual through the housing benefit system. The cost of housing benefit will be a constraint on that policy, but I am sure that ultimately it is the right objective; in that respect, I disagree with the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish.

I welcome the Government's initiative to create housing investment trusts, and I hope that my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration will say something about those in his closing remarks.

The Select Committee report has made an important contribution to a vital debate which will continue, inside and outside the Chamber, for many years to come. I commend the report to the House for consideration, and I am grateful to have had the opportunity to participate in the debate.

7.29 pm

Mrs. Diana Maddock (Christchurch): Like other hon. Members, I am pleased that we are holding this debate. Seven days ago, the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) described this time of the week—7 o'clock to 10 o'clock on a Thursday—as "the black hole" of the parliamentary week, but we have attracted a number of right hon. and hon. Members to the Chamber today because this is an important issue.

I am afraid that I do not entirely agree with the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) that housing is at the front of political debate. Part of our problem is that it is not far enough toward the front of political debate. That is why I warmly welcome the work done by the Environment Select Committee and the opportunity that it has given us to debate housing need today.

Like many hon. Members in the Chamber tonight, I served on the Standing Committee that considered the Housing Bill earlier this year, and I know too well how knowledgeable the Chairman of the Environment Select Committee, the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), is, and how passionate he is about housing—something that I believe goes for quite a few of us present tonight.

In such a debate, it is easy to get bogged down in figures as we discuss whether we need 60,000, 90,000 or 150,000 more social homes a year. I share the view expressed by many organisations working in housing—such as Shelter, the National Federation of Housing Associations and the Chartered Institute of Housing—that the bottom line is that the Government's estimate is inadequate. Even if the figure of 60,000 to 100,000 a year proposed by the Government were correct, it would be sensible to aim for the upper end of that scale, or at least the middle, rather than the bottom end. After all, even members of the Government admit that estimation is an imprecise art.

As has been said, not only people without homes have need. I am pleased that the Select Committee paid close attention to hidden housing need, and I am pleased that it paid special attention to the work of Alan Holmans, a former chief housing economist at the Department of the Environment.

A huge number of people live in homes that are unfit to be lived in. The most recent housing condition surveys show that 2.5 million homes are unfit or in need of substantial repair, and 5 million people live in them. Those figures are frightening, but hon. Members and the Government should study another figure—that of the country's bill for treating medical conditions caused by sub-standard housing. In a recent Committee, medical experts estimated that it might be as much as £2.4 billion a year. That figure represents only health spending. It does not take account of how illness caused by bad housing affects attendance at work or school, or increases the uptake of social security benefits. I fear that, in years to come, we may look back on the abolition of mandatory renovation grants and realise how much damage we have done and how much it will cost us in future, especially in health spending.

So many of our problems stem from the fact that, in many ways, we have not engaged in sufficient long-term thinking when considering how to provide housing. Investment has been cut year on year. There has been a lack of long-term thinking, not only at a macro level, but at a micro level. That was emphasised to some of us this year during the passage of the Housing Bill, when we realised that, as a result of the Bill, homeless people would be unable to find stability.

It is traumatic to lose one's home. It may be an eviction or a repossession, and it may have resulted from the loss of a job. Whatever the circumstances, the last thing that people need then is insecurity and short-termism, with short-term contracts, often in the private rented sector, making it impossible for them to be certain where they will be a couple of years later.

Many of those people are unable to afford even the top end of the middle of the private rented market, especially following recent housing benefit changes. They therefore end up in badly kept, often ramshackle, properties, and often they find it difficult to cope with the situation. The history of the experiences that brought them there often makes them feel unable to challenge their landlord about some of the factors that affect the condition of the property.

Mr. Thomason: I listened to the hon. Lady's remarks about housing benefit. Is she saying that more housing benefit should be made available to tenants?

Mrs. Maddock: The hon. Gentleman makes an interesting point. I put it as one of the problems of the rented sector. There is a problem with housing benefit. Many of us believed that it would be useful to subsidise the individual when it came to housing, but that has not worked. We have an enormous housing benefit bill, and many of us are considering ways in which to cut the benefit bill while ensuring that people have security in their homes. The issue is security rather than the level of benefit. Perhaps we should be considering more investment in bricks and mortar, because obviously we have a problem.

I want housing benefit to be a safety net that enables people to stay in their homes. If we were to drop housing benefit suddenly, as some proposals emanating from the Government suggest, it would not help. People would end up in housing need because they had been turned out of their property. Our challenge is to get the equation right. How do we set a benefit level that promotes better conditions in the private sector, gives people a decent safety net and encourages investment in properties? I did not intend to have a long discussion about housing benefit, but it is a key factor.

The private rented sector has an important part to play. It has grown in recent years, but not as much as the Government would have us believe. Our housing market is far more polarised than that of any other country. We have an enormous number of people in home ownership—nearly 70 per cent. of the population—and a much lower percentage living in the private rented sector. In France, 20 per cent. of the population live in the private rented sector, in Germany, 43 per cent. and in Switzerland no less than 66 per cent. Part of the reason is that private rented accommodation is subsidised differently in those countries. All political parties have been studying the way in which other countries deal with those matters.

Other hon. Members have spoken of the way in which people regard the property that they live in—whether it is important that they own rather than rent it, to make them feel that they want to look after it, that it is important and that they have a stake in it, to use that popular phrase. The experience of other countries shows that people do not need to own their property to feel that they have a stake in it. They do, however, need to feel that they have some control over their immediate environment and what goes on in their house. It has been shown in many authorities throughout the country that that can happen whether people own or rent their property. The idea is clearly possible, given the experience of other countries.

To meet housing need, we must be more flexible not only on tenures but on providing different types of housing. The Environment Select Committee discussed demographic changes. My constituency has the fifth highest proportion of pensioners in the country, so I shall dwell for a moment on how we should deal with housing for an aging population. In 15 years' time, a further

[Mrs. Maddock]

300,000 home owners will be over the age of 80. Where will they be housed and what type of homes will they need? Will they be able to stay in their present homes? Those questions will be among the most important housing questions over the next two or three decades.

We need to know how many elderly people will wish to live independently and how many will need sheltered housing or residential care. We must ensure that we meet the needs of the elderly across the range of accommodation. I am pleased that the Government have withdrawn their proposal to cut eligibility of service charges in housing benefit and have decided to set up a full review of the matter. Without such benefit, many vulnerable people could not afford to stay in their homes because they could not pay the charges to wardens or others who help them. Many people may have needed to go into institutions rather than stay in their homes. We must have a middle option and I welcome the fact that the Government have listened to my representations and those from relevant organisations.

The majority of people want to stay in their homes when they get old. A recent MORI poll for Anchor Housing showed that two thirds of home owners wished to stay where they were rather than move. The majority of those who wanted to move said that it was because their accommodation was too big for them and that they would prefer something smaller because, for example, it would be easier to heat. That shows that we need more homes that can be adapted. Creating so-called "lifetime homes" will be an important part of meeting need in that sector in the future.

I add my voice to those calling for the incorporation of those criteria into part M of the building regulations. The cost of building accessibility features into homes from the outset is small compared with the cost of incorporating them later. Our thinking must be long term. Elderly people are often put off having their homes adapted because they would not be able to stand the upheaval. The attempt by the hon. Member for Bolton, North–East (Mr. Thurnham) to amend the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Bill was not as successful as we should have liked. I hope that Ministers will eventually see the light and adopt a more far-sighted approach to accessible housing.

The debate on long-term care touches slightly different areas of housing, and we do not have time to deal with that tonight.

Mr. Stephen: The hon. Lady has identified a number of problems, but what is the Liberal Democrat policy for solving them? The document entitled, "Towards 1996", prepared in her Whips Office, says:

"Our intention to phase out MIRAS will cripple mortgage payers and exacerbate negative equity. Our policy on freeing up council house sales receipts no longer stands up, being a little bit dated. We are still not sure what we would do about housing benefit. Our policy on helping home owners suffering from negative equity is expensive and ill thought out."

What are the Liberal Democrats' policies on MIRAS, council house sales, housing benefit and negative equity?

Mrs. Maddock: We always get the old chestnuts. I thought that people had got to the bottom of this, but I shall explain once again. The document from which the hon. Gentleman quotes was used internally to make us think about those questions. Interestingly, when we were discussing the matter someone said that they wondered what Conservative Members would say if they got hold of the document. I regret to say that the document was somehow purloined, although we tried to keep it to ourselves. It was a discussion document.

Mr. Nick Raynsford (Greenwich): The hon. Lady is a teenage scribbler.

Mrs. Maddock: The hon. Gentleman disappoints me. He does not usually descend to that level of debate. We shall produce a policy document in the future.

Before I gave way, I was about to ask how we can progress towards meeting housing needs and produce good-quality housing that people can afford to stay in, even if times get tough. I shall devote the rest of my speech to that and deal with the matters raised by the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen).

We must help people to stay in their homes and tackle need before it becomes desperate. The Liberal Democrats propose a mortgage benefit, which would be paid for by phasing out mortgage income tax relief. We would not phase in mortgage benefit overnight as the Government would, because that is not fair on people who have made long-term financial plans. Such a scheme has been part of our policy for a long time.

The Government's attempts to help people who lose their jobs not to lose their homes have not been successful. Insurance is sensible and I would encourage people to cover themselves as much as possible, but research shows that huge numbers of people could not get insurance cover—at least two or three have come to my Saturday morning surgeries. Part-time workers, those with temporary contracts, the self-employed or people approaching retirement age are denied such insurance cover. Increasing numbers of people are experiencing job insecurity, so we must tackle that problem.

Many people cannot move to a room in the private rented sector, not because of high rents—although those affect some people—but because of the deposit that is required. Many local authorities and charities have set up good rent deposit schemes, which lend deposit money to people who cannot find it. The Environment Select Committee looked into the problem of deposits, and we must consider the matter further. As tenants cannot get their deposits back, they sometimes leave the property without paying the last month's rent. That is a ridiculous way to carry on. We need to put in place a system that does away with rental deposits. Australia has a scheme that takes care of all the deposits. A proposal to solve the problem was made in the Committee considering the Housing Bill, although it was not ideal. The problem must be solved if we are to have a thriving private rented sector.

We must make better use of our property resources by discouraging under-occupation, ensuring that empty properties are used as homes, using brown-field sites, and accommodating people in shops and offices in town centres. Clearly, we cannot spread across the countryside. An important question for people who live in rural areas is what will happen under the right-to-buy proposal in the latest Housing Bill. Where will people in rural areas replace the social units that may be lost through that scheme, and how will social housing units in rural areas be replaced?

There has been a lot of agreement around the Chamber tonight—I say "around the Chamber" because I think that far too often we talk about this side and that side. There was also agreement around the Chamber during the passage of the Housing Bill and the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Bill. It was agreed that there is unmet housing need, but there was disagreement about the level. One of the problems is that the Government are always on the lower end of everything, not the top end—although they do not always have to be at the top end. The Select Committee believes that the Government are hitting far too low.

Mr. Thomason: The hon. Lady's assessment of the situation assumes that there will be no private sector investment in rented accommodation. Does she feel that there is no contribution to be made by the private sector?

Mrs. Maddock: I did not realise that I was being incoherent. I have been talking at some length about the private rented sector and about how important it is. I believe that it should exist and that we should do things to enable people to get into it. As a party, in the past we have supported various tax benefits and schemes to enable people to rent properties out and to make renting much more of a business.

Mr. Thomason rose—

Mrs. Maddock: I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman because I want to progress. I have said quite a lot about the private rented sector, but if the hon. Gentleman wants to know more, I can recommend quite a lot of our documents to him and he can read them at his leisure. If he orders them and pays for them at Cowley street, they will be the genuine thing—they will have been passed by our members at our party conferences.

There is agreement about better use of sites and better use of buildings, but there is not agreement about how much investment we should put into it. Over the years, Governments have encouraged local authorities and everyone else to use sites and to bring properties back, and they have set up wonderful schemes that go for only a year and are then changed. I would like to see some long-term thinking in this regard.

Most hon. Members agree that we need to plan for demographic change, but the question is how much and for how long. The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish said that he was disappointed that we were not looking ahead to 2011 and 2021 in relation to housing need. That is not easy to do, but we should be looking at it and making estimates. If we can encourage people to look that far ahead, they might focus on the short term as well.

It is agreed that we need flexibility—people need to be able to move in and out of the private sector. However, there is not always agreement on how that should be done. We also need investment, and I am not sure where the Government stand on this. The Government always ask the Opposition where they are going to get investment from, but they do not say where their investment will come from.

We need to use the money that is locked up in councils in capital receipts but, as the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish said, that will not solve all the problems. To get more money into housing, we need to recognise that putting capital into bricks and mortar is a good investment. If we continue to account in a way that means that, every year, we have to hit the public sector borrowing requirement, which does not separate capital and revenue, we shall be in this mess for ever. I am pleased that the hon. Gentleman recognises that, I know that other Labour Members recognise it, and I hope that we can convince other hon. Members of the need for it. Studies have shown that that will bring more money into housing—not just public money but private money. We all want to see that happen.

There is disagreement about how we should deal with those matters, and about who should deal with them. I believe in local control. I recognise that the Government have put a lot of time and money into schemes that hon. Members have talked about tonight. In my role as the Liberal Democrat spokesman on housing, I try to get out and see what is happening in the country. I know that there are good regeneration schemes—there just are not enough. As we have heard, the schemes that are in place are good but so many other people need their homes to be improved.

Local authorities are in the best position to know what they need in their area. I would like the Government to keep a less tight rein on who will get the money and enable local councils to invest in their areas. During the debate on the recent housing legislation, we spoke about the need to allow local authorities to get private money. If they know what the need is, and if there are regulations to ensure that that spending does not go through the roof, we shall get more sensible investment and some of the severe need will be met.

A home is the key anchor for successful individuals and families, and that is why we cannot afford to keep missing the target when it comes to meeting housing need. There is evidence that Europe and Scandinavia—I have lived in Sweden—invest more than the United Kingdom. We have to invest more. Successful individuals and families mean successful businesses and communities, and that means a successful country.

My greatest sorrow is that this year we had the opportunity to move forward on this when we debated the two housing Bills. I regret that, although there were some improvements in some areas, we have moved the goalposts—we did not create any more units to meet the need that we are discussing tonight. Until we can all come to an agreement about that, we shall come back here and carp about unmet housing need.

Mr. Harold Elletson (Blackpool, North): I am grateful to the Government for finding time for us to have this important debate on housing need. The Environment Select Committee's report on the subject was the result of a major inquiry into an important matter of social and environmental concern. It is good that we now have the opportunity for a wider debate on the Floor of the House. I welcome the chance to discuss the work of Select Committees in this way.

The Environment Select Committee's report examined the way in which the Government assess future housing need and prepare themselves to meet the challenge of housing the nation within the framework of the planning system and their overall environmental objectives. I shall focus on meeting housing need and its impact on the countryside. Housing policy has to be seen very much within the wider environmental context. New housing development is responsible for a greater loss of countryside than any other single factor. Hon. Members would agree that new housing seems to upset constituents more than any other local environmental issue.

Britain has undergone, and is still undergoing, profound social and demographic changes, which are bound to have a significant effect on housing in the future. Every reliable survey indicates that the population and the number of households are growing. There is bound to be a consequent need for new homes—particularly for affordable new homes. The Government have to assess the likely need for social housing in the future, and to ensure that their planning policies take account of that and of increased demand in the private sector for new homes.

In the past, the Department of the Environment and local authorities have sought to make this sort of estimate, mainly on the basis of household projections. However, household projections are notoriously unreliable and difficult. Indeed, several of the Environment Select Committee's witnesses questioned whether household projections were the best basis on which to assess either the need for social housing at the national level or the requirements for additional housing land at the local level.They were right to question that—after all, household projections are not sensitive to local conditions or to the environmental implications of current planning policies. The use of household projections as a method of estimate fails to assess the nature rather than the numbers of housing need, especially the need for housing geared to specific needs. This is clearly a major problem at a time of such enormous demographic change, particularly with the growth of the elderly population.

Housing projections have been, and are, used to define the scale of overall housing requirements. They dominate the preparation of regional planning guidance and development plans. However, they are not policy neutral: they are the major tool used by the building lobby to bludgeon the Government into releasing more land for development. We need to base our housing requirements and policies on a wider set of objectives than demographics and a highly contentious and unreliable system of projections.

Therefore, I warmly welcome the Environment Committee's recommendation that the Government and local authorities should attach much more importance to local environmental concerns, and much less importance to statistical projections of household formation when deciding upon building levels. The importance of that recommendation cannot be underestimated.

There is massive pressure for new housing development on green-field sites in the countryside, on the edges of towns and villages, and on every available strip of open land. That pressure is widely resented by people all over the country, whether they live in towns or in the countryside. They realise that, left unchecked, it would swamp rural England and destroy our countryside heritage.

We have a magnificent rural heritage. Last summer, I walked across the north of England from Scarborough, up the coast to Whitby and down to Blackpool. I know that the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), the Chairman of the Environment Committee, is also a keen walker. Anyone who goes into the countryside and sees what a magnificent place England is—particularly the north—will realise what a great heritage we have to pass on to our children. That, more than anything else, is the jewel of our national heritage, and we must treasure it.

However, every year we lose 11,000 hectares of countryside to urban development—most of which is new housing. A recent report in The Daily Telegraph claimed that unpublished Government research predicted that an area of rural land the size of greater London would be urbanised by 2016 at a rate of development one third higher than that experienced in the 1980s, during a peak period of private sector housebuilding. By 2016, there may be as many as 4 million new households in England if current demographic trends continue.

We have not begun to pay enough attention to the consequences of simply building houses to meet those trends. Those consequences are horrifying. If current rates of development continue, 20 per cent. of England will be urban by 2050. That would be a terrible legacy for our children. It would be an environmental nightmare and a betrayal of the greatest treasure in our children's inheritance: England itself.

That would also be utterly pointless, because, while demographic trends are bound to create a strain, there is no need to try to solve the problem by releasing more countryside for building. Much more can be done to meet housing needs from the existing stock of buildings. The vast bulk of future housing provision already exists, and new development adds only about 1 per cent. to existing stock each year. There is significant under-use of the existing housing stock. During the Committee's inquiry, I realised that little research has been done in that area. However, it is clear that almost 800,000 homes are currently empty.

Therefore, a widespread programme of new housebuilding, coupled with the relaxation of planning controls, would clearly be an absolute disaster. We must respond to the challenge of meeting future housing needs in ways other than simply taking account of statistical projections. We must attach more importance to local environmental concerns, such as those expressed by the residents of Cleveleys on the edge of my constituency. They are objecting to the development of open farmland on College farm between Cleveleys and Fleetwood. I know that my right hon. Friend the Minister will look carefully at that matter when he receives the residents' representations.

We must encourage local authorities to prepare local planning strategies that are based on the capacity of their environment to accommodate new development, rather than simply imagining that the countryside is a renewable resource which can be squandered at will to meet the demands of the building industry. Against that background, it is clear that the Government will have to plan for a significant increase in the demand for social housing.

The Environment Committee report is correct to highlight that aspect, and to stress the need to plan much more carefully for special housing needs. The members of the Committee were unanimous in the view that the Government must provide more social housing if we are to meet future needs.

The Government have already done much to provide affordable homes for families on low incomes. They spent £5 billion on grants for social housing in 1994-95. That enables 300,000 families to find homes in the social rented sector each year, and has provided an extra 72,000 affordable homes on average in each of the past three years. That is an impressive record, upon which the Government must build. Much of the demand can be met through the better use of existing sites, and the Environment Committee recommended increasing the share of new development in towns and cities.

I mentioned that about 800,000 homes are currently empty. Of those, 700,000 are in the private sector. The Government are committed to reducing the number of empty homes in England from 4 to 3 per cent. They have encouraged people to make use of empty homes and dwelling places through measures such as removing the need for planning permission when converting space above shops into housing; by encouraging the conversion of older offices into flats; by making it easier for, and more attractive to, people to become landlords; and by creating the conditions for a healthy housing market so that empty homes can be sold.

The Government are also disposing of surplus accommodation among their empty stock. In 1994-95, nearly 4,000 homes were brought back into use or resold. They have gradually made it more attractive for landlords to let empty properties. Most importantly, the Government are trying to encourage the construction of houses on urban, as opposed to rural, sites. Last year's housing White Paper set a target that 50 per cent. of new houses should be built on land previously in urban use. I understand that that target is being met, but I do not think that it goes far enough.

That was also the Environment Committee's view: we concluded that every effort must be made to increase the scale of re-use of brown-field sites that had been built on previously. The report says that the 50 per cent. target can be met and improved in the future. I hope that the Minister will take the recommendation particularly seriously, because that aim is realisable and will help to take pressure off the countryside.

A wider question, which the Environment Committee has addressed in previous inquiries—particularly in its examination of out-of-town shopping—is the quality of life in our inner cities and towns. It is not enough to respond to the challenge by developing brown-field sites—and I am sure that the Government will not respond in that way. As a nation and as a Government, we must do a great deal more to improve the quality of life in the urban environments in our towns and cities.

We cannot underestimate the challenge that faces us as we approach the 21st century. For many people, inner-city areas and towns are empty, desolate places of despair. Many towns in this country have been effectively abandoned. I believe that that is the great challenge facing the Government and the Department as we approach the 21st century.

The Committee has travelled to other parts of the world, including other countries in the European Community, for previous inquiries. Members of the Committee have seen some imaginative responses to the challenges of urban planning, which have encouraged people back to town centres and made them attractive, pleasant places in which to live and work. Some towns in this country have good, well-run local authorities have gone a long way to meeting that challenge; other towns are an absolute disgrace. As a nation, that must be our top priority. I know that the Minister is extremely concerned about that, and I hope that it is a matter to which the Environment Committee will turn its attention in future.

Mrs. Helen Jackson (Sheffield, Hillsborough): I want to place on record my appreciation of the Select Committee's important work on housing. The Department of the Environment has such a huge variety of work that it was good for the Select Committee to concentrate on an issue such as housing, which is so central to our constituency concerns. In particular, as has become apparent in the debate, the work of our Chairman, my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), was much appreciated by all concerned.

When our inquiry began, it appeared to be dominated by statistics and the need to determine whether the Government's statistics or those of the former Government adviser, Alan Holmans, in his research for the Joseph Rowntree trust, whose figures suggested that the Government's were too low, were more applicable. However, as the inquiry progressed, it became obvious that figures of housing demand and need are really people—old and young, families and households—and figures of housing supply are really homes—homes in good and bad condition, new homes, old homes and flats in different areas.

Beyond those two statistics was another figure which perhaps we did not touch on enough, but which needs to be mentioned, and that is the number of people for whom the housing industry provides a livelihood in terms of jobs and training, including the professionals—architects, designers and surveyors.

It becomes clear that, when a country finds the right balance between housing need in the form of people and housing supply in the form of homes, the result is—the most important factor of all—stable communities benefiting from independence and self-esteem. As people move through life, from youth, to having families, to old age, housing is probably the most important factor in their lives.

Therefore, it is important that the Government should take seriously the Committee's core recommendation outlined in paragraphs 251 and 252 of its report. It says:

"the Government's estimate of the need for social housing is below all the estimates produced by respected organisations and academics."

Therefore, the Select Committee came to the conclusion that "it would only be prudent for the Government to assume that in determining policy, including the allocation of public expenditure over the next few years, it ought to provide for a figure at a higher point of its present estimated range".

I want to touch on the various groups and practical issues which emerged from the Select Committee's approach. We need to ensure that, by housing need, we mean people. I welcome the element of the Government's response, which suggests that they will undertake further research into the demographic implications of the different groups of people that make up housing demand and need.

[Mrs. Helen Jackson]

The briefing for today's debate from the Anchor housing association states that, by the year 2011, an additional 300,000 people over the age of 80 will require housing. At present, pensioners comprise one third of all households, and the majority of those are in rented accommodation, so what older people will need in the next decade or two is fundamental to our consideration.

I think of Mrs. Hulbert, whom I visited at the weekend on her 100th birthday, who looked no older than 81 or 82. She lives on her own in a small terraced house in my constituency, fairly independently. Such independence, with some support where needed, is a factor which should be at the top of all hon. Members' agendas.

It also emerged from the evidence of some housing associations that, although people are living longer, the period during which they are severely disabled and so need adaptations is not necessarily getting longer. During the next 10 or 20 years, older people will increasingly want their independence of living. Moreover, current trends of increasing separation and divorce, which I deplore, will increase the need and demand among older people in society for independent living.

Most Members of Parliament will have experienced distressing cases where a local authority has told an elderly couple in an inflexible way that the only dwelling to which they are entitled is a bed-sitter or a one-bedroomed bungalow. When first faced with such a situation, it is difficult to ascertain what the problem is. Then it emerges that they have not slept in the same room for many years. For such people to be told that they are entitled only to a one-bedroomed house because they are elderly, a pensioner or slightly disabled is not a satisfactory way in which to meet their needs.

The same care is required when addressing the housing need's of younger people. I was disappointed at the Government's response to the Committee's recommendations for younger people. We saw some excellent examples of vulnerable younger people being given the opportunity of independence in rented accommodation, and the effect of that on their rehabilitation in society.

Mr. Stephen: The hon. Lady will remember our visit to the young people's accommodation. However, did she not share my concern that the young people seemed to have little incentive eventually to leave that accommodation and stand on their own feet? The impression seemed to be conveyed to them that it was all right to stay there, playing the guitar, doing their painting or whatever they were doing, as long as they liked.

Mrs. Jackson: I remember that the young person who spent a lot of time painting did not have another job, but he was, to all intents and purposes, working hard at achieving the most important thing that he wanted to do in his life, which he would not have been able to do without independent accommodation that he could feel was his and which gave him the space and opportunity to do it.

Let us move on from individual cases to think about most younger people and the importance to them—certainly the younger people I have known from my family and friends—of their move into independent accommodation. The idea that any bar should be placed on opportunities for younger people to take the chance to move away from their parents and set up home independently is very retrogressive, so I am not happy about the Government's response, in which they seem to say that they do not accept that younger people—even young adults who share a home with friends or families and say that they would rather live in separate accommodation—can be considered to be in housing need.

Moving on from younger people as they move through life, the other point raised by Alan Holmans, which the Government need to address seriously, is the trend for young people—particularly young professional people who feel that they might need to move away to follow their profession—to move into rented accommodation for a longer time rather than become owner-occupiers, and all the signs in the housing market at present are that that trend will continue. Owner-occupation is no longer seen as a financial investment for young couples, who would rather move into a house where they know that they have the flexibility to move in or out of the area when they want.

That takes us further through life, to families. We cannot underestimate the effect that the trend of single families, single dwellers, people who have separated, will place on housing need and demand. It is quite unacceptable that people in unhappy situations together should, because of pressure of housing, find it impossible to get out and live separately.

Adequate provision of housing to meet demand is a matter not just of housing policy but of social policy. It is a matter of supporting, at each stage in their lives, people who are vulnerable and who need that extra independence.

Before I finish, I shall say a little about the other side of our inquiry—housing supply. Our report said many useful things about house design and the condition of housing, and those points were touched on by many Conservative Members. I enjoyed the speech of the hon.Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir I. Patnick) about his recollections of the Kelvin housing estate in Sheffield, which has come and gone.

Adequate design and condition are part and parcel of the provision of adequate housing. I was not privileged to be a member of the Committee that considered the Housing Bill this Session, but I was a member of the Committee that considered the Housing Grants' Construction and Regeneration Bill, which made some interesting points about unfit housing—a matter that the Select Committee felt important—where renovation was required to bring the properties up to standard.

The concern that Opposition Members feel about the long-term effect of changing mandatory grants to discretionary grants will return to haunt the housing industry. The change will not put a penny more into renovation and the adequacy of house condition, particularly in the private rented sector.

Hon. Members who made points about void rates and vacant rates should remember that the void rate in the private sector is four times that in the public or housing association sector. If we really want to address the problem of using all the empty properties, we must address the issue of voids in the private sector.

I appreciated the comments by the hon. Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson), because my constituency, being on the edge of Sheffield, covers land that is in high demand for housing and of extra-high demand for housing developers, who press at every opportunity to build there rather than on the areas in and around the city of Sheffield, where there are industrial complexes that are genuine brown-field sites, on which it would be most appropriate for houses to be built. But for housing development to take place on those sites, extra resources need to be provided, through the single regeneration budget, estate action and a combination of housing associations, housing corporations and local authorities.

The Government should take steps to achieve a co-ordinated programme, not only to realise the 50 per cent. target for new housing on brown-field sites but to expand on that. However, it will require clear guidance to the planning authorities to ensure that planning guidance notes work in that direction as well.

I end by quoting two points, one of which came from the House Builders Federation; the other came from the general secretary of the builders' union. It is interesting that they totally agree. The House Builders Federation told our Committee:

"The main reason for today's housing shortage is that, during the 1980s, approximately 1 million too few houses were built in the social and private sectors to meet the needs of the growing numbers of households during the decade. In fact, contrary to popular myth, far fewer homes were built in that period than in any decade since the 1940s."

The general secretary of the Union of Construction Allied Trades and Technicians made the point recently:

"Half a million building workers have lost their jobs since the recession" in house building.

"Keeping these building workers idle will lose over £11 billion in potential national output," because it costs the Treasury

"an average of £9,000 in benefits per unemployed person".

Many years ago, when I was at the campaigning stage of my political career, I was involved in the development of a campaign for homes and jobs, which centred on the fact that building workers are needed to build homes and the fact that homes give people security and independence. Most people want both those needs to be dealt with, and they should be the goal of any proper housing policy. That would make a big difference to society.

8.30 pm

Mr. Michael Stephen (Shoreham): The Select Committee's inquiry into housing need was one of the most interesting and, I hope, useful that it has undertaken since I became a member in 1994. I pay tribute to the work of our Chairman, the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett)—not only in connection with the inquiry, but for the way in which he presides over our proceedings, with tact and humour, sometimes in difficult circumstances.

We must, at the outset, draw a clear distinction between housing need and housing demand. The fact that a person may want a house—or a bigger house, or another house—does not mean that he is in need. In paragraph 203 of our report, we spoke of the danger of acceding to housing demand rather than housing need. We noted that, in its consultation paper "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies", the Department of the Environment had "voiced apprehension about: 'the impact on the environment of an apparently insatiable demand for additional housing; future generations may not thank us if we continue to devote scarce national resources to producing ever more dwellings'."

Obviously, if a person has no home at all or is living in accommodation that lacks basic amenities, the community as a whole has a responsibility to do something about it; but is the fact that someone does not get on with his parents, or the fact that a husband does not get on with his wife, a reason for saying that the rest of the community must bear the burden of providing him with a home? When we can do that, we should, but if the cost is building on green-field sites, we are faced with a delicate balance. On the one hand, there is demand—perhaps strong demand—for a house; on the other hand, is it right for the bulldozers to destroy a beautiful meadow that the forces of nature and the activities of man may have taken a hundred years to develop? Is it right for the bulldozers to destroy a piece of woodland that provides a habitat for wildlife, to meet housing demand? We need only pose that question to realise that the answer must be no.

Then we come to the "top-down versus bottom-up" argument, to which the Committee devoted considerable attention. Should we rely on national statistics, say, "Yes, these houses must be built," and then hand out to county councils and, through them, district councils the number of houses for which land must be provided? I think not. Paragraph 217 of our report says:

"Some witnesses expressed concern about the 'top-down' nature of the way that housing need is presently assessed; using national projections as a base and then extrapolating local targets from them, they argued, involved playing a sort of 'numbers game' at the local level which did not necessarily reflect local needs and conditions."

A few paragraphs later, we say:

"Early in the inquiry the Committee attempted to obtain bottom-up estimates of housing requirements for each area in England, in order to compare the national total of such figures with national projections. We were told these figures were not available, that each set of local figures was arrived at in different ways. This proved to be the case."

That is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs.

As is explained in paragraph 222,

"We eventually received figures from the Department showing the provision for housing made in each local plan and in regional plans. These suggested that local plans are heavily influenced by the 'top-down' approach, an impression which was confirmed by written evidence which stressed both the extent to which local plan requirements were the outcome of negotiation within the regional figures and the primary importance of the Department of the Environment's household projections in determining those regional figures."

I suggest that the Government's national projections are much too important a factor in the planning process, and that the capacity of individual localities to bear the strain in terms of cost, land availability and the environment may not be accorded the importance that it deserves.

In my county of Sussex, the environmental issue that concerns local people perhaps more than any other is the constant pressure on every little piece of open space for housing. In Rustington, in my constituency, a large tract of land has just become available because of the projected closure of the Horticultural Research Institute. The danger is that that site will be covered with houses. There may well be housing demand, but is it right for the site to be covered with houses when almost the entire coastal strip that comprises my constituency has, since the second world war, been built up to a point at which almost all the character of the small towns and villages that once existed has been destroyed? Fortunately, not all of it has been destroyed: in many parts of my constituency, it is still possible to catch a glimpse of what it was like before the builders arrived.

In the years since 1945, we in Britain have put far too many of our national resources into bricks and mortar—money that should, perhaps, have been invested in productive industry. We have, I think, employed too many of our people in building when they could perhaps have been employed in other jobs that would have contributed more to the country's ability to pay its way in the world. Fortunately, because of the economic policies that the Government have pursued since 1979, our economy is in better shape than ever before. We are now forging ahead in comparison with the French and the Germans. But we had a legacy to deal with—a long legacy of neglect and misdirected investment, which began with the Labour Government of 1945.

There are far too many empty houses. It may not be widely known that there are far more empty houses and flats than there are homeless families. I pay tribute to the work of the Empty Homes Agency, one of whose representatives we met during our inquiry. He took us to see empty Government, local authority and health authority housing. The amount of potentially usable housing that was simply lying empty—largely, from my recollection, because of the dead hand of bureaucracy—was scandalous. I am glad that the Government are now dealing with that—or, at least, that the Ministry of Defence is. I hope that other Departments will do the same, for, on this small, overcrowded island, we cannot afford to allow many houses to remain empty.

Nor can we afford to leave houses that could be used to house families lying empty because there is no money to refurbish them. Under the old system, mandatory grants meant that money was sometimes given to people who could well afford to renovate the houses themselves. However, I wonder whether we have the balance right today. Is the otherwise admirable policy of subsidising the individual rather than the bricks and mortar achieving our objective of ensuring that dilapidated houses are refurbished in a timely manner? Perhaps my right hon. Friend the Minister can develop the Government's thinking on that.

Many buildings in need of refurbishment are listed buildings. I have received many complaints that, in the discharge of their responsibilities, the listed building authorities have only one word in their vocabulary—no. Why cannot, for example, Victorian additions be removed and houses restored to how they were in the Georgian era or whenever they were built? Logically, that should be permitted, but all too often, perfectly sensible alteration or refurbishment to listed buildings is not permitted. Perhaps my right hon. Friend the Minister can examine whether those powers need to be exercised more flexibly.

Brown-field sites have been mentioned several times—they are of immense importance. It is absurd, as the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) said, that green-field sites on the fringe of her constituency—many of which are beautiful, as the Committee saw when we visited the Peak district—should be built on when there is industrial dereliction in the centre of Sheffield that needs to be redeveloped. If permission were not granted for people to build on green-field sites on the fringe of Sheffield, they would have no alternative, if they wanted to build in Sheffield at all, but to use brown-field sites. The planning system has a major role to play in promoting such development.

In some areas, we must accept that housing need, as opposed to demand, is so great that new housing must be built. Is the right way to meet that demand to expand existing villages and market towns, or is it better to build new villages or towns in places close to motorway junctions or railways, where proper infrastructure is available? Before I came to this place, I was a county councillor for a rural division of Essex called Dunmow, with which my right hon. Friend the Minister will be familiar from his days as a Member of the European Parliament.

The question arose whether additional houses should be provided for people who were going to work at Stansted airport, that big white elephant in the middle of Essex. I argued that if the airport operators wished to employ vast numbers people to serve their businesses, they should bear the cost. They should bus the people from the relatively nearby communities where they already lived and not expect the people of rural Essex, and of the nation, to bear the environmental burden of covering more and more meadows and woodlands with houses. Even worse, the character of Dunmow, an ancient town of 5,000 people, would be completely destroyed by the addition of the 900 houses that were proposed.

I managed to persuade my Conservative colleagues on the county council to reduce the number to 450, but an unholy alliance between the Liberals and the Labour party reversed the decision and Dunmow was saddled with 900 houses. I fear that the unique character and charm of that small town in Essex, which took perhaps 1,000 years to develop, will be destroyed because we, the custodians of the planning system today, did not have the foresight to realise what we were doing.

The situation is getting worse. I read in the newspaper only the other day that more houses will be required to feed this white elephant. Small villages such as Takeley and Little Dunmow will be smothered by this behemoth to provide housing. That is wrong. If the housing is needed, which I doubt, new towns and villages should be built. Ancient settlements that have taken hundreds of years to develop should not be sacrificed. They can never be replaced.

It is a question not only of covering green fields with buildings, but of the quality of the buildings. We have only to visit any small or large settlement to see the depredations wrought by architects and town planners since 1950 or thereabouts. Some of the worst excrescences and eyesores have been built by local authorities and central Government—tax offices, hospitals and schools built with no imagination and with no thought about how they would fit into their environment.

Sir Irvine Patnick: Marsham street.

Mr. Stephen: That is a good example. When I was briefly personal assistant to the late Nicholas Ridley, he took me to a window in his Marsham street office and said, "This is the best view in London because from here, you cannot see Marsham street." I am glad that it is to be razed to the ground. The sooner the better.

I entirely approve of the Government's policy of shifting the burden of providing public rented housing to housing associations, which have done a magnificent job.

Since 1988, with money supplied by central Government, they have built 67,000 more houses. We constantly hear from the Labour party, and no doubt we shall hear it again when the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) winds up, about capital receipts. The capital receipts from the sale of council housing can be spent by local authorities if they are debt-free. Even if they are not debt-free, 25 per cent. can be spent. The problem is that the local authorities that have the receipts are often not those that need the money to build more housing.

As local authority spending amounts to about 25 per cent. of all public expenditure, no Chancellor of the Exchequer could ignore it in planning his inflation strategy. If local authorities were at liberty to release the receipts into the money supply, the Chancellor would not be able to keep control of inflation.

Mr. Raynsford: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Stephen: The hon. Gentleman will have an opportunity in a minute, because I am about to finish. There would, of course, be no capital receipts at all if the Labour party and the Liberal Democrats had had their way.

8.47 pm

Mr. Peter Brooke (City of London and Westminster, South): I apologise to my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) for having misled him by not having previously risen, but the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) will be delayed for a little more than a minute.

Yesterday morning, I was on the unfinished ramparts of James Stirling's great building at No. 1, Poultry, with Lord Palumbo, its owner, and a bagpiper and drums. A tattered Union Jack was flying from a nearby building. There was a strong echo of the siege of Lucknow. Earlier there was a reference to this part of the parliamentary week being a black hole. I realise that that meant an astronomical black hole, not a historical one. I have not felt during this debate that I was in a black hole of any sort.

I shall try to make the shortest speech of the debate. I declare what I might call a non-interest as chairman of the Building Societies Ombudsman Council, a role which in fact precludes me from playing any parliamentary part on its behalf. I am not a member of the Select Committee, which is why I waited until all my hon. Friends who serve on it had been able to speak. I am not remotely an expert on the subject. I compliment the Select Committee and its Chairman on its report, which is so clear that one was able to understand it, even during the debate. It was certainly a stimulus to revisiting the evidence during the recess.

In the same spirit, I compliment the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), the Chairman of the Select Committee, on his masterly and even-handed introduction to this evening's debate, which made it easier for someone like me.

The hon. Member for Christchurch (Mrs. Maddock) said that too much was said about the two different sides of the Chamber. In a mischievous spirit, I say to her that her party has always adopted the policy of running with the hare and apologising to the hounds when they caught up, so both sides of the Chamber would feature in every speech made by a Liberal Democrat.

Our former colleague Sir Carol Mather, the hon. Member for Esher, who once commanded a battalion of the Welsh Guards, found himself in Moscow, sitting next to a senior officer in the Russian armed forces who asked him his view of the cold war at a time when it was very cold. Carol Mather gave a totally predictable reply and the colonel said, "Colonel Mather, you are making a constituency speech." Carol acknowledged that that was an extremely good analysis of the speech that he had made.

Like the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Pope), I shall draw on constituency experience during my remarks, which will inevitably be discursive. My hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson) said that city centres were cold and desolate. I regard it as a given that we would seek to see residents within them. The homeless necessarily play a role in my constituency—that is a characteristic of inner-city seats.

I wish to dwell for a moment on the relationship between the homeless and residents. When Sir Freddie Laker erected his tented city in Pimlico a little after I became the Member of Parliament for that area, I was asked at the Civil Aviation Authority inquiry whether I was in favour of it moving somewhere else. I said that that was the last thing that I wanted it to do because that would simply transfer the problem to another part of London and another set of residents. There is a genuine problem involved in providing supportive institutional facilities in residential locations. I realise the need to put such facilities near the problems that they seek to solve because one can only ask people to attend them voluntarily and there is no power of coercion. But there is no question but that such facilities impinge on the residential areas around them. We must find new vehicles and devices of education and consultation so that we can carry residents with us on homeless matters, just as we have to on heritage issues.

I shall reiterate briefly the point that I made about day centres, and the need to ensure that they are comprehensive, during the Standing Committee on the Housing Bill, of which a number of us are veterans. I salute the foyer idea for the young homeless, but I am conscious that the last 10 per cent. of capital funding is proving difficult to find in foyer after foyer. If the money is not found, the foyers will carry severe capital costs thereafter. As many people write to Members of Parliament expressing concern about the homeless, I make an incidental appeal: one way that the general public can provide help is to ensure that foyers receive that last element.

I welcome the decision of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security to defer conclusions on changes to housing benefit regulations as they refer to service charges because of the social considerations that apply, however homelessness is defined.

Paragraph 265 of the Select Committee's report refers to housing stock in central London. My constituency has lost 1,000 electors a year every year for, I think, the past 46. That is not just the spirit of Abercrombie—it is not slum clearance. The reason for that loss involves indigenous people moving out, company flats, foreigners and, now, absentee owners, who purchase flats as investments for partial residence during the year because London is recognised as having political security.

[Mr. Peter Brooke]

I am all in favour of the open society and I would not seek to prevent absentee owners acquiring those properties, but there is a risk that the city will lose its heart in the process. There is a further problem of leaseholders' enfranchisement and the risk of slowing it down. If the absentee owners are not present, they cannot be approached in order to be part of the qualified majority necessary to secure the freehold. That is ironic because they do not, on the whole, understand the leasehold principle; they are more interested in acquiring the property than in reading the small print of their contract—but they would like to avail themselves of the freehold if they could.

Holiday lets represent another form of housing that is taken out of normal occupation. They represent a separate irony as they are flats that are in continuous occupation by foreigners—often owned by foreign investors. They are not empty—they contribute to the city's liveliness—but tend to be vastly overcrowded, with adverse consequences for their permanent neighbours. There is a need for local authorities to have resources necessary to monitor them. There is no question but that there is tourism pressure on the centre and, as we were saying in the seminar on London's future at the Guild hall last Friday, the more we can encourage development outside the inner core of the city, the better.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, when he was Under-Secretary of State for Health and after he had answered 50 Adjournment debates on hospital closures, wrote a spoof parody of an Adjournment speech by a Minister on hospital closures, which included the memorable phrase in characteristic dress:

"I now turn to the police raid on the nurses' home."

I now turn to paragraph 272 of the Select Committee's report, which relates to developments in Birmingham and bringing commercial property back into residential use.

I have had a personal interest in the matter since the late 1950s; it was initially derived from the inner-city area in Philadelphia. Ed Bacon, the father of Kevin Bacon the film actor, was the chief planning officer of Philadelphia and the author of a very good book called, "Design In Cities"—he was a rare example of his profession in that he featured on the front cover of Time magazine. He and the late Oskar Stonorov, an equally rare example of an architect who was admired by both architects and planners, were very much involved in the revival and renewal of downtown Philadelphia.

I am delighted by the Birmingham experience, to which the Select Committee referred. I am also delighted at the prediction that 40,000 potential homes in central London will come back into use out of office accommodation, of which at least half are thought to be in my constituency.

Paragraph 271 relates to living over the shop. That subject has also been one of my interests for a considerable time, although it arose later. My interest in the subject initially arose in Bath during the 1970s, where the issue posed an acute problem. Almost as soon as I became a Member of Parliament in my present constituency, a constituent in Soho, who is still my constituent, interested me in the subject. I remember giving lunch to him and Sir Hugh Rossi, who was the shadow spokesman for the position of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration—what a pleasure it is to call him my right hon. Friend—in the far-off days when the Conservative party was in opposition. The development has had a long germination, but I am pleased by its progress.

Finally, on a personal and idiosyncratic footnote, I refer to paragraphs 254 and 256, which relate to the standards and quality in buildings. I am chairman of the Conference on Training in Architectural Conservation—COTAC—and I declare my interest. I run the slight risk of being ruled out of order by you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, even though, before you took the Chair, the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish brought Stonehenge into the debate. I am not sure whether he remembers the very good spoof by Frank Muir of the Architects Journal interviewing a caveman on what he thought about the development of henges as an addition to the housing stock. The caveman thought that they would be draughty and was doubtful whether they would catch on.

COTAC is preoccupied with heritage craftsmen and their supply. I make no apology for raising that, as the majority of listed buildings are private houses. A rough and ready calculation is that half the construction industry takes the form of the refurbishment of buildings rather than new build. About 5 per cent. of that is heritage work, but it concerns more than the 2.5 per cent. of the labour force that straight arithmetic suggests, because the activity is labour-intensive, and, therefore, in COTAC's view thoroughly worth encouraging. There is a problem with apprenticeships. Since the move of builders and contractors into management, because they no longer employ apprentices, and because subcontractors are often too small to do so, it is tricky to make certain that the supply is sustained.

I shall have stayed within the limits of brevity if I make one final plea. It concerns the mild potential conflict between conservation officers and surveyors who are employed by people who are thinking of buying houses. Conservation officers are perfectly properly very preoccupied with ensuring that listed buildings should be repaired in a manner that is totally in line with conservation. It is irritating for the owner thereafter to hear the surveyor for the person who is thinking of buying the house say that the work has been done in a manner that is not wholly satisfactory, when, in fact, the owner of the house had no choice but to do it in the way in which the conservation officer required.

Mr. Nick Raynsford (Greenwich): I declare an interest. I act as a consultant to HACAS Ltd., the social housing consultancy.

It is right that the House should have an opportunity to consider the important issue of housing need. In introducing the debate, my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) spelled out lucidly and very well the main concerns that were identified by the Select Committee, which he chairs, in its report on housing need that was published earlier in the year. Several hon. Members have contributed very useful insights, largely drawn from a range of differing constituency experiences. It is a comment on the natural ingenuity of hon. Members, not least the right hon. Member for City of London and Westminster, South

(Mr. Brooke), that those constituency interests have managed to embrace Russian generals, Philadelphia planners, cavemen and Stonehenge. It is remarkable what can be brought into constituency interests.

I was intrigued by the speeches of my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) and the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir I. Patnick), both of whom spoke about the much-hated Kelvin flats. I had the pleasure of being in Sheffield a year or so ago when they were in the process of being demolished. I can testify that the community shared that pleasure at the disappearance of an utterly loathed blot on the Sheffield landscape—a monument to the kind of housing that we should never allow to be built again.

The hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) raised the issue of capital receipts. Since I was unable to intervene, he may like to think about this question: if it is financially irresponsible for a Chancellor to allow the release of capital receipts, why did he support his right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont), then Chancellor of the Exchequer, in releasing 100 per cent. of capital receipts between November 1992 and March 1994? Indeed, during that period, the Government allowed local authorities to use 100 per cent. of their capital receipts for housing investment.

Mr. Stephen: The answer is that the limited release of capital receipts was consistent with the Government's economic strategy at the time.

Mr. Raynsford: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman said that. He will know that that release of capital receipts encouraged recovery in the housing market and achieved a level of output of social housing that was within the range that most experts believe is necessary to meet housing needs. Since the Government reversed that policy in April 1994, the housing market has once again been in extreme difficulties and social housing output has fallen to levels far below every reasonable estimate of need—a point to which we shall return. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that intervention.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish, all members of the Select Committee and their advisers on an excellent report. It makes an important and significant contribution to our understanding of the many complex issues involved in assessing the demand for housing and the scale of housing need.

Few people can feel comfortable about the state of housing in England today. Our country's performance in responding to the many housing problems that we face has in recent years been woefully inadequate. To summarise: we face an acute problem of homelessness. Local authorities in England last year accepted 120,000 households as homeless, but that includes only those officially recorded. It is a sobering comment on the official statistics that the vast majority of people who sleep rough, huddling in doorways under blankets or in cardboard boxes, never feature in the official statistics because they have not approached the local authority and have therefore not been recorded.

With repossessions continuing at a rate of 1,000 per week, the problem of homelessness is clearly impacting on the owner-occupier market as much as anywhere. That contributes to the continuing problem of insecurity that overhangs the market.

Although there have been some encouraging signs of recovery in the first six months of 1996, the market remains in a fragile state. Recovery is patchy, and is certainly not feeding through into any substantial nationwide increase in housing starts. The figures for the three months ending May 1996 show new starts 9 per cent. down on the equivalent period last year. While the output of new homes for sale is down, the comparable figures for new output of rented homes for those in social need is nothing short of catastrophic.

Councils have to all intents and purposes ceased to be able to build homes, and housing association output, down by 22 per cent. over the first four months of this year, shows the drastic impact of two successive steep cuts in the Housing Corporation's budget. Consequently, over the past five years the annual output of new social housing has fallen to the lowest level since the end of the second world war.

At the same time, 1.5 million homes in England are still unfit for human habitation, with many others sub-standard in one way or another, with many desperately hard to keep warm in winter. The problems are found in all tenures. While there are especially acute concentrations of properties in poor condition in the local authority and privately rented sectors, the largest number of sub-standard homes are owner-occupied. That fact was brought out well by my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Pope) when he spoke of the many owner-occupied properties in poor condition in his constituency.

That necessarily quick snapshot of housing conditions in Britain in 1996 is shocking enough, but even more shocking is the inadequacy of current Government programmes designed to tackle the problem. By international comparison, our performance is nothing short of disgraceful. We lag right at the bottom of the list of Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Developmemt countries in terms of housing investment. We spend only about 3 per cent. of our GDP on housing, whereas comparable European countries of a similar size, such as Germany, France and Italy, are spending between 5 and 6 per cent. of their GDP on housing investment.

Perhaps it is asking too much to expect the Government to admit those failings openly and publicly, but at least we have the right to expect a realistic and informed appraisal of the extent of unmet housing needs.

Mr. Thomason: Am I to understand that the hon. Gentleman is telling us that his party's policy is to release the capital receipts held by local government to address all those alleged ills? If so, can he confirm that it is also his party's policy at least to maintain the level of housing investment at its current level, so he is thereby making a substantial spending pledge? Does he have the agreement of his colleagues in the shadow Cabinet in that pledge?

Mr. Raynsford: I am pleased to tell the hon. Gentleman, who must have been asleep for much of the past four years, that the Labour party has made a clear commitment and pledge to release on a phased basis the capital receipts estimated by the Chartered Institute of Housing at £5 billion—money that is currently unavailable for investment because of foolish Government restrictions. That commitment is shared by my right hon. Friend the shadow Chancellor, and it will enable an incoming Labour

[Mr. Raynsford]

Government significantly to increase the output of housing for social need, of which there is a chronic shortage, as the hon. Gentleman will know full well from his involvement with the Select Committee's work.

Mr. Elletson: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Raynsford: No, I will make some progress first. But I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment.

It will come as a considerable surprise to those unfamiliar with the Government's neglect of housing to learn that between 1977, when the Labour Government published their comprehensive housing policy review, and 1995, there was no official published estimate of the scale of housing need in this country.

I always believe that it is right to give credit where credit is due, and the Minister now responsible for housing, the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration, should be congratulated because, unlike any of his Conservative predecessors, he has at least allowed departmental estimates of housing need to be brought into the public domain. That may have required a certain amount of pressure; it may have required repeated parliamentary questions to prompt that outcome. Nevertheless the figures were published, and we welcome that fact.

I wish that I could be as positive about the figures themselves, but they are far from adequate in most respects. Indeed, they revealed a process almost diametrically opposite to that which should inform policy making. Instead of starting with an impartial, objective appraisal of the full range of needs as a basis of reaching decisions on the necessary scale and type of investment, clearly the Government's objective has been to legitimise the current inadequate levels of investment by tailoring the figures to meet the anticipated level of new construction.

The Select Committee effectively demolished that charade. Its carefully considered and cogently argued report draws on evidence from leading experts to demonstrate conclusively that the Government's estimates are out of line with those of all other recognised authorities. Nor can the Government question the credentials of those authorities as foremost among them was Alan Holmans, research fellow at Cambridge university and until recently chief housing economist at the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Holmans' evidence, which clearly impressed the Select Committee, demonstrates a need for new housing provision for social needs of around 117,000 homes a year over the 20-year period to 2011 if we are to provide adequately for the backlog of unmet needs, as well as the needs that will arise through normal demographic and social changes over the same period. That contrasts with a Department of the Environment estimate of a need of between 60,000 and 100,000 new lettings a year over the decade to 2001.

To add insult to injury, Government policy is predicated on a requirement to meet only the bottom end of that range—60,000 new lettings per year.

I regret to say that the Government's response to the Select Committee report published in May this year is simply inadequate. Its failure to address fundamental issues and its repeated use of feeble excuses for not responding to the Select Committee's recommendations have rightly prompted disappointment and derision throughout the housing world. Its weakness is revealed as early as paragraph 5, where it becomes crystal clear that—as with the estimates of housing need published a year earlier—the Government are interested not in an objective and truthful picture of the expected scale of need, but rather in a cosmetic exercise designed to legitimise current levels of investment.

Paragraph 5 states:

"The Government in deciding how much social housing to provide has to consider not just estimates of need for social housing, but also the appropriate balance between public and private provision for housing and the impact that a higher or lower level of provision may have on private supply of housing. Higher levels of provision of social housing could crowd out the reviving private rented sector and suppress growth in home ownership. The Government's aim therefore remains as stated in the Housing White Paper to provide additional social lettings in line with the lower end of the Government's range of estimates. Overall, there are choices to be made about how public money is spent, and estimates of need for social housing have to be balanced against competing demands for resources."

Let us analyse the three lines of defence offered by the Government. First, a value judgment about an appropriate balance between public and private sector provision is given greater importance than estimates of the need for social housing. That is little more than an admission that the Government's ideological prejudices are being allowed to override objective assessments of need.

Secondly, the Government advance the claim that increased provision of social housing could crowd out private lettings and suppress the growth in home ownership, with no evidence whatsoever to support that assertion. Interestingly, elsewhere in the Government's response it is suggested that a revival in private renting might "compensate" for a decline in the growth of owner-occupation, but no fears are expressed that the process of reviving private renting might crowd out or suppress owner-occupation. The contrast between the language in those two passages is another telling illustration of the Government's outdated ideological fixation with the promotion of the private sector at the expense of the public sector.

The Government's third admission is that the amount of public money available will determine how much social housing can be provided—so much for the pretence that decisions on housing investment are being informed by estimates of need. It is the other way round. The acceptance of need is being informed by the available finance.

Mr. Stephen: Has the shadow Chancellor, the right hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown), given the hon. Gentleman a blank cheque? If so, perhaps the hon. Gentleman will tell the House.

Mr. Raynsford: The hon. Gentleman has not been listening. I have made it clear that the Labour party is committed to a phased release of capital receipts, and we have repeated that commitment many times. It is not a blank cheque—it is a significant investment that will help to get the unemployed back to work, building homes to meet our housing need. It will also ensure that we tackle some of the country's economic needs.

Mr. Elletson: Has the hon. Gentleman not admitted in the past that this scheme is not a no-cost option? What will that cost be, and what impact will the scheme have on council taxes?

Mr. Raynsford: I will tell the hon. Gentleman full well what the benefits will be: more homes for people in need, and more people back in work. The costs will be determined by the Labour Government when they are elected and when they decide on the phasing of the release of those receipts. I can assure him that the total sum of capital receipts is estimated by the Chartered Institute of Housing to be £5 billion. We shall allow that money to be released on a phased basis, and the decision will be taken when we are in government.

Even the Government's inadequate estimate of the requirement of 60,000 new lettings a year may prove to be more than the Government, in their dying days, are capable of providing. As the report highlights in paragraphs 98 and 99, public expenditure on new social housing has been steadily reducing in recent years. The DOE's submission to the Committee showed the impact of this in a declining level of new lettings from 70,000 in 1995-96 to 58,000 in 1996-97 and 55,000 in 1997-98. That was based largely on the expected output from the Housing Corporation's programme agreed in February.

If, as is rumoured, the Housing Corporation budget—which has been cut savagely in each of the past two years—is raided once again by a Chancellor desperate to cut public expenditure to make room for pre-election tax cuts, it is difficult to see how even the woefully inadequate target of 60,000 can be achieved. I invite the Minister to come clean to the House when he responds. I understand that he attended the Cabinet this morning, so he should be in a good position to tell us what is in store. Will the Housing Corporation budget be maintained or cut next year? If it is to be cut, how will the minimum projected level of output be achieved?

Mr. Curry: The hon. Gentleman is flattering me—the Secretary of State attended the Cabinet, not I.

Mr. Raynsford: I stand corrected. I understood that the Secretary of State was absent and the right hon. Gentleman attended in his place. However, I shall still look forward to an illuminating response to the question, as I presume that he has communicated with the Secretary of State on the outcome of the Cabinet meeting.

Reading through the Government's response to the report, it is blindingly obvious that the figures have been bent to meet the Government's preconceptions as to the scale of programme that they can afford. No allowance has been made of any possible trend that could point in a different direction. Let us briefly look at some of the statistics. First, I wish to refer to the extent of the backlog of unmet housing need. According to Alan Holmans, the backlog may be as high as 480,000: 110,000 concealed households, 140,000 sharing households, 50,000 would-be couples, 55,000 owner-occupiers seeking a move to social housing for reasons of health or age, 25,000 home owners seeking social housing because they cannot pay their mortgages, and 100,000 single people either homeless or living in hostels.

The Government's response is derisory, and does not even address the issue. Instead, it tries to redefine the need in different and highly restrictive terms, referring to rough sleepers and households in bed and breakfasts as though these were the only categories in housing need. The DOE official who gave evidence with the Minister to the Committee referred to the "very few hundreds of rough sleepers plus a small number of people in bed and breakfast."

When challenged about those living in totally inadequate accommodation, he made the curious assertion:

"I think it is more difficult to say that you should use those as an addition to the total number of houses you required because obviously one way of achieving improvement is to improve those houses."

That begs a number of questions. For example, what will be done to increase the rate at which those sub-standard homes are improved? As the Minister knows, the Government are dismantling the mandatory home renovation grant system and have consistently refused to countenance a comprehensive mandatory national licensing system for multi-occupied houses.

Even if the Government were energetically pursuing the problems of properties in a poor condition, the Minister must recognise that it is total nonsense to pretend that not one of the hundreds of thousands of people living in such conditions will need to be rehoused in social housing. If the Minister does pretend that that is the case, he should explain to the House why the first category listed in the clause of the Housing Bill that defines the groups of people who should be given priority in the allocation of social housing is "people occupying insanitary or over-crowded housing or otherwise living in unsatisfactory housing conditions".

Does the Minister intend to amend the Housing Bill when it comes back to the House on Monday on the ground that everybody living in such conditions should be assisted by the renovation of their homes rather than the allocation of social housing? That is the implication of his official's response to the reasonable questions of the members of the Select Committee.

The Government's position on the backlog of unmet housing needs is untenable, but their stance on the scope for increased owner-occupation is equally suspect. I shall not go into the complex methodology of the "net stock" approach to estimating housing needs, but it is based on assumptions about the numbers likely to resolve their housing needs through other options.

The extent of owner-occupation is critical to those assumptions. The Government's response can only be described as that of an ostrich—they are sticking their head firmly in the sand to avoid seeing the unpleasant evidence from the surrounding world. The experience of negative equity, repossessions, recession and anxiety and insecurity in the market are not features that the Government wish to countenance, so they simply assert that owner-occupation will grow from 68 per cent. to 71 per cent. by 2001. As the Select Committee recognised—and all the evidence from people in the know reinforced the message—the growth of owner-occupation has slowed dramatically because of the impact of the recession, which was caused by the Government's economic mismanagement. As a result, the Council of Mortgage Lenders, which probably has the greatest expertise on that subject, believes that the likelihood of the 71 per cent. figure being reached by 2001 is remote. The prospects for continued growth in home ownership are less favourable than in previous decades, but the Government are blithely ignoring that evidence. The truth is that the Government's estimate of the growth in owner-occupation is unlikely to cover needs. Apart from that, the assumptions on owner-occupation—and, therefore, the Government's ability to reduce the need for social housing in the next few years through owner-occupation—are out of line with all informed opinion in the housing world. I doubt whether the Minister would be willing to wager his shirt on a 71 per cent. level of home ownership by the year 2001. If he is, I will gladly take the bet.

Government estimates of the scale of housing need are hopelessly inadequate and their estimates of the scale of housing demand are equally at odds with reality, but in a different way. Government estimates of housing demand, published last year, project that an additional 4.4 million households will require housing in the 25 years from 1991 to 2016. The accuracy of those figures may be debatable, but the broad consensus of those who gave evidence to the Select Committee was that the forecasts were sound and that, in the past, such forecasts have generally tended to underestimate rather than overestimate the level of demand. Projections imply a need for some 4.4 million extra homes between 1991 and 2016. We are already one fifth of the way to 2016 and if the trends of the past five years are continued, we will fall dramatically short of the necessary level of housing provision. In the past five years, we have started just over 700,000 homes in total—including public, private, and housing association provision. At that rate, we shall be short of the necessary figure of 4.4 million homes by 2016 by some 800,000. Quite simply, that will be a recipe for increased homelessness, overcrowding and housing deprivation, as well as posing a risk of house price inflation if effective demand is allowed to run too far ahead of supply.

The Minister may suggest that the market will respond quickly to any such imbalance; but the housing market does not tend to respond quickly to overcome such imbalances, and it often cannot because of planning restrictions. The housing market has proved highly volatile in the past, with wild fluctuations and extreme boom-bust cycles. Millions of home owners rue the impact of the last major boom-bust cycle in the late 1980s and early 1990s.

The price of the Government's mismanagement of the economy and the housing market, stoking up an unsustainable boom in the 1980s and then turning their back on the victims when the market collapsed in the 1990s, is the very large number of people who have endured the anguish of repossession and the misery of negative equity.

We must learn the lessons of the past and ensure that the housing market is helped to grow at a modest but sustainable rate, and we must avoid any return to unsustainable boom-bust cycles. That is why the Government should now be extremely worried that housing output has been allowed to fall seriously behind the levels necessary to meet the demand anticipated for the next two decades. If that is not corrected soon, we may well find ourselves heading for another inflationary boom, and that would do no good to the housing market or the millions of households who would end up suffering as a result.

The policies pursued by the present Government in the past 17 years have involved a betrayal of their responsibilities to house the nation. They have betrayed every section of the community. They have betrayed home owners. They have betrayed leaseholders, whom they promised to help and then sold out to the interests of the big landowners who bankroll the Tory party. They have betrayed tenants, whether private, council—

Sir Irvine Patnick indicated dissent.

Mr. Raynsford: Oh yes they do. We saw what happened to the 1993 leasehold reform measure. We saw that, and we saw the betrayal of leaseholders by the removal of the right to manage from the Housing Bill earlier this summer.

The Government have betrayed tenants, whether private, council or housing association, by forcing up rents, cutting investment, reducing tenancy rights and plunging an increasing number into benefit dependency and poverty traps.

The Government have betrayed the homeless, using the Housing Bill to remove the statutory safety net that has been there for 17 years, and which every informed organisation concerned with the homeless—every church, every housing association, every voluntary body involved with the homeless—says is a necessary and correct way to protect some of the most vulnerable people in the country, and provides proper cover and help.

The Government's housing record is a disgrace, which will come back to haunt them as we approach the general election. Of the many reasons for which the Government will deserve to lose that election, their failure to meet the housing needs of our nation will be among the most powerful and persuasive. Their lamentable and inadequate response to the Select Committee report will provide a revealing and telling epitaph to a dying and discredited Government.

The Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration (Mr. David Curry): There is a difference between a Government or Opposition day, in which we engage in the normal polemics of this place, and the opportunity for a more reflective and discursive approach that a Select Committee report provides. I plan to choose the less exciting of those approaches, but it may be more appropriate.

The hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) may have forgotten that the Housing Bill has almost completed its passage through Parliament—although we join for what may be our last passage of arms in that matter on Monday—because he made his familiar speech again. I could have written the peroration myself. I have heard it so often that I have come to know it almost by heart, but it deserved a slightly wider audience—of three rather than two.

The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) chairs the Select Committee, to which I gave evidence. I also had the pleasure of his company on the Housing Bill Standing Committee. After the first sitting, he complained that too many documents and too much paper were being thrown at him. It reminds me—my right hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) will recall this—of George III's response to Edward Gibbon's latest production: "Another damn volume, Mr. Gibbon."

The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish remarked on the structure of the Select Committee, but that is not for me to respond to. He intelligently summarised the issues raised by the Select Committee report and, broadly speaking, I intend to follow the structure of his remarks in responding to the points that have been made. He talked about the human circumstances of housing and homelessness, the economic cost of housing in individual and national terms, and the crucial issue of planning.

I understand the instincts of people who wish to protect the open countryside, the green areas between built-up zones, the woodlands and our traditional rural landscape. I should strike a small note of caution, however, because someone with a house overlooking the countryside may have a slightly different sense of priorities from someone whose aspirations for a home have not yet been met. One of our central dilemmas in dealing with housing is that building houses is not popular and meets enormous resistance.

It is easy for the housing lobbies and those of us in housing politics to say where we think people should live and where it is convenient for them to live—it may not be where we happen to live ourselves—and to forget the tremendous resistance to construction. Whenever plans are submitted, or housing allocations in the home counties or further afield are published, there is resistance because people genuinely feel that there is a cost to be paid in terms of land being taken. The answer must be to build on the so-called brown-field sites, but to say that every element of housing need can be satisfied in that way is not only extremely prescriptive but puts more housing on those sites than they can sustain.

We all agree that it is difficult to come up with a formula for the estimates that is not within a wide bracket because they are based on so many uncertainties and permutations. Tonight, we have discussed two sets of estimates: first, the household projection estimates and, secondly, the estimates of need. The household projection estimates are that there will be 4.4 million new households by 2016. The hon. Member for Greenwich was right to say that, historically, we have tended to underestimate rather than overestimate housing needs. They result from many factors: population growth, which is one of the major factors; changing age structures; changes in behaviour; and the number of single-person households, which is growing in every age group. That category includes not just single or unmarried mothers, but single people throughout the age range.

The hon. Members for Christchurch (Mrs. Maddock) and for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) mentioned the problem of elderly people. Obviously, a better use of our towns and cities must be a priority. We have set a target of ensuring that 50 per cent. of all new build is on sites that have been used before. We have now attained 49 per cent., whereas in the 1980s we managed less than 40 per cent. We must constantly see how we can improve that percentage because, in some areas, building is part of regenerating and enhancing our cities. It is part of improving the environment, not what is regarded as a constant erosion of it. It may not be a panacea, but we must look in that direction for a significant part of our new build.

The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish is right to say that we should make better use of our existing stock. There are 800,000 empty properties in England, 700,000 of which are in the private sector. That is why we are doing our best to encourage the use of those properties. Housing associations have an important role to play in buying and restoring derelict buildings.

No one can come up with precise figures on the calculation of housing demand—many extrapolations are built into the formulas—but I agree that we must keep the figures under review and develop our methods of assessing need. We are looking ahead, and we have asked the department of applied economics at Cambridge to develop an economic model that will enable us to establish the possible future need for social housing under a range of different scenarios. I do not think that there will be a definitive answer to the question.

My right hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South raised some important issues about the unfortunate people who do not have homes. He made an important point about the difficulty of coexistence between homeless people and residents. For example, we have to seek planning permission for our winter shelters. In addition, people have difficulty finding a conventional shelter.

People also look for wet shelters, for detoxification units and for shelters where people with mental health problems can go, which are more difficult to find. Hon. Members must have experienced resistance in their constituencies when approval has been sought to provide an establishment for people who have behavioural problems. No matter what reassurances are given, people usually think that there is a good reason to place the shelter somewhere else.

A homeless person in a hostel is better than a homeless person in the street—for the person concerned and for the residents. There is too much facile discussion about homelessness and too many assumptions that if a homeless person is plonked in a home they will be all right—they may have been homeless for many years, and they may have a multiplicity of disadvantages.

A month or so ago, I visited a Salvation Army shelter in Whitechapel, and talked to a young person in his accommodation. He said that it is terrifying to be given a key, because that is responsibility. He said, "I have to take control of my own life now." He admitted that that was a difficult thing for him to do and that occasionally he was tempted to walk out of the shelter and back on to the street. The framework of care is crucial in helping people who have these difficulties.

Mrs. Maddock: I am interested in what the Minister is saying about the element of care. I hope that he will say these things during the review on benefits as fervently as he is saying them here. I have made representations to the Minister on this issue. Many people are concerned that the packages will not add up if we do not have that care element in benefit.

Mr. Curry: I understand the hon. Lady's concern in this regard. My right hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South talked about the foyer projects. I understand their importance, but they are not a panacea. There is a temptation to look for something that is the answer to all the problems of homelessness, but it ought to be resisted.

Today, I opened a different sort of project, called off the street and into work, which attempts to place homeless people in skilled employment. They will not be employed because they are homeless; they will be employed because they have the skills. The fact that they are homeless will be irrelevant. If they have a job, they will be able to acquire a home—which is important when they try to get a job—and they will be able to have a more "conventional" and self-sustaining life style. The scheme has a wide range of business support as well as London local authority support. Voluntary organisations are familiar with the rough sleepers initiative. It is a market-oriented way of helping homeless people. I was privileged to open the initiative this morning and to see how effective it is.

The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish is correct: the record of local authorities in turning over property for collecting rents is improving. Some authorities have a long way to go, but the overall record is improving, which is good.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the problem of houses in the wrong places. He said that we should take the jobs to the people rather than force the people to migrate to find jobs. I believe that both circumstances will always prevail. I offer the example of the efforts of development corporations, the jobs that Nissan has created in the north-east of England, and the jobs that have followed the Korean investment and the Siemens relocation.

We have tried to create new opportunities to allow people to remain in their areas because we know that they are attached to the concept of locality and neighbourhood, but we want people to migrate elsewhere if that is how they seek to improve themselves.

The hon. Gentleman referred also to the wrong type of house. That is an important issue: needs change. We must deal with the problem of under-occupation, as it is known in the jargon. More than half a million local authority and housing association tenants have two or more spare bedrooms. We do not propose to say, "We must decant you because we need the space for someone else." People may want to be able to have family members to stay or, what is more, they may have been brought up in those properties.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir I. Patnick) referred, in a fascinating historical account, to that crucial sense of belonging and identity. Over the years, we have learnt from programmes such as slum clearance—which, as far as I was concerned, was first highlighted in the book "The Life and Death of a Great American City"—the effect of uprooting people from their neighbourhoods and the resulting social problems. We aim for a better match, but that policy is necessarily inefficient in economic terms. We cannot avoid that: we put up with the inefficiency because the social considerations are more important.

Hon. Members returned time and again to the notion of community and regeneration. That is at the heart of housing policy. The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish referred to difficult housing estates. My hon. Friend the Member for Hallam and the hon. Member for Hillsborough mentioned that problem, as did many others. We have moved away from a pure renovation estate action type of programme—however impressive that appears—to a more integrated approach. The evidence from around Europe—not just in the United Kingdom—points to the fact that, if crucial elements are missing, there is a danger of decline. A spanking new estate may be completed and still look good five years later, but 10 years down the road it may face all the old problems because we failed to tackle the social difficulties within the estate framework.

Mr. Elletson: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the quality of life on many council housing estates has been transformed by the right-to-manage scheme, whereby the Government have transferred the management of estates to their tenants? Will he examine closely the actions of the Labour-controlled Blackpool council, which has deliberately sought to frustrate the wishes of the tenants of the Queen's Park estate in my constituency? They want to exercise the right to manage and they have been trained to do so by Department of the Environment schemes, but they have been confronted by the underhand tactics of Blackpool council's housing authority. Will my right hon. Friend investigate their complaints?

Mr. Curry: My hon. Friend is right: that is an important issue. Since 1990, 112 tenant management organisations have been set up, and more than 100 are in the process of being formed. I hear what he says about the problems in his constituency, and I am willing to examine any difficulties there. As a matter of fact, this morning I signed the order making Blackpool a unitary authority. Perhaps the extra responsibility will bring additional openness to the council's actions. I also signed the order for Blackburn.

Mr. Curry: I know that my hon. Friend takes a somewhat different view but, as Blackpool will now have additional responsibility, perhaps it will review its behaviour and we will find that responsibility brings some improvement.

The estate renewal programme makes an important contribution to difficult estates. Several hon. Members have said that we should not become fixed on one form of institutional solution, and I agree. Large-scale voluntary transfers have a significant role to play. The estate renewal programme is based on the need to help the worst estates which, frankly, must be given away if they are to be transferred. That approach involves a mixture of demolition and renovation.

Sandwell was one of the first authorities to be included in the scheme and to go to a new social landlord. Two or three of the first schemes in that programme are planning transfers to the new housing companies which will shortly be made possible by new legislation. We are therefore beginning to see diversification in the forms transfer can take and the nature of the social landlords to which property can be transferred. I think that that is a welcome flexibility and I hope that all the mechanisms will be used in the circumstances which seem most sensible for a particular estate.

Hon. Members are right when they say that a sense of ownership is important. The Bonamy estate in Southwark, which is also known to the hon. Member for Greenwich, has benefited from demolition, rebuild and recreation of the street pattern. People there have gardens. The hon. Gentleman and I shared a platform at Central hall, Westminster, where, to our mutual distress, we found ourselves on the same side on a number of points. We found ourselves defending people's right to have a garden as a means of expressing their identity. A garden is often an individual and personal thing. We had a detailed discussion with one tenant about what was the best form of winter-flowering cherry. For anyone who is particularly interested, it is a prunus subhirtella autumnalis.

Holly street in the east end of London, a deck access estate, had all the social problems with which we are now familiar, but it is now an attractive area. However much we might scorn the eponymous Acacia avenue, the Acacia avenues work better in social and human terms than the tower blocks of the 1960s and 1970s. They were created with the best of motives, and I will not scorn what was then believed to be an answer to a difficult problem until we are confident that the ones that we now espouse will be better.

The hon. Member for Denton and Reddish raised the crucial issue of where we should put houses, as did my hon. Friends the Members for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson) and for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) because of their concern about the countryside. The brown-field sites must play a significant part. We need to knit it into the programmes to rebuild the cities and to make them work better.

I have no responsibility for planning matters, but occasionally I venture into the realm of planning policies. Planning policies and their revision are buttresses of that wider policy. Without them we would find it more difficult to build houses in the cities, to have people wanting to live in the cities and to create the demand that flows from the city centre. It is too easy to think that a 24-hour city is achieved by keeping the pubs open until 2 am. That is not the case. The demand needs to be generated by people of different sorts, different tenures, different backgrounds and different occupations living in cities.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hallam described what has happened in Sheffield from a historical perspective and from his own experience, and he gave particularly apt examples of what makes the city work. We are trying to make the cities much more attractive, but the concern for the countryside is real. I represent the Yorkshire Dales national park, so I appreciate that. I understand the problems of summer and winter lets and the problem of second properties—a matter my right hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South raised, as did the hon. Member for Hillsborough from a completely different perspective.

There are villages in my constituency where I suspect that the majority of properties are second homes. The election material of all parties at the last election is probably still on the doormat of some of them. The national park even embarked on a policy of trying to restrict new building in the park to people for whom it would be the principal home, and we are engaged in a debate with the national park authority about that policy. That policy demonstrates once again that we must recognise that house building is an activity in which it is too easy to believe in theory, but which it is difficult to accept in practice when it is too close.

The hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Pope) talked about private sector renovation and housing renewal areas. I think that he acknowledges—I am glad that he got the right Bill this time; I recall that he once started a speech but then realised that he had chosen the wrong occasion on which to make it—that the mandatory grants system was not working. We need a more strategic approach. His local authority will be able to use the new legislation as part of an area renewal programme.

Quite frankly, I am not surprised that local authorities said, "It would be nice if we could meet all the demand," but they know that that is not realistic, so the measures that we have taken are sensible in the circumstances.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) that housing investment trusts are important. It is right that the balance of housing in the United Kingdom is different from that on the continent. Since taking this job, I have constantly said that we need a better equilibrium in the housing market between owner-occupation—about which I do not have a particular hang-up—private rented and social rented to try to create more diversity and choice.

I am particularly concerned that young people, when looking for accommodation at the start of their working or married life, should have the choice of high-quality private rented accommodation. What distinguishes the housing pattern in Britain from the continent is that many young people here go into owner-occupation, partly because they do not have the necessary choice. The pattern for the older age ranges is much more common across the European countries. We need diversification.

The hon. Member for Christchurch and others mentioned the elderly in community care. I have asked the Government offices to hold discussions this year with some local housing authorities in each region, specifically to discuss their action to co-ordinate work on housing with work on social and health services. They will take place either when the Government offices visit the authority to talk about the housing investment programme submissions or at meetings specially set up for the purpose. As I have mentioned to the hon. Lady on a number of occasions, we have to produce the guidance to accompany the Housing Bill, and we are anxious that it should reflect best sensible practice.

I have been somewhat discursive, but I said at the beginning that I thought that that was the best way to reply to the debate. The exchanges have been useful, and the speeches of colleagues have ranged widely. The House does not provide sufficient occasions on which we can exchange ideas. I hope that my contribution has been of some assistance in demonstrating that, despite occasional appearances to the contrary, there is much common ground on an issue of crucial importance to all of us.

9.52 pm

Mr. Bennett: With the leave of the House, I should like to thank the Minister for his reply to the debate. I also thank the Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison), who has been on the Front Bench for much of the debate. It is appreciated in the House when Ministers come to listen and not just to participate.

[Mr. Bennett]

I thank the other members of the Select Committee for their contributions. My hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Pope) seemed to apologise for entering into the debate. I stress that one of the functions of Select Committees is to carry out the inquiry and produce a report so that the whole House is better informed. Sadly, too often, the House does not take a blind bit of notice of the report, and all that happens is that members of the Select Committee further debate the report that they have produced. The contributions from hon. Members who were not members of the Select Committee were very welcome.

The hon. Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir I. Patnick) reminded us of the importance, which we stressed in the report, of trying to bring people back into the city centres and bringing shops that are empty back into residential use. He also stressed the problem of local authority rates of relet. I have a slight reservation about that. It is possible to lump the figures together and say that an authority is reletting properties in four or five weeks; a more interesting question, however, is not how long it takes overall but how long it takes to relet the really popular properties. We cannot be too critical of an authority that takes 12 weeks to relet an unpopular estate, but I am worried when it takes six or eight weeks to relet popular properties.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn ran down deck access flats, as did a number of other hon. Members. I understand the problems, but when I am in London I stay in a set of deck access flats in the Barbican. It is some of the nicest housing in London. If we knock down all the deck access flats, we may well have to take away a bit of the green belt. We must put a bit more effort into ensuring that all deck access flats are as nice to live in as those at the Barbican. The crucial thing about the Barbican is the amount that is spent on services and looking after the area. It may be better for the nation to spend money on introducing good services and maintenance in deck access flats than for us to knock them down, going for low densities and taking up more of our countryside.

The hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason)—whose support on the Select Committee I appreciated—expressed enthusiasm for housing investment trusts. We must wait and see whether they manage to deliver. The Select Committee visited the west midlands and looked at some of the green belt around some of the hon. Gentleman's constituency. I understand why he and other hon. Members passionately want to protect the green belt—indeed, I share their views—but we must find somewhere for the houses to go.

The hon. Member for Christchurch (Mrs. Maddock) referred to lifetime homes. I have made the same point, and I hope that the Government will consider it with much more sympathy. The hon. Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson) reminded us just how much of Britain could disappear under housing. We must go for high-density housing, and make it work.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) made the important point that jobs go with housing. She then said, "Hands off the green belt." The hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) made a similar point, although he also mentioned the difference between demand and need. Those are important issues. The right hon. Member for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) raised the problems of homeless people—referring to day shelters and day care—and the problems of second homes.

This has been a very useful debate. Having said that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am tempted to sit down, although I understand that you are in the procedurally awkward position of having to suspend the sitting for three minutes, but I think that it would be unfair of me to go on filibustering. Let me express my thanks to all involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Order. The hon. Gentleman cannot filibuster, or he will be brought to order.

Question deferred, pursuant to paragraph (4) of Standing Order No. 52 (Consideration of Estimates).

9.57 pm

Sitting suspended.

10 pm

On resuming—

It being Ten o'clock, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER, pursuant to paragraph (5) of Standing Order No. 52 (Consideration of Estimates), put forthwith the deferred Questions on Estimates 1996-97 (Class I, Vote 1, and Class VI, Vote 1).

ESTIMATES, 1996-97

Class I, Vote 1

Resolved,

That a further sum not exceeding £6,228,158,000 be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to complete or defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending on 31st March 1997 for expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on: personnel costs, etc of the armed forces and their reserves and cadet forces, etc; personnel costs, etc of Defence Ministers and of certain civilian staff employed by the Ministry of Defence; movements, certain stores, supplies and services; certain spares and maintenance; plant and machinery; charter of ships; certain research; lands and buildings; works services; certain contingent liabilities; certain services provided by other Government departments; some sundry services, subscriptions, grants and other payments, including those abroad, including assistance to foreign and Commonwealth governments for defence-related purposes; and set-up costs, loans and funding to trading funds.

Class VI, Vote 1

Resolved,

That a further, revised sum not exceeding £3,083,844,000 be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to complete or defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending on 31st March 1997 for expenditure by the Department of the Environment on Housing Revenue Account Subsidy; slum clearance, repairs and other improvements to private housing; payments to the Housing Corporation; the transfer of local authority estates to new landlords; accommodation for the homeless and special needs accommodation; housing management and mobility; rent officers and Rent Assessment Panels; grants for the provision of gypsy sites; grants to home improvement agencies; asylum seekers' special housing grant; for research projects, including European Community programmes; publicity; and for sundry other housing and construction services and projects.

MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER then put the Question he was directed to put, pursuant to paragraph (1) of Standing Order No. 53 (Questions on voting of Estimates).

ESTIMATES AND SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1996-97

Resolved,

That a further sum not exceeding £105,763,862,000 be granted to Her Majesty out of the Consolidated Fund to complete or defray the charges for Defence and Civil Services for the year ending on 31st March 1997, as set out in House of Commons Papers Nos. 261, 262, 263 and 427

Ordered,

That a Bill be brought in on the foregoing resolutions; And that the Chairman of Ways and Means, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. William Waldegrave, Mr. Michael Jack, Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory and Mrs. Angela Knight do prepare and bring it in.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL

Mr. Michael Jack accordingly presented a Bill to apply certain sums out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the years ending on 31st March 1996 and 1997; And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time tomorrow and to be printed. [Bill 170.]

DELEGATED LEGISLATION

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): With permission, I shall put together the motions relating to delegated legislation.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 101 (6) (Standing Committees on Delegated Legislation),

CONTRACTING OUT

That the draft Contracting Out (Functions relating to Wireless Telegraphy) Order 1996, which was laid before this House on 18th June, be approved.

REPRESENTATION OF THE PEOPLE

That the draft European Parliamentary Constituencies (Scotland) Order 1996, which was laid before this House on 25th June, be approved.

VALUE ADDED TAX

That the Value Added Tax (Anti-avoidance (Heating)) Order 1996 (S.I., 1996, No. 1661), dated 26th June 1996, a copy of which was laid before this House on 26th June, be approved.

ROAD TRAFFIC

That the draft Driving Licences (Community Driving Licence) Regulations 1996, which were laid before this House on 1st July, be approved.—[Mr. Burns.]

Question agreed to.

DEREGULATION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With permission, I shall put together the motions relating to deregulation.

Motion made, and question put, forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 14A (1) (a) (Consideration of draft deregulation orders),

That the draft Deregulation (Insurance Companies Act 1982) Order 1996, which was laid before this House on 24th June, be approved.

That the draft Deregulation (Slaughterhouses Act 1974 and Slaughter of Animals (Scotland) Act 1980) Order 1996, which was laid before this House on 12th February, be approved.—[Mr. Burns.]

Question agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With permission, I shall put together the motions relating to European Community documents.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 102 (9) (European Standing Committees),

PRELIMINARY DRAFT BUDGET FOR 1997

That this House takes note of European Community Document Nos. COM (96) 300, the preliminary draft budget of the European Communities for 1997, 6431/96 and 6431/96 COR 1, the proposal for an adjustment of the Financial Perspective; and supports the Government's efforts to maintain budget discipline in the Community.

MARITIME POLICY

That this House takes note of European Community Document No. 6813/96, towards a new maritime strategy, and endorses the Government's approach to it—[Mr. Burns.]

Question agreed to.

Local Authorities (Government Guidance)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Burns.]

10.3 pm

Sir Irvine Patnick (Sheffield, Hallam): I have enjoyed sitting again on the Front Bench for nearly four hours but I had forgotten how uncomfortable the Benches are. I am grateful for the opportunity to debate Government guidance to local authorities on their responsibilities.

If asked what a local authority does, or should do, most people could reel off a list as long as their arm, and I am no exception. Even with the constraints of time, it will be a long list. If people are asked what a council does not do, the list may be even longer. With the passage of time, many councils have come a long way since they declared themselves nuclear-free zones; at least they have taken down the signs and gone some way towards conformity.

Whenever local authorities are discussed, one inevitably turns to the area that one knows best which, in my case, is Sheffield city council, on which I was privileged to serve as a councillor for more than 20 years. Many former councillors are currently active Members of the House of Commons—one of them was present during the previous debate.

Examining what Sheffield city council does is easy. The annual report of the city council contains a service charter, the introduction of which reminds everyone of the council's statutory performance indicators—providing that Sheffield people know what that means—whether the indicators are complied with and, above all, whom to contact if they are not. The Audit Commission, set up by the Government, publishes comparisons of councils' performances on a range of services that they provide. That helps when comparing one council with another, providing that citizens know where to look for the information.

Sheffield city council is now in partnership with many organisations in the city. The council now co-operates with the Government, rather than conflicts with them, which used to be the way that it operated. I invite the Minister to travel around Hallam with me when he is next on one of his frequent visits to the city. He should not be shocked or alarmed when he sees an invasion of Daleks on traffic islands. Those plastic, crenellated cones are coloured bright yellow and have a black stripe across them, bearing the legend, "Danger—high voltage". They stand motionless and inhabit the places where the traffic bollards used to be—those bollards have not been replaced.

My hon. Friend will also come across no entry street signs at the junctions of roads such as Steel road and Neill road, and Carrington road and Ecclesall road. The signs can hardly be seen as they have never been replaced, repainted or even made to stand upright. My hon. Friend will also see unswept and hazardous pavements. If he has second sight, he will see road signs that are not visible due to overhanging trees. He will see street lights that have not been repaired; yellow paint that is visible on minor roads where potholes have been marked out for some time, but not yet repaired; sporadic grass cutting; and trees that have been chopped down in a rush one weekend at places such as Willow Croft in Fulwood—months later, the site has still not been developed.

Sheffield city council's annual report lists nine items in the Sheffield charter. Three of them are:

"The highest quality services possible with the resources we have at our disposal Services which are responsive to your needs and views"

and

"Prompt remedial action if services do not come up to the standards we promise".

I contend that those standards have been found wanting. Surely it is the role of any council to ensure that they are met.

The Sheffield newspaper The Star has waged campaigns on unlit traffic islands that are hazardous, potholes in the roads that are dangerous and other road safety aspects. I am grateful to Neil Fieldhouse, the political editor of The Star, for his forbearance.

It is extremely difficult in a short debate not to raise areas of council work that are not within the local government responsibilities of my hon. Friend the Minister, but council responsibilities stem from the cash that is allocated by Government, using various formulae and indicators; each council then determines its own priorities.

Accident prevention features highly in what I deem to be a council's priorities, yet my offers to lobby the relevant Minister are dismissed by the council. I contend that street lighting should work to enable people to see and be seen, pavements should be swept, road signs should be made more visible, street lights and potholes should be repaired and street names should be visible. Road side weeds should be removed, grass verges cut on a regular basis and damaged bollards replaced. Surely the council's role is to ensure that this is done.

This is not a "Let's knock Sheffield" debate. I am proud of the city and do much to ensure that every possible crumb of the Government's financial cake goes to Sheffield. I have joined parliamentary colleagues and members of the city council in lobbying Ministers on many occasions, which has sometimes resulted in success. We have lobbied for things ranging from an inner ring road in Sheffield to a development corporation for the city.

I well remember endeavouring to get a development corporation for Sheffield and the opposition that I encountered in the city to the new, and as far as those people were concerned, alien concept. When I made representations to the late Lord Ridley, who was then Secretary of State for the Environment, he informed me that I required the support of businesses in Sheffield before the matter could be considered. That was readily forthcoming and, now, the lower Don valley has changed greatly from what was at one time a totally run down and derelict area, where confidence had vanished.

From the development corporation's inception, it began assembling sites suitable for business and the new infrastructure that would be required to improve transport access. Sites were compulsorily purchased to bring together the fragmented ownership and the development corporation used its financial resources to decontaminate land and prepare sites for sale. It was not a speedy process and the physical appearance of the valley changed little at first, but as the sites were reclaimed and the infrastructure built, the east end of Sheffield was transformed, like a phoenix rising from the ashes.

A £33 million dual carriageway link road now runs through the valley, putting all parts of it within easy access of the motorway. Old, dilapidated buildings have been refurbished to a high standard by a programme that targeted prominent routes and areas. The environment has not been neglected either. The River Don and the Sheffield and Tinsley canal, which run the full length of the valley, have been improved and form the basis for a footpath-cycle network and waterside locations. They have been opened up not only for development but for public access. Through the development corporation's efforts, the derelict canal basin has emerged as a model development and leisure complex. It was once called the Canal wharf. It is near the city centre and is now better known as Victoria quays. It has led to a ripple development in the vicinity, which includes the city centre and the valley generally.

Sheffield development corporation's actions have revitalised a dilapidated area of Sheffield and had a knock-on effect in the rest of the city. The impressions that people once had when driving along the Tinsley viaduct passing Sheffield have been greatly improved.

It is obvious to anyone that housing development could, and indeed should, take place in the area. The area was considered at one time as a site for a higher education establishment—a far cry from the old image. Under the chairmanship of Hugh Sykes and chief executive Graham Kendall, the SDC has brought back into use areas that, for decades, were lost to dereliction. In addition, an airport brokered through Government assistance is under construction. We have a revitalised sector of the city where industry is thriving and Sheffield has benefited.

Up to March this year, the SDC has reclaimed 593 acres of land, built 12.7 km of road, secured 3.7 million sq ft of floor space and created nearly 12,750 jobs. It has secured £577 million of private sector investment—all from a Government grant of £93.2 million.

The questions for the Minister are: what will happen when Sheffield development corporation, which I was instrumental in helping to set up, comes to the end of its life, and how will the momentum that it created continue? In March, the Yorkshire and Humberside planning strategy for the next decade was set out in the document, "Regional Planning Guidance for Yorkshire and Humberside", which gives local authorities a broad framework for development and planning.

The document aims to encourage sustainable development in Yorkshire and Humberside, by means of four main objectives—promoting economic prosperity and competitiveness, conserving the environment, helping with urban regeneration and making the best use of available resources. It sets out the idea of economic development by creating a partnership between the public and private sectors and through the use of inward investment.

The document echoes the work of Sheffield development corporation, saying that derelict land should be revitalised and town centres maintained. The question is: should that activity be channelled through local authorities? The document gives priority to regenerating the region's inner cities and former coalfields, and to the co-ordination of planning and transport policies. It also advises that protection should be given to the countryside, and says that future generations should not suffer from today's development.

The Minister will recollect a previous debate in which I drew to his attention a proposal in Sheffield city council's unitary development plan to reduce the green belt. The Minister's actions persuaded the council to do otherwise. The Government have increased the green belt, and I have nothing but praise for them for introducing the first-ever audit of environmental issues, in the document "This Common Inheritance"—an audit which is updated every year. I commend that document to everyone with an interest not only in the environment but in the well-being of the United Kingdom.

Detailed guidance is given to local authorities on planning matters, but what guidance on other matters is given, for the sake of the well-being of the community? That information does not appear to be as readily available as information on planning. Through a series of questions for written answer, I have endeavoured to bring the issue into the public domain.

Different councils allocate different priorities in the attempt to ensure that grass cutting, the collection of rents, rates and taxes, the reletting of council houses, the recycling of waste and a wide range of other activities are carried out. Yet how does a council tax payer become aware of a local authority's performance indicators, which are provided by the Audit Commission? What efforts have been made to improve councils' quality of complaints procedures, as outlined in chart 18 of the Audit Commission's publication?

Recently, I questioned in the House the setting up of the Yorkshire and Humberside assembly. Suddenly and, it appears, from nowhere, local authorities have found the money to set up that assembly. The councils seem to have found no problems in raising the cash for that purpose, which is a far cry from the story that they usually peddle.

The assembly will meddle in affairs in which councils have no statutory authority. A regional assembly will be another tier of government, like the old South Yorkshire county council, and it is to be imposed on the people. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Under–Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Member for Leeds, North–East (Mr. Kirkhope), for his active support in questioning the setting up of the assembly. Truly, the question that needs to be answered is: is that assembly really needed?

I welcome inward investment, and Sheffield has a labour force second to none. It is located in a wonderful area with many facilities, including land, but when push comes to shove, Government grant helps too. I therefore ask the Minister how people can ensure that the work that councils have powers to do, and which is in accordance with their responsibilities, is done satisfactorily.

If residents cannot do that, how can they complain? The information should be readily available, and provided in a simple manner. Perhaps in this short debate the Minister will spell out in plain language Government guidance for local authorities on what their responsibilities are, and who is to oversee them.

The Parliamentary Under–Secretary of State for the Environment (Sir Paul Beresford): We have had the privilege and pleasure of getting two bites of the cherry today, in that my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir I. Patnick) has talked about Sheffield in two separate debates. I had the good fortune to hear his earlier speech, although admittedly through the television network, and I found that as fascinating as I found the speech that he has just made. As the House knows, my hon. Friend has considerable experience of representing Sheffield in the House and in local government. Therefore, it is important that we should listen to the points he makes.

My hon. Friend has focused on Sheffield, and it is probably sensible if I do the same. However, I do so with some caution. Although my knowledge of Sheffield is increasing—it is based on statistics and comments from business men and industry and a number of visits—it is nowhere near that of my hon. Friend.

At long last, Sheffield city council has started to recognise that changes are needed and has taken steps to improve its performance. Debates such as tonight's will help that.

As an ethnic minority immigrant, I can say that Sheffield is renowned throughout the world. It is a great city, with a great history. The people of Sheffield are fabulous people who are proud of their city. Many people are surprised to learn that, despite the restructuring and rationalisation of the 1980s, the steel industry for which Sheffield is internationally famous now produces more steel than ever before, and is more profitable. The greatest difference—which I have discussed with my hon. Friend while standing in Sheffield—is that now one can see it. The old smokestacks are gone, and the environment has greatly improved.

Sheffield can no longer rely on a single industry for employment. The city needs to grow and diversify, but the council appears not to make that a priority. I still hear complaints that the council is anti-business. As a result, in desperation at the council's attitude and in recognition of the problems—and with considerable prompting from my hon. Friend—the development corporation was set up.

I shall not spend much time on that. The Development Corporation is extremely successful, and has revitalised the lower Don valley, which is now an attractive location for industry, distribution and office development. My hon. Friend mentioned the airport, which is an example of partnership between Sheffield development corporation, English Partnerships and the private sector. I am not sure whether the local authority was involved, or even adopted a positive attitude.

However, as my hon. Friend has said, all urban development corporations were intended to be limited-life bodies. They need to reach a conclusion, and the Sheffield development corporation will be the next one to wind up in March 1997. The remaining development corporations will wind up in March 1998.

We all recognise that suitable arrangements must be in place to ensure that the corporation's achievements are safeguarded and maintained, and that the osmosis of that success into surrounding areas continues. The local authority and other agencies such as English Partnerships have been actively involved in ensuring that the achievements of the development corporation will be maintained.

That commitment and the partnership between public and private sector—English Partnerships is an example of an interim body—will force local authorities to continue to move the city ahead and adopt a different attitude. It is happening already, although Sheffield has been one of the slowest to change.

Arrangements have also been made in the context of the Government's current policy towards urban regeneration. I refer to the single regeneration budget challenge funding, which compels authorities such as Sheffield to perform sufficiently well to gain funding. The challenge funding approach forces authorities to modernise their thinking and work in partnership with other agencies, particularly the private sector. Sheffield was typically—I say it with a deep sigh—slow to grasp that. Its bids under rounds 1 and 2 of city challenge were full of the old socialist claptrap. They were rejected, and deservedly so.

I am pleased, however, that Sheffield learned from that rejection. It took a while, but it happened. Its later single regeneration budget bids had changed out of all recognition and were successful. Sheffield received £38 million over seven years in round 1, and £36 million over seven years in round 2. The city's two main SRB challenge fund schemes are among the largest approvals in the country.

My hon. Friend will accept that that shows that Shefield city council finally recognises the importance of the matter. These schemes will lever in more than £140 million of other funding, of which nearly £90 million will come from the private sector. The importance of partnership has finally sunk in to Sheffield. If it can sink in to the minds of those councillors, there is hope everywhere. These schemes, and a further £22 million approved under the SRB estates renewal challenge funding, will make a significant contribution to the continued regeneration of this important city.

My hon. Friend portrayed a dismal litany of inadequate maintenance in Sheffield—daleks, potholes, broken street lights, dirty or hazardous pavements and the rest. I have tripped over them in the streets. However, I must add that Sheffield is by no means alone—many Labour and Liberal authorities have similar records. Funnily enough, there are even worse examples—but few. There is, however, some evidence that Sheffield is moving away from this record. I was particularly pleased to hear that the nuclear-free zone signs have been taken down—or perhaps they fell down.

These matters touch on what is, I think, the nub of what my hon. Friend has described—the lack of quality services that citizens in some areas get from their local councils, and what they can do about it. First, councils are ultimately accountable at the ballot box. If people are dissatisfied, they alone can vote out those who run their councils—particularly if all the information is provided. Local accountability rests on this. We have done a great deal in recent years to ensure that better information about performance is available.

What does the information show about Sheffield? I have touched on some of the statistics, and my hon. Friend has done so in an earlier debate. Some 7 per cent. of council tenants are more than 13 weeks in arrears with their rent. That is better than Liverpool, where the figure is 18 per cent., but much worse than the average. These arrears are then loaded on to the more honest citizens, who have to pay.

Sheffield is the second slowest metropolitan council in deciding housing planning applications. What is more, between 1993-94 and 1994-95, the percentage decided within eight weeks—our standard—fell by more than 10 per cent. In addition, one should be cautious before eating in the restaurants of Sheffield. On average, metropolitan authorities inspect 79 per cent. of those premises that are due for a look. Four councils—Bolton, Knowsley, Dudley and Solihull—achieved 100 per cent., but Sheffield managed less than 20 per cent. I cannot give a list of those that passed.

My hon. Friend knows the story of Supertram better than me, and Sheffield is finally taking action to privatise the enterprise and to stem the haemorrhage of public funds. But the bottom line for local taxpayers this year is that, with only half the hoped-for passenger usage, there will be losses of more than £6 million, with more to come. The belated sale will still leave taxpayers saddled with paying huge residual debts, on top of the major debts incurred by the world student games—which would raise a smile if it were not so disastrous for local people.

I trust that the council tax payers in Sheffield and elsewhere in South Yorkshire will make their councillors answer for that, and ensure that they will in future sit on the sidelines and allow somebody competent to take over.

I trust, but I do not believe, that the new regional assembly for Yorkshire and Humberside will prove a sensible exercise in co-operation. I hope, perhaps in vain, that it is not a politically motivated attempt to promote further waste by imposing more bureaucracy that is to be paid for by the taxpayer. We will watch it, and make sure that the voters in the area are aware of what is going on.

Like my hon. Friend, I have no intention of knocking Sheffield. The city council has shed much of its past image, and is clearly taking steps in the right direction. At the end of the day, what we will need for Sheffield and other areas is what we will get after the next election—a Conservative Government who will ensure that Labour authorities are forced to behave in a responsible manner.

Many of the changes by Sheffield and other councils have been brought about directly by Conservative policies. In the past 17 years, we have introduced a range of measures to increase local accountability, to improve local council performance and to enhance value for money. At last, they are starting to bite in Sheffield. We have constructed a framework within which local government can adopt three roles—as an enabler, regulator and, above all, community leader. I suspect, and my hon. Friend the Member for Hallam may agree, that we need a Conservative Government to ensure that the improvement continues. We aim to ensure that the country has an effective and locally accountable system of local government that gives value for money and the quality of public services that the people of Sheffield deserve.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Knapman.]

9.34 am

The Minister for Science and Technology (Mr. Ian Taylor): I certainly welcome this opportunity to have a calm and constructive debate about science policy.

About a year ago, I took over the science portfolio, to add to the technology portfolio that I had been looking after for a year. The past year has been one of the most exciting, in which many things have happened. The coming together of the Department of Trade and Industry and the Office of Science and Technology, which raised a few eyebrows at the time, has proved an unmitigated success. It is quite extraordinary how the vitalities of the two Departments have come together to deliver a series of constructive programmes that touch the entire spectrum of basic science, applied and industrial research and development and technology transfer.

As evidence of that, I would cite big programmes such as the continuing work on the space policy document, the launch of the crusade for biotechnology, the launch of the information society initiative, the further development of the technology foresight programme, to which I shall return, and the higher profile that is being given to EQUAL, the extend quality life initiative, which I announced in the first statement that I made a year ago. The considerable progress has been reinforced not least by the outcome of the OST's science budget which, in a context of restraint on Government expenditure, was positive and successful.

I have been heartened by the enormous enthusiasm in the many universities that I have visited around the country. Companies at the forefront of research and development have also shown me how much progress they are making. If I have one worry, it is that the bulk of British industry has not realised the challenge that it faces to increase research and development as it moves into the next century. I do not mind so much if it concentrates on development and leaves research to universities. That would be a start. Ultimately, however, given the rate of change in society, industry has to look further ahead.

I draw the House's attention to how science has focused quite strongly on the way in which the competitiveness agenda in this country has been developed. Science is top of our list of priorities and featured strongly in the competitiveness White Papers. That is crucial, because it reinforces what I said earlier about industry needing to engage in research and development.

In a series of lectures, I have attempted to show why the City and industry should take a greater interest in the excellence of our science base, which is widely understood outside this country. It is slightly galling that inward investors to whom I talk often say that one of the reasons why they have come to this country is the excellence—indeed, the accessibility—of our science base. Siemens has commented on the strength of the five universities in the north-east and Pirelli about its work with Southampton. In both cases, continental companies from fellow EU countries have come to the United Kingdom because our research base is so strong and accessible, and not as inflexible as it is increasingly suggested that it is in Germany. Those are strong points.

All that helps the wider society, too. Recently the LG project in south Wales was announced, representing the largest single inward investment, at £1.7 billion. The success of the negotiations was crucially tied in with the academic base. Imperial college was closely involved in the discussions about how to deliver the training programmes that will be so necessary, and the central laboratories of the research council were also involved. Professor Ron Lawes, who heads the central microstructures facility at the Rutherford Appleton laboratory, has acted with the Welsh Development Agency on the issues at stake.

I pay tribute to that involvement, which may have been overlooked in all the excitement about inward investment opportunities and employment in south Wales. The relationship between the science base and inward investment is strong. I could have mentioned many other cases in which inward investors have given great impetus to R and D in this country—such as IBM's substantial Hursley software laboratory just outside Winchester, and Hewlett Packard's substantial telecommunications research laboratories at Stoke Gifford, near Bristol, both of which I have visited. There is also Hitachi's Cambridge laboratory, which is undertaking world-class research on single electron memories, and AT and T's considerable automated teller machine investments in Dundee and Dunfermline, in Scotland.

[Mr. Ian Taylor]

When I speak of Scotland, I look across to the Opposition Benches and see two scions of Scottish Labour society—and indeed Scotland has done well as a result of Conservative Government—

Dr. John Reid (Motherwell, North): More than two.

Mr. Taylor: I confess that I must be a little short-sighted this morning; there are several scions present. It shows what is going on in Scotland today, when many Scottish Labour Members are here to discuss this subject—although on the present turnout, we might conclude that there was very little going on. Nevertheless, as a result of Conservative Government policies, to which I know Opposition Members are looking forward to paying tribute, Scotland has done extremely well out of the revolution that has occurred in high technology and science.

I have mentioned the worrying trends in industry, and I do not in any way resile from what I said. We must give a warning to British industry that the rate of change is incredible. Siemens, for example, has revealed the enormous rapidity with which it expects its products to have to change over the next few years. It is simply not possible for companies to expect to stay in business unless their overall target for innovation is clearly thought through and applied.

The overall impact of research and development on the economy has been reinforced by a Science Policy Research Unit study carried out for the Treasury, which I can announce is being published today. That study shows the importance of publicly funded basic science, and examines the contribution of basic science to the economy. I have had copies placed in the Library. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) will be able to hear a succinct summary of the report now. Persuading the Treasury to publish documents is quite an achievement, and I am sure that he will give me the credit for that.

The report acknowledges the difficulty of assessing the relationship, but concludes that publicly funded basic science seems to have had a substantial impact on national productivity, and that that is likely to continue.

Some of the report's key conclusions are as follows. First, it is difficult to estimate with any certainty the rate of return from R and D, but nearly all attempts have come up with positive values, in most cases comparatively high—between 20 and 50 per cent. The second conclusion is that the importance of skilled people as a product of the science base is often underestimated. I am happy to draw attention to that factor.

Thirdly, historically, most companies have carried out research in their home countries, but now, as I have illustrated already with some examples, there is an increasing trend to locate research in areas rich in scientific skills. The United Kingdom is seen to provide such skills, so we are getting the inward investment. I am pleased that the paper has been published, because it makes an important contribution to the debate.

There are one or two slightly wayward academics who do not believe that there is a role for Government in basic science. I happen not to share their views. In my judgment, industry should do more at the applied, close-to-market end, and should take a greater interest in what is going on in basic research. Wherever possible, we are trying to integrate that approach, such as through the ROPAs—the "Realising our Potential" awards.

However, the Government have an overwhelming interest in ensuring that blue-skies research is conducted at the highest possible level of excellence, and I am delighted that we have been able to maintain that pressure during the year that I have been the Minister responsible.

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): The publication of the report sounds like good news. But can the Minister tell me whether it is considered that basic research done in the research council institutes and the public sector research establishments is considered to be as valuable as that done in universities and other academic institutes?

Mr. Taylor: Excellent research that is done anywhere is of great value. I might have added to my list the industrial research laboratories. The vice-chancellor designate of Cambridge—the hon. Lady's home town—has said that some of the greatest ideas come out of industrial research laboratories.

I am talking about excellence in research. As for Government responsibility, I need to ensure that it is clear what the research laboratories' missions are. Although there has been much talk of mission drift in those establishments, an equal danger is mission stagnation. The prior options reviews that we are conducting there are designed to ensure that we get continued excellence in research from those organisations. We have already debated the matter in the House.

As the subject has been raised, I note at this point the Select Committee's report, which was issued yesterday. My hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) made some trenchant contributions to the exchange of letters that was published yesterday, but, as I said in a debate not long ago, I remain of the view that if research is to be excellent, it can be equally excellent whether it takes place in the private or the public sector.

There is no point in trying to freeze the relationship or the mission statements in any way, because we need constantly to react to changing circumstances and to the market as a whole. I spend one fifth of our money through the research establishments and I have to ensure that that money is wisely spent.

Mr. Adam Ingram (East Kilbride): The Minister described the letters of his hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw), which were published yesterday, as "trenchant". Would it not be more accurate if he recorded the fact that the conclusion of the report that he has mentioned says:

"We consider that the Department's policy on this matter is far from satisfactory"?

That is more than trenchant; it is condemnatory of the Government's whole approach to the public sector research establishments, which are an important ingredient of our research base.

Mr. Taylor: I do not deny that those establishments are an important base. Indeed, I have already said that they were. I am saying that they can be an important research base with the new freedoms provided by a period in the private sector—although we are not predisposed to ensure that every institute is in that sector. My words need to be listened to precisely.

As for the Select Committee's comments, now that they have been published, I can study them, and I shall respond in due course. None the less, my views are on the record, and they are clear. I believe that my objective and that of the Select Committee is the same—to improve the quality of research in this country. Where we differ is perhaps in the belief that the delivery mechanisms need to be assessed, to establish whether they are delivering proper science.

Mr. Ingram: I appreciate that we must make progress in the debate, and that the Government will respond to what has been said about the public sector research establishments in due course. But it is even more important that we should have another debate on the subject. The previous debate took place on an Opposition motion, and it would be much more appropriate to consider the report that was published yesterday in the same way as we intend to consider the report on human genetics. Can the Minister give me an assurance about that? The Government have a thin legislative programme, and there will be plenty of time to debate such matters.

Mr. Taylor: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman realises that we have plenty of time—right through until next May; there is no difficulty about that. I am glad that there is agreement across the Floor of the House about the likely date of the election. No doubt we shall return to such matters, because they are so important, but I shall not pre-empt the usual channels as to the appropriate forum.

We are all aware that the first tranche has already been announced, with further reviews of some elements, and that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food made some announcements yesterday. We expect to receive the second tranche report imminently, and further reports will be made later in the year. The process is on-going, and I am sure that the debate will move ahead in the same fashion.

The questions that I hear most often in universities relate to infrastructure, and I am aware of the animated debate on the state of universities—not least equipment. I have attempted to address that matter, and hon. Members will appreciate the work of research councils which, with the higher education funding councils, have taken the initiative in tackling the immediate problems caused by the reduction in the equipment budget.

The joint equipment initiative has been a great success. We have put aside £18 million for allocation, and I am pleased to announce that that has been heavily oversubscribed. Some 250 applications have been received for some £40 million, and that has been matched by funds from industry and other external sponsors. That tells us a variety of things, and we shall now analyse the situation and use technology foresight to make judgments.

I agree that one cannot carry out good research without good equipment, and the question is how we provide that equipment. Opposition Members will not immediately fall into the trap of saying that we should spend more money, because the shadow Chancellor, the right hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown), has said that that is not an option. Therefore, we must look together for ways in which we can find money for equipment more effectively.

There is too little discussion among universities of their equipment needs, too little understanding of whether equipment can be shared or phased and too little discussion about centres of excellence. Even the recent policy research in engineering, science and technology report had some worrying signs, and some of the figures were contradictory. For example, although many departments were worried about equipment, the survey showed that more than half believed their equipment to be on a par or better than the international average, while 80 per cent. of existing equipment was judged adequate or better. The report received responses from 91 universities, but I do not regard those 91 as research universities, so it is inevitable that the figures will be skewed.

The debate is about excellence, and we shall return to it as the Dearing committee continues its inquiries. There is no point in attempting to pretend that every university needs to reach a level of excellence in research. In my judgment, some universities' concepts of research excellence are up to international standards. Some universities will be more geared to development, and there are others that need to concentrate most on scholastic excellence.

In the circumstances, we can perhaps avoid spreading too thinly the amount of money that we have for research, but I do not want to stray into the territory of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. I am speaking merely as the Science Minister, and I am concerned about excellence in research projects.

Mrs. Jacqui Lait (Hastings and Rye): Is my hon. Friend aware of a letter from the chairman of the Engineering Professors Council, Professor John Spence—from my own university, Strathclyde—which states:

"It is true that in most universities 'the scientific equipment . . . budget has often been eroded by more and more of it being used for furnishings/minor works, rather than equipment'"?

Do we not also have to take into account the results of a turf fight between those who want more chairs and those who want engineering equipment?

Mr. Taylor: I am not surprised by that, as I have heard many apocryphal stories on similar lines. The point that my hon. Friend helps to underline is that, while there is a need for research equipment, we must not fall into the trap of assuming that the only way in which we can tackle that need is by increased funding. I want to look closely at ways of making sure that money is going to the right departments. If money is supposed to be going to grade 5 departments—the top rank in research assessment—I hope that it goes to them and not elsewhere.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): Does my hon. Friend agree that it is important that a university spends the available money in the right way? Does he further agree that discussions about the lack of funding for research equipment are made less impressive when they are conducted with the vice-chancellor, having visited his private bathroom with gold taps?

Mr. Taylor: There are a range of possibilities for expenditure on equipment, although I cannot comment on that individual example. Although most universities are dedicated to ensuring that their researchers get the equipment that they need, I have found that little logic is involved. Too much equipment that is not on display and is locked away in a cupboard could be better used in other universities. I am also looking at how we can use the secondary market in equipment.

There is much to cover in the debate, but I want colleagues to know that I am aware of their concerns. I want a much deeper understanding of where we are going and how we should look at universities, as we now have such a large number of them. We should examine their missions and see how we can get the best from the research budgets.

During the past year, I have been keen to bring forward and develop the debate on technology foresight. The foresight programme has achieved a great deal since it began two years ago, and we have no intention of letting it lose momentum. The 15 foresight panel reports have been bestsellers, and more than 10,000 people have been involved in consultation and networking. We have taken the concept into industries such as finance, retailing and leisure.

Over 300 foresight events have been held in the past 12 months, leading to widespread dissemination of the findings. The foresight findings have already led to important new initiatives from the public sector. I have already mentioned the research equipment initiative, and there are new link programmes worth £110 million that are being carried out jointly with industry. The Department for Education and Employment has a skills and training initiative, and the Royal Academy of Engineering has foresight awards. The information society initiative and the crusade for biotechnology, which I mentioned, also play a part in the developing foresight campaign.

We successfully launched a foresight challenge competition, which engaged business in collaborative research and development well beyond original expectations. There are now 24 projects worth £92 million, two thirds of which has come from the private sector—a remarkable success story. Many of the collaborative projects have been between companies that have not previously engaged in the foresight programme.

Altogether, some £1 billion from the public and private sectors is now directed at foresight priority areas—£300 million in new initiatives since the reports were published and £700 million within existing research council programmes. Awareness of foresight in industry is growing. A Confederation of British Industry survey showed that 48 per cent. of respondents from manufacturing firms were aware of or were involved in the programme.

We must build on that, because we need a culture change. Companies must engage in foresight out of self-interest, and use it to boost their competitiveness. The success of the early stages leaves no doubt that foresight must continue for years to come. Therefore, I have asked my officials at the Office of Science and Technology and the panels to do another survey of trends and opportunities in 1999—five years after the first baseline—to engage businesses in their area, to continue to identify markets and science, engineering and technology priorities and to promote partnerships between business, Government and the science base to take those priorities forward. We must also look at how we manage initiatives within the DTI to achieve common purposes. Link, the training company scheme, postgraduate training partnerships, the Faraday centre concept in the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council and the Natural Environment Research Council network for the exploitation of science and technology all have a part to play in the foresight programme. In all those areas, we have the foundation to develop foresight into the next millennium and I am delighted that so many people have taken part.

Sir Giles Shaw (Pudsey): I apologise to my hon. Friend for making a further intervention. We are all of the view that the foresight initiative is one of the most important that has been taken since the OST was established. However, I would express some anxiety about the extent to which one can presume that significant industrial management and directorates can make themselves available for the scale of activities that my hon. Friend envisages. I hope that he will be careful about that.

Mr. Taylor: I appreciate that. I mentioned the increasing focus in the Department of Trade and Industry on the delivery mechanisms of the foresight programme and on concepts that may well deliver those objectives in some way, because I recognise that foresight has been a success and we must find ways to take it forward effectively and properly.

I am also happy to be able to announce that the Office of Science and Technology is continuing the industry-academe collaboration prizes that were awarded last year. A total of £100,000 in prizes will be awarded. I was impressed with the way in which those collaborations developed, and it looks as if that competition will continue that success.

Biotechnology is one of the most exciting and promising new areas, as the foresight programme has underlined. Biotechnology offers great potential for health care, food, agriculture and environmental management, among many other applications. We have done much to stimulate it since the crusade was announced. A "SPUR plus" grant has been awarded to Proteus Molecular Design Ltd. The £406,000 grant is to research new class gene-targeted DNA-binding drugs with potential for the treatment of cancer, viral infections and other diseases.

A small but important part is played by the United Kingdom's microbial culture collections. Those are a high-quality resource and a vital national asset. They represent specialist living and preserved collections of bacteria, yeasts, fungi, algae and animal and plant cells. The organisms that they maintain act as references for scientists and are a significant repository of biodiversity, in the same way as botanic gardens.

The collections provide the academic community with the basis for important medical and scientific research, and support UK competitiveness through their potential for exploitation using modern biotechnology. I am convinced that that new strategy represents an exciting opportunity to create new partnerships between Government, industry and academia. Details of the strategy will be placed today in the Libraries of both Houses and will be published simultaneously on the Internet.

The strategy for those collections, whereby the OST will provide £1.34 million over three years to help co-ordinate the activities of collections and encourage the use of modern molecular technologies, will be welcomed in the House.

Time is moving on and I know that human genetics is one of the subjects for debate. That is one of the most challenging and exciting areas of the debate. The Select Committee on Science and Technology is to be greatly complimented on all that it has done. It has drawn attention to some exciting areas. If we continue to make the sort of progress that we appear to be making in genetic sequencing, we could well be up with the timetable set for the human genome project. The benefits to mankind will be extraordinary, as we learn not only about individual genes but about the interaction between them and we get to know more about complex diseases that require us to understand how genes interact.

All that is going on apace and a lot of it is happening in the United Kingdom. There are wider implications, however, which we need to consider. In its first report, the Select Committee put pressure on the insurance industry to produce at least a framework that would give more confidence as to how it would react to some of the ethical questions about genetic testing and insurance. I was pleased that the Association of British Insurers announced on Wednesday that it would be appointing a genetics adviser and aims to draw up a code of conduct on handling genetic information.

I had hoped that the industry would also produce slightly more detail. It claims that several things have impeded its progress and has said how determined it is to make progress. My judgment is that progress must be made swiftly. I am in no way assuming that the industry is attempting to gain unfair advantage and I am not imputing bad intentions, but it is in the insurance industry's interests to reassure the public before the public start to worry about these matters.

Mr. David Alton (Liverpool, Mossley Hill): I strongly agree with the Minister, and underline his argument about the need to go further than the announcement earlier this week about the appointment of an adviser. The industry was asked to produce voluntary regulation and has failed to do so. Can he assure the House that if it continues to fail, he and his Department will produce proposals to ensure proper mandatory regulation by the House?

Mr. Taylor: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will accept that I am reluctant to go down that track. The Government would be the worst type of regulator in such a hugely complicated market. There are principles that need to be talked through. I gave evidence to the Select Committee, and I am not going back on anything that I said then—I do not have the time to go over it again. Insurance companies need to know what the person they are insuring needs to know. A balance of judgment is involved, and because genetics is a comparatively new area, we need to be very careful.

That is why, with a great deal of co-operation and inspired agreement as a result of further deliberations, the Government and the Select Committee are of one mind and have set up the new Human Genetics Advisory Commission, which will be considering such matters. If the commission expressed concerns to the Government, we would take them seriously, but I am not prepared to commit myself this morning.

Dr. Lynne Jones (Birmingham, Selly Oak): I was pleased to hear the Minister say that the commission can consider that subject, but surely the Government's reluctance to hold that threat of ultimate statutory intervention over the insurance companies has led to them dragging their feet. They have had 12 months since the Select Committee suggested that they should generate a code of practice. I do not think that it is a coincidence that the industry made the announcement on Wednesday. It was deliberate, because it knew that there would be a spotlight on the insurance industry today. Are we satisfied that the industry has made the progress that it should have made during the 12 months since the Select Committee's report?

Mr. Taylor: I am not satisfied that the industry is making progress, but that is different from saying that Government legislation would assist in what is an extremely complicated market. Ultimately, the Government do not want to take over insurance risk, so they rely on insurance companies to assess that risk. The questions at stake are not legislative but ethical, and ethical matters need to be discussed.

In agreement with the Select Committee, we have set up the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing, under the chairmanship of Rev. Dr. John Polkinghorne. It will consider a range of issues. We also agreed to set up the Human Genetics Advisory Commission. I am putting pressure on the insurance industry. It is not a complete coincidence that it received a letter from me just before it made the announcement.

The issue is extremely complicated, so we shall have to discuss it further. I do not think that it would be wise for colleagues to assume that the legislative process would assist. The same problems need to be considered in terms of employment. We need further discussions on employment. Clearly, if people are applying for a job in such circumstances, there are ethical concerns.

I mentioned the importance of the initiative to extend quality life. That is one of the more exciting projects, because it pulls together so many diverse scientific matters. I was pleased to hear the remarks made by George Poste of SmithKline Beecham, not only welcoming the crusade for biotechnology as an important Government initiative, but on the importance of EQUAL, which pulls together so many diverse sectors.

The recent foresight challenge awards included projects totalling nearly £27 million, addressing health and life sciences issues. We need to take those further, throughout government and all academic sectors. I am delighted that my remarks a year ago have received such a general welcome and have been enthusiastically received in many of the research councils.

Many colleagues want to participate in the debate and I am only too keen that they should. Before I conclude, however, I must point out that Opposition Members are likely to say that a little more money would solve all the problems. I should like to know where that little bit more money might come from. I hope that we do not get into a debate across the Floor about something as simple as money. Money makes the world go round, as they say, but there is no doubt that we must be much more effective in the way in which we spend the money that we have, and look for new ways of ensuring the competitiveness and the more effective exploitation of the science base.

I hope that the hon. Member for East Kilbride does not give us wizard ideas that we are already working on. In a recent article, he said that Labour had deliberated for the past 17 years about the science base and had decided to introduce some pilot Faraday programmes. Actually, Faraday centres have been under review and are being tested by the Government. The Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council is developing them and I have mentioned NERC's NEST programme, so give credit where credit is due. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will say that he has been much influenced by our work.

I hope also that the hon. Gentleman will not talk about regional centres of excellence. Look at what is happening, for example, at the university of Leeds, with a fascinating arrangement of virtual science parks, and at how the material science unit at Sheffield Hallam university is working extremely well with regional interests. We are making progress in each of those sectors.

Hon. Members share the view that research and development is an important part of the national economy. I have mentioned the report that the Treasury is issuing, by the way, at 10.30 this morning. The House has had a foretaste—a foresight—of it. [Interruption.] We got in first. I have mentioned many other sectors where the Government are doing an extremely good job.

In the past 10 years, the science base has increased in real terms by 10 per cent. and the science budget by more than 21 per cent., after correcting for dual support transfer. Those are excellent figures. Science is safe in the Government's hands. There is no question but that we have given it the priority that it deserves. I looking forward to listening to Labour Members' speeches. I hope that they give due tribute to the excellence of the work that has resulted from the Conservative Government's policies.

Mr. Adam Ingram (East Kilbride): I share the Minister's general views in welcoming the debate, but it is worth pointing out that this is the first Government-sponsored debate on science policy issues since October last year. The landscape that the Minister covered is impossible to deal with in one debate. He mentioned a range of issues that would be worthy of special debates in the House. It is impossible to do justice to such a wide range of issues.

It is also worth noting that the debate's subject is science policy and human genetics. The Minister hardly mentioned the latter in his speech, other than in passing. He made great play of other issues, which I do not intend to deal with today. I hope that we can have a proper debate. If the Government wish to debate science policy across the issues, let them give us the time and those issues will be debated in full.

The Minister mentioned the Science Policy Research Unit report commissioned by the Treasury on related matters. In the end, he had to be advised that the report had not yet been placed in the Library of the House, so it is difficult for me even to begin to comment on it. I understand that the embargo has now been lifted and the report may be winging its way there at the moment, but I do not intend to try to absorb its information and respond to it. Again, however, we may have a debate on the report, although it is to be noted that the Treasury, not the Office of Science and Technology, commissioned it. Questions may be asked about that once we read the report's contents and remit.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I apologise to the House for being somewhat previous with my announcement, but, as the hon. Gentleman says, the embargo has been lifted. It is amazing what influence we Department of Trade and Industry Ministers can have when we try, but I urge him to realise the significance of the fact that the report was commissioned by the Treasury. I have a transdepartmental interest. He would be wrong to think that I am not pleased that the Treasury has done this work.

Mr. Ingram: I will wait to read the full contents of the report and its remit. It depends who has the responsibility for delivering any messages that arise from it. If it is to be driven by the Treasury, I am sure that many people in the science infrastructure will be somewhat concerned, but let us leave that for a later date.

I mentioned that this is the first Government-sponsored debate on science policy issues since October last year. It is questionable whether we would be having this debate if it had not been for the work of the Select Committee on Science and Technology on human genetics. I also suspect that, if the Government had not supported in broad principle the report's main recommendations, albeit after they had reconsidered the issue, this debate would not be taking place, but I do not want to appear to be too churlish as we now have a debate, and I know that Select Committee members and other hon. Members wish to comment, I suspect, specifically on the report and on wider science policy issues.

There is growing awareness of the increasing relevance of science and technology to our everyday lives. More and more, scientific issues are being discussed and reported in the national press and on television and radio. That is to be welcomed. All hon. Members would agree that not all the coverage is of high quality, but the standard seems to be improving in response to the public demand for more and better information.

The reason for that is simple. The media have picked up on the fact that we are living in a time of new and exciting scientific advance. We are on the threshold of a new scientific era. Let me give just three examples of where that is relevant. First, the capacity, application and potential of information technology is now plain for all to see. Advances in that sector have grown at an exponential rate, so fast in fact that even Bill Gates of Microsoft got it wrong. In 1981 he said:

"640K ought to be enough for anybody" and he was not talking about Members' pay or his own executive pay. Even the random access memory of today's home computers is around 20 times or more what Bill Gates thought was ample in 1981.

I spent 10 years as a computer programmer and systems analyst. In the decade before 1981, I was working on 32K mainframe machines that would have filled half the Chamber. To work on a 64K machine was like winning the national lottery every week. The luxury of doubling the capacity was difficult to comprehend.

Space science is the second sector of significant advance that is exciting the public and media interest. We have the capacity to understand at the deepest level the way in which the universe is created. That capacity—to begin to comprehend the beginning of time—is difficult to absorb fully, even for some of the space scientists working in the sector, but there can be no doubt that the pictures sent back by space probes such as Hubble and Galileo have generated much interest, especially among young people, and have contributed to greater interest in science generally.

Of course, the third sector of advance is the science of genetics and biotechnology. In many ways, the impact of genetic research and the role of DNA has captured the public's imagination like no other branch of science, as well as creating many worries and raising a range of moral and ethical questions with which, as a society, we must grapple and find answers to.

It is therefore an exciting time in science. Human knowledge is again at the point of lift-off, reaching new levels of understanding and application, with profound implications for all of us. It is no exaggeration to say that no one, anywhere in the world, will be unaffected by the process of change that we face. It brings to mind the words of William Wordsworth, who nearly two centuries ago, commenting on another era of revolutionary change, said:

"Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive,

But to be young was very heaven!"

When we consider the scientific horizons ahead of us, how appropriate those words are to the present day.

The debate is timely and it is right that the House should discuss the wide range of issues identified by the science and study of human genetics. I remind the House that that is the main subject of today's debate. I echo the Minister's comments in congratulating Select Committee members on their report. It was undoubtedly a mammoth task which they undertook. All of us should be indebted to them, to those who gave evidence to the Committee and to those who had the difficult task of servicing the Committee. The Committee has produced a detailed report to which I am sure people will return time and again when the subject of human genetics is discussed in the House and further afield.

The report is a first-class resourced document. It examines in a tightly argued way a range of complex matters associated with the science of human genetics. However, it is more than that. It has provided a framework for action to be taken now and in the future by the Government to allow the science to develop and to protect society's interest in the implications of the science.

It would be wrong not to note that it is fully one year since the Committee presented its report to Parliament for consideration. As a result of the Government's initial unwillingness to accept the main recommendation of the report, the Committee was forced to take the unusual step of reopening its examination of the subject. This further examination and the pressure from outwith the House forced a reluctant Government to change their mind. On that count, too, the Committee is to be congratulated on bringing about such a substantial U-turn by the Government.

We are now one year on from the publication of the report and more than a year and a half on from when the Committee commenced its task. Some progress has been made, but many questions remain about whether the Government are serious in their approach to applying the full conclusions of the report and providing a strong and vibrant scientific environment in Britain to allow the potential of genetic science to flourish for the benefit of all.

I wish to touch on some of the issues raised by the report and to place the opportunities afforded by genetic science within the context of the Government's policy on the nation's science and research base. The Committee correctly identified the need for a powerful independent commission to advise the Government and Parliament on the dimensions and implications of the science of human genetics. It strongly argued, again rightly, that one of the prime objectives of such a commission would be to foster public confidence and understanding of the science not only in its medical context but in the equally important non-medical context.

The Committee recognised the need to ensure that genetic science should be allowed to develop only within a proper regulatory and legal framework which would ensure the responsible exploitation of the science. We recognise that the Committee wanted a more powerful regulatory mechanism than that which the Government have agreed to establish. My instincts and preference would have been more in line with that recommended by the Committee, but I recognise that the Government have moved considerably towards the underlying principle of what the Committee sought to establish, and we must welcome that shift. It is a significant move in the right direction and it has been widely seen as such outside the House.

The important aspect of the need for such a commission is the recognition that the pace of developments in genetic science is faster than the machinery of government, so it is vital that we have a respected body such as the Human Genetics Advisory Commission, even with its restricted advisory role, which has the capacity to deal swiftly with the rapid pace of development in the science and advise Parliament where necessary on the need for and the possible shape of legislation.

The remit of the commission must, of course, be wider than that. I support the broad terms of reference which the Minister set out in his response to the Committee's report. They provide a coherent framework within which the members of the commission can act for the public good. However, while the terms of reference may be agreed, it is equally important that we explore and discuss the modus operandi. Therefore, before I move on to deal with other aspects of the Select Committee's report, I should like to ask the Minister a few questions on the function of the advisory commission that he intends to set up.

I shall deal first with a point raised with me by the Genetics Interest Group in a letter dated 16 July. As hon. Members and the Minister will be aware, the Genetic Interest Group is a widely respected body in the world of genetics. In its letter, it complimented the Government on setting up the Human Genetics Advisory Commission, but it pointed out:

"Government has detailed two principal reasons for establishing the Advisory Commission: to maintain public confidence; and to provide a cross-departmental overview of implications of scientific advance in the field. We note that the Commission lacks a statutory basis. In other words, there is no specific legislation for it to enforce. It is to be hoped, however, that its views will carry sufficient weight to influence decision-making in the field . . . In general, public confidence will be enhanced if the Commission makes clear that it will take action and recommend legislation where it feels this to be appropriate, and Government responds with a commitment to enact legislation promptly."

[Mr. Ingram]

I should welcome the Minister's response on that point.

The terms of reference of the commission include a requirement to report to Ministers periodically and to publish those reports. Will the Minister confirm that the reports will be published at the same time as they are submitted to Ministers and that the reports will be widely available and easily accessible and will not simply be placed in the Library of the House?

Mr. Alton: I am following with interest what the hon. Gentleman is saying and I strongly welcome his remarks. Does he agree that the independence of the new commission will be predicated on its membership and that, whether he or the present Minister appoints the members in due course, there will need to be a balance that recognises that there is a lay opinion to be put, and that philosophical opinion should be balanced between consequentialists and non-consequentialists?

Mr. Ingram: I agree fundamentally with that point. I was coming to the way in which the commission was to be formed. The Minister did not tell us much about that. In fact, he told us nothing about it. We need to ensure that lay opinion, which has a contribution to make in the examination of moral and ethical questions in genetics, is properly represented on the commission. I am sure that that will assist in the deliberations of the commission.

Sir Giles Shaw: The hon. Gentleman will recall that the Select Committee urgently recommended that the majority of the persons who formed the commission should be lay persons.

Mr. Ingram: I am grateful to the Chairman of the Select Committee for reminding me of that fact. I am sure that that point will be made by him, if not by others, during the debate.

We need a clear timetable for establishment of the commission. It is not sufficient for the Government to say that they accept the recommendations of a Select Committee report and then give no idea how they intend to go about implementing the main elements of it. Enough time has passed already. As I said, it is a year since the Committee commenced its investigation. Unnecessary delay would be unacceptable.

It is worth bearing it in mind that it took well over a year for the Government to set up the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing.

Dr. Reid: As someone who is struggling for the fourth time through "A Brief History of Time", I hesitate to intervene in such a specialist debate. The thing that strikes me, which my hon. Friend has mentioned, is that the capacity of science to change at a geometric rate of progress is running way beyond moral and ethical considerations. If it takes a year for the Government to respond to a Committee of the House, does my hon. Friend have any faith that the Government are in a position or willing to respond sufficiently quickly to the ideas that he is putting forward to catch up with some of the moral and ethical consequences of the changes that are taking place in science?

Mr. Ingram: My hon. Friend makes his point in his own way. I agree with those sentiments. If it is his fourth attempt to understand Stephen Hawking's book, I suggest that he gives up and tries the shortened version to see whether he can begin to understand that. I have read the book once, but I would not say that I begin to understand many of the deep philosophical points raised within it. I do not know whether it is worthy of debate in the House. I will not ask the Minister to provide time for such a debate because we all—certainly I—would be struggling. My hon. Friend is right about the unnecessary delay and the pace of change. We cannot wait for the commission to be set up. It needs to be set up as early as possible.

I should be grateful if the Minister would explain the reporting role of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission. That is a vital matter. As we know, the commission will have a joint secretariat provided by the Office of Science and Technology and the Department of Health. It will be required to report formally to the relevant Ministers in the Department of Health and the Department of Trade and Industry. It would be helpful if the Minister would tell the House which Department will be the lead Department in responding to the reports produced by the commission. We do not want internal departmental squabbles, which occurred in the consideration of the Select Committee's report. We cannot afford such squabbles when we are dealing with such sensitive and important issues. I appreciate that the Minister has to obtain the leave of the House if he wants to wind up, but assuming that that is granted, I hope that he will deal with those points.

I have dealt at some length with the setting up and functioning of the new advisory commission as I believe that it is important. The advisory commission undoubtedly has a vital role in creating the right climate for one of the most important sectors in medical science which is a key element in the UK economy. It will not face an easy task because it will have to deal with many complex issues. It will obviously be assisted in its role by the work of its sister committees, including the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing. However, deciding what advice that it should give on the non-medical use of genetics, primarily in the insurance and employment sectors, will not be straightforward.

Some of the same problems will prevail in the resolution of the many ethical and moral questions that will be created by the science. The advice will prove essential to parliamentarians and law makers when creating the right level of public understanding of the issues involved. That public understanding involves both the general public and the media, which have a capacity to undermine and demoralise those who work in genetic research, whose main aim is to pass on the benefits of their work for the greater public good.

One such example is provided in the briefing issued for today's debate by the Alzheimer's Disease Society. It states:

"It has been known for some time that a small number of younger people with Alzheimer's disease inherit a rare form of the disease. However, in 1993 US scientists discovered a genetic risk factor for Alzheimer's disease in older people. It is therefore likely that tests for diagnosis and risk prediction will develop in the future.

Alzheimer's disease must therefore be included in the current debate about who should be offered such tests, how the results should be interpreted and who should have access to the information obtained."

The briefing continues:

"While welcoming the Government's decision to implement the Science and Technology Select Committee's recommendation for a Human Genetics Commission the Society is concerned that, notwithstanding this development, current Government proposals on long-term care insurance do not safeguard against the possibility that people with a genetic predisposition to Alzheimer's disease could be discriminated against by insurers either by charging higher premiums or by excluding them from taking out policies.

If the Government is to encourage self-provision for long-term care costs it must at the same time protect consumers through more robust regulation of the long-term care insurance market including measures to prevent the misuse of genetic information by insurers."

That is a definitive position for the society to adopt, and I do not necessarily expect the Minister to respond today to the society's demands. But he and the Government must take on board the fears contained in that expression of opinion.

The same view is expressed by the Genetics Interest Group, which states:

"The Genetics Interest Group is concerned that the trend towards shifting responsibility from the state to the individual has set policy already in a number of areas. As a result, people with a genetic condition or a predisposition to a condition face disadvantage. Recent proposals in relation to the funding of care in old age exemplify our concern: the assumption is that people with a higher risk will be expected to pay higher premiums. Given that the same people face higher premiums for other forms of insurance, the danger of cumulative disadvantage is a real one.

The Genetics Interest Group believes it to be inequitable that some people face disadvantage as a result of something over which they have no control. A solution to this problem will need to involve Government as well as the industry—since changes in welfare policy play their role in constituting the problem for certain groups of people."

The fact that the Government have only this week signalled that they are looking seriously at a move to a more extensive private insurance-based welfare policy and away from the current national insurance-based approach, can only serve to exacerbate the fears expressed by the Alzheimer's Disease Society, the Genetics Interest Group and others who have commented on the subject who represent people with a genetic condition or a predisposition to a condition.

Those issues were raised when the Select Committee reported a year ago. The Government's response was that they would encourage the insurance industry and geneticists to develop an industry-wide code of practice to regulate such concerns. But as we have already heard from the Minister—I am sure that we shall return to the subject later in the debate—the insurance industry has not yet come up with a code of conduct. But, as the Minister said, on Wednesday the industry issued a letter through the Association of British Insurers, which stated:

"Insurance companies do not require anyone to take a genetic test as a condition of their application for insurance and it is intended that this will not change in the foreseeable future."

Clearly, that must be welcomed so far as it goes, but that assurance has to be set against the ABI's previously declared position, when it stated:

"What is key for the insurer is that it has the same information as the person seeking insurance—it has to be able to cope with adverse selection."

We must place the insurance company's position in the context of those two responses.

I fully accept that it is a difficult problem for the industry to resolve, but we are being told that the industry is in a bit of a bind about how to approach the subject. We cannot let it dictate the rate of progress: we must find ways of exerting sufficient pressure on it that it comes up with a code of conduct. That is why the early establishment of the commission is important. The commission can help everyone—from those at risk because of a genetic condition, or a predisposition to a condition, to the industries involved, Government and Parliament.

Mr. Alton: I strongly welcome what the hon. Gentleman has said to the House. Before he leaves the subject of insurance, will he undertake to stress to the industry that if it does not introduce the voluntary regulations that the Select Committee seeks, he and a Labour Government will—if they are in a position to do so in future—introduce statutory regulations to require the industry to do what it has so far lamentably failed to do?

Mr. Ingram: I do not think that we need statutory regulations. The industry, like everyone else involved in the subject, is struggling to find answers. I am not necessarily criticising the Minister, but if criticism is due, I hope that he takes it on board. I do not believe that the Government have been forceful or strong enough with the industry in their attempts to bring it to the table.

The industry is still debating the issue; it has had a long time to consider it—it is not a new matter. While there are difficulties associated with the subject, the industry should be in a position to come to a conclusion at an early date. I understand that it was its intention to publish something more substantial in advance of today's debate, but that has not happened. However, that intention tells me that the industry is at the point of coming up with a code of conduct. We shall have to judge how effective that code of conduct will be in practice. I am concerned that the industry should not await the setting up of a commission and its deliberations before advancing its own proposals. We need clear guidance from the industry on the subject.

As I am sure the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) recognises, the commission will deal with some of the issues. Earlier, I mentioned the importance of the way in which the commission will report to Parliament. It may be in a position to recommend statutory frameworks that we in Parliament would have to consider. It is a complex subject and I would not want to give a simplistic response. More progress needs to be made—so far, insufficient progress has been made.

Dr. Lynne Jones: I take my hon. Friend's point. But does he not agree that ultimately, if necessary, it would be relatively simple—and one hopes non-contentious—to introduce legislation to outlaw discrimination in insurance claims on the ground of an individual's genetic make-up?

Mr. Ingram: I take my hon. Friend's point on board—I think that it contains a bit of pre-judgment. I would welcome that debate taking place within the commission; Parliament could then consider it in greater detail. We must be careful. I appreciate that my hon. Friend thought that the commission, which we are setting up to advise Parliament, should have more wide-ranging powers, but that is not the case and we must proceed with what we have. We should wait and see how the issues are debated, then let Parliament make a calm decision. We should not rule that option out, but nor should we consider it the only, or preferred, course of action. I recognise the strength of opinion that prevails.

[Mr. Ingram]

I must make progress, but it was worth debating that issue, which I believed was the prime purpose of this morning's debate. I have a feeling that the Minister did not want to discuss the report in detail so he skimmed over it, but he will need to return to it repeatedly, as I am sure that other hon. Members will make relevant contributions.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I would not want it to be left on the record that we were uninterested, which was the allegation. We are profoundly interested. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman has had time to read the considerable evidence that I gave in oral session to the Committee. I have emphasised that I stand by that evidence, so I have been able to mention other matters of great interest to science as a whole.

Mr. Ingram: I suspect that we are drifting into the wrong type of debate.

It is all very well for the Minister to say that he made his responses through oral submission to the Committee, but our purpose today is to get this debate out into the wider reaches of the community. People do not have easy access to these reports and probably do not find it easy to work their way through the morass of Select Committee reports. The purpose of today's debate is to air those issues. People working in genetics, insurance, pharmaceuticals, other parts of industry and the research base have said that they want today's debate to draw attention to some of those issues.

What we are discussing in the insurance context also applies in the context of employment. If they were asked, "Should employers ever need to know anything about the genetic make-up of an employee?" most people would probably answer no, as it would obviously interfere with a person's civil liberties. There are circumstances, however, in which a person's genetic structure—for instance, in relation to disease susceptibility—may put other people's lives at risk or affect their work activities.

That is no easy matter to resolve. Other European nations have legislated in part on the use of genetic information in relation to insurance and employment, but I understand that the legislation has not been tested in the courts. Obviously, the commission will have to consider those issues soon, and it will ultimately fall on the House to consider whether to proceed with legislation.

Another area identified by the Committee requires some examination in the debate—the patenting of application of the results of genetic research. The Minister did not mention it. I appreciate that he has commented about it and recorded his written response, but we need detailed examination.

The commission must consider that area fully, but we are faced with a much more immediate demand on the issue of patenting of gene research, because the European Parliament is considering a draft directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions. It is essential to provide a clear framework in which industry can operate at a European level in an increasingly competitive global market. I am surprised that the Minister did not want to mention that today if he is concerned about how industry should operate in that area.

I place on record the fact that the Labour party supports the underlying principles and objectives of the directive. The directive's overriding aim is to harmonise national laws on the patenting of inventions with a biological component, with a view to achieving uniform national practices and national case law, to remove the current uncertainty that acts as a deterrent to investment and the proper functioning of the internal market. The directive does not reduce the patent protection currently available or render patentable anything that is currently unpatentable.

Companies will continue to attempt to patent biotechnological inventions in Europe regardless of whether the directive is agreed. Already, more than 200 patent applications have been published worldwide concerning inventions derived from human tissue where the criteria for patentability have been met. Adoption of the directive will, however, lay down ground rules as to what can and cannot be patented, to prevent uncertainty and distortion in the European sector of a global market.

The directive should not be regarded as a vehicle for discussing all the ethical issues relating to biotechnology. It explicitly recognises that it is not the correct forum for ethical discussions and provides for the interpretation of unpatentability on ethical grounds to continue to be determined nationally.

The directive instead fills a gap in the regulations of the European intellectual property system that has arisen as a result of recent advances in biotechnology. The awarding of a patent under the directive does not grant rights to ownership of biological material, nor does it necessarily grant rights for the patent-holder to exploit the invention without restriction. It simply grants the right to prohibit unauthorised use of a biotechnological invention for a specified period by third parties. It creates a legal relationship between different individuals or organisations working in similar areas. It does not create a legal relationship between people and genetic objects.

The directive states that the human body and its elements in their natural state shall not be considered a patentable invention, and takes the existing definition of an "invention" in European patent law and applies it to items with a biological component. Hence, only items that meet the standard conditions governing patentability—novelty, involvement of an inventive step, and potential for industrial application—can be deemed patentable. The notes to the draft directive make it clear that patentability applies only to something that is artificial in the sense that it is a technical solution to a technical problem and has been invented by man.

The directive will not allow an object or process consisting of biological material to be patented, even if it exists outside its natural state, unless industrial application of the object or process is clearly described in the patent application in a way that would enable a skilled engineer to exploit it. Hence genetic information, even if isolated in its natural state, can in effect be patented only if susceptible to international application. If a new use for a certain patented gene sequence is discovered, the directive does not prevent a new organisation from exploiting it.

On those grounds, the Labour party supports the draft directive. We do so with the express aim of creating a positive, supportive climate at European level for UK companies involved in genetic research. The Minister made no mention of that this morning, yet it is one of the critical issues confronting UK companies involved in that area of growth potential.

In this country we have some of the world's best genetic scientists and some of the best genetic research. We have the potential to remain at the forefront of leading edge research and development in biotechnology and related disciplines. However, that can be achieved only through a strong, well-supported science base.

Tragically, there are too many examples of that science and research base being eroded and undermined as a direct result of Government policy. When the Government are faced with headlines such as those that appeared following the publication of the UK R and D scoreboard, saying who do they blame? They blame industry. They accept no blame themselves. They always have someone else to blame. The Minister did it again this morning. He did it in DTI questions earlier in the week. "Industry is to blame; we are not at fault because we have all these crusades and all these challenges, which industry is not taking up."

"UK falls behind in R & D spending league",

The Government's underlying strategy is to withdraw from the funding of near-market research and development, on the assumption that industry will fill the gap. That has not happened, but it has not deterred the Government from their headlong rush away from civil R and D investment.

The real extent of that retreat is alarming. The Government now spend £31 million a week less, in 1994 prices, on science and technology than was spent by the Thatcher Government in 1985. The UK is the only major country that reduced the proportion of gross domestic product that it invested in R and D in the period 1981 to 1993.

As the group Save British Science recently pointed out, Britain is the only major country where Government funding of civil R and D has fallen substantially in real terms. As a proportion of GDP, it has dropped from more than 0.7 per cent. in 1981 to 0.43 per cent. in 1994. That is now about half the figure for Germany and France and lower than that for Japan.

Using 1995-96 as a base and comparing with constant real terms funding, the Government's figures show a reduction of £1 billion in Government support for R and D for the three years to April 1999. The DTI's budget for R and D is set to fall to only £83 million by 1999.

What has happened to Government civil R and D spend is mirrored even more alarmingly in relation to the important sector of academic research facilities. Every major company that I have visited, and every leading university vice-chancellor to whom I have spoken, tells me that our university research base is in crisis due to underfunding and Government cuts. As I tour industry and speak to the university sector, I receive a different message from the one that Conservative Members send. The message that we had this morning that everything is rosy and that the vice-chancellor has gold taps in his bathroom diminishes this debate substantially. I shall be interested to hear what the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) will say if he enters the debate. Professors and researchers in our major university laboratories speak of a miserable collapse of morale throughout the sector. It is not all doom and gloom; there are areas of success. But one must listen to the overriding message that comes across.

The reason is not hard to find. Government statistics show that Higher Education Funding Council expenditure is on a steep downward curve. Next year, expenditure on capital investment in universities will be cut by £107 million—a decrease of 31 per cent. In 1998-99, it is proposed to cut it by a further 20 per cent. That amounts to a 50 per cent. cut in two years.

As the publication, "Research Fortnight", recently reported,

"The Wellcome Trust continues to refuse to fund new buildings for British academics as a direct result of the government's cut in capital funding for universities.

The Trust's governors have enforced the moratorium because they are adamant that the Trust's funding will not be used to replace government funds.

The stand could be a costly one for British universities: over the last three years the Trust spent £120 million on capital funding".

To anyone who cares about our university research base, that is a dismal message. It comes on top of the recent report by the PREST unit of Manchester university, which, based on an historical analysis, shows that the UK continues to decline in terms of adequacy of university equipment compared with our international competitors. No matter how the Minister seeks to distort those figures, be selective or downplay the issue by saying that only 91 university research centres were looked at, the facts are stark. Four out of five of the partners cannot perform critical experiments because of lack of funding of equipment. Even the leading research universities stated that more than 20 per cent. of equipment was over 15 years old, and 60 per cent. of stock had a useful life of less than five years. Nearly half the departments considered their equipment below average in international comparisons, with only 18 per cent. above average.

The Government's strategy as a way round that problem is through the private finance initiative. Not only do the universities find that response lamentable, but so does industry. Despite the fact that the Minister says that £18 million has brought in a further £40 million, industry has told the Minister and me that it is not its function to finance normal generic academic infrastructures. That message was given to me this week by SmithKline Beecham, one of the largest pharmaceutical companies in the world. It does not believe, nor do many of the companies that depend on research facilities, that their function is to fill the infrastructure gap to make up Government cuts.

The universities have been deserted by the Government. The Wellcome Trust has placed a moratorium on them and now industry tells them to forget about the PFI because it simply will not work. We may still have excellence, but there is real fear for tomorrow. We face a difficult problem unless there is a change of direction.

This debate comes at a critical time, but it should be the beginning of a series of debates on the detail of Government policy. We stand at the threshold of a new technological and scientific era but are looking into the abyss of rapid research decline because of the Government's destructive policies towards this country's science and research base. No one in the science community or industry expects the Government to be perfect and able to do everything. In the words of the distinguished British geneticist J.B.S. Haldane:

"To create angels would be difficult since we have the genes neither for wings nor for moral excellence."

But if we want genetic science to take off and soar to the heights, along with other areas where we are at the leading edge of research, we require a Government who are committed to science and are prepared to work in genuine partnership with industry and academia, not a Government who blame them.

The Government have failed that test because they do not work in partnership with industry and academia. It is time for them to make way and let new Labour create a new life for Britain.

10.53 am

Sir Giles Shaw (Pudsey): I am sure that the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) would not expect me to follow him precisely.

I apologise to my hon. Friend the Minister and the hon. Member for East Kilbride but, unfortunately, owing to commitments in my constituency, I may be unable to stay for the wind-up to the debate.

Hon. Members are aware that this is the first time that we have had an opportunity to debate the Select Committee's report on human genetics. It does not surprise me that that has formed a major part of the speech of the hon. Member for East Kilbride and, in large measure, I welcome what he had to say.

The scientific excitement of genetic research and its implications for human health were beginning to attract attention when we set out on this research a considerable time ago. But the implications of the science go far wider than health care. They can touch virtually every part of our everyday life. Until recently, genetics was thought of as a fairly rare science dealing with fairly rare diseases, but today medical science has brought commonplace diseases within the remit of genetic identification. Hon. Members have already referred to Alzheimer's disease and diabetes.

When the Committee began its inquiry, we were under the conviction that this was a major international scientific exercise that brought together the talents of many researchers all over the world into mapping the human genome. But it rapidly became clear to the Committee that the mapping process accelerated by computerisation and intensive effort was becoming an achievement that would take not the decades originally expected but only a few more years to accomplish. I pay tribute to the scientists and technicians who worked all over the world and were able to accelerate the project beyond its founders' wildest expectations. It was an amazing scientific achievement for which we must all be extremely grateful.

Nevertheless, with the speed of the development and the extent of public interest in it came the question: how fast can therapeutic development carry out what the scientists had provided in genetics? The Committee became involved with international competition between major drug companies, with questions of patenting and what should be deemed appropriate to offer protection to developers of therapies.

I remind the hon. Member for East Kilbride that the Committee arrived at a definition for patenting and published it in its report. It says that

"—only a combination of a gene and a known utility which is novel and not obvious should be patentable in the context of that utility; and —a combination of the same gene and a further novel utility should also be patentable."

If the European directive allows that process as defined to continue, I am sure that the Committee will accept that. The hon. Member for East Kilbride was right to say that we need an international framework to enable that process of patenting to continue.

We also became involved in the question of insurance and the consequences of using those therapies and diagnostics. It would not be too dramatic to say that most of mankind in the major western countries, and many beyond in due course, will become exposed to the impact of human genetics and a range of consequences, some of which are beneficial while others are less so.

Within that range of consequences are the ethical issues. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) is extremely exercised on that matter. The ability to identify a gene linked with a particular disease may come years before treatments for that disease are improved, and many questions are then raised. What use can or should be made of genetic information in those circumstances? Should family members who might also be at risk be told? Should insurers have a right to the information? Should it be protected by privacy legislation to ensure that it does not lead to newspaper stories shrieking, "Popular hero has gay gene"? How can the public be educated to deal with genetic information which may not be "good" or "bad" and which is likely to be expressed in terms of probability rather than certainty? Is it legitimate to collect information on genetic differences between different groups?

The Committee had something to say about and to learn from all those questions. Indeed, that matrix persuaded the Committee that there could be no sensible public policy on that area of genetic science and its development unless it was comprehensive. This was not just a matter of the science of genetics, nor just a matter of the provision of medical therapy—it was a matter of public education and awareness, and a sensitive application of genetic testing with the proper counselling that would enable both the receiver of the data and his or her family, if appropriate, to be made fully aware of the consequences of the test and the limits of the test before it was carried out. Genetic knowledge can raise false hopes and unfounded fears, and patients need a fair assessment of their individual situation.

Mr. Alton: The hon. Gentleman is providing the House with an intelligent list of the dilemmas that we shall face as a society if genetic testing proceeds. Will he confirm that, so far, gene therapy has led to no cures and that a person faced with the information that he has just described inevitably has only the so-called choice of allowing a developing child to proceed with its life or to destroy that life?

Sir Giles Shaw: I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's views on the matter and I understand his question. I do not think that I am well enough equipped to answer his question in the stark terms that he put it. However, there is plenty of evidence to suggest that those genes can produce significant distortion, illness and death. Within the balance of those two opposites, a way has to be found—it cannot be ignored. This is the big issue of the debate.

Dr. Lynne Jones: Although gene therapy is in its early stages of development, I should like to correct the impression that may have been given by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) that there has been no progress in gene therapy. For example, there is evidence that gene therapy can have beneficial effects for cystic fibrosis. The point of the debate this morning is to discuss the tremendously exciting prospects that are in this science for curing illnesses and for improving the health and well-being of humankind.

Sir Giles Shaw: The hon. Lady is quite right on these matters, and I am glad to have had her correction on this issue.

The Committee's report pays full attention to the issues of patenting and the law and, to some extent, to the issues of insurance and employment. I thank my hon. Friend the Minister for reminding us that the insurance industry has taken its first hesitant step to address the Committee's rubric on this matter, but there is no doubt that it will have to move considerably further before it provides the framework within which these issues can be properly handled.

The main theme of the Committee's report was that it is essential to provide a source of advice to the Government that is comprehensive in its scope. Therefore, it was intended for the Government to be better advised in health and in those aspects affecting employment, industry, patent law, insurance, and the sensitive monitoring and assessment of genetic testing. The Committee recommended the establishment of a Human Genetics Advisory Commission, which should seek to assure or to reassure the public that the wider social implications of this developing field of therapy are not being overlooked. Obviously, the Committee and I welcome the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing, the membership of which the Government have recently announced. I would also welcome the Government's announcement of the membership of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission—that decision must not be delayed.

Genetic science has to be developed and used in a way that will carry public confidence. To some extent, we were influenced by the way in which the Government had handled the development of in vitro fertilisation. This stemmed from a thorough inquiry and resulted in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, which was set up by statute to oversee the application of these particular therapies in a way that has commanded widespread public confidence. We believed that this problem was urgent because tales of square tomatoes and genetically induced monsters began to plague the public press.

Mrs. Lait: I am pleased that my hon. Friend has raised the development of the advisory committee on embryology. It was preceded by a committee chaired by Lady Mary Donaldson, which she set up on a voluntary basis. The committee created the framework for the statutory body that followed. Does my hon. Friend envisage a similar process emerging in the area of human genetics?

Sir Giles Shaw: I hope that in due course the Government will find this so useful and essential that they will make it a statutory arm of government, as happened in relation to the embryology authority. We urge that as the ultimate correct solution.

When the Government responded to the Committee's initial report, they rejected the idea of an overarching commission, but they agreed that there should be a genetic testing advisory committee, to which I have already referred. Until the advisory committee was established, there was nothing to prevent anyone from offering genetic tests to the public—without counselling, without consideration of whether the test was desirable and without any associated scrutiny of laboratory standards.

One company had already begun to offer postal tests for cystic fibrosis to determine whether a person had carrier status. We know nothing against the company, but it is arguable that genetic tests by post are undesirable, since counselling standards are likely to be low. We do not know whether it is profitable, but less scrupulous operators might be tempted to follow that practice. We hope that the advisory committee will look at these issues straight away and rationalise this matter.

Useful as the advisory committee is, it does not have the breadth of responsibility necessary to ensure the intelligent and responsible application of genetic science, or to reassure the public that genetics will not make monsters. Somewhat unusually, the Committee refused to accept this as the last word on the matter and it began a short inquiry to try to persuade the Department of Health and the Office of Science and Technology to reopen the issue of a broad-based commission.

I believe that it is to the immense credit of my hon. Friend the Minister for Science and Technology and of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health that, after a further round of probing from the Committee, of evidence taking and of persuasive effort, they changed their minds on this fundamental point. I say to the hon. Member for East Kilbride that I do not regard that as a U-turn; I regard it as a persuasion of a Committee dedicated to achieve a certain purpose—it was well organised, well led, and well supported, and it achieved what it set out to do. I congratulate both Ministers on their courage and on the confidence that they showed in the arguments that were put forward. The debate allows me to pay tribute to the Ministers and also to the Committee, which recorded this achievement, aided by a quite outstanding service from its Clerks and assistants.

We look forward to the establishment of the commission, and I am confident that a statutory solution will ultimately be found. In arguing for a commission, one inevitably lists the abuses that it will guard against. These abuses could happen, but the potential benefits of genetic science are huge and should be welcomed by all hon. Members without reserve. The greatest danger to the use of genetic knowledge is public fear, and that is best allayed by the knowledge that potential abuses are likely to be identified and, therefore, more likely to be prevented. The advisory commission could and, in our view, should play a key role in ensuring that we can use to the full the immense potential for good that this scientific knowledge offers.

[Sir Giles Shaw]

I refer to the second research report that has come before the House and that is relevant to the debate. I refer to our inquiry into the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council. This year, the Committee decided to undertake the first of its inquiries into the activities of research councils. We had at the back of our mind the duty to follow the progress of the Office of Science and Technology and its policies through all its major expenditures in public science.

We chose the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council for our first inquiry. The council has the responsibility for managing the United Kingdom's commitment to a great international collaborative research effort—namely, the development of the large hadron collider at the European Centre for Nuclear Research, or CERN. CERN comprises representatives of the 18 European Governments that pledged their financial resources to this particular endeavour, which is to explore the fundamental particles from which all matter is made. That attracts some popular interest, although it clearly has less application in the immediate future than the mapping of the human genome. It is far and away the biggest single scientific project that any of our research councils are required to manage. Owing to the international treaty under which it operates and the fluctuations in the currency—Swiss francs—in which subscriptions must be paid, it has a huge impact upon the financing of the research council's budget and creates a major distortion in the fields of astronomy and space science for which the council is equally responsible.

Although the PPARC will certainly have the money to pay its share of the building costs for the large hadron collider according to current projections, it will not have the money to fund the experiments that will run on the machine when it is completed. One member of the council told us that it was like becoming a member of an expensive health club only to find that one could not afford to rent a court to play squash or even to buy a drink at the bar. Therefore, our report concentrates on how that distortion can be reduced.

Over the past three years, Science Ministers have been concerned about the question of what resources should be allocated to that large experiment. However, the Committee believes that they must now make a decision. The large hadron collider has been agreed, and development work had already begun when we visited CERN. The Committee applauds the concept of international collaboration on major scientific research and co-operation on research projects such as this. However, it does not seem reasonable that the Government's science budget, in part or in whole, should bear the considerable costs caused by fluctuations in international subscriptions that have nothing to do with the scale of the scientific programme involved.

Accordingly, we recommend in our report that the Treasury should bear the costs of any fluctuations in subscriptions caused by movement in the exchange rate or those fluctuations arising from the improvements that follow the United Kingdom's welcome increase in relative prosperity. We generously recommend also that any notional gains made from such fluctuations should be returned to the Treasury.

That will not solve all the PPARC's financial problems, but we believe that it should receive funding adequate to exploit the large hadron collider. We believe that there is a case for awarding the funding outright. We must take long-term decisions now about the active period of experimentation that the project at CERN will involve although we will not know the results of those experiments for several decades. We think it is right, both scientifically and in terms of expenditure, that the artificial factors that have such a huge impact on costs should be removed from the equation and that the PPARC should not be prevented from developing other scientific experiments purely because of the overheads attributed to CERN.

Mr. Ian Taylor: As my hon. Friend will not be present to hear my winding-up speech, I assure him now—I did not go into detail in my earlier speech—that I shall look closely at the interesting report that he has tabled. Particle physics is an extremely important area of science, and big science is difficult because of budgetary considerations. We shall endeavour to respond to the report as soon as reasonably possible and I welcome the work that has gone into it.

Sir Giles Shaw: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's remarks. The Committee noted that he has been particularly strong in his dealings and negotiations with CERN and we trust that he will be equally firm in 1997 when the issues come up for review.

As to science policy issues, the Committee has not undertaken a recent inquiry into the entirety of that field. However, I suspect that Committee members agree collectively that science policy in the United Kingdom deserves a greater slice of national expenditure—as the hon. Member for East Kilbride argued cogently—than is at present devoted to it. We would say that.

In our relatively short life and that of the OST, there has been rapid development of new structures within which scientific research is pursued. The research councils have been reorganised since 1992 and placed on a new management structure under the director general of the research councils rather than the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. A new range of chairmen has been appointed and a new series of mission statements and major initiatives, such as technology foresight, forward look and many others, have been launched.

That has meant a sea change in the structure within which publicly funded scientific research must operate. The leadership of the director general of the research councils, the role of the OST as a department for science and technology, the injection of people from industry, and a greater thrust towards co-operation between science and technological development have provided a new and welcome impetus. However, I believe—as other members of the Committee believe—that such rapid change should be followed by a period of constructive and quieter progress, uninterrupted by shifts in policy. It does not seem sensible to start reviewing scientific institutes and organisations for reasons that do not seem wholly related to scientific endeavour. In my view, change for its own sake has no place in the firm establishment of basic scientific effort.

The United Kingdom has long held a jealously coveted place at the top of the world league of scientific resources. While all establishments—the scientific establishment is no exception—would prefer no change for as long as possible, I believe that they are rightly fearful about the changes brought about by the prior options review. The Committee had questioned the Government about those issues in correspondence, and at its meeting this week it decided that it would conduct an inquiry into some of those issues when Parliament returns in the autumn. I hope that the Government will be as amenable to reason on that issue as they have been in relation to genetics.

Finally, I emphasise the importance of science to our national welfare. The United Kingdom produces more graduate scientists and engineers than any other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country, yet we seem to value science and engineering less. The House will recall that our second report traced the development of science into competitive technology in order to improve our economic competitiveness. The Committee's travels in the United States, Europe and Japan have convinced us that there is a gap in that area that is disadvantageous to the United Kingdom. Our good ideas are distressingly likely to end up as someone else's products.

Science is presented either as glamorous but remote from everyday life, or as a potential threat. We must learn to recognise science as part of our daily life—essential to the development or improvement of almost all things that we take for granted. We must recognise that learning, discovering and developing things is both intellectually exciting and essential for a successful future.

The Government are addressing those big issues. I am sufficiently persuaded that the native talent and probably the will is there, but we require a huge effort in order to generate the excitement and the endeavour that will again draw people to British science as the only real progenitor of British technological expertise. It is the essential driving force behind producing a competitive international economy.

Dr. Jeremy Bray (Motherwell, South): The hon. Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) gave a good presentation of the Science and Technology Committee's report on human genetics, which makes the task much easier for hon. Members who follow him in the debate. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) on his admirable first speech in a full science policy debate. He demonstrated powerfully the weakness of the Government's science policy, while addressing some practical issues raised in the human genetics report. He demonstrated a firm, practical grasp of the realities that he would face in government rather more briskly than the Minister did.

I shall refer mainly to human genetics, but I shall comment also on the Select Committee's recent report on the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council and the prior options review. I shall refer also to the inquiry that the Committee announced recently into the Natural Environment Research Council. As to human genetics, my personal starting point must be the amazement that I continue to feel, as one trained and experienced in other areas of science, at the astonishing world that molecular genetics has discovered in every cell of our bodies. I constantly ask other scientists—young and old, from microelectronic engineers to cosmologists—whether they have looked at a basic undergraduate textbook on the molecular biology of the cell and asked themselves whether they have anything comparable in their fields, either in the ingenuity and complexity of the systems they discover or in the power of relatively simple experimental techniques, that has been developed with so little abstruse theory. I am too often disappointed by the ignorance of other scientists about molecular biology. They have not read the basic texts. Molecular biology owes much to physics and chemistry, but it has carried us into a new world and towards a new understanding of ourselves, which we have yet to fathom.

Research in genetics is a huge, rapidly moving, complex field of research and, even more than in other areas of research, the nature, timing and results are unpredictable. There is, as the hon. Member for Pudsey said, a wide range of potential applications in medicine and a growing number of actual applications. But it is important not to exaggerate what has been achieved or the pace of future developments. That is why I am glad that our diligent specialist advisers were able to compile the table of disorders on page 34 of our report, with a note of their incidence, symptoms, and the state of play in the development of diagnoses and therapies. I commend that table to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton). The complex predictors with five, 10 or more susceptibility genes are not yet with us, yet already—as well as benefits in the prediction, prevention and treatment of disorders and diseases—some ethical, social and economic problems are apparent.

We are in for a long period with immature fields in which susceptibility genes will be identified, with significant, but low, predictive values, and no therapies, ranging up to mature fields in which full and effective therapies are available. For a long time, we shall know about susceptibilities, but will be unable to do anything about them. The ethical and social dilemmas are obvious, not just for Government policy but for personal relations in the family.

Before the Select Committee reported, ad hoc advisers, committees and procedures were called for and set up as new fields and types of service were opened up and developed. More general problems were left to be tackled until they got worse, and that put a premium on sensationalising issues and inviting overreactions, disappointments and frustrations. I was afraid that human genetics might go the way of nuclear power—greeted first with enthusiasm and then rejected with as ill-informed prejudice. In human genetics, the stakes are much higher.

So I am glad that the Select Committee recommended, and the Government accepted, the setting up of an overarching Human Genetics Advisory Commission that will be able to examine and advise on—and, if thought necessary in a later Parliament, to regulate—issues across the board, supported by existing and new specialist committees and advisers. It is reasonable for the commission to start on an advisory basis and to be given regulatory powers when and if it needs them. As my hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride said, the Medicines Commission and its Committee on Safety of Medicines and other matters is a good analogy.

It will be useful for the commission to set patenting issues against a wider background, despite the wish of the pharmaceutical industry to keep the commission away from that subject. I would not anticipate that the commission would ever have or need regulatory powers on patents. However, the consequence of the Patent Office and patent law ignoring wider opinion and failing to educate the public will be that ill-informed reaction will overwhelm sensible suggestions, as nearly happened to the first draft of the European directive.

When the Science and Technology Committee reported in 1995, the consideration of a European directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions was in disarray. The Select Committee considered that the imposition of a directive could be more harmful than the differences between countries. Since then, however, the draft directive has been revised.

On the crucial question of patenting genes, the present draft directive says in article 3, paragraphs 1 and 2:

"The human body and its elements in their natural state shall not be considered patentable inventions. Notwithstanding paragraph 1, the subject of an invention capable of industrial application which relates to an element isolated from the human body or otherwise produced by means of a technical process shall be patentable, even if the structure of that element is identical to that of a natural element."

As the hon. Member for Pudsey pointed out, however, the Select Committee concluded:

"only a combination of a gene and a known utility which is novel and not obvious should be patentable in the context of that utility; and a combination of the same gene and a further novel utility should also be patentable."

The Select Committee was not drafting a statute, and to get round French law, the European directive had to resort to the distinction between unpatentable, naturally occurring, DNA and the patentable man-made cDNA derived from it, a distinction that the Select Committee found unconvincing and unnecessary. Given the differences in purpose and background of the Select Committee's recommendations and the European directive, the effects of the two proposals seem to be essentially the same. In the interests of harmonisation, I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride that the new European directive, as it will work in the overall context of patent law, should be supported.

I hope that the meeting arranged by the Royal Society and the Institute of Actuaries on 25 September will advance the position on the use of genetic information in insurance. The intention of the Association of British Insurers to appoint a genetic adviser to keep insurance companies informed is welcome, but we need a William Beveridge or a Richard Doll, with good knowledge of the insurance industry, to devise an appropriate framework in which insurance can continue to play a useful role. I do not believe that the House has yet fully understood that point, because a difficult task of systems design remains to be done and I see no sign of it coming from the insurance industry.

In some areas, it will be increasingly difficult for private insurance to cope as human genetics advances. Most important will be the growing areas of health insurance in which genetic information has an important role to play in tracing susceptibility. The universal insurance given by the national health service, when compared with the dilemmas faced in America caused by the impact of genetics on health insurance, shows that the national health service is a far more effective and efficient way to deliver health care in the days of genetic medicine yet to come.

The Select Committee was told that the domestic particle physics programme, costing £20 million a year, had been cut to level at which United Kingdom physicists could not gain the benefit of the £60 million subscription to CERN, even to the extent that the travel costs of graduate students to Geneva could be met only for occasional visits. The Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council—PPARC—had asked for another £65.5 million spread over the next eight years for particle physics. That would enable the PPARC to finance UK participation in the detectors or experiments on the large hadron collider and to enjoy the benefits of CERN membership.

The Science and Technology Committee owes a duty to the particle physics community to give a clear political judgment, as experienced parliamentarians, that there is no chance that any Government will make available an additional £65.5 million for particle physics, either from the domestic programme; from astronomy; from the rest of the science budget; as an addition to the science budget; or from any combination of those. The physicists have to realise that if that extra money is what they need to gain the benefit of CERN membership, the United Kingdom will have to withdrew from CERN, just as the US cancelled the super-conducting super collider. There are similar difficulties between domestic and international programmes in other member countries of CERN, and CERN could collapse. The PPARC suggested that it could follow the period in which it was receiving the extra £65.5 million with a period when, effectively, it repaid the amount by accepting a 20 per cent. reduction in its programme. However, it has no assets, capital, earnings stream or entitlement to income from which it could repay the £65.5 million advance as it suggests.

Fortunately, it was possible to point to an alternative in the Select Committee's report. At the last minute, the Minister for Science and Technology sent the Committee a copy of a letter that he had sent to the chairman of the PPARC as recently as 4 July, in which he said:

"One important lesson to be learnt from the negotiations over the LHC is how much can be achieved by working with other states. The UK would never have achieved what it did without working so closely with our German colleagues. We will only achieve our objectives in 1997"—

on LHC funding—

"through this partnership. Of course we should also try to build support from other member states, but the new voting arrangements"— on the CERN council—

"mean that the budget can be blocked by the UK and Germany voting together."

Germany is facing budgetary constraints on its total public expenditure and its specific science budgets that are at least as severe as those faced in the UK. The ability of the UK and Germany alone to block the CERN budget had not been made clear to the Committee before it received the Minister's letter—at least, I was certainly not aware of it.

Against that background, it would be a reasonable objective for the UK to try to shift the balance of funding from £60 million a year in CERN's subscription and the £20 million domestic programme to £50 million for CERN and £30 million for domestic—a shift of £10 million, which is of the magnitude that the PPARC had asked for in additional funding, to enable it to take part in the LHC experiments. That would allow the UK to participate in the exploitation of the LHC and its detectors within the present overall science budget funding of particle physics.

That would be achievable if the United States and Japan participated as members—not visiting scientists—of a reconstructed CERN and a funding formula that immediately brought in £60 million a year from each of them. That would allow not only the completion of the present proposed LHC science programme within current total national particle physics budgets, but additions to the science programme.

CERN seems slightly embarrassed by proposing two general purpose detectors on the LHC and not one, justifying them as insurance and by the stimulus of competition. In addition, CERN has plans for two somewhat smaller special-purpose detectors. As an incentive to join CERN, the US and Japan could each be invited to construct one of the four LHC detectors. The nature and timing of the detectors could be considered, but it would be reasonable to think that participation in all detectors would be wider if those constructing some were able to learn from the use of others in a phased programme. The facilities would be greater value for money than the US, Japan or indeed CERN could achieve on their own.

While that may make good scientific and economic sense, the politics and negotiability have to be considered. UK particle physicists would of course rather get the extra money that they are asking for and carry on with present plans—we all would. They think that they have the powerful argument that, without additional support, UK scientists will not benefit from the CERN subscription after the large electron positron collider. To get the particle physicists to put the considerable effort needed into devising, considering and negotiating alternatives, they have to realise that additional funding for particle physicists will not be available.

There is an honourable parliamentary role in the advocacy of lost causes, and the Select Committee has chosen that role for particle physics. I want to save particle physics. If it is to be saved, there has to be reappraisal and redeployment of international efforts in research in particle physics. That has to be initiated now by G7 Science Ministers and completed before the 1997 meeting on the funding of the LHC.

After receiving the Minister's letter to the PPARC at the last minute, I redrafted the report's conclusions and moved them, as recorded in the archaic practice of Select Committee reports, on page lxiii, at the very back and in a quite undiscoverable form. I commend to particle physicists who want to know the facts of life—the reality, not the politics of lost causes—to read my redraft. I voted against the report, and I hope that in his winding-up speech the Minister will say that he will seriously consider my amendments as well as the report's final version. He has a much more practical course ahead of him if he pays serious attention to those suggestions.

All that needs to be said on prior options is that the Committee found the Department of Trade and Industry's policy far from satisfactory, as my hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride said. The root of the problem is that the Deputy Prime Minister's residual influence in the Department simply does not understand that the customer-contractor relationship does not work in research. We have been learning that over and over again since Rothschild, and it is sad that so much time and energy should have been dissipated on such a damaging exercise.

As we are reminded daily, and since the practical and political possibilities have dramatically changed over the past few days with US support for mandatory greenhouse gas targets, global climate change is perhaps the most important part of the Natural Environment Research Council's research programme. The work is inescapably international; indeed global.

The draft document, "The Climate Agenda: a Proposal for an Integrating Framework" from the international agencies concerned—the World Meteorological Organisation, the UN Environmental Programme, UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organisation and the International Council of Scientific Unions, which brings together the national academies of science of all industrial countries—says that the research needed could be carried out within existing structures if, and presumably only if, international organisations strengthened programmes, measured output against performance standards, and established an inter-agency co-ordination mechanism. Governments would have to increase support for national activities in international programmes, strengthen or establish national climate programmes, build scientific capacity in developing countries, fund international co-ordination programmes and endorse the overall programme.

There is no doubt much going on, but it sounds as if there is now at last a possibility of pulling it together. I trust that we shall find that the Government are encouraging and enabling the NERC and the UK to play their part. In one important respect, they are doing so, in that the chairman of the research committee of the intergovernmental conference on climate change is Sir John Houghton, the former director general of the British Meteorological Office, and the present director general, Professor Julian Hunt, is the technical adviser to the body that produced the key report on the climate agenda.

As this may be the last science debate in this Parliament, I should like to say that I hope that the Select Committee has shown, perhaps with one or two lapses, that there should be a Science and Technology Committee in the next Parliament. As this will be the last science debate in which I shall take part, I should like to say how much I have enjoyed working on the interface between science and politics and appreciated the interest of scientists and of parliamentary colleagues.

Mrs. Jacqui Lait (Hastings and Rye): I am pleased to follow two such learned contributions on human genetics and CERN. I apologise for the fact that I shall not follow the previous speakers down those paths in detail, because I was planning to contribute principally on science policy.

However, I shall comment briefly on one or two points concerning human genetics that have been raised. First, I support the establishment of a body to oversee genetic research. I share what seems to be the view of everyone in the Chamber, that such an ethical body should be established. I was glad to hear the Minister say that he wanted lay people to be represented, but I know how difficult it is to establish a balance of representation within the lay community.

Secondly, several hon. Members raised the subject of insurance, as a real problem. Most of us would agree that within the United Kingdom, the national health service is the prime form of insurance for people who suffer from genetic diseases.

[Mrs. Jacqui Lait]

An area in which I claim some small knowledge is long-term care. The Government, rightly—I thoroughly support them—suggest that people should provide more insurance-based policies for their long-term care. One of the strengths of the insurance industry is that over the years it has developed policies to cover almost any situation at a reasonable cost to people who need to purchase those policies.

I accept that as we become more sophisticated medically, there are extra costs associated with Alzheimer's disease and other such diseases of old age. But I suspect that the strength of the insurance industry, and its ability to adjust to those costs, means that in the long run people who suffer from genetic diseases associated with age will not necessarily find that their insurance policies are out of line with other people's. That is because as we get older and frailer, and as medical knowledge about how to care for people in old age increases, in essence the costs will almost balance out, and the insurance industry will be able to provide for them.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: One of the main advantages of the insurance industry is that it enables us to spread the risks, and therefore to spread the cost of the diseases that the hon. Lady is talking about. She mentioned Alzheimer's disease specifically, and I am sure that she will agree that the situation will change dramatically if a predisposition to that disease can be identified at an early stage in an individual's existence. How does she feel that private insurance would be able to cope with such a situation?

Mrs. Lait: If the hon. Lady is referring to the early onset of Alzheimer's disease—

Mrs. Campbell indicated dissent.

Mrs. Lait: —we agree that the NHS represents the best provision. If, however, as she indicates, we are talking about—dare one say it—the "normal" onset of Alzheimer's disease in retirement—

Mrs. Campbell indicated dissent.

Mrs. Lait: —medical research on treatment is already going on, which will of course be able to help. Furthermore, as we get older and frailer, the cost of long-term care for everyone remains much the same. The same number of staff is needed to look after somebody with Alzheimer's disease as for somebody who is incontinent. The long-term care community is used to dealing with those costs, and the insurance industry is equally able to cope with them.

Mrs. Campbell: I think that the hon. Lady has misunderstood my point. I was talking about people with a predisposition to Alzheimer's disease, which may even be identifiable at birth. That is now feasible. How does she feel that the private insurance industry would be able to cope if asked to insure such a person for long-term care?

Mrs. Lait: The insurance industry will not be insuring people because of Alzheimer's; it will be insuring people for the cost of their care. My point is that the cost of care for somebody who is frail is roughly the same, whether that person suffers from Alzheimer's or frailty in old age. That is where the strength of the insurance industry lies—not in specifying the costs of a disease but, as the hon. Lady said, in spreading the risks across the whole community. We are talking about how much it costs to care for somebody, and that means everyone, not necessarily only people with Alzheimer's.

Now I shall move on to the broader issue of science policy. I welcome the opportunity for the debate, as other hon. Members have done. One of the factors affecting the development of our science policy has been the need for change over the years. In any sector, that is difficult for the people who are involved to cope with. They have got used to the way in which things have always been done, but as our society becomes more used to change and innovation, anybody who works in any sector needs to get used to that process.

As the speed of innovation increases, I am afraid that even scientists are affected by the need to come to terms with speedy change. That applies to basic research as much as to near-market research. It is interesting to look round at the various universities that do so much of our basic research and see how they have come to terms with the different demands made of them.

If I may, I shall cite my own university, as I often do. Strathclyde has done extremely well in developing its basic research. It competes with the top 10 universities in America, including Harvard and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in terms of the royalties that it collects from its research, and has long connections with industry in relation to developing that research.

Strathclyde has also become infinitely more effective at fund raising. One of its most recent achievements was to raise money to put into one building—the health sciences building on the campus—a variety of different disciplines that in the past had been completely separate. Academics had been developing similar lines of research without realising that within the campus similar strengths were developing, and there was a potential for duplication.

That is where the importance of the Government's policy lies—not in looking at one university alone, but in looking across the whole of the science research industry to see where there is overlap, and in trying to ensure that there is networking to produce the most effective research outcomes.

Of course, universities are now complaining about their funding, for all sorts of reasons. Most of them welcome the Dearing review, as I do myself. So often, however, we are left with the fact that universities are still resistant to the opportunities open to them to investigate how they could fund their research in different ways.

It is unfortunate that the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) is so dismissive of the private finance initiative. The PFI provides opportunities for academics to raise money, and not necessarily from the industries with which they are linked. They can look in other directions to raise money that will help them buy the equipment and run the programmes that they are so keen to have.

For instance, one simple instance comes to my mind. I have already read out the letter from Professor John Spence referring to furnishings and minor works. In many businesses, furnishings and minor works are provided on a lease basis. The PFI could allow universities to continue their furnishing and minor works programmes on a lease basis, and could allow the equipment budget to be expanded, also by leasing. It is unfortunate that the Opposition dismiss those ideas out of hand.

Mr. Ingram: Can the hon. Lady give one example where the PFI has worked in replacing the shortfall in Government expenditure?

Mrs. Lait: It is evident—not only from the hon. Gentleman's comments, but from the information that one receives—that academics have not yet grasped the opportunities offered by the PFI. The hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) gave the impression that he was trying to encourage scientists involved in particle physics to look at funding in a different way. That applies throughout universities in all disciplines.

Dr. Bray: The hon. Lady slightly misunderstood me. I cannot see any industry anywhere in the world being willing to contribute to the financing of particle physics research.

Mrs. Lait: I accept that, but I thought that the hon. Gentleman also stated that particle physicists must look further than to the Government and their standard forms of financing. I apologise if I picked up what he said wrongly. I thought he was very clear, and I enjoyed his speech.

Dr. Lynne Jones: Does the hon. Lady realise that she is advocating the replacement of Government grants with a mechanism that would require universities to meet the continuous revenue costs of that mechanism out of revenue budgets that are declining year on year as a result of the Government's policies? Does she not appreciate that there comes a point at which it is impossible to get a quart into a pint pot?

Mrs. Lait: The hon. Lady is ignoring the fact that the Government set up the Dearing committee to look at the long-term funding of universities, and she has also missed my point. My university—and I accept that all universities are not as clever as Strathclyde—has raised enormous amounts through fund-raising techniques and developing royalties from business to help finance research. That is a good example of how universities must respond to changing circumstances in the same way as business must respond.

I wish to move on to the more practical side of science policy. My constituency has very little in terms of the fundamental research base. I have one lovely company called Computing Devices in the defence industry, which has many people sitting in dark rooms, looking at computers and doing basic defence research. The bulk of the industry in my constituency is much more practical, and it is important to encourage those businesses to spend more on research and development. I agree with my hon. Friend the Minister and other hon. Members that British business needs to spend much more on research and development. I sometimes have my suspicions that many companies include in their research and development budgets quality control laboratories and other such facilities that I would not necessarily class as "research and development".

Before I came to the House, I worked for the Chemical Industries Association. Although I am not in any way a scientist, I have as a result of my good Scottish education a science higher, and I like to think that I understand the basic elements of science. One of the problems that business has is the inability to explain to the wider population the scientific processes involved in the goods being produced. In my constituency, I have a company called CMR, which recycles used solvents, and it has done some good ground-breaking research in producing feedstocks for cement kilns. That has become a controversial area, particularly with the great debate on dioxins. The managing director of the company is one of the most articulate and practical scientists I have ever met. When I used to work for the Chemical Industries Association, one of the biggest problems was finding people who were enthusiastic about their companies and their business, and who were able to articulate that to the wider public. When the wider public are concerned about science that they do not understand, it is of immense value to find someone who can explain scientific processes simply to many people.

It is a shame that, so often, science has been misused and misquoted to stir up public fears and terrors. Dioxins is one such issue, and many of us are still scarred by the Brent Spar case. I hold very little brief for Shell's handling of that issue, but the science involved was mis-stated by those who had an interest in ensuring that the matter was blown up out of all proportion.

One of the issues relating to biotechnology that the Chemical Industries Association has pointed out to me, as well as the patenting and copyrighting issue—although that is of concern to it, and we must still resolve the question of how long a copyright should be, given the length of testing required—is an element of the common agricultural policy that means that sugars and starch, the basic feedstocks of the biotechnology industry, are not sold to the industries that can develop them at a basic market price. Although I hardly think that that matter is the responsibility of my hon. Friend the Minister, I hope that he will communicate to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food the need to ensure that the biotechnology industry has access to its basic feedstocks at market prices.

We must not ignore the fact that science is becoming more responsive to public pressure. I had an interesting meeting with Southern Water, which has a large waste water treatment infrastructure project in my constituency, part of which will be a waste treatment plant itself. There is a debate about whether there is a need for a secondary treatment plant on land, or whether that plant could be created in an environmentally friendly way by using the swift waters of the channel. That has become a debate about the value of the cost of the project versus the end result.

One of the areas that we as a nation are not well appraised of is risk assessment. The reaction to the bovine spongiform encephalopathy crisis was exacerbated because it was clear that many people were not aware that the practical risk of their catching BSE was one in 5 million, while the chance of being killed while crossing a road is one in the hundreds. When people can appreciate the real risk that they are facing, they will adopt a sensible and rational response. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will collaborate with the Department for Education and Employment to ensure that children are taught risk assessment, so that there will be a rational debate about the introduction of new technologies and a positive and realistic response when faced with a science-based crisis.

Can my hon. Friend the Minister assure me that he is involved in the developments within the European Community that affect our science base? So many of the issues are complicated and are often the responsibility of other Departments. Unless there is a rational scientific input into the decisions, we tend to find that businesses can be badly affected and, in some cases, can become unprofitable.

Mr. David Alton (Liverpool, Mossley Hill): The hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) said that it was unsatisfactory for us to link all these complex scientific questions with genetics in one debate and that it would have been better to have a series of debates. I entirely agree. In some ways, the disjointed manner in which we have moved from one question to another illustrates that.

The hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mrs. Lait) made some interesting points about the funding of science and I would love to be able to spend the rest of my time talking about that. Both the universities in Liverpool have projects that link well with the private sector and on which the two sectors work in partnership. I would not want to be over-reliant on that as a source of funding, however. That is a danger and we must not see that source as a substitute for public funding of science, as I think the hon. Lady would agree.

The hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) did the House a great service, in his usual way, by linking scientific and ethical questions. I had the pleasure of working with him during his chairmanship of the all-party mental health group and I know of the diligence that he has always shown in all matters that he has attended to in the House. He has been one of the foremost spokesmen on scientific questions and we would all do well to listen to what he has to say on such matters. In particular, I admire the fact that rather than fearing science he reminds us that it can make great advances, but that we must always view it in the ethical context. He has pointed us in that direction and he is right to have done so.

The hon. Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw), who has had to leave the Chamber, the hon. Member for Motherwell, South and other members of the Select Committee on Science and Technology have done those of us who are not members a great service in producing the report. It is a shame that it has taken so long for us to have this debate, but we are having it today and Parliament is at its best when it considers intelligently and in some depth these complex moral and ethical questions.

I disagreed with the hon. Member for Pudsey when he was talking about testing and mentioned the possibility of an organisation based on the model of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority—I think that the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye also mentioned it. That would not be the route down which I would want to go, for reasons that I will make clear, and I do not suppose that many hon. Members will be too surprised by that.

The hon. Member for Pudsey also said that we must be concerned with abuses. It is not just the abuses, but the assumption on which the genetics debate is proceeding that we must turn to today. The Minister said that the questions are not legislative but ethical. To some extent that is true, but an umbilical cord links legislative and ethical questions. Legislation cannot be value-free or ethically neutral. A dirigiste or disinterested approach—marketplace genetics—simply would not do. We have to view the genetics debate in the context of where society is today and of whether just because something is scientifically possible that makes it desirable or right.

When a society loses respect for life and the components that are at life's fountainhead, it loses everything. Public concern about civic dissolution, the lack of good stewardship of the environment, and about food production and animal welfare offer the ideal opportunity to reopen the bioethical debate and examine the implications of genetic manipulation. As a nation, we have a proper concern for animal welfare. I cannot help wondering whether, perhaps one day when some transgenic pigs or foxes march to Westminster holding placards saying, "Save the human race" or "Save the unborn child", we will realise some of the illogicality of the positions that we are taking. Through that opening, we can touch a public nerve, rather than through some of the positions taken by America's so-called moral majority. I find some of those positions odious.

Public concern about what we are doing to other species and our farming methods will radically alter the terms of the debates that we have been having on such questions in this country. In Britain, pigs weighing 55 stones—350 kg—have already been bred. Yes, they are certainly fatter, but they are arthritic and impotent. Commercially they have more value, but is that desirable? Human genes have been mixed with animal genes, producing more than 80,000 animals last year. Consumers have no idea what they are buying when they go to supermarkets. Chickens can be made to grow to their full size in 37 days, rather than 84. Cows that can yield 2,200 gallons of milk or 10,000 litres a year have been bred and can even produce human breast milk. Geeps, which are a combination of a goat and a sheep, have been bred. Brute force, mutilation and ruminants turned into carnivores: is it any wonder that the BSE crisis is upon us?

Dr. Bray: There are dangers in allowing the debate about transgenic animals to get out of hand. We have a great many genes in common with fruit flies and, indeed, with every species that lives on the planet.

Mr. Alton: Would the hon. Gentleman agree, however, that from the earliest times there have been injunctions on the mixing of species for good practical reasons? Although comparisons can certainly be made between genes of different stocks, we should weigh up the implications before we talk about the wholesale mixing of species. Existing agriculture and plant stocks are being eliminated as horticulture is displaced by genetically engineered plants. Ancient resistances and variations, which protected species, are being wiped out. New diseases and cancers in animals and people will escape this genie's bottle. All this in the name of money and an insatiable desire to dabble in the grotesque.

Those of us who do not understand the minute intricacies of genetics are regarded as unable to understand the implications. On the basis of what we have already done, why should I have confidence in those who claim to understand? Scientists are supremely ignorant about where the DNA highway will terminate. We are expected to trust them in their ignorance. I do not and the British public should not trust them either. The calamity besetting British agriculture should act as a timely warning of the dangers that we face in giving carte blanche to geneticists.

Therapeutically, gene therapy is going nowhere, despite the debate today. It is like all the claims that have been made about embryology over the years. Where have all the destructive experiments on human embryos led? To no scientific advances. I question the assumptions on which we accelerate a process that will lead only to an increase in the number of abortions. If no therapy is available, people will be led into the so-called area of choice—a word that is frequently used in the Select Committee report considering the issue, but which has already led to about 40 million abortions in the world in the past 12 months and is frequently seen as a solution to the problems that genetic testing will in due course highlight and which have been highlighted by other tests in the past.

When Pandora opened her famous box, the one thing left inside was hope. There has not been one single case of a cure. There have been hopes of cures. The hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) intervened to point out the possibilities with cystic fibrosis. There is no hon. Member of the House who would not want progress in the cure of disability. I taught children with special needs before I came to the House and the last child I taught died four weeks after I arrived here. He was a little boy with cystic fibrosis and the pain and suffering that he lived with during the last two years of his life will remain with me always. But it is not our right and it is not even desirable to destroy the handicapped person. Yes, we should try to eliminate the handicap or disability, but if all that the testing leads to is a so-called choice of eradicating the disabled person, it takes us ethically nowhere. It will be a world of perfection tests and quality controls—a world in which we use testing as the first part of a search and destroy mission.

The English writer Malcolm Muggeridge once remarked that in modern western society it had taken only 30 years for a crime against humanity to become an act of medical compassion. He was referring to the great shift that has taken place in our society whereby euthanasia and other forms of medical killing have come to be widely and vigorously championed. Beneath the distinctive issues of bioethics and genetics lie the deepest matters of our humanity.

Dr. Bray: All members of the Select Committee well understand the importance of the sort of issue that the hon. Gentleman is raising. That is why we recommended that there should be a majority of lay people on the genetics commission. I certainly hope that they include people with views of the nature of the hon. Member's. The Committee decided that it could not tackle these issues and that we would work within the framework of the law. Paragraph 88 of the report says:

"If a test shows evidence of a genetic disorder and the parents decide on abortion, that is allowed under the present law and the decision should be respected. However, if parents decline the test, or decide to carry affected children to term, they should also be supported in their decision. Considerations of the costs a handicapped child may impose on the state should never be presented or taken into consideration when counselling is given and decisions are made."

Mr. Alton: In the context of British law, although not natural law, I can see the hand of the hon. Gentleman in paragraph 88 because, in the context—

Mrs. Anne Campbell: We all wrote it. It was unanimous.

Mr. Alton: I assumed that it was the hon. Gentleman's hand because it tried to reach the best possible position in the circumstances. I strongly welcome what it says about not taking into account the costs of someone being a handicapped person in deciding whether he should be allowed to live, but the hon. Gentleman will know that, in paragraph 90, the Committee says:

"providing a pre-natal screening test for a genetic defect, in the absence of any treatment for that defect, gives a signal that many people, at least, may consider the condition so serious it justifies termination of a pregnancy. If that is not the case, offering pre-natal screening is a waste of resources."

That is the point to which I am addressing my remarks.

Although political correctness and the ethically neutral language of "choice" still dominate political debate, they are being increasingly discredited. Public opinion has gently been turning, increasingly uneasy with the relativism that has created a culture of death. Freedom for the pike is increasingly seen as death to the minnow and it is increasingly recognised as a false freedom.

Western liberal society, with its emphasis on individualism and choice, has created a consumerist and materialist culture that insists that, "If it is right for me, it is right per se." It is summed up in the slogan, "My right to choose", all murderously loaded words. Rights must always carry duties, responsibilities and obligations. The origin of the word "choice" comes from the same Greek derivative as the word "heresy". It is a modern heresy to suggest that we can reduce every ethical and scientific question, especially crucial issues such as human genetics, to matters of individual choice.

G. K. Chesterton knew better when he wrote:

"To admire mere choice is to refuse to choose."

The choices are increasingly less about left and right than about right and wrong. As we survey the wreckage of our human ecology and widespread civic dissolution, more and more people question the assumptions on which we are proceeding.

Choices must be measured against consequences. Individual freedoms and rights without duties should be measured against responsibilities and civic duties. The flaccid language of rights and choice must be challenged at its heart. In the west of Ireland, where my mother comes from, people have a saying that, "It is in the shelter of each other's lives that the people live." The rampant progress towards individualism that has disfigured this nation in the past 20 years is the antithesis of that. The language of choice, which after all was the language of Thatcherism and marketplace economics, is the very thing that I am challenging.

Dr. Lynne Jones: May I mention my experience? When I was pregnant with my last baby, I was quite old for a woman having a baby and I had a chorionic villus sampling test. I knew when I had it that, if the foetus was shown to have some defect, I might face the decision of whether to terminate the pregnancy. That followed my experience of having had a miscarriage and losing a pregnancy. It would have been right for me to have had that information and to take that decision. I know that the hon. Gentleman disagrees, but the majority of people in this country do not agree with him. He talks about public opinion. People should have the right to that information, but the Select Committee report says that people, when they undertake the tests, should be counselled as to the likely consequences, should make their own decision about the matter and should not feel forced by any view that society may take.

Mr. Alton: I agree with the hon. Lady about the need for impartial counselling. The problem with counselling is that it is done by people who run the very clinics where terminations occur, so they have a direct, vested interest in offering that procedure. One doctor, speaking to a Committee that met in the House last year, said that he had undertaken 100,000 terminations in the past 25 years, which had generated for him and his clinic some £30 million, so serious money is involved. That is why counselling should be separated from terminations and should be impartial.

It is worth pointing out that CVS has been withdrawn in some countries because the test was shown to lead, in some cases, to disabilities. Three per cent. of amniocentesis tests lead to spontaneous abortions. The tests therefore have consequences. Ultimately, the only choice that is offered to people who have the tests is either to proceed to allow the baby to be born or to take its life. It does not offer therapy. That is the point that I wanted to underline.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: Genetic counselling is done by people who are not involved in terminations and the hon. Gentleman's remarks may have been a little misleading.

Mr. Alton: I accept that point.

May I turn to the language that we have been using of individualism, of contemporary nihilism and disintegrated consumerism? A culture of life and an intrinsic respect for life would be the antidote to the fevers of our age. The twin pillars of Britain's older order were piety and pragmatic common sense. Everything had a place and value. Now everything has a price and nothing has a value.

It is not without significance that last month the National Consumer Council warned about the colossal price that ordinary people will pay if genetics continue to develop unchecked. The old economic clash of capitalism and collectivism will look increasingly sterile. Economic literacy is an obsession with politicians, but we must urgently become genetically literate—we would all, I think, agree about that. It will become central to the relationships between power and people in the 21st century. Arguments about abortion, for instance, will be given a new perspective, as we have just heard. The contexts in which we grapple with the problems will change as the implications of molecular genetics become more and more apparent.

Since James Watson and Francis Crick unearthed the molecular structure of DNA in 1953, scientific possibilities have come to overshadow our future patterns of reproduction. Watson described his breakthrough as "anti-religious". Frightening in their enormity, unthinkable in their depravity, the violations of the relationship between the creator and created could dispatch humanity into the obscurity of the dinosaurs.

Nowadays too many scientists argue that if something is scientifically possible, it becomes right. That approach has no foundation in true science or philosophy. It concocts a theory that would have monkeys and apes sitting at computers and PCs and it leads to racial theories, eugenics, episodes of genocide and corrupt medical ethics. The promise of "beautiful people" and the power that the new genetics will offer politicians is frightening in its enormity.

Mr. Ian Taylor: This is heavy-going stuff. When I was at Cold Spring Harbor laboratory only two months ago with James Watson, I found him to be an extremely caring and sensitive person. Many of the things that have been done there and in the other laboratories with which he has been associated, have provided not only scientific excellence, but immense benefit to the world.

Mr. Alton: My whole point is that, even if someone's impulses and motives in the first place may be good, they can lead to an abyss that we have not properly thought through. In this case, as I have said, Watson said what his impulses were in developing his ideas. I commend to the Minister an article that appeared, surprisingly, in The Independent yesterday morning. I say "surprisingly" because normally it would not even allow such an article to be published. It was written by Brian Appleyard, a distinguished commentator, and it examined carefully where the genetics debate is taking us. He said that, inevitably and inexorably, it would lead to more and more destruction of life. Already, 600 abortions are carried out every working day. We have destructive experiments on human embryos for the reasons that the Minister has just advanced: they will lead to great progress, to this happening and to that happening. Every day, unborn babies, human embryos, are experimented on in this country, with the full force of British law. Euthanasia is permitted by judicial decision, which feeble legislators leave uncontested.

The language of the production line is now freely applied to human reproduction. Total quality management and disposability are the buzzwords of modern repro-tech. The sheer scale of the disposal of early human life was graphically revealed in answer to questions that I tabled earlier this year. Almost half a million human beings have been manufactured in IVF clinics in the three years from 1991 to 1994, but only 7,000 resulted in live births. That is a death rate or rate of attrition of more than 98 per cent. Of the 491,482 not accounted for, 27,000 were used in destructive research and almost 70,000 remained frozen.

The 1990 legislation requires that human embryos be kept frozen for no longer than five years, which means that on 1 August thousands will be destroyed without parental consent because their parents are no longer in contact with clinics. We should act urgently to ban further freezing and to ensure that orphan embryos are adopted or given a respectful burial.

I welcome the European Union's bioethics convention, to which the Select Committee report referred, and which, if implemented by the EU, will require the repeal of those parts of our domestic legislation which are wildly out of step with what happens elsewhere. For example, in France and Germany destructive experiments on human embryos are banned. I hope that the convention will become a European directive and that the Government will implement it.

Mr. Ingram: I did not mean to interrupt the hon. Gentleman in his statistical analysis, but I got the impression that he sought to imply that geneticists were involved in creating conditions in which to destroy life. Every geneticist to whom I have spoken is working to improve life and create a more fulfilling life for our fellow citizens. Geneticists who work in the agricultural sector are working to find ways to feed more people because many people are dying of starvation throughout the world. Genetics is about enhancing, not destroying and undermining life. I hope that the hon. Gentleman accepts that and is not seen to attack geneticists, who are trying to help all of us.

Mr. Alton: The hon. Gentleman will recall that at the outset of my remarks I said that I was not frightened of science, but that it must be informed by a proper debate and ethical base.

The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, which governs the very things that I have just described, is offered to the House as a model for the way in which we should deal with genetics. That authority, established by legislation passed by the House, comprises not one member who takes a dissenting view. Indeed, I heard Baroness Warnock, interviewed by Melanie Phillips on the "Analysis" programme, say that she deliberately excluded from her precursor committee anyone who took a religious view which was likely to be out of accord with the views of those on the committee. That is no way to proceed, yet it is the way in which the HFEA has proceeded.

Who finances the HFEA? Rather like the counselling to which I referred earlier, it is financed by the clinics. Instead of being an independent watchdog, the authority is financed by these people. Given what we have heard today about the way in which private money should be used to pay for science, I am sure that any new body which is established to oversee genetics will ask the industry and those involved in genetic advances to contribute towards the financing of that body. In that case, the policeman or watchdog will be far too closely identified with the burglar.

Mr. Ingram: We are going down the wrong route, but does the hon. Gentleman accept that all moral authority does not reside with those who are religious? People who are non-religious have just as high moral standards and can comment on ethical questions.

Mr. Alton: Of course they do. I would disentangle words such as "moral" and "ethical". We need people who have a keen ethical sense. That includes people who have religious views as well as those who do not. The point that I am making is that the assumptions have been reversed. No one has been placed on the authority who has a dissenting view. That was justified on the basis that such people had maverick, quirky and idiosyncratic "religious" views. The whole of our science and medical practice was based for hundreds of years on Judaeo-Christian values. There is nothing wrong with that and people who have such values ought to be included in a pluralist society as much as anyone else.

Mr. Alan W. Williams (Carmarthen): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Alton: I must make progress. I have given way many times and the House will wish me to proceed so that others might participate.

I refer the hon. Member for East Kilbride to two cases in Scotland which demonstrate why we should rein in those who sometimes get carried away with their own enthusiasms. In Edinburgh two years ago a scientist wanted permission to abort little girls so that he could use their eggs in fertility treatments. The mother of any resulting child would then be an aborted foetus. Its grandmother and doctor would be its mother's killers.

The scientist applied to the British Medical Association's ethics committee to proceed and the discredited HFEA went out to public consultation—as if there was anything to consult about. Parliament properly intervened and amended the criminal justice legislation to outlaw such practices. Another Edinburgh scientist recently cloned two sheep. In the self-congratulatory scientific review, he failed to reveal that all but one of the five sheep were at least 20 per cent. bigger than they should have been, that three died soon after birth with malformed organs and that one lamb grew to twice the normal size and had to be born by Caesarian section. Suppression of the full story—the truth—does not serve science; it serves tyranny.

One day, tissue engineering and genetic science will work hand in hand. By growing limbs and rearing whole bodies in artificial wombs, done by men such as our Edinburgh scientists, the automatons of science fiction will become the human slaves of tyrannical regimes unless a stop is put to it now. Dramatic reductions in male fertility—probably yet another side effect of oestrogen from the contraceptive pill—will inevitably hasten the process of scientific and political involvement in reproduction.

The state planners will have undreamt of and unparalleled power. They will dress it up to look like power for a parent or patient, but we know what will happen when genetic tests reveal instability, illness, homosexuality or low IQ. The nightmare kingdom will be governed by quality controls and perfection tests and the 21st century will see the emergence of a genetic underclass of uninsurable, unbreedable, unwanted and unmanned people. In this caste system, suitors, partners and predators of each person will eye his genes with either envy or contempt. Prisoners of heredity and slaves of a manipulated reproductive system, our British birthright will be replaced by the right birth.

Eugenics leads to the suppression of variation and difference. From laws which create a genetic database for the whole population, it is only a small step to laws requiring the data to be lodged with the state and on to compulsion and elimination of undesirables. Domestic eugenics will naturally be packaged with all the decorum that public relations specialists can muster and will lead to the routine screening of every pregnancy, raising ethical and therefore political questions every bit as complex as the bioethical and scientific ones.

Let me briefly make some suggestions. First, we should challenge the argument that genetic testing opens up phenomenal medical opportunities. The medical benefits of some genetic tests are far from clear cut, but the dangers are already apparent in the United States, where tests for breast cancer are being marketed direct to members of the public, with adverse consequences for health insurance cover.

The British health system and social care, which have traditionally been provided on a collective basis, have been systematically eroded. In future, fuelled by the west's declining populations and their reduced contribution to collective forms of care, more and more people will rely on private individual insurance cover. If genetic testing becomes routine, many people will find themselves excluded from the ranks of the insurable or asked to pay prohibitively high premiums for conditions that they cannot prevent and may not develop.

We must also urgently provide for greater confidentiality. The law does not make it clear who should and who should not have access to genetic information. General practitioners, the family and insurance companies may all claim rights of access, but who is to decide, and how? A privacy law is required.

I welcome the Government's response, albeit belated, to the Select Committee's recommendation that a human genetics commission should be established, but it will need teeth. It is not good enough for it to be merely advisory; regulation needs to be transparent. Too much of the debate has already taken place in the seclusion of rooms that close their doors to public participation. I have already said that the HFEA would not be a good model on which to build.

One of the first candidates for a going over should be the Association of British Insurers. It was asked to produce voluntary regulations and it has failed to do so. It will not be enough to rely on self-regulation—there is too much vested interest and too much money involved for that. People with inherited diseases, and their descendants, will be denied life insurance, health insurance and even, in the long term, mortgages, if we do not stop genetic tests being made available to insurers, employers, banks and building societies. That is why legislation will be required.

I shall conclude where I began, on the subject of animals. Last year I tabled a motion in the House asking for food products that have been genetically produced to be labelled. Consumers have a right to know that their bacon has been reared from an animal that has been commercially exploited and genetically engineered, with human genes inserted into its make-up. As far as I am aware, the Government are doing nothing to monitor the long-term effects on people who are unknowingly eating unmarked products on a daily basis. There should be an outright ban on the genetic manipulation of food. Millions of people are revolted by the obscenities of modern farming methods. The agricultural workhouses, sheds and factories are a disgrace and should be closed.

People also need to be alerted to the dangers of xenotransplants—animal to human transplants—which are now technically possible and likely to begin soon. The Government need to tell us when their technical report into those issues will be published. They need to address public alarm at the fact that, for example, pig pathogens will be transmitted to humans, which has horrendous implications. Following the Nuffield council's decision to approve such practices in principle, politicians need to raise serious questions about the possibility that cross-species transplants might lead to the introduction of dangerous new diseases into the human population. Possible infectious agents include viruses, bacteria, fungi and prion proteins—the agent thought to be responsible for Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease and bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

There are alternatives to xenotransplantation. Only 18 per cent. of the population carry organ donor cards, but another 54 per cent. say that they would. As National Transplant Week approaches, would not that system be a better and more cost-effective approach? It would avoid all the dangers of under-researched and ethically dubious approaches. The Nuffield council states that "species boundaries, in any case, are not inviolable."

I wonder how many hon. Members, or their constituents, would have agreed with that statement had anybody bothered to ask them.

Cross-species manipulation also has serious implications for biodiversity—the range of genetically different animals and plants available. Genetic engineering could lead to a decline in biodiversity, with unpredictable consequences through the unbalancing of ecosystems. As those effects are so difficult to predict, it is vital to have internationally agreed and enforceable rules for research protocols and field trials, especially in developing countries where there is often an absence of regulation. In 1992, the United Nations convention on biological diversity agreed that there should be a biosafety protocol—but, like so many much-needed international initiatives, it has simply never materialised.

Parliament must act decisively and urgently if we are properly to protect our sources of food and the welfare of both other species and our own. We must resist the hideous new world in which a pregnant woman who is genetically screened is pressurised into aborting a baby with a genetic disorder. We must protect those who could become a genetic underclass. Through proper regulation, we must provide confidentiality and privacy, prevent the misuse of treatments and insist on the highest levels of ethics and integrity.

Parliament does not have a good track record on respecting and protecting human life—170,000 babies annually disembodied through abortion bear testimony to that. So, too, do the 120,000 laboratory deaths of human embryos. We have trivialised human nature and denied natural law. Failure to check the geneticists, as we have failed to check the eugenicists, will, I fear, lead to the abolition of man.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): It is an enormous pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton), not just because I agree with almost everything that he has said, but because in saying it he punctures the smug conspiracy of those who believe that people who hold the views that he and I do should not be allowed to express them. We are told that what we say is weird. We are told, "Good grief—you want to bring religion or morals into these things?"

Geneticists may be wonderful men, as the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) said, and doubtless they do terrific work. [Interruption.] I have met some of the people concerned and of course they do marvellous work, but once information is available and techniques have been pioneered, not only those men and women will do that work. I wish to identify myself with what the hon. Member for Mossley Hill said. He is saying, not that the work is wrong, but that we must consider other aspects. I enormously welcome his brave, honest speech.

The round-up of the science position given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Science and Technology justifies the fact that the Office of Science and Technology is now home where it should be, in the Department of Trade and Industry. It was a good move; my hon. Friend and his officials have made a great success of it and it is unlikely to be reversed by a Government of any colour because there is now a coherence that may have been lacking in the different places where the science department has been.

Until now, the hon. Member for East Kilbride has—at least so far as I have been able to read—avoided the Dutch auction that characterises most political debate, especially as we approach the general election, but I am afraid that he fell off that high wire today. He engaged in a Dutch auction—without figures, of course, but suggesting that the election of a Labour Government would usher in more money for the science community. It is not a very good idea to do that.

Mr. Ingram: I did not do that.

Mr. Hughes: You did not mention figures, but anyone listening to what you said would come away with the conclusion that that was what you meant, and if that was not what you meant—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Order. No pronouns: "hon. Members".

Mr. Hughes: I beg your pardon, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Anyone would believe that that was what the hon. Gentleman meant. It is not a good idea to make such a suggestion, because no one in the science community believes a word of it. No one believes that a Labour Government would do that, and people would worry about whether Labour would run the Department as efficiently and whether as much money would come out as does currently.

I want to talk about the willingness of companies to invest in science research and development. Before doing so, I apologise to the House for the fact that, on completing my speech, I must leave to go to my constituency. One of the pleasures of having a constituency so close to London is that one can take part in Friday debates and be in the constituency for a substantial part of the day. The irritation is that one must leave debates as quickly as possible to keep appointments.

I want to talk about the willingness of companies to invest in science research and development. A 1980 study of 16 major American oil and chemical companies showed, not surprisingly, that the more they invested in pure science, the higher their productivity grew. In 1986, a study of 911 large United States technology companies showed that the companies that performed pure science outperformed in their figures those that had neglected it. That will surprise no one.

British industry should learn that lesson. It cannot rely on the Government. Of course there will be a spat between both sides as to what is invested and how much money can be spent on science, but if companies want to succeed in not only British but global markets, they must invest in pure science research and development; it is in their interests to do so. I hope that that view will be expressed widely in the debate and elsewhere.

Mr. Ingram: If I understand the hon. Gentleman correctly, he is quoting from an article by Dr. Terence Kealey. Does he accept Dr. Kealey's conclusion that the Government should not invest at all in basic research but should just let industry get on with it?

Mr. Hughes: No, I found the conclusions at the end of the article muddled, but thought that the quotations from the studies were interesting, so I lifted them out of the article. That is a usual thing to do for speeches. A balance can be struck between what Governments can and cannot do. What they cannot but may be tempted to do is to try to rig the taxation system to encourage that. It has been tried before, but it has never worked and it has always been misused. Against a background of neutral taxation, companies have to make those decisions for the right reasons for themselves.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: Is the hon. Gentleman aware of the research that has been done in the United States on the efficacy of tax credits to encourage research and development there? If so, does he think that that research is wrong?

Mr. Hughes: The hon. Lady and I have debated that matter in the House before. As I said at the debate last October or the previous October, that research is inconclusive.

I wish to discuss the opportunities and dangers of identifying human genes. The opportunities include curing and perhaps eradicating painful and debilitating diseases. The dangers include the point at which genetic screening becomes a guarantee of perfection, with designer babies and giving powers to the state, individuals or doctors that they should not have, as the hon. Member for Mossley Hill described.

The liberal view is that the state should control this entire matter. An article in The Sunday Telegraph dated April 1996 said that liberals "believe in handing all decisions about things like genetic testing to the state, which was the institution that sterilised and murdered millions in the 1920s and 1930s in the name of eugenics. Conservatives"— with a small "c"—

"believe in leaving such matters to the individual."

That is a much better way to go, for reasons that the hon. Member for Mossley Hill put much more succinctly than I could. The basic ethics of genetic engineering are, to say the least, suspect. Judaeo-Christian morality is based on the dignity, character and individuality of each human being, all of which are diminished if we arrogate the power of creation.

I agree with what the hon. Member for East Kilbride said about insurance companies. I do not quarrel with the fact that people may want genetic information for their own use, but it is essentially private information. The record of insurance companies on self-regulation and restraint—and, moreover, on keeping to what they say they will do in relation to Government wishes—is not good, so I am not sure that self-regulation is the way we should go.

[Mr. Hughes]

I agree with the Nuffield Council on Bio-ethics, which called for the insurance industry not to pry into the results of people's genetic tests. Last September, the Association of British Insurers told the Select Committee that it wanted to see all the results. One can see why: it wants to use them to avoid risk. I take the simple view that neither insurance companies nor employers have a right to what I regard as private information. It belongs to the individuals to which it refers.

At a conference on biodiversity, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales criticised the "confidence bordering on arrogance" of the developers of genetically engineered plants and animals and said that he was "profoundly apprehensive" about their products' possible effects. People are entitled to choose what they eat and to know what has been done to it. Parliament is entitled to ask what is being done and who is checking on what is being done. What is the safety in the long term? There have been too many scares and too many revelations of practices which, with the benefit of hindsight, would not have been countenanced had we known what the effects would be—BSE, salmonella in eggs and all sorts of other things. We cannot just walk blindly into allowing genetically altered food to be consumed by people without knowing what the effects will be.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: Should we not be addressing the question of whether we need the technology of genetically engineered food? We have been producing large surpluses of a variety of foods for decades under the common agricultural policy. Before we allow this technology to become widespread, should we not ask whether we need it in the first place?

Mr. Hughes: That is a different question because it relates to economics; it is not a question for this debate because it does not alter the ethics, morality or practicality of what I am talking about.

There is another side to this: in some parts of the world, the technology may produce answers to the problems of starvation. By eradicating some of the diseases that regularly wipe out crops in Africa and in other parts of the world, we may be able to produce real answers to the problems of starvation. It is a huge moral dilemma, but it has to be tackled—and tackled carefully.

I conclude by referring to big science. Big science eats up big money and it has uncertain practicality. However, there are important applications and they are, as the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) said, projects that simply could not be funded by anyone other than a collection of Governments. The Ministers involved deserve credit for keeping us in these projects, which is not easy in view of the amount of money that they eat up. Loosely argued and rather generously funded schemes are not only bad economics; they can be bad science as well.

In relation to CERN and the hadron collider, the hon. Member for Motherwell, South has done a huge service to the science community and to the House. Obviously, the hon. Gentleman is in agreement with my hon. Friend the Minister. I have read the letter from my hon. Friend to Peter Williams, the chairman of the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council. I hope that the hon. Member for East Kilbride will be able to join in the consensus between the parties.

The whole of the science community should get a copy of Hansard and read what the hon. Member for Motherwell, South said, because he summed up what should be written on its walls. If those people think that anyone is going to deviate from that and come up with the money for what I regard as fanciful schemes, they are profoundly mistaken. The money for this is limited and CERN has to understand that it has to bring in Japan and the United States, that it has to widen the scope of what it is doing, that it has to look afresh, if necessary, at the time scale of what it is doing, or the project will end up being cancelled. The words of the hon. Member for Motherwell, South are wise and pay tribute to the huge experience that he has brought to bear on science matters in the House.

Dr. Lynne Jones: I hope that members of the public will read the Hansard report of the debate today, including the contribution of my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray). However, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will also commend to members of the public the report of the Select Committee on this matter, which the majority of its members were fully behind. The report shows that the process on which my hon. Friend suggests that we embark has already taken place. That is apparent from the letter from the former Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, which is printed in the report. The Committee report was agreed on the same day as the House voted to increase the salaries of Members of Parliament and Ministers at a cost of about £6 million. That is a far greater liability for the taxpayer than our report's proposals regarding the PPARC.

Mr. Hughes: The hon. Lady's final point is rather fanciful.

Mr. Ingram: How did you vote?

Mr. Hughes: I voted the same way as most of the shadow Cabinet. That point is rather fanciful when one considers the financing of CERN. Whether the Select Committee is right or wrong, having played some part in negotiating the basis and funding of the large hadron collider, the hon. Member for Motherwell, South talks enormous common sense. Whatever the Select Committee may think, and despite the evidence that it received, I believe that the project will be in danger of collapse if the PPARC does not follow the hon. Gentleman's line. Most Governments who have made major contributions to the project would follow the same reasoning. That is an important point. I am sorry that the hon. Member for Motherwell, South is only now entering the Chamber, after I have praised him to the skies. He will be missed in future debates.

This morning's important debate has proved that, despite the cynicism of the press—I do not think that journalists like to work on Fridays—Friday debates on important science issues can work well.

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): I begin by declaring my registered interest as a non-executive director of the Welding institute, which is a technology transfer organisation.

Today I shall concentrate mainly on the subject of human genetics. Other hon. Members have touched upon many of the issues that I intended to raise, but there is no doubt that genetics is a big subject and that advances in that field will affect all our lives.

We shall be able to identify not only genes carrying diseases to which we have a predisposition, such as Huntingdon's disease, sickle cell anaemia or cystic fibrosis, but diseases to which we are susceptible. We shall be able to make better-informed choices about our life styles, knowing whether we are likely to suffer from heart disease, cancer or arthritis in later life. As we know our genetic make-up and that of our partners, we shall be able to assess the risks for our children.

The debate has illustrated the fact that the identification of genes and the knowledge of what they do sometimes present hard, new moral choices. I strongly believe that a woman who is carrying a child with a known genetic abnormality should be able to have the foetus aborted if she wishes. However, it is also very important that a newly pregnant woman who is offered a test realises at the outset that, if the test is positive, she will have to make an often uncomfortable decision about whether to opt for an abortion.

I know that many women who are offered amniocentesis tests are not told beforehand that, if they are found to be carrying a Down's syndrome child or a baby with another known abnormality, the only treatment that modern medicine can provide at present is an abortion. I am arguing for a woman's right to choose, but I believe that that choice should be as informed as possible. That is not a cheap option, because it means that anyone who is offered a test must also be given counselling. As more genes are identified with specific diseases, more tests will become available and counselling and advice will become more important.

The requirement must also apply to the commercial sector. It has already been mentioned that a company called University Diagnostics is offering genetic tests through the post to identify carriers of the cystic fibrosis gene. I believe that that company is reputable and it offers counselling and to send the results to the family doctor, but the law should be strengthened in that area and no company should be able to offer such a test without mandatory counselling, not only after the test but before.

The advice that is given must be impartial. I know that when the Select Committee considered the issue, great concern was expressed that hard-pressed NHS managers, trying to balance a budget, might be tempted to persuade women carrying children with disabling diseases such as cystic fibrosis to have their babies aborted. The temptation would exist because disabilities are expensive and the symptoms are not only distressing for the child and its parents, but time-consuming and difficult to alleviate. The manager of a health authority that had no such patients might find his or her budget stretching more easily. It is essential that women are able to make informed choices without pressures of any kind and I hope that the new Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing, ably led by Professor Polkinghorne—who is, incidentally, one of my constituents—will examine that issue at an early stage.

The new genetics will not only tell us what diseases we shall get, but those that we would do well to avoid. When we can identify individuals who are susceptible to heart disease or cancer, they can be given much better medical advice about their life styles. Diet, exercise and avoidance of stress are more important to some individuals than to others. It is desirable that, once the tests become available, people should be persuaded to have them done, but if the information gained is used to discriminate against them at any stage, people might be unwilling to undergo the tests. The Government have introduced new insurance schemes, and the recent leaked letter from the kids in the Treasury suggests that that might be one of the ways in which they will try to reduce expenditure on the welfare state.

The new emphasis on private insurance to replace the welfare state poses many threats to susceptible individuals. At present, there is a consensus among insurers in the UK not to ask individuals to take genetic tests, and that has been confirmed by the most recent letter from the Association of British Insurers. However, they also demand that if an individual has had such a test, they are told the results. That demand has certain consequences. For example, if I had to disclose to an insurance company that I carried the breast cancer gene—I hope I do not, but I might—that would mean that any premiums for life insurance or mortgage insurance would be heavily weighted against me. That would make it much less likely that I would want to take the test, but my doctor would prefer to know and would want me to know that I was susceptible so that I could take preventive action.

The insurance companies' policy is against the population's interest as a whole. I can understand the reason behind the policy—the companies justify their behaviour through what they call adverse selection. They argue that if people know that they have a high risk of succumbing to a disease, they are more likely to insure themselves against such a calamity. The insurance companies say that they want to know everything that we know, which sounds reasonable, but is not conducive to sensible behaviour by the population at large. The Select Committee felt that that was an urgent problem, and our report suggests that the insurance companies should be given a year to solve the problem with consumer interest groups, such as the excellent Genetics Interest Group, which has been mentioned already today. We presented a possible solution and drew attention to the threat that a solution might be imposed if the groups did not manage to reach agreement.

I understand that talks were taking place and good progress was being made until the Government published their first response to our report, which said in paragraph 101:

> "The Government does not agree with the Committee that the deadline should be imposed on the insurance industry for the development of an acceptable solution on the use of genetic information for insurance purposes."

It all seems to have gone very quiet since then, with the exception of the letter that was most recently published, which told us nothing new at all. It contained precisely what the insurance companies said when they gave evidence to the Committee well over a year ago.

In the Government's response to our second report, they said that contact with the Association of British Insurers had been maintained and that it was understood that an announcement could be expected shortly. I know that the Minister is trying to maintain pressure on the ABI, but far greater pressure may have to be exerted. Too many people who are already disadvantaged because of their genetic predisposition are suffering discrimination, and it will rapidly worsen as more scientific discoveries are made.

[Mrs. Anne Campbell]

Not only insurance companies are discriminatory. Employers are guilty on occasions. If an employer discovers that one of his or her employees is suffering from a predisposition to a disease that may involve long periods off work, we must ask what the employee's rights are. I certainly find it alarming that another person, possibly my employer, could find out about my genetic make-up just by taking a hair off my shoulder and testing it for various genetic diseases. I find it even more alarming that someone might act on that information against my interest.

The Genetics Interest Group has pointed out that the combination of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and the lack of regulation of the non-medical uses of genetic information might encourage discrimination. Under the terms of the Act, employers are under an obligation to make allowance for the special needs of disabled employees, which we all support. However, given that that is so, an unscrupulous employer might try to ensure that such obligations did not fall on him by refusing employment to presymptomatic individuals—those who will or might develop a genetic condition.

It is a pity, therefore, that the Government seem determined to refuse to extend protection to presymptomatic individuals in the same way that protection has been extended to people with disabilities. The Genetics Interest Group has expressed its disappointment at the Government's lack of action on that set of issues. During the passage of the Disability Discrimination Bill, the Government said that the concerns would be addressed by their response to the Science and Technology Committee inquiry. They have blatantly failed to do that. In fact, their response to the Committee's suggestions on employment was totally inadequate. They suggested that employers might be encouraged to draw up a code of conduct. In other words, employers could do whatever they liked.

It is surely of fundamental importance that genetic information should belong only to individuals and their families. It should be a criminal offence to use genetic information without an individual's consent. Employers should not be allowed to demand that employees consent to a genetic test as a condition of employment, with, of course, certain exclusions that we all understand, where it is important for the health and safety of employees or customers of the company.

It has already been mentioned that we could create a society in which people are disadvantaged by their genes. Unless we take steps now and put proper protection in place, we could finish up with a genetic underclass. That underclass will be unable to take out life, health or mortgage insurance, which probably means that its members will not be able to buy a house. They may be unable to find employment, and may even be considered too expensive for a doctor to take on as a patient, so they may be denied medical help, too. Surely, instead of discriminating against people in that way, we should celebrate human diversity and do everything that we can to bring about social cohesion by including people in the general run of life.

I am glad that the Government have had second thoughts about the Human Genetics Advisory Commission, as there are many serious issues to consider that cannot be adequately tackled by the multitude of groups that they had already set up.

The speech by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) illustrated well why such a commission is necessary. That speech was emotive and expressed a certain point of view—one that is not, I am pleased to say, shared by the population as a whole. The fears and prejudices that the hon. Gentleman expressed were those that I hope the commission will work hard to dispel.

I hope that the commission will work within a statutory framework to set regulation, to license commercial companies and groups within the national health service that offer genetic tests and therapies, and to consider in depth some of the difficult problems that the debate can treat only superficially.

So far, I have dealt with issues that are arising now. We are at an interim stage, in which we can identify gene sequences and are beginning to find out the effects that some of them have. We can already develop tests for some of the common genetic disorders. The next step will take us on to a much more beneficial phase, when we shall be able to use genetic therapies to cure the diseases themselves. Until now, the pharmaceutical industry has often provided us with medicines that treat the symptoms rather than the diseases. Gene therapists, however, offer us the exciting possibilities of making changes to the genes that will cure the diseases altogether.

When the Select Committee visited the United States, we were shown examples of research that had been done to reduce cancerous brain tumours untreatable by other methods. We know that there is a genetic therapy available for cystic fibrosis, and others will quickly follow. Pharmaceutical companies are investing millions of pounds in those areas of research, and those advances represent real progress for the human race.

SmithKline Beecham sent us a brief for the debate, which pointed out that in the United States £60 billion a year is spent on the care and treatment of people with Alzheimer's disease. If we could find a genetic therapy for that disease, it would not only relieve much personal misery, but enable many people to lead productive lives for much longer—and, of course, save a huge amount of money for the national health service. That investment would be money well spent.

The exploitation of intellectual property rights needs to take place within the correct regulatory framework. That framework must give protection to industrialists who wish to exploit their ideas and inventions commercially, without being undercut by a competitor who has not spent the resources on research. The regulations must be strictly defined for that purpose, but when we draw rings round the patent, they must not be drawn so widely as to exclude others who wish to research in related but different areas.

My hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) has recently spent a great deal of time studying the European directive, and because I felt that it was safe in his capable hands, I have not examined it in detail. There have been discussions in the European Parliament, the United States and elsewhere about the ethics of patenting life.

We must tread carefully in that area, because the issues are so sensitive, but we must take note of what the industrial and commercial companies say about their need to protect their intellectual property. It is a question of getting the balance right, and the Select Committee's suggestion provides the right balance. I hope that the European directive will meet the conditions that we set.

I would like to mention the human genome project, a major international collaboration that I am pleased is progressing smoothly. Like many others, I was alarmed when some American scientists got the idea that genetic codes might one day be valuable, and so began to take out patent applications to try to make money out of them. It was decided that it was not legal to patent a gene that did not have a known utility, and the patent applications were dropped.

We then saw the ingenuity of companies such as Human Genome Sciences, which tried to make its database of genetic sequences available to researchers on the basis that if a researcher uncovered a utility, the company would be given first refusal to exploit it. That practice, I am glad to say, met with strong disapproval from other pharmaceutical companies, and another company decided to make its gene database completely open without any precondition. That seems to have put paid to Human Genome Sciences' idea, and we are all pleased about that.

I hope that the European directive will do as the Committee suggested. We felt that a new genetic test or therapy should be patentable, as that is the only way in which commercial companies could protect their investments in research. The gene sequence on which the research was based would also be part of that patent. However, we also felt that another company—or the same company developing a different test or therapy based on the same gene sequence—should also be able to take out a patent without having to pay a licence fee to the first company. I very much hope that our colleagues in the European Parliament will consider our solution to the problem to be correct, as it offers the best opportunity to derive the maximum benefit from the new genetics.

Others have spoken about the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council inquiry, but I do not propose to do so. I wanted to concentrate first on human genetics and secondly on science policy. The difficulty that we are all facing today is that this is such a wide-ranging debate and it is perhaps becoming a little fragmented. When the White Paper "Realising our Potential" was published, I was a little sceptical about some of its aspects. But I welcomed it as the first step for many years by the Government to try to put a structural framework around our science policy. That was lacking, and I believe that a previous Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has paid tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray), whose ideas expressed in our manifesto at the previous election led to many of the reforms that have been introduced by the Government since then. I also welcome technology foresight.

Despite the Minister's encouraging words about all the good things that are happening, the science budget is under pressure from all quarters. It is worth pointing out that the OST is responsible for only £1.1 billion out of a total annual budget within the Government of £5.7 billion. It is therefore impossible for us to ignore the pressures on the budget.

Other hon. Members have mentioned that university funding for science—not only through the research councils, but through the higher education funding councils—is suffering badly. That funding provides the basic infrastructure for scientific research in universities, and it is used also to pay for overheads for specific research projects. Over a three-year period, those overheads have been transferred to the research councils. But what has happened to the HEFCs' budgets is catastrophic in terms of the proposed cuts in capital expenditure of about 50 per cent. over three years, and cuts in funding per student. That funding has been cut by one third in the past 10 years, according to figures produced by the Association of University Teachers.

What is the reaction of industrialists? SmithKline Beecham has said that too little is spent on science funding and that there is a lack of trained personnel in the United Kingdom. The company also said that the pharmaceutical industry finds it difficult to recruit research and development candidates in the United Kingdom who are well trained on modern equipment. Surely that is symptomatic of the fact that the modern equipment is not available in university research laboratories.

I am cynical enough to believe that the sole purpose of the prior options review was to reduce spending. The statistics in the forward look show that the Government's total spend has come down from £6.4 billion to £5.3 billion a year in the 12 years between 1985-86 to 1997-98. The prior options review is a way of reducing expenditure by privatisation—selling off research laboratories—and has nothing to do with preserving the quality of the science that the institutes produce.

On industrial and commercial spending on research and development, from the recently published research and development scoreboard, we can see that United Kingdom firms are doing badly compared with our international competitors. The New Scientist had a headline, "Britain slides down the R and D league table". The magazine showed that the top 300 companies in the world ploughed back 4.4 per cent. of sales revenue into research and development. The 18 British companies mentioned averaged only 2.5 per cent., which was well below the general average, and only Glaxo was in the top 50 in the global league table. That is surprising and worrying in view of the fact that British companies have increased their profits in the past year or so. One would expect that if they had the right attitude and policy towards research and development, some of that increase in profits would have gone into research spending and not into the shareholders' pockets.

I could say many other things, but I do not want to prolong my speech as other hon. Members have valuable contributions to make. I must, however, pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South. Until he said that this was likely to be his last contribution to a debate on science, I had not appreciated that we might not hear him speak in the Chamber on this subject again as he is due to retire at the next general election. I pay tribute to the work that he has done and to his enormously valuable expertise, from which we members of the Science and Technology Committee have benefited. Perhaps I have not always agreed with my hon. Friend, but the argument has always been extremely civilised and probably much better informed from his point of view than from mine. He has made a marvellous contribution in recent Parliaments, and I am sure that other hon. Members will join me in wishing him well in the future and hoping that he will continue to contribute to the important work that he has done on science.

1.17 pm

Dr. Lynne Jones (Birmingham, Selly Oak): I begin by associating myself wholeheartedly with the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) about the contribution of my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray). I first met him at a Labour party conference meeting about science. Our relationship began at that point and I was pleased that he acknowledged that I might have some contribution to make in developing science policy. I can honestly say that my membership of the Select Committee on Science and Technology can be attributed to his involvement and I very much enjoyed being a member of the Select Committee, which has done some excellent work.

As I am starting off with warm words, I must also say that I agreed wholeheartedly with the Minister when he welcomed the commissioning of the report from the Science Policy Research Unit by the Treasury. It is a significant step forward that the Treasury should be starting to consider the contribution that public funding of basic science can make to a successful economy. I hope that that belated recognition may make life easier for the Minister as he embarks on negotiations in the public spending round. Until now—and he did it again this week during Trade and Industry questions—he has had to argue that the Government's commitment to basic science is demonstrated by the fact that, in the next few years, there is a cash-flat budget, which means, in reality, that the science budget is scheduled for further cuts. I hope that, armed with the report from the Science Policy Research Unit, he may be able to do better in future spending rounds. I wish him luck in that.

That will impinge on the Government's response to the Select Committee report on the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council. I hope that we will have an opportunity to debate that report and the Government response to it in full, so I do not propose to spend much time on it, but I point out that the report supports the argument for reversing the decline in Government support for research and development, which, sadly, as hon. Members have mentioned, means that Britain is now at the bottom of the G7 league in relation to expenditure on basic science.

Notwithstanding the report from the SPRU, there is other evidence to suggest how important such expenditure is. In Japan, and this is well recognised internationally, business investment in research and development has been well resourced. It is far higher than business investment in this country, to our regret. There is evidence, however, that Japanese firms have not got the best out of their business research and development because Japan lacks the basic science infrastructure that this country, fortunately, has built up over many years.

Far from having a cash-flat budget, the Japanese are planning to increase their science budget by 50 per cent. in the next few years, increasing their spending well above inflation and, interestingly, proposing large-scale expenditure on particle physics. There is nothing more basic than particle physics. It will have economic spin-offs, but, as far as we know, there are no obvious economic benefits from understanding more about how the universe was created or the structure of the atom. It creates that science infrastructure, trains well-educated scientists and excites public interest in science. The Japanese are recognising that. They are boosting their spending. There is every argument that we should follow suit and not allow the reverse trend to continue.

The report on human genetics is important. It is now 12 months since the Committee published it. It was welcomed with considerable acclaim. An editorial in the science journal Nature said:

"The British Parliament has been well-served by the House of Commons Select Committee on Science and Technology."

It said that the Committee's conclusions were "panic free" and its "arguments intelligent". It added that "the Government should listen."

Sadly, as we have heard in the debate, the Government did not immediately listen. There are welcome signs that they are beginning to listen and I hope that this debate will be the start of much more public interest in this sector of Government policy.

That quotation also demonstrates something that I have learnt in my short time in Parliament—that one of the most effective parts of the operation of Parliament is the Select Committees, in which we concentrate on educating ourselves, understanding the issues and generating a consensus, which generally means that there is unanimity on Committee reports. That was certainly the case for the report on human genetics. Conservative Members were able to go against the deregulation grain which seems to be engraved on the hearts of many Conservative Members and accept that if we are to develop the science of genetics and all its potential for human well-being, we must regulate it.

We heard the speech of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) earlier. I have much to disagree with in what he says, but he expresses a view which has considerable support among Members of Parliament. I have here copies of early-day motions, some of which were tabled by the hon. Gentleman, on labelling of foods made using gene technology, gene technology and the threat to humanity, conservation of cocoa germ plasm and other issues relating to the development of genetics.

Perhaps most significant was an early-day motion signed by 106 hon. Members expressing support for the European Parliament in not agreeing to the directive on biotechnology. The fact that so many of our colleagues are concerned about the patenting of genetic material means that we must deal with those concerns. We have a new version of the directive and I very much hope that it will encompass the recommendations made by our Select Committee.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge explained, because it is tremendously important to encourage business to invest in genetic research, which has tremendous potential, the Committee agreed that human gene sequences should be patentable, but that the patent protection should be restricted to a particular application of that sequence. We said that if another discoverer came along with a separate application, he should also be eligible for a separate patent and should not have to pay royalties to the original holder. That proposal deals with the scope that should be allowed on the first patent of a gene. It is important that we do that if we are to generate public support and support among our colleagues in the House and in Europe for the patenting of human genetic material. Sadly, the Government did not agree that there should be specific provision to that effect.

I hope that the Minister will reconsider, because there is widespread anxiety about genetics. There are scare stories about genetic determinism, an underclass, eugenics, designer babies and so on. The public mind tends to focus on those aspects of the science rather than the potential that it has to improve the lives of ordinary people, to save a great deal of money for our health service and to allow our companies to become world leaders in these technologies, with beneficial effects in terms of wealth creation in this country. That is why the recommendation to establish the Human Genetics Advisory Commission to examine all the ethical issues was crucial. The Government opposed that initially.

When we asked Ministers to come back and explain their reasons for rejecting our recommendation, I was interested to hear the Secretary of State for Health say that he was concerned that he would be setting up an unelected quango. That was a bit rich coming from the Secretary of State at the Department of Health, which has a plethora of such bodies which have by and large replaced organisations that formerly included elected representatives who could participate in taking decisions. But, ultimately, some common sense prevailed. Perhaps there was also a recognition in Committee that when the chief scientist—who was adamant that there were mechanisms within government for co-ordinating responses to questions raised in our report—was asked to define those mechanisms, he was unable to give an answer. Nevertheless, as a result of those further hearings, the Government have now said that they will set up an advisory commission. We always accepted that, in the initial stages, any such body could well have only advisory functions. That was largely because we did not want its setting up to be delayed and if legislation was required, that would have meant a delay.

Although we are worried about delays, we are also concerned about the lack of priority that the Government seem to have given to setting up such bodies. In order to see that, we have only to refer to the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing, which was first announced by the previous Secretary of State for Health in 1994. It is only in the past few weeks that there has been an announcement on that committee's composition—it has taken two years even to set it up. I very much hope that the Minister will give an assurance today that it will not take as long as that to set up the new commission that has finally been accepted.

Thankfully, insurance is not such an important issue for people in this country as it is for those in countries such as America because we have a welfare state and a health service that treat people on the basis of need rather than ability to pay. But there are moves, which I regret, to require people to take out more personal insurance, so it is important that we address the subject.

As we have heard, the Committee said that the insurance industry should be given 12 months to come up with proposals. The Government did not agree and 12 months later we seem to have made little progress. Professor Peter Harper of the Institute of Medical Genetics at the university of Wales college of medicine said in a letter to the Association of British Insurers:

"I have to say that during the five years that I have been involved with this topic and trying to persuade the insurance industry to consider the issues seriously, I have not met any willingness within the industry to modify its position or to have any meaningful dialogue with myself or other professionals in medical genetics."

The only time that we seem to get a response from the insurance industry is when its position is highlighted in debates such as today's. There is also some consensus across the House that, ultimately, we may have to introduce legislation preventing discrimination on genetic grounds. In view of the laxity of the insurance industry's response, we may need to consider that—I hope that it will be one of the first issues that the commission considers.

There are similar considerations in relation to employment. I was pleased to note that in his opening speech, the Minister mentioned the need to look at discrimination against potential employees. There is little protection for people seeking to gain employment if they have a predisposition to a certain condition. As my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge has said, such information can be found merely by testing a hair taken from someone's shoulder.

One subject that has not been raised in today's debate involves the arrangements in the national health service for clinical genetic services. The Committee expressed anxiety that, because of the removal of the regional health authorities, the development of those specialist services might be placed in jeopardy because purchasers might not give them a high priority. The Government need to consider that, especially as they have not ruled out in their reply the possibility that such services be commissioned by GP fundholders.

The Committee had grave reservations about going down that path. We wanted the Government to set up a quality assurance scheme for national health services, very much along the lines of that for breast testing. I know that that does not fall within the Minister's responsibility, but it is an important issue and has resource implications for the development of those services.

The existence of the national health service is very beneficial in encouraging industry to invest in these areas. The fact that there is a national health service enables programmes to be developed with Government with proper safeguards. That is a great asset to the country in forging ahead in science. In this country we value the NHS highly, but we may not have valued it as a potential asset in relation to business development. I am baffled as to why we should not do so, given that our most successful industries are the pharmaceutical industries, which rely on demand from the health service, where they know that there will be a market for their products.

I welcome the tone of some of the Minister's remarks and I hope that he will take seriously the points made in the debate to the effect that we must generate public confidence. I hope that the commission will play an important role in that.

We cannot value highly enough the precious asset of our country's science base. I hope that the Minister and his Government will see themselves as safeguarding that asset, not allowing its decline.

1.36 pm

Mr. Alan W. Williams (Carmarthen): It is a pleasure to follow two of my colleagues on the Select Committee, my hon. Friends the Members for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) and for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones). I thank them for their excellent discipline in allowing me plenty of time to develop my comments on the Science and Technology Select Committee genetics report, and on science policy.

[Mr. Alan W. Williams]

I associate myself with the comments made by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge at the end of her speech about the contribution of my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) to our science debates, and especially to the work of the Select Committee. I hope that it will not be his last speech in a major science debate.

I understood from what the Prime Minister said last night that the general election is likely to be held next spring—perhaps even in May—in which case we may well hold debates on prior options or our Natural Environment Research Council inquiry or science policy in general. The contributions of my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South to all our debates are extremely knowledgeable and well informed, and he is a heavyweight in the Select Committee. I echo the feelings of my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge that whenever we differ—as happens from time to time—we do so in the full knowledge that his factual base on those issues is often much stronger than mine.

I move on to our report on genetics. I found our 12-month study fascinating. I studied some genetics as part of my chemistry degree course when I was 20 or 21 and found it fascinating. During that course, I attended a lecture by Sir Francis Crick on his work of the early 1950s, elucidating the structure of DNA. That discovery is a great milestone in scientific history and Britain's contribution, particularly that of Cambridge's microbiology laboratory, has been significant. It was fascinating for me to revisit the subject 30 years on.

The progress that has been made, particularly on the human genome project, is incredible. The speed of elucidating the structures of DNA sequences is unbelievable. We realised back in the 1960s that there were 3 billion nucleotide units. In a sense, that is a bit like the Bible but times 100. It is a case of elucidating each of those initials right the way through, so I thought that it would take an eternity, but we are now well on the way to sequencing the whole of the human genome.

Part of my academic fascination is in looking at the nematode world, and at mouse, human and fish DNA. It fills me with humility to see that mouse and human DNA are so similar while fish DNA is superior to ours. I was startled to find that 90 per cent. of human DNA is junk and only 10 per cent. contains codes for useful genes. The other 90 per cent. is either redundant or fulfils some strange purpose—we do not yet understand why it exists—whereas 90 per cent. of fish DNA is useful. We tend to think of ourselves as the most evolved species and the cleverest by far, but that fact fills me with humility.

Throughout our work I have been impressed that Britain has such a good position in the league table on genetics research. On our visit to the National Institute of Health in Washington, we were told that, while the United States is well at the top of the world league and responsible for some 80 per cent. of all the international work on genetics, Britain takes second place and is responsible for some 10 per cent. of the work. So we certainly take the lead in Europe.

In terms of medical applications, this excellent debate has tended to concentrate on genetic defects and screening, and what can be offered in terms of choices, particularly for mothers who want to know whether their child will have a hereditary defect. I accept the comments of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) about the state of the science in 1996 but in 10 or 20 years' time we shall have the potential of developing gene therapies to help to ameliorate many of those conditions.

Complex questions surround genetic screening and counselling, such as how wide the provision is, and whether genetic tests should be available by post or with minimal counselling. That is why we proposed the establishment of a human genetics commission.

If we look 20 or 30 years ahead, we find within our genetic blueprint a predisposition to all sorts of diseases. I disagree with the hon. Member for Mossley Hill on this matter. Breast and colon cancer genes have been identified, and a strong familial component has been identified with schizophrenia. More generally, heart disease, obesity and diabetes have a strong genetic component and, as we learn more, they will become more predictable and individuals will be able to take preventive action. For example, if they know that they are predisposed to heart disease they can take more care in terms of weight, diet and exercise. That kind of knowledge of our own genetic blueprint can be helpful when we structure our life styles. That genetic information is potentially important and valuable in terms of human health.

However, that information is very much for the individual and it should not be available to insurance companies or to employers because it may lead to discrimination and a genetic underclass. I understand the complexity of the problems—this is part of the reason why the Committee wants a commission to look in detail at developments. In relation to insurance, we felt frustrated at the lack of focus by the Association of British Insurers. Professor Harper from Cardiff pointed out to the Committee the lack of focus and the lack of interest on the part of the insurance companies in detailed dialogue between them and the clinical geneticists.

There is a section in our report on adverse selection and on pooled insurance policies. I think that we have found sophisticated and possible answers to those questions, and they should be taken up by the commission and in discussions between the ABI and clinical geneticists. A number of hon. Members have referred to the possibility that in 20 years' time a lock of hair will be enough for an employer to post off in a matchbox and to predict who will be a good bet and who will be a bad bet and incur health problems if they are employed to the age of 60 or 65. This could lead to discrimination in employment. Matters of that kind should be looked at carefully.

Science holds great promise for mankind. In the 21st century, as we understand human illness and disease much more fundamentally in a chemical or molecular biological fashion, the drugs that we develop are much more sophisticated and better targeted. We are not developing the drugs blind, as has been the case in relation to HIV-AIDS and the development of AZT. Materials are being screened for possible use in the treatment of AIDS. A lot of that is not very well thought out, or cannot be, because of the state of science.

Within molecular biology and genetics there is the potential, in the next few decades, to design drugs much more effectively and to help to extend the range of diseases that can be cured. The Committee visited Maryland in the United States and saw a presentation where the so-called suicide gene was used to treat brain tumours and we saw some promising work in curing cancers.

Several hon. Members have referred to the Committee's discussions about patenting. Early in the inquiry, I was impressed by the evidence of Professor Martin Bobrow to the Committee. In reply to a question about patenting from my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South on 23 November 1994, he said:

"My view is that I am certainly not against patenting; I am against patenting the natural sequence which is discovered and which is part of my body and yours. I am certainly not against patenting of processes, diagnostic procedures, therapeutic modalities or any sort of derivative use".

That paragraph served as my guiding light throughout the Committee's inquiry, and it remains my view on patenting. Gene sequences should not be patentable, but utility applications should. When we came to draft the report, we spent several hours examining the details of the evidence regarding patenting. The report's phraseology about patenting—it has been quoted several times today—is as follows:

"only a combination of a gene and a known utility which is novel and not obvious should be patentable in the context of that utility".

My hon. Friend the Member for Selly Oak worked out those words very carefully and, following some disagreement in the Committee, we agreed unanimously to support them.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) and the Government will bear those words in mind when it is time to renegotiate the European Community directive. They embody the directive's target. I examined the directive for about an hour yesterday and I am concerned that it is somewhat contradictory. As my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South mentioned earlier, articles 3 and 4 are not definitive. I read the background notes to article 3 and they are partly contradictory.

We make it clear that gene sequences should not be patentable. However, when it comes to applications, which are important to industry—that is how companies make their money—we must draw the line between discovery and invention. That issue is well explored in the background notes to article 3, but some contradictions remain. I ask my hon. Friend to consider that issue in the context of the report and our phraseology about patenting and utilities.

Dr. Lynne Jones: Perhaps it is more important to consider the report's wording in relation to the attitude that is likely to prevail in the European Parliament on that issue. Many parliamentarians who were concerned about the drafting of the previous directive may have their fears allayed if our wording—or a similar combination of words—were used.

Mr. Williams: I agree absolutely with my hon. Friend. The Committee is delighted that, following a second report, the Government have embraced the principle of establishing the Human Genetics Advisory Commission. People have serious anxieties about genetics, more so perhaps in Germany and other European countries than in Britain, but we have concerns in Britain too. The Select Committee became aware of those concerns during our inquiry.

The comments made earlier by the hon. Member for Mossley Hill represent a strand of opinion. It is not a majority view, but it is a strong view and I share some of his reservations. I am hostile to the idea of germ line gene therapy—our report reflected that hostility—and I am sceptical about the agricultural implications, such as genetic engineering and genetically manipulated organisms. It is important that the hon. Gentleman's views be reflected in the composition of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission. As pointed out earlier, we want the majority of members to be lay people so that the commission carries public confidence. The more open the proceedings and minutes of the commission—its findings should be published simultaneously with submissions to the Government—the more confidence people will have that the public view will be properly reflected.

I found our inquiry on genetics fascinating and our report has been well received. I think it made an important contribution and I am delighted that the Government reconsidered their initial view after we published our second report and that the commission will be established as soon as possible. It should eventually become a statutory commission rather than purely advisory.

In my reading for this debate, I considered in some detail the research and development scoreboard that was published a few weeks ago. Many of the conclusions are disturbing and I shall mention two or three examples, mainly from the Financial Times. Among the top 300 companies in the world, investment in research and development in 1995 showed an increase of 5 per cent. in cash terms. The United Kingdom managed 4 per cent. while the United States forged ahead with 11 per cent. The United Kingdom increase was slightly ahead of Germany's 3 per cent., Japan and Switzerland saw zero growth and investment fell in Belgium, France and Italy. Our figure for that one year does not sound too bad because our investment rose by 4 per cent. and the average for the top 300 companies was 5 per cent., but the Financial Times commented:

"The UK scoreboard, published today by the Department of Trade and Industry, shows that British companies spent 4 per cent. more on R and D in 1995 than in 1994, while their sales rose by 9 per cent. and profits by 18 per cent."

It is a historic sadness of British industry that profits are not reinvested in research and development.

The Financial Times also points out:

"In 1995, the world's top 300 companies devoted some 4.4 per cent. of sales to R and D—compared to an average of 2.5 per cent. for the . . . UK companies".

In France, Germany, Japan and the United States, companies invest twice as much in research and development as a proportion of sales. The scoreboard examines various sectors in detail and, in the chemical sector, the top British chemical company—Imperial Chemical Industries or ICI—is 26th in the world investment league. In the electronics section, the top British electronics company is 21st in the world investment league. In engineering, our top company, Rolls-Royce, is 20th.

The performance of British companies is not quite so bad throughout the report. In vehicle engineering, Lucas Industries, our top company, is 21st in the world league table. Indeed, in some sectors, we do quite well. Unilever is top of the food companies, Shell Transport and Trading is second of all oil companies, BT is seventh in the world league of telecommunications companies, and in pharmaceuticals, Glaxo Wellcome is second, SmithKline Beecham fourth and Zeneca sixth. To tie in with my earlier comments on genetics, it is no coincidence that we are world beaters in pharmaceuticals because, as the Committee found throughout its work on genetics, there is high investment in research and development and a very good return. Taking the scoreboard as a whole, only 18 of the 300 companies listed are British. That shows the historical decline in manufacturing industry in this country.

As a scientist, I am very concerned about what is happening in Britain to science in higher education and the industrial sector. The Clerk to the Select Committee is very good at finding us no end of press releases, and included in them in the past couple of weeks was literature on the decision in Japan to which my hon. Friend the Member for Selly Oak has referred. In Japan, they are planning to increase funding for research in basic science by 60 per cent. by 2000—a 12 per cent. growth in the science budget every year for the next four years. What a wonderful environment to be in. I know that historically Japan has rather ignored science and perhaps lived off international basic science, but it has now seen its importance and intends to invest heavily in it.

I read recently that 75 per cent. of school leavers in the tiger economies of east Asia enter higher education—not 33 per cent. or 35 per cent. or whatever it is in Britain. It strikes me that Japan, Singapore, Malaysia, Taiwan and the rest have rediscovered what we seem to have abandoned since the 1950s and 1960s: the terrific importance of offering higher education to a wide range of the population—such as 75 per cent.—and the importance of science, research and development and science investment. Tomorrow's prosperity comes from investing heavily in today's science.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy (Liverpool, Broadgreen): It is a privilege and an honour to speak in this debate. It is a privilege because being asked by my hon. Friends to draw together the different strands of this detailed debate and present a summary on behalf of the Opposition is to be granted a rare opportunity that most of us have an ambition to realise when we are elected but not all of us get. It is an honour because I am sensible of the fact that I am surrounded by hon. Members who have made the study of science and its applications their life's work. I associate myself and my hon. Friends on the Front Bench with the tribute paid by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) to my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray). I include in those comments about scientists being present my hon. Friends the Members for Cambridge, for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) and for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams).

I pay tribute to the Select Committee. As somebody who is not and would not claim to be a scientist, I found the lucidity and accessibility of the report on human genetics of great help in understanding the issues that have been debated.

The hon. Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw), and my hon. Friends the Members for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) and for Cambridge all dealt with the importance of achieving the right framework for patenting. The Minister owes it to us to comment on that when he responds, because he did not mention it in his opening speech.

The issue of the membership of the testing committee and of the commission was raised by several hon. Members. They spoke of lay representation, and said that the commission, in particular, should be weighted heavily towards lay representatives rather than professors of ethics. Even Members such as the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mrs. Lait) and myself, or even my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid), might be qualified to serve on such a commission.

The hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) talked about the need for a balance to be struck between what the Government can and cannot do. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) intervened earlier to ask whether regulation would be statutory or voluntary. My answer to him is that statutory regulation may be too inflexible to allow for good, well-founded and ethically sound use of human genetic research, and that the speedy development in that area needs a speedy response from the regulators. Parliament may be too slow to respond adequately to the demands of that industry. We shall have to return to that issue.

That does not mean that we are running away from the idea of regulation. Such activities must be carefully regulated, and setting up the commission will be an important step along that route. We must get the balance right between public trust in the work of the companies and scientists in the field, and the stifling of innovation that might result if the regulations are too rigid.

The Select Committee repeatedly returns to that subject in its report, saying that regulations need to be robust and well applied. It concludes that on the whole, the regulatory framework in the United Kingdom is good. None the less, as many hon. Members have said, the establishment of the new commission is to be welcomed.

I press the Minister to answer the question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride: which will be the lead Department of State in dealing with the commission? To which Department will it report? It is of overriding importance to establish the commission quickly, especially in view of the concerns expressed from both sides of the House today.

The Select Committee noted the Government's view that most of the important human disease genes are likely to be identified over the next five years. The huge range of information that will then be available to us needs to be dealt with sensitively, carefully and properly, in accordance with the range of concerns that have been expressed in the debate.

One of the commission's main objectives must be to foster public confidence, and public understanding of the scientific research on the subject, of its potential for enormous health benefits and of the United Kingdom's opportunity to capitalise on that. It is also important that we maintain our lead in Europe as a centre for innovation in biotechnology.

It is necessary to foster confidence, partly because public confidence, or lack of it, in the biotechnology industry can have a crucial effect on its success and its ability to grow. The knock-on effect on the knowledge and confidence of the financial institutions obviously has an impact on the availability of venture capital.

The Bank of England's third report on finance for small firms, which was published in January, says that there is evidence that many high-technology small businesses in the United Kingdom are under-achieving in terms of innovation and subsequent growth. Providing management and marketing support, and corporate venturing, may be the way to satisfy the financial needs of such small firms.

Investment by large corporations in the equity of small nascent companies has not occurred in the United Kingdom to the same extent as it has in the United States. The Bank of England concludes that that difference is largely cultural, and calls upon policy makers to act as facilitators in encouraging the process.

In his opening speech the Minister said that he was worried that industry might not appreciate the importance of its role in fostering scientific innovation. He went on to quote from the press release accompanying the report that he published this morning—a press release whose message was, "British research in good shape".

The report discusses the relationship between publicly funded basic research and the United Kingdom's general economic performance. What is the Minister's response to the Select Committee's criticism that although overseas research and development in the United Kingdom may come in from Europe, United Kingdom investment in the industry often goes to the United States?

The report published today is a welcome tool to illustrate the creative tension that exists between academic and industrial research, and the academics involved in its production have suggested that the evidence is mixed as to whether new firms have been created on a significant scale as a result of the funding of basic research. Work on the topic has been based mainly on case studies of particular universities and fields of science. A previous review found little convincing evidence of major benefits from academic research in terms of generating spin-off companies.

Although it is certainly true that some universities are surrounded by a substantial number of firms—Cambridge is an obvious example of that—the growth rates of these companies is often low. All too frequently, academics do not make good entrepreneurs, and the effective exploitation of their technology usually requires that the ownership of the technology and its managerial control be taken out of their hands at an early stage.

The report refers to Europe, where biotechnology firms—of which Britain has the largest number—generally cluster in areas of academic excellence. However, most such firms in the UK have industrial and not academic founders, despite the fact that Britain has more star scientists in molecular biology than any other European country. Some of the best researchers in the world are working in the UK in our research institutes, universities and hospitals, as many hon. Members have said. Our innovative biotechnology sector is currently hampered by a lack of venture capital funding and a generally cautious commercial environment. We are in danger of reaping the health benefits, but missing out on the industrial benefits that could accrue to the United Kingdom.

I am conscious that time is pressing, but I must say in conclusion that the Government have presided over the undermining of our scientific research base in the public sector, which will lead to further uncertainty in biotechnology industries. As a result of the Government's decision to slash capital spending on research and development, the Wellcome Trust has confirmed that it is to stop funding new capital projects. In the long run, that will cut perhaps a further £50 million a year or so from Britain's science base—doubling our losses. That money will go to research groups in other countries, strengthening their science bases and giving their companies the competitive advantage that we have thrown away. In the circumstances, the recent launch by the Department of Trade and Industry of a crusade for biotechnology in Britain is risible.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am grateful for the opportunity to return to the Dispatch Box to sum up this excellent debate. First, it is my pleasant duty to congratulate the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mrs. Kennedy), who made her debut at the Dispatch Box with great skill, calmness and precision. For her sake, I hope that the shadow Cabinet list is still open because, in my judgment, she would make a fine candidate—although I do not wish to intervene in the internal affairs of the Labour party.

As the hon. Member for Broadgreen arrives at the Dispatch Box, we regret the departure of the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray), who has contributed to many debates such as this over the years. We have occasionally had a chance to chat in the Lobby, and I have always found his words interesting. We have not necessarily always agreed, and I was astonished to learn that the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) also has not always agreed with him. These are the sort of revelations that one gets in these debates, and that is one of the most exciting things of all.

Having listened carefully to the speech of the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams), I will now eat fish with greater respect than I did previously. Fish is clearly not a junk food, according to its DNA structure. There is a great deal of talent on the Opposition Back Benches, and I had not realised the hon. Gentleman's background in chemistry and environmental sciences. I enjoyed a rather jolly party with the Royal Society of Chemistry this week, and it is clear that chemists relish their role in pulling together all sorts of disciplines to make sure that we are able to understand some of the great breakthroughs. That is putting a strain on university departments. The vertical segregation of disciplines is breaking down, particularly in science, into new arrangements. The Cruciform project of University college, London is an interesting example and there are many others.

The hon. Member for Carmarthen made an important point that no one else mentioned. I tried to raise it in my evidence to the Committee. There are benefits in knowing one's own genetic structure. If one knows that one is likely to suffer from a disease, one can alter one's life style and possibly mitigate the effects or postpone the disease. There are many aspects of science that we must consider, but that is a beneficial impact.

I was impressed by the speech of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones), which contained many thoughtful points, not least her encouragement of the Treasury. Of course, I cannot comment on anything connected with the Budget, which is not yet decided upon, but I hope that the Treasury reads the text of Hansard and her speech in particular before we finalise the public expenditure survey round.

[Mr. Ian Taylor]

We are not the only country facing pressures on the science budget and, indeed, on all budgets. Japan is the honourable exception. There are good, domestic economic reasons why Japan is looking for ways to spend more money, not least connected with the position of the yen. Nevertheless, when I talked to the Japanese on a recent visit—their scientific adviser has been to this country twice recently—it was clear that they are beginning to spend a considerable amount of money, but they are coming here to learn how to spend it. The structure of science is extremely strong in this country. The flexibility in the way in which our institutions, research establishments and universities work has greatly intrigued the Japanese and we are watching that situation closely.

All the other G7 countries face budgetary constraints. Consider the difference in Germany, where the largesse of recent years has turned into a need to constrain. The Germans are talking to us about ways in which we may co-operate. As I will not have time to return to that matter, I must immediately pick up on the comments of the hon. Member for Motherwell, South about CERN. There is no doubt that we and the Germans have a common interest in ensuring that the CERN position is rectified. We cannot carry on as we are. It is absurd for us to have budgets that mean that we are effectively funding others to do research because we do not have enough left in our own budgets to carry out our national programmes, or to get involved nationally in some of the work at the large hadron collider. We should, therefore, take the opportunity presented to us because other countries are now becoming concerned about budgets and work closely with the Germans on that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) was involved with the earlier discussions when he was briefly the Minister responsible for science. He understands the pressures and I noted carefully what he had to say.

Not surprisingly, a considerable amount of the discussion has focused on genetics. My opening remarks could be much broader because many documents are tagged for the debate, not least the forward look, which gives us an opportunity to discuss all elements of science. Now I shall concentrate on the issues raised in the debate.

First, it is understandable that the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) mentioned the ethical questions. I am not going to differ with him about the importance of ethics in this debate. We might well differ on how we segregate aspects of decision making from it. He mentioned xenotransplantation, which is the use of organs and tissues from genetically modified animals for the treatment of humans and which is causing great concern. There are ethical questions about that.

The advisory group has been set up to advise the Secretary of State for Health on that issue. The group is led by Professor Ian Kennedy, who is professor of medical ethics at King's college, London, and its terms of reference are that "in the light of recent and potential developments in xenotransplantation, to review the acceptability of an ethical framework within which xenotransplantation may be undertaken and to make recommendations."

That is to the Secretary of State for Health.

The hon. Gentleman raised other matters, including the discussion on novel foods in the European Union and, in particular, genetically modified foods. The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes, which advises the Ministers with responsibility for health and agriculture on safety, is active. No genetically modified food has been marketed in this country without the committee's clearance. I do not have time to go into it now, but I accept his genuine concern, although we might differ on certain aspects of how we bring ethics into the debate.

I wish to be emphatic on one matter, and I am glad that I share the views of the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) in saying this. By and large, the transformation of our horizons by the scientific developments that have come out of the genetic sequencing process, the human genome project and genetic analysis of many aspects of substances such as yeast, will benefit humankind. Because of that, we must recognise the hon. Member for Mossley Hill's ethical concerns and reconcile them as best we can. We must not, however, stop the progress with scientists who are minded to try to improve the quality of human life.

The hon. Members for East Kilbride and for Broadgreen rightly pressed me on specific points arising out of the Select Committee's genetics study. With the advisory commission, we will have to consider whether recommendations should turn into legislation. I will not pre-empt that. It will depend on what it recommends.

I would want to talk to the chairman, when he is appointed, about the terms of the publication of the commission's reports. We said up front that this should be transparent. If the process is to give the public greater confidence in what is happening, my instinct is to go in that direction, but, again, I should like to take up that matter with the chairman.

The hon. Member for East Kilbride mentioned the Genetics Interest Group. We watch its work closely and we understand and listen to its advice. At the end, we have to take it into consideration, but we have taken careful note of the work on care in old age, for example, and we will continue to do so.

Advisory commission members will be chosen on their merits. That is, in effect, set out in our response to the Select Committee. They will, however, represent between them informed opinion on developments in the science of human genetics, as well as social health, ethical and economic implications. The purpose is to take a broad perspective. I have listened to the comments of hon. Members about the balance between lay members and professionals. We have already said that we understand the reasons for that and we will go as far as we can to accommodate them and move as quickly as possible to ensure that the commission is appointed.

In view of its strategic role, the advisory commission will interest a number of Departments. I was pushed to clarify this point. Primarily, it will interest the Department of Health and the Department of Trade and Industry, my own Department. Therefore, we have determined that the commission will report formally and jointly to Health and industry Ministers and that there will be a joint secretariat. Ministers' job will be to ensure that both Departments work closely together, but the secretariat will be based in the Office of Science and Technology and the secretary will be an OST official.

I would not presume to take primary responsibility over the Department of Health because, as these things develop, clearly, mutual interests will be involved and it will depend to some extent on the issue we are discussing, but there is no doubt that my Department—which includes the chief scientific adviser—has, through the President of the Board of Trade, a transdepartmental interest. We will ensure that we carry out that responsibility.

Hon. Members on both sides of the House have mentioned the importance of testing. I understand the concerns, which were discussed during my opening speech. Several comments have been made on insurance. I share the concerns of the hon. Member for Selly Oak about certain aspects of what could occur in employment and interviews in terms of genetic testing. Mention has been made during the debate in the context of insurance of Professor Peter Harper of the college of medicine at the university of Wales in Cardiff, who is a specialist in clinical genetics. I can confirm what colleagues know—that he is a member of the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing. It is intriguing that the committee had its first meeting this morning. We shall await the outcome of that. It is difficult for the moment to see how widely it will decide to go at the early stage, but having set the committee up as a result of the recommendations of the Select Committee, I am delighted that it has had its first meeting.

I confirm to the House that I hope that now that we have agreed that the Human Genetics Advisory Commission will be created, it will be set up and working as quickly as possible. I cannot stress enough how important it is to reassure the public. I am profoundly supportive of the moves to increase the range of knowledge of genetics, but I realise that it raises considerable anxieties.

The question of patents has been raised by several hon. Members. The directive that is being discussed in the European Union is welcome, but I hope that the European Parliament will not tinker with it too much. I am not instinctively opposed to that institution, but sometimes Members of the European Parliament seem to lack responsibility in the way in which they consider such matters. I urge them to realise that biotechnology is an industry which is extremely sensitive to false moves in terms of regulation.

There is a long gestation period between original research and potential availability of products. If companies feel that they live in a hostile regulatory environment, it is possible for the capital behind the research and the research to move offshore from Europe. That has already occurred in Germany. Some of the German Länder are so worried about the matter that they are offering vast sums of money to maintain research in their universities. However, money itself—this is an interesting point for Opposition Members—is not sufficient if the risk calculation of regulation means that the company or the people involved in the research do not see how they will ever be able to move sufficiently far and fast in a stable climate.

The exemptions in United Kingdom law for research and compulsory licensing, which help to ensure that patents do not stifle legitimate research, are not affected by the draft directive.

The present legal requirements for novelty, inventive step and industrial applicability make it unlikely that patents will be gained for genes of unknown function—an anxiety that was raised. Patents can be refused on the ground of morality, but that can be justified only in clear cases and, in my judgment, the directive is not a place for discussion of moral issues. That is not to say that moral issues do not impinge, but if we try to achieve a directive that embraces moral issues, it will be a pretty rum piece of law to enforce. Therefore, we must try to segregate morality from other issues without discounting its importance.

I was pleased to see that George Poste, whom I mentioned earlier and who has been mentioned by others, stated that the biotechnology patenting directive was to be welcomed. In the Financial Times this morning, he said:

"Without patents there will be no cures. I welcome the re-affirmation of the importance of this issue at the Florence summit at which the Council of Ministers was asked to expedite adoption of the legal framework for biotechnological inventions."

I heartily endorse that. We must give clear signals to industry if we are to get the best advances that we can.

Human genetic research has been mentioned by several colleagues. I particularly listened to my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw), who made an important speech and said in a letter to the Financial Times recently that the United Kingdom would have the most sophisticated system in the world for considering issues raised by genetics. I agree with that.

There have been one or two interestingly waspish comments to the effect that the Government came to that view rather late in the day. I accept that Governments need to think through such matters carefully. I have thought them through carefully, as has my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. We were much taken by the fact that the Committee rethought through some aspects of the subject and decided that an advisory commission, rather than a statutory body, was the right way forward. There was a tremendous meeting of minds and we have come up with the present framework. Given the committees that have not been mentioned today—such as the Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology—as the Chairman of the Select Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey, said, it is the best system available.

There is no doubt that human genetics research is crucial. If we are to get the best out of it, we must give industry the greatest possible stimulus. The crusade for biotechnology shows that we can do that. Another part of the Government's policy is to ensure the excellence of science in this country.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 24th July—

(1) notwithstanding Standing Order No. 9 (Sittings of the House), the second Motion in the name of the Prime Minister for the adjournment of the House shall lapse one and a half hours after it has been made;

(2) the Speaker shall put the Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on the Motion in the name of Mr. Tony Newton relating to the draft Code of Conduct of Members not later than two hours after their commencement, such Questions including the Questions on any amendments to that Motion which she may have selected, which may then be moved; and the said Motions may be proceeded with, though opposed, after Ten o'clock.—[Mr. Brandreth.]

Dentistry

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Brandreth.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): I should like to raise the topic of dentistry, particularly dentistry in my constituency of Nottingham, North.

It is important to place it on record that there has been a vast and quiet privatisation of dental care by the Government since 1979, which has gone unnoticed by the press and the public. Dentistry is one of those things that affects individuals only when they feel the need for dental care. In many ways, the Government have escaped proper public scrutiny of what they have done.

A local dentist in my constituency recently said to me:

"I am trying to remain in the NHS but quite frankly it isn't possible. There is a surplus of patients who . . . can't afford private treatment, which is putting me under increasing pressure. My list is now closed, I can't take any more NHS patients."

In talking to local dentists in my constituency, I am struck above all by their dedication. They do not want to leave NHS dentistry, but they are being forced out of it by Government policies. That fact became evident to me during the numerous meetings that I have had with local dentists; it has also become evident to the Select Committee on Health. In its fourth report for the 1992-93 Session, it concluded:

"For present and potential non-exempt NHS dental patients access to NHS services is becoming increasingly difficult".

That difficulty has, of course, affected everyone. In my region, a recent Harris poll commissioned by the British Dental Association stated that 25 per cent.—one in four people—in the east midlands had trouble finding a local dentist willing to treat them on the NHS. We are now reaching the position where about half the adult population of the UK is not registered with an NHS dentist. Probably even more tragically, 41 per cent. of children are not registered with an NHS dentist. In short, British dentistry is not safe in the Government's hands.

Denplan, the health and dental insurers, found that only 60 per cent. of dentists were treating any NHS patients. In 1989, that figure was 90 per cent. and it was probably even higher than that in 1979. We must confront the problem that as a result of Government policy the era of free, regular dental checks in constituencies up and down the United Kingdom is well and truly over. There has been a process of back-door privatisation of which people are not aware. I am afraid that we are looking at a dental—or oral—health disaster in the UK owing to the failure to take adequate preventive measures.

Since 1992, more than 1 million people nationwide have been taken off NHS dental lists. In the Trent area, which covers my Nottingham constituency, 65,000 people have been deregistered. These people are being denied treatment on the NHS because dentists can no longer afford to take on NHS patients. Instead, they must devote ever-increasing time to their private patients to balance their books.

Countless constituents of mine have been approached to go private. The regular mailshot for NHS patients is a common occurrence. I repeat that neither patients nor practitioners in Nottingham want to be in that position. The Government, as a matter of policy, have made a systematic attempt to force adults out of NHS dentistry, deliberately opting out of a service which we have taken for granted and which many of us believed that we had already paid for. The next toothache might be the stimulus that we need to consider whether the recent 1p tax cut was really worth it. Even Conservative Members share my view. According to a recent Harris poll, 44 per cent. of Conservative Members of Parliament believe that NHS dental care will be restricted to children and those on low income if present trends continue.

The recent farce regarding the Government's contract with Nottingham dentists has aggravated many problems. Dentists have had to spend three years wrangling with the Government. Dentists' fees have only just returned to their 1991 levels, not allowing for inflation, following a fee cut of 7 per cent. in 1992. Now all but the simplest dental work must be referred, with a lengthy wait, for what is called prior approval. One third of all patients on dental lists, mainly children and those on low income, are still entitled to free dental treatment, but the two thirds of adults who pay some of the cost of their treatment contribute more than 80 per cent. of dental costs, so the Government pay only 20 per cent. of the cost of treatment.

Nottingham dentists, like those elsewhere, have a choice. They may choose the contractual confusion and mess of that 80-20 split between private and NHS funding and the requirement to fight through the bureaucracy and fight with Government about fee levels. Or they may choose the simplicity of charging 100 per cent. privately, avoiding the difficulties with the Government that have been so apparent in recent years—a Government who do not give a damn about NHS dentistry.

The Government have deliberately designed a policy to underfund NHS dentistry and drive dentists into private practice. Sadly, the policy has been a success. Increasingly, and reluctantly, many of the dental practitioners whom I have met in Nottingham are being forced by it into one of three categories: those who no longer take on NHS patients, those who no longer roll their patients' registration forward when it expires—even that period has been reduced from 22 months to 15 months—and those who are actively deregistering their patients.

None of the local dentists whom I have spoken to wants to make those choices, but when one dentist reduces the number of NHS registrations that they will handle, that demand does not go away. People look elsewhere for a dentist who will register them, putting increasing pressure on the declining number of dentists in the district until they, too, have little alternative but to limit the number of NHS patients, and so it goes on: a local snowball develops until most local practitioners move into the private sector, excluding vast numbers of people from effective dental treatment.

In recent years, there has been a massive but largely unnoticed switch. The 1994 survey by Denplan, which I mentioned, found that only 60 per cent. of dentists were treating any NHS patients compared with 90 per cent. in 1989. Wholly NHS dentists will soon be an extinct species, replaced by a tiny, overworked band of community dentists. Dentistry is becoming a safety net welfare service for the underprivileged and the very young rather than something that we have taken for granted ever since the modern dental service was established.

The former family health services authority that is now the Nottingham health authority is swamped with people searching for an NHS dentist. In the Trent region, more than 20,000 people asked for help between July 1992 and September 1995. In less than six months last year, the corresponding national figure increased by 25 per cent. Put simply, the provision of NHS dentistry in Nottingham, like many other urban areas, is shrinking and patients are beginning to suffer. Health authorities have a duty eventually to find those people a dentist, but many of my constituents must travel 10 to 20 miles to reach dentists who will take them. It is not easy to travel those distances with children or shopping and it certainly does not encourage people, particularly children, to visit the dentist. Many of the vast improvements in oral health since the NHS was established 50 years ago are bottoming out as tooth decay, particularly among children, shows signs of increasing. That is what the Government will be remembered for as privatisation continues.

The Government estimate that the new rigorous prior approval proposals will reduce the amount of expensive complex work done on the NHS by about 5 per cent. According to the BDA, that will save £10 million this year alone. Knowing that prior approval is a lengthy and difficult process, dentists either prolong NHS treatment or do it quickly privately, which is yet another obstacle to people taking up effective NHS dental care. Once again, the screw is being turned on dentists as they are encouraged to shift patients to private contracts, a process that has taken place inexorably and as a matter of policy since the Government came to office in 1979. Incredible damage has been done over that period and it will be extremely difficult to halt and reverse it.

We must look urgently at how to attract more dental practices to inner-city areas and rapidly halt the privatisation of dental services. Once dentists have had enough of trying to wring sufficient funds out of the NHS and go private, it will be hard to bring them back. Sadly, that shows the success of the Government's agreed policy. The few remaining dentists who will take on new NHS registrations are in huge demand and can no longer cope. The Government's plans to introduce grants for new dentists in areas with specific problems are like sticking a plaster over a haemorrhage. We must prevent a further drift towards private dental work, and actively encourage and support NHS dentistry as the foundation of proper oral care. Decimating NHS dentistry, then throwing in a few extra community dentists, is no way to run a national health service for dental care.

This century has seen massive improvements in dental care for all, but that is now under threat. In the past half century, we have seen that oral health can be effectively tackled only through preventive medicine—free regular check-ups and easy, cheap and convenient treatment. That is the approach that must now be taken. I understand that the next Labour Government will work closely with dentists to establish how that can most effectively be done. We shall seek to make progress with voluntary fluoridation, which has been shown to be one of the best ways of preventing tooth decay.

Adults as well as children need to visit their dentists regularly for check-ups to prevent the development of painful and expensive work later. I am not about to pretend that anyone looks forward to trips to the dentist, which is all the more reason why the Government must stop making it increasingly hard for my constituents, particularly children, to have the NHS dental services that they need.

It is important that the public are aware of the crisis which the Government have deliberately engendered in NHS dental care. My constituents are suffering because of that systematic neglect over recent years. I hope that the Minister will tell the House and my constituents what he intends to do to deal with the problem, rather than just let it get worse and worse. If the Government are content to let this problem drift on, health care—and particularly dental care—will be set back 30 or 40 years. I hope that the Government will make it plain that that is not what they want and that even at this late stage they will reverse their policies to ensure that it will not happen.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. John Horam): I am delighted that the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) has raised this subject, even though it is close to the end of the Session, because it gives me the opportunity to point out that, contrary to the one-sided picture that he painted, the Government are committed to a comprehensive and effective national health service dental service. Our record speaks for itself.

On 31 March, the total number of dentists on family health services authority lists was 15,998, which is 3,900 more than it was in 1979 and the second highest figure ever. Since 1978-79, funding for NHS dentistry has increased by 54 per cent. in real terms. Over the same period, the number of adult courses of treatment rose by 7.82 million. At the beginning of this year, more than 6 million children were registered for capitation, helping to ensure that they receive regular care for their teeth at a critical age.

Our major investment in NHS dentistry has produced results—the oral health of the nation has improved. When seen over a longer period, that improvement is enormous. We forget all too easily the pain and discomfort that poor oral health caused in earlier generations. Perhaps hon. Members of my generation will remember the gloomy and inadequate dentists I visited. When the discipline of parental urging was removed when I got older, I forgot to go to the dentist for three or four years and, as a result, I have far more fillings than I should have for a man of my age. That is what it was like when we were young, and I do not believe that that would happen to anything like that extent today.

Our task is not to look back but to look forward. NHS dentistry cannot afford to stand still if it is to meet the challenges of the future, such as building on past improvements in oral health, targeting more accurately the groups of patients who are our highest priority and improving value for money. Those principles were underpinned in the recent wide-ranging statement on the future of NHS dentistry, which my hon. Friend the Minister for Health made not so long ago. A key element in the statement was the announcement that a year of detailed and constructive negotiations with the profession had resulted in an agreement on the reform of the general dental services pay system.

The package has a number of elements and implementation will begin in September. First, it targets the substantial existing resources more effectively, with the aim of improving child oral health and giving value for money to the taxpayer. In addition to the capitation payment made for each child registered, a new set of fees for individual items of treatment will be introduced. That fee scale will replace the weighted entry payments that are currently paid where significant treatment is required. It will be a simpler system oriented towards children.

Secondly, for both adult and child dentistry, we are to harmonise the registration period at 15 months. That will provide a period of continuing dental care following each course of treatment, while streamlining administration procedures, reducing bureaucracy for dentists, and ensuring that the public secure the best value for money from the available resources. In other words, we are reducing administration, bureaucracy and waste—something the Labour party claims that it would do if it were in power.

The reforms also include an agreement to introduce more careful prior approval. That will ensure that all clinically essential services are available and are secured in the most cost-effective way. In view of the agreement with the profession, we have waived the overpayments that built up over a number of years to 1993-94. They amounted to some £16,500 per dentist and were the consequence of a remuneration system with a balancing mechanism that recovered overpayments in one year in subsequent years.

The British Dental Association has ended its long-running dispute with the Government as a result of the reform agreement, combined with the waiver of overpayments. Those developments remove the uncertainty that dentists have been under for several years and they should promote an atmosphere of stability and security in the NHS general dental service. More importantly, they draw a line beneath the past and allow us to concentrate on the future. That can be only beneficial for patients and dentists alike.

Accessibility to NHS primary care dental services is very important. I am aware that, despite a healthy national picture with the second highest number of dentists ever, patients experience difficulties obtaining treatment in some local areas. The hon. Gentleman referred to services in his area. It is particularly difficult to obtain treatment in rural areas, where the distances are greater and it is harder to find a dentist nearby. There also tend to be fewer dentists in the more affluent areas.

We must tackle those localised problems, so the Government have launched an access fund that will target local needs through local solutions. I look forward to seeing health authorities—wherever they may be located—working with the profession to devise innovative and effective schemes that help to improve access appropriate to their areas. In addition, health authorities are able to apply to the Secretary of State to appoint a salaried dentist, and they can use community dental services when there are shortages. As the hon. Gentleman will know, many salaried dentists have been appointed under the scheme.

Let me look further ahead. At present, dentists work within a fairly rigid national system. One of the lessons that we have learnt in other parts of the NHS is that bringing an element of local flexibility into service provision can prove invaluable in helping to target resources to meet local needs and demands. That is why the Government intend to pilot and evaluate a system of local contracting for primary care dentists in several areas of the United Kingdom. Health authorities will be able to target local needs more effectively, using their knowledge of local conditions and of local patient needs.

The chairman of the general dental services committee of the British Dental Association has promised to work with us constructively—thus achieving the good, co-operative relationship between the profession and the Government that the hon. Gentleman called for. The pilots will require primary legislation, and the Government intend to seek an opportunity to introduce a Bill. I hope that the next parliamentary Session will be a long one, so that we may introduce that legislation. We hope that it will prove possible to publish a draft Bill for consultation this autumn.

We recognise that changes in organisation must be paired with measures that will secure the highest professional standards into the 21st century. Such a Bill would also provide an opportunity to make changes to the Dentists Act 1984. Those changes have been requested by the General Dental Council, which is charged with setting and maintaining professional standards. The changes include setting up new classes of auxiliaries and expanding the range of work that they can do. The aim is to allow dentists to manage their practices more effectively, to provide more professional opportunities for hygienists and other dental auxiliaries, and to increase the amount of patient care available.

The council also intends to create a statutory career redevelopment scheme for dentists who must improve their level of competence. It will introduce conditional registration in addition to the sanctions that are currently in place for disciplinary proceedings. In other words, rather than the current heavy-handed approach, we shall have a system that is much more conducive to ironing out the problems of dentists who are judged to be less than fully competent. The aim is to help rather than hurt.

Finally, the GDC wants to establish a complaints system for private patients. As hon. Members know, Parliament passed legislation this Session dealing with a new complaints system throughout the NHS. It is important to complement that with a complaints system for private patients. That would enhance the GDC's powers to deal with complaints against dentists providing treatment outside the NHS. The proposals mirror developments in the medical profession and will ensure that professional standards are maintained and developed.

I assure the hon. Gentleman that NHS dentistry is, and remains, a Government priority. The programme of initiatives unveiled recently is firm evidence of our commitment to effective and efficient NHS provision. We now have an agreed way forward, a constructive working relationship with the profession and adequate resources. Although I concede that there is still much work to do, I believe that we have taken the first important steps to strengthen the current service and to provide the firm foundations for future work.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total number of employees of (a) British nationality and (b) indigenous nationality employed in high commissions in sub-Saharan Africa in (i) 1991–92 and (ii) 1995–96. [35092]

Mr. Hanley: On 31 March 1996, the high commissions in the 14 Commonwealth countries in sub-Saharan Africa employed 463 British nationals and 701 indigenous nationals. Equivalent information for 31 March 1992 is not available from all high commissions. The eight which were able to provide figures report 382 British and 459 indigenous nationals.

Alexandre Nikitin

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Russian authorities about the imprisonment of Alexandre Nikitin; and if he will make a statement. [35636]

Mr. Hanley: Our ambassador in Moscow has raised the case of the arrest of Mr. Nikitin, a Russian citizen, with the Russian authorities. He drew their attention to the interest in the west in this case, and emphasised that the international community would continue to monitor developments closely.

UN Conference on Disarmament

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the admission of Iraq to membership of the United Nation conference on disarmament on 17 June. [35927]

Mr. David Davis: We welcome the decision by the conference on disarmament on 17 June to admit a further 23 states as members. This brings the total membership to 61.

The United Kingdom has long favoured the widest possible membership of the CD in order to promote universal adherence to arms control treaties.

Iraq is one of the new members.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Indian Government regarding negotiations to complete a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty. [35963]

Mr. David Davis: We maintain a close dialogue with the Indian Government on a wide range of issues. We have expressed to them at the highest level our hope that they will support the earliest possible conclusion of a universal and effective comprehensive test ban treaty and will become a party to such a treaty.

EU Export Bans

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the EU's powers to ban exports from member countries to third countries. [35756]

Mr. David Davies: The EU's powers to ban exports from member countries to third countries are described in the answer my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member on 11 June, column 77. The Government's attitude to the use of these powers depends on the particular circumstances in which their use is contemplated. For example the Government oppose the BSE-related export ban on beef, but support restrictions on the export of hazardous substances, designed to implement a UN scheme, enabling importing countries of control handling to such substances.

Bhutanese Refugees

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the human rights of Bhutanese refugees in Nepal. [35769]

Mr. Hanley: We believe that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is in the best position to monitor the situation. We continue to encourage the Governments of Nepal and Bhutan to resolve the underlying problems through bilateral negotiation. We have contributed over £475,000 through non-governmental organisations over the past three years to support the refugees in Nepal.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consultations he has had with the Appeal Movement Co-ordination Council about the situation of Bhutanese refugees in Nepal and India. [35772]

Mr. Hanley: The Appeal Movement Co-ordination Council full committee called on the British embassy in Kathmandu on 7 May. It provides us regularly with reports of its activities in Nepal and India.

India (Mr. Baburam Shegdem)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has received concerning the numbers of those injured during the alleged police attack on the funeral procession of Mr. Baburam Shegdem on 21 June; what representations he has made to ensure that the injured received appropriate medical treatment; and if he will make a statement. [35771]

Mr. Hanley: According to reports received by our high commission in New Delhi, around 100 people were injured during Mr. Shegdem's funeral procession on 21 June. We have raised the case with the Indian National Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information has been evaluated by his Department about the circumstances and causes of the reported death in custody in India of Mr. Baburam Shegdem; what representations he has made to the Indian Government about the subsequent events at the funeral of Mr. Shegdem; and if he will make a statement. [35770]

Mr. Hanley: Our high commission in New Delhi has received reports that Mr. Shegdem was among a number of Bhutanese detainees who were allegedly beaten in prison on 3 June. Mr. Shegdem was admitted to hospital on 11 June and died the following day. We have raised the case with the Indian National Human Rights Commission.

Defence Sales Embargo

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 263, if he will make a statement on the mechanism in his Department for keeping under review the embargo on defence sales. [34640]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The embargo on arms sales to Argentina is regularly reviewed by this Department, in consultation with other relevant Departments, taking account of all available information and any changing circumstances.

St. Helena (Censorship)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Government censorship applies to articles and letters submitted for inclusion in the St. Helena News. [36033]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: There is no censorship in determining which submitted articles and letters are included in the St. Helena News. The editor relies on guidelines identical to those on broadcasting on Radio St. Helena described in my answer of 19 March 1996, column 112.

Japan

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the benefits to the United Kingdom arising from the Japanese Government's peace, friendship and exchange initiative. [36447]

Mr. Hanley: The UK is specifically included in this 10-year £650 million programme; under it, the Japanese Government—in close consultation with ourselves—are helping to fund historical research as well as various exchange programmes aimed at fostering mutual understanding between the peoples of the UK and Japan. Participants in the exchange visits, initiated by private organisations, include former prisoners of war and their families. These research and exchange programmes are expected to continue in coming years.

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to, or received from, the signatories of the Lusaka agreement about the political and military situation in Angola. [35590]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker has recently had talks with the Prime Minister, the Secretary General of the MPLA and the Angolan army chief of staff. The Minister saw Dr. Savimbi during her visit to Angola in February. The British ambassador in Luanda is in frequent contact with senior representatives of the Lusaka signatories. At every opportunity we continue to press for an early and successful conclusion to the peace process.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Angolan Government and other relevant agencies and authorities about the conditions in the UNITA quartering camps. [35589]

Mr. Hanley: We are aware of complaints by UNITA about conditions in some of the quartering areas. These are the responsibility of the United Nations authorities who monitor the situation on the ground. Our embassy in Luanda is in touch with the relevant organisations.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

UNESCO

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made of the implications for Britain's contribution to international policy-making in the field of arts, culture and national heritage of the United Kingdom's non-membership of UNESCO; and if she will make a statement. [34823]

Mr. Sproat: The United Kingdom's non-membership of UNESCO has not significantly affected the work of my Department. The question of membership of UNESCO is primarily for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. The United Kingdom has no immediate plans to region UNESCO, although this issue is kept under review in the light of progress with reform in the organisation and other financial priorities.

Millennium Commission

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make it her policy to ensure that the Millennium Commission visits locations outside London and the large conurbations to discuss how millennium money has been distributed; and how it is to be distributed in future. [35356]

Mrs. Virgina Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the Commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Museums Review

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the museums review is to be published. [35328]

Mrs. Virgina Bottomley: I hope to published the museum policy review before the summer recess.

Royal Parks Constabulary

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 92, (1) at whose request officers of the Royal Parks constabulary were deployed in Trafalgar square on 15 June; [34960]

(2) under what powers officers of the Royal Parks constabulary were deployed on 15 June in Trafalgar square. [34961]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 2 July 1996]: Initially, officers of the Royal Parks constabulary were called to assist the Royal Parks constabulary inspector who was attacked in his car while driving through Trafalgar square on his way from Regent's park to St. James's park. They were later deployed in the square on different occasions throughout the day, at the request of the Metropolitan police, to help keep order between groups of rival fans in the area.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 92, if officers of the Royal Parks constabulary are fully insured against injury liabilities when assisting Metropolitan police outside of the area of the royal parks. [34962]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 2 July 1996]: The Government do not take out commercial insurance cover. An officer who is injured in the course of duty would be entitled to make a claim for compensation under the procedures that are available to all Royal Parks agency staff.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if officers of the Royal Parks constabulary deployed on 15 June in Trafalgar square had available to them arrest powers other than the common law powers available to other citizens; and if she will make a statement; [34958]

(2) pursuant to her answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 92, what is the territorial jurisdiction of Royal Parks constabulary officers outside the royal parks. [34959]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 2 July 1996]: No, they have no powers outside the parks that are not available to any other citizen.

The powers of a constable are conferred on officers of the Royal Parks Constabulary under the 1872 Parks Regulations Act. This gives them the same powers, duties and immunities of a constable in the same police district as the parks, but they can exercise these powers only within the royal parks.

Departmental Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many files marked "Not for National Audit Office eyes" are currently held by her Department. [24854]

Mr. Sproat [pursuant to his answer, 18 April 1996, c. 596]: I regret that a recent review has indicated that the information given then was incorrect. At the time of answering the question, my Department held 25 files marked in this way, rather than 43 as stated earlier. One of the files has subsequently been reviewed and the marking removed, as no longer relevant.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Palestine

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government have given to Palestine for educational projects in (a) the west bank and (b) Gaza; and if he will make a statement. [35649]

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom bilateral aid programme is funding a £3.2 million education project in the west bank and Gaza to secure sustained improvement in the quality of education in schools operated by the Ministry of Education and Higher Education. In addition the UK is providing £10,000 to support an English language teaching specialist under a United Nations Association International Service programme to work on teacher training with MEHE.

The UK is also contributing some 16 per cent. of the costs of two education projects supported by the European Union:

i) provision of £9.45 million in running cost support this year for nine universities and 12 community colleges throughout the west bank and Gaza; and

ii) a grant of £114,000 to establish an institutional vocational training qualification. The British Council is also supporting the project from funds to which the Overseas Development Administration contributes.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian refugees supports 200 schools in the west bank and 318 schools in Gaza. The UK is contributing to this programme both through its regular bilateral annual contributions to UNWRA's core programme budget and through the EU.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Industry (Maintenance and Safety)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the age profile of those workers involved in maintenance and safety in the nuclear industry for each of the last three years. [35534]

Mr. Eggar: While it is possible that individual companies may be able to produce such information, the statistics requested are not held centrally either by the industry or by this Department.

Flour Supplies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the alleged operation of a cartel in the supply of flour to bakeries. [35665]

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. Any evidence suggesting that there is a cartel in the flour market should be brought to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading, who has the responsibility to consider and, if appropriate, investigate such allegations.

Regional Policy

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who was responsible for the designation of the Isle of Wight under NUTS level II; and if he will set out the decision-taking process and probable timetable for the redesignation of the Isle of Wight under NUTS level III; and what decisions in respect of NUTS designation require the agreement of the European Commission. [35593]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Eurostat, the statistical office of the European Community, has responsibility for the designation of NUTS areas across the Community. The Government yesterday issued a consultation document proposing changes to the UK's NUTS structure to reflect the creation of unitary authorities in England, Scotland and Wales and the decision by the Government statistical service to present regional statistics using the areas represented by the Government offices for the English regions. A copy of the consultation document, which outlines the decision taking process and likely timetable, is being placed in the Library of the House. The final decision on the NUTS areas is for Eurostat.

Industrial and Employment Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the feasibility study carried out by his Department into industrial tribunals and employment appeal tribunals; and if he will make a statement. [35896]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The most recent review in this area followed the commitment in the Green Paper "Resolving Employment Rights Disputes: Options for Reform" (December 1994 Cm 2707) to review the scope for agency status, in consultation with the presidents of the tribunals. It would not be appropriate to publish this assessment and advice to Ministers. However, the main areas covered were:

- the scope for extending to the tribunals administration the benefits of improved efficiency and quality of service achieved by other next steps agencies;
- in this context, the particular benefits of great devolution of managerial responsibility in an area of administration which has expanded considerably in recent years;
- the importance of ensuring that agency arrangements for administrative staff effectively underpin the independence of the industrial tribunals, in England and Wales and in Scotland, and the Employment Appeal Tribunal, as distinct judicial bodies; the constitution of a DTI steering board, to advise Ministers and support the chief executive on strategy development;

As I announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) on 9 May 1996, Official Report, column 216, the Government have concluded that the establishment of the tribunals administrative support as an agency would be beneficial, and should be introduced by 1 April 1997.

Patent Office

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on staff and union consultation during the process of re-engineering within the Patent Office. [35899]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Patent Office management regard consultation of the staff concerned as an essential step in winning commitment to specific proposals for re-engineering. Staff are therefore consulted before any proposals are implemented. The Patent Office management is always ready to meet the trade union side to discuss matters of interest or concern under the Whitley procedures.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the areas within the Patent Office that are under consideration for re-engineering indicating the number of staff, time scale and names of the departments involved; and if he will make a statement. [35897]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Patent Office keeps its structure and organisation under continuing scrutiny for possible improvements to operational efficiency. In particular, it has under review certain "front end" administrative processes which are similar in nature but separately handled in the trade marks directorate and the patents and designs directorate. This exercise is still in its early stages and no detailed time scale or staffing proposals have yet been adopted. About 75 posts are covered. No compulsory redundancies are foreseen.

Public Interest Disclosure Bill

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations his Department has received since 10 April, on the Public Interest Disclosure Bill; how many of these were in favour of the Bill; and how many indicated that the Bill would pose an undue burden on business. [36139]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the period 10 April to 4 July, my Department received 11 letters on the Public Interest Disclosure Bill. Three of these were general inquiries about the Bill, seven were in support and one expressed concern about the Bill.

Post Office

Mr. Couchman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial and efficiency targets he has set for the Post Office in 1996. [36446]

Mr. Oppenheim: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, in agreement with the Treasury and in consultation with the Post Office, has set Royal Mail a target to achieve a 20 per cent. return on capital and employed in each of the three years 1996–97 to 1998–99, and has set Parcelforce a target to achieve a return on capital employed of 1.5 per cent. in 1996–97, 3.5 per cent. in 1997–98 and 5.5 per cent. in 1998–99. The profit used when calculating the returns will be struck after interest, excluding interest on past surpluses, but before tax. The capital employed on which returns will be calculated will be the greater of either opening fixed assets or the previous year's closing capital employed. In addition, Post Office Counters Ltd. has been set a target to achieve a 2.5 per cent. return on turnover in each of the three years 1996–97 to 1998–99. The profit used when calculating the return will also be struck after interest, excluding interest on past surpluses, but before tax.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, in agreement with the Treasury and in consultation with the Post Office, has set a real unit cost target for Royal Mail of a cumulative reduction of 6.2 per cent. by 1998–99 over 1995–96.

Insurance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from people who, having taken out payment protection cover, find their certificate of insurance differs from their letter of acceptance. [35625]

Mr. Nelson: None.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to prevent insurance companies from changing conditions of payment protection cover once a letter of acceptance has been signed by both the insurer and the insured. [35626]

Mr. Nelson: None. If an insurer wishes to change the terms of a policy it is incumbent on the insurer to notify the proposed changes to the policyholder. The policyholder can then decide whether to accept the new terms or to seek alternative cover elsewhere.

Factoring Companies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received about factoring companies capping the limit of the amount of money they collected on behalf of their clients; [35627]

(2) what representations he has received about factoring companies refusing to collect debts on behalf of their clients. [35628]

Mr. Page: I am not aware of any representations being made about factoring companies capping the limit of the amount of money they collect, or refusing to collect debts, on behalf of their clients.

If, however, the hon. Gentleman is aware of any specific problems being experienced by small businesses, I will be happy to receive full details from him.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) United Kingdom legislation, (b) EU legislation and (c) international treaties, conventions or other obligations concerning animal welfare for which his Department has responsibility. [34291]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 June 1996]: None.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many statutory instruments his Department introduced in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) between 1 January 1996 and 1 May 1996 which had the effect of repealing one or more previous statutory instruments without replacing them with a new regulation. [35039]

Mr. Lang [holing answer 3 July 1996]: This information is not available in the form requested. However, a list of regulations that have been repealed or amended was placed in the Library of the House by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 8 May 1996.

Orimulsion

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met Mr. O. J. Williams to discuss the application to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power station; and if he will make a statement. [35525]

Mr. Page [holding answer 4 July 1996]: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has met Mr. Williams.

Nuclear Energy

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the shortfall between the cost of the liabilities which remain the responsibility of the public sector and the amount of moneys available to Magnox, excluding the proceeds from the sale of the advanced gas-coded reaction and pressurised water reactor nuclear power generation stations; and if he will make a statement on how that shortfall was to be met (a) in May 1995 and (b) at present. [35617]

Mr. Ian Lang [holding answer 4 July 1996]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 May 1996, Official Report, column 269. The estimated cost of meeting Magnox Electric's liabilities are given in the company's report and accounts for the year ended 31 March 1996, published on 10 June 1996, as £8.9 billion discounted at 3 per cent. real and £18.2 billion undiscounted. Magnox Electric's liabilities have always been in the public sector and will remain so after the privatisation of British Energy.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Bereaved Families

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance she has issued to employers on ways of helping their staff to make contact with bereaved families. [34659]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has not issued guidance to employers on this subject. A sensitive approach to contacts with bereaved families is an aspect of good employment practice. The Health and Safety Executive provides information and advice to bereaved families following fatal accidents at work.

Key Stage 2 Tests

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on changes in the marking methodology for key stage 2 tests in English between 1995 and 1996. [35895]

Mr. Paice: The School Curriculum and Assessment Authority made a number of improvements this year to the external marking of the national curriculum tests at key stage 2. These included: increased training for markers; at least two checks of each markers' work at least twice; improved mark schemes; confirming the final level boundaries after a sample of actual scripts had been marked; and re-checking papers close to the level boundaries.

A number of improvements were also made to the tests themselves in the light of evaluation evidence from 1995 and in order to bring the tests into line with the revised national curriculum. For the key stage 2 English tests, the writing test marking criteria were updated and a broader range of marks was provided on the handwriting test. Pre-test procedures were put in place to ensure that the standard of performance required for the award of a level was consistent between 1995 and 1996.

Schools Renewal Challenge Fund

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the local education authorities which made bids for the new schools renewal challenge fund indicating the number of bids for each LEA and the total value of each LEA bid. [35905]

Mrs. Gillan: Ninety-five local education authorities submitted bids for the first tranche of allocations for the new schools renewal challenge fund. The following table lists these authorities, the number of bids submitted by each and the total of credit approvals sought.

Schools renewal challenge fund: total LEA bids for first tranche 1996–97

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Jurisdiction and Judgements Act

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many English High Court actions in cases falling within the terms of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982, schedule 8 rule 3, were raised against defenders domiciled in Scotland in each year since 1990 and in the first half of 1996. [35944]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 8 July 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your Question about High Court cases under Schedule 8, Rule 3 of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982.

These figures are not held centrally and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many English county court actions in cases falling within the terms of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982, schedule 8, rule 3, were raised against defenders domiciled in Scotland in each year since 1990 and in the first half of 1996. ### Mayoral Chains and Mace (Sale)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from Birmingham city council regarding the west midlands sheriff's offices' order to bailiffs to list the mayoral chains and mace for sale; and if he will make statement. [35902]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 8 July 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about West Midland's Office.

I can confirm that no representations have been received from Birmingham City Council about the West Midlands Sheriff's Office.

HEALTH

Unique Patient Numbers

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, columns 144–45 if he will (a) publish and (b) place in the Library the results of the study carried out into the cause of duplicate numbers under the NHS unique patient number system. [35326]

Mr. Horam: The results of the studies have not yet been captured in a final report, although progress notes have been produced for the new NHS number programme board. However a report is being drafted, and copies will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as practicable.

Alcoholic Lemonade

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with health education bodies to evaluate the impact of alcoholic lemonade beverages on the health of children. [35479]

Mr. Bowis: None. The Government's report, "Sensible Drinking" December 1995, expressed particular concern about young people inappropriately drinking alcohol of any kind. It specifically recommended that parents and carers of children who drink alcohol should try to ensure that children are aware of its hazards and only consume alcohol in moderate safe quantities for their age group with reference to their physical development. We are currently working with the Health Education Authority to develop new health education messages based on the report for parents and young people.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the effect on the health of young people of alcohol in lemonade-style beverages. [35480]

Mr. Bowis: None.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the relationship between the marketing of alcoholic lemonade and similar drinks and the level of alcohol misuse among young people [34724]

Mr. Bowis: The Government are aware of concerns about the appeal of certain alcoholic drinks to young people. We welcome the code of practice for the packaging, marketing and sale of alcoholic drinks which the Portman Group published in April. The Portman Group and other signatories will monitor the code and we shall be following this carefully to see how effective it is in practice. My noble Friend, Baroness Cumberlege, recently met representatives from Coca Cola GB when this issue was amongst those we discussed. Otherwise, the Department has received a limited amount of correspondence on the subject.

Mortality Rates

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths in England and Wales were due to (a) cancers of the (i) lung, (ii) bronchus and (iii) trachea, (b) motor vehicle accidents, (c) HIV-AIDS infection, (d) tuberculosis and (e) Creutzfeld-Jakob disease in each year since 1986. [34869]

Mr. Horam: The available information on numbers of deaths in England and Wales from cancer of the lung, bronchus and trachea, and from motor vehicle traffic accidents is published:

for 1986–92 in "Mortality statistic: cause England and Wales", OPCS Series DH2 nos. 13–19;

for 1993–94, in "ONS Monitor DH2 96/1"; and for 1995, in "ONS Monitor DH2 96/2".

Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

The figures on deaths in England and Wales from HIV and AIDS are shown in the table.

| Year | HIV | AIDS |
| 1986 | 24 | 262 |
| 1987 | 34 | 334 |

Asthma

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the mortality rate for asthma for each of the last five years (a) among the whole population and (b) among under-16-year-olds. [35087]

Mr. Horam: The table shows asthma mortality rates per 100,000 population for the last five years in England, for all ages and for children aged under 15. Data are not available centrally for the under-16 age group.

| | All ages | Under 15 |
|---|---|---|
| 1991 | 3.6 | 0.3 |
| 1992 | 3.4 | 0.2 |
| 1993 | 3.2 | 0.2 |
| 1994 | 2.9 | 0.3 |
| 1995 | 2.7 | 0.2 |

Rates for 1995 are provisional, based on 1994 population estiamtes.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of NHS expenditure in 1995 was spent on treatment of asthma; [35374]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of NHS expenditure on treatment for asthma in 1995; and what proportion of this expenditure was spent on prescription medicines alone. [35376]

Mr. Horam: The net ingredient cost of national health service prescriptions for asthma medication in 1995 was £410.9 million—provisional figure. That represents just over 11 per cent. of the net ingredient cost of all NHS prescriptions in 1995. The net ingredient cost is the basic price of a drug before discounts and the addition of dispensing costs or fees.

Information on the cost of other NHS services is not available centrally for individual conditions.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make asthma a key area in "The Health of the Nation"; and if he will make a statement. [36445]

Mr. Horam: We have considered very carefully the case for asthma to be given key area status, but decided against it. However, we have announced today consultation on the creation of an environment key area, covering both outdoor and indoor air quality and the possible respiratory effects of air pollution, including asthma. This in part reflects the report of the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants—COMEAP—"Asthma and outdoor air pollution" which found that, although air pollution did not seem to cause asthma, it did aggravate the condition in a small proportion of existing sufferers.

We are also announcing today the projects commissioned as the Department's contribution to the joint research initiative with the Department of the Environment and the Medical Research Council on air pollution and respiratory disease. We have already agreed to fund projects worth £2.5 million. In addition, we shall shortly be issuing a call for research proposals for further work on the surveillance of respiratory disease, including asthma.

"The Health of the Nation" strategy is concerned with the prevention of ill health, rather than its management, and provides a focus for cross-Government working. We have concluded that improving the management of asthma remains the responsibility of the national health service working in partnership with organisations outside Government, and there is limited scope for additional cross-Government working. For these reasons we do not consider that an asthma key area would be appropriate or beneficial.

Nevertheless, improving services for people with asthma has a high priority within the Department of Health, and we are committed to an extensive research programme. The National Asthma Campaign is managing a research strategy on behalf of the Department looking at asthma management in the national health service. It will commission research on the effectiveness of treatments and services for asthma sufferers. That programme will soon be issuing its first call for proposals.

Other important work includes the current consultation on the future of primary care, and within this context we shall be critically examining comments made concerning the chronic disease management programme.

The Department values very highly its productive working partnership with the National Asthma Campaign, which has done much to bring about improvements in the management of asthma and to foster research into this important condition affecting more than 2 million people in England. This partnership has provided the means for joint campaigns which have been all the more effective as a direct result of the National Asthma Campaign's participation. I look forward to the further development of this partnership following today's announcements on the latest research initiatives and the consultation on an environment key area in "The Health of the Nation" strategy.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients or their agents requested NHS trusts to supply a more expensive wheelchair than the standard type from NHS trusts in each year since 1990. [35314]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra electric indoor/outdoor wheelchairs have been provided since 1 April under the scheme announced in February; and if he will give a regional breakdown of the figures. [35904]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not yet available.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in the past two months regarding the proposed closure of St. Bartholomew's hospital. [35475]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has received a number of representations, both from individuals and interested groups, about the future of St. Bartholomew's.

Paediatric Care

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of expenditure in real terms on paediatric care in (a) 1970, (b) 1979 and (c) 1996. [35477]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to eradicate CFCs from metered dosage inhalers. [35506]

Mr. Malone: The Medicines Control Agency is complying with European regulations and the Montreal protocol concerning the removal of chlorofluorocarbon propellants from the environment which undertake to remove CFCs from all medicinal products by the end of 1999.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues to doctors in respect of prescribing non-CFC inhalant medication. [35505]

Mr. Malone: No guidance has been issued to doctors regarding non-CFC inhalant medication, although factual material was included in a bulletin on such devices from the medicines resource centre in September 1995. Copies of this article are available in the Library. However, the Government are committed to the removal of CFCs from all medicinal products by the end of 1999.

Cardiologists

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health regions in the United Kingdom have three or more consultant cardiologists; and if he will list them. [35498]

Mr. Malone: All regions in the United Kingdom have more than three consultant cardiologists.

East London and the City Health Authority

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received other than from hon. Members concerning the adequacy of the capitation formula used for determining moneys paid to the East London and the City health authority; and what replies he has sent. [35632]

Mr. Horam: We have received a small number of representations from interested parties about the weighted capitation formula and its impact on East London and the City health authority. Our responses explain that homelessness and ethnicity, which are the two main areas of concern, are being considered as part of the continuous process of reviewing the formula.

Suicide

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what national statistics are collected on the incidence of and trends in suicide and self-harm; and if he will make a statement. [35523]

Mr. Bowis: The Office of National Statistics collects data on deaths from suicide which have been published in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys series DH2. Data on suicide verdicts and verdicts where the cause of death was aggravated by lack of care or by self-neglect are published in the Home Office statistical bulletin, "Statistics of Deaths Reported to Coroners: England and Wales". Detailed analysis of trends and patterns in suicide have been published in a series of articles in "Population Trends", numbers 2, 35, 69, 71 and 80. The Department of Health's Public Health common data set national volumes also include trends on suicide. Information on the incidence of attempted suicide and self-harm is available for cases that result in treatment as an in-patient in hospital. The data are published in volume 2 of "Hospital Episode Statistics: England" for the years 1989–90 to 1993–94. All these publications are available in the Library.

The overall trend, which is down by 7.2 per cent. since 1990, is encouraging. The suicide rate for young men aged between 15 and 29, which had been rising since 1982, has fallen in the last years in the 15 to 19 age group and begun to plateau among 20 to 29-year-olds. The rate among people over 75 is also continuing to fall. It is not possible to derive any trends from the figures on attempted suicide and self-harm since a large and variable proportion of episodes with a diagnosis of injury and poisoning have no attributable cause.

Paediatric Doctors

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received over the recruitment of paediatrician doctors qualified for staffing children's wards in district general hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [35719]

Mr. Malone: Correspondence about the recruitment of paediatric consultants has been received from the British Paediatric Association.

I recently announced additional funding of £5.7 million in 1996–97 to provide a significant increase in training opportunities for doctors wishing to become consultants. In paediatrics, the increase for 1996–97 is 262, larger than any other specialty.

Regional postgraduate deans are expected to target the available resources on those specialties, such as paediatrics, which have seen a rapidly increasing demand for consultant manpower.

Health Services (Charges)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that when trusts and health authorities hold a public consultation for proposals for substantial changes in services, the results are published showing summarised views and the reasons given for decisions contrary to assessed opinion; and if he will make a statement. [35843]

Mr. Horam: We expect health authorities to conduct their business in as open a manner as possible. The outcome of public consultation is normally discussed in open session of a health authority meeting and we would expect papers summarising health authority views and justifying their decisions to be available at the meeting.

Where a community health council contests a proposal and it is referred to Ministers for a decision, Ministers write to the council informing them of the reasons for that decision.

District General Hospitals

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes he has made to the guidelines for the assessment of viability of district general hospitals in mixed rural and urban areas. [35720]

Mr. Horam: None. The latest guidance, "The Operation of the NHS Internal Market: Local Freedoms, National Responsibilities"—HSG(94)55—was published on 12 December 1994. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Contaminated Blood Products

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will offer ex gratia payments to people with haemophilia who have been infected with hepatitis C through NHS treatment with contaminated blood products; [36179]

(2) what plans he has for providing long-term financial help to people with haemophilia who were infected with HIV through NHS treatment using contaminated blood products. [36180]

Mr. Horam: The Government's view remains that, while they have great sympathy for those infected with Hepatitis C in this way, as no fault or negligence on the part of the national health service has been proved, we have no plans at present to make special payments. We are always ready to listen to further evidence, but the best way that the Government can help at present is to encourage research and the best treatment for those infected, as well as supporting voluntary groups with them. This we are doing.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what money is spent annually on (a) treatment and support services for haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C through NHS treatment with contaminated blood products, (b) research into this problem and (c) recombinant products at (i) national and (ii) regional level. [36130]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Obesity

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the estimated percentage, for each nation within the United Kingdom of (a) men and (b) women, aged (i) 16 to 64 years and (ii) 64 years and over, who were obese for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [36048]

Mr. Horam: The table shows the information available for England from 1991–1994. Prior to this, the data are less comprehensive, and information is available for 1980 and 1986–87 for Great Britain only. For information relating to other parts of the United Kingdom I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Organically Produced Food

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated; on the potential effects on public health of the consumption of organically produced food; and if he will make a statement. [36051]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health has not commissioned such research.

Passive Smoking

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his letter of 17 June, what recent representations he has received on the health effects of passive smoking. [34638]

Mr. Horam: The information pack produced by Philip Morris Europe SA in conjunction with its current publicity campaign on passive smoking has been received and is being studied.

HIV Services

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who are the chief executives and officers responsible for purchasing HIV services with each health authority. [34851]

Mr. Horam: This information is not collected centrally.

HIV Prevention (Prisons)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances health authorities are authorised to provide ring-fenced HIV prevention money for health promotion in prisons in their areas; and if programmes supported by these funds are available to the entire prison population within the establishment. [34872]

Mr. Horam: Health authorities are allocated ring-fenced funds for locally targeted prevention and education initiatives to help curb the spread of HIV. In carrying out their needs assessment, health authorities are expected to liaise with other agencies in their areas, including those working with people in custody or care of the criminal justice services, to help identify local priorities for HIV health promotion work. The scope of such work is a matter for local agreement.

Pre-payment Prescriptions

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) pursuant to his answer of 30 April Official Report, column 503, on pre-payment prescription certificates, what research his Department has undertaken to identify the costs of administering a weekly instalment system for pre-payment prescription certificates; [35377]

(2) what measures his Department is taking to publicise the availability of pre-payment certificates for prescriptions. [35458]

Mr. Malone: None.

We propose to amend current regulations later this year to allow community pharmacists who wish to do so to sell prescription prepayment certificates directly to patients. At present, patients must apply to a health authority. We will take further steps to publicise the availability of prepayment of certificates once this change has been made.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on the use of the private finance initiative by individual hospital trusts for building projects or the reorganisation of health services by health authorities; and what guidance for trusts his Department has published on this matter. [35648]

Mr. Horam: So far, 57 schemes have been approved under the private finance initiative worth over £520 million. A further 40 schemes with a capital value of over £1.5 billion are testing private finance options as part of the PFI process.

For the guidance issued for trusts, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 15 January at column 343.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each private finance initiative scheme advertised in the contracts supplement to the European Commission Official Journal, the adviser selected and named to assist potential contractors indicating how each was selected. [35889]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not available centrally. It is a matter for individual trusts to appoint advisers and guidance is available on the selection process.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the list of advisers currently approved to assist potential contractors seeking clarification in relation to private finance initiative schemes advertised in the contracts supplement to the Official Journal of the European Commission; if he will specify the arrangements by which such advisers are allowed to collect fees in exchange for supplying pre-qualification documents to contractors; and if he will make a statement. [35892]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally. Advisers are appointed on the basis of their experience and relevant expertise. The payment of fees is part of the agreement between contractor and adviser and it is for the individual parties concerned to determine when these payments occur.

Nurses

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the publication of hospital performance tables on the recruitment of nurses hired solely to greet patients within five minutes of arrival in casualty departments. [35887]

Mr. Horam: It is clear that, where additional nurses are in place, this is in response to increased demand for accident and emergency services and not as a result of performance tables.

Information Management Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 334, if he will give the previous rank and position or outside job held by the two new deputy directors of the NHS centre for coding and classification. [35767]

Mr. Horam: Prior to being designated as deputy directors at the national health service centre for coding and classification—NHS CCC—the two individuals concerned are respectively:

Head of the clinical coding support unit based in Manchester which was part of the information management group of the NHS Executive. Then, head of the classification department at the NHS CCC.

General Practitioner in the NHS. Then, various posts at the NHS CCC including senior medical coding consultant, head of projects and head of Read code development.

Edgware General Hospital

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the outcome of the meeting of the doctors' working group to finalise its recommendations on Thursday 4 July, in respect of the accident and emergency replacement facilities at Edgware general hospital; and if he will make a statement. [35832]

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) of 1 July, Official Report, columns 338–39, what was the outcome of the meeting of the doctors' working group that met on Thursday 4 July to discuss matters relating to the accident and emergency department at Edgware hospital; and if he will make a statement. [35831]

Mr. Dorrell: As part of the process to which I referred in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) on 1 July at columns 338–39, the working group met on Thursday 4 July to finalise its recommendations to Barnet health authority about medical input to the casualty service at Edgware hospital. The working group has endorsed the principle that there should be a medical presence within the casualty service.

This helpful recommendation, which reflects the local opinions that have been voiced over many months by my hon. Friends and others, will be considered by Barnet health authority at its next meeting.

Read Codes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 334, if he will specify the organisation or person carrying out the study of the licensing arrangements between Computer Aided Medical Systems plc and the NHS; if that organisation was chosen by competitive tenders; when the study was started; when he expected it to be completed; and if he will place a copy in the Library of the completed report. [35768]

Mr. Horam: The review of current licensing and support arrangements for Read codes will be carried out by Silicon Bridge Research. Since it was chosen for its particular skills and experience, at a cost below the single tender limit, there was no competitive tender. The review started an 4 July 1996 and is expected to be completed by the end of October 1996. A report of its findings will be placed in the Library.

Trust and Health Authorities (Debts)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 93, if he will show the amount of bad debts and claims abandoned for each health authority in each region broken down by category for the last three years. [33097]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 17 June 1996]: The information will be placed in the Library.

Child Abuse Inquires

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to public funds of (a) the independent review of residential care conducted by Lady Wagner and (b) its report, "Residential Care-A Positive Choice". [35146]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 1 July 1996]: The information is not available.

DEFENCE

Land Mines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many JP233 mines were left by United Kingdom forces at bomb dump M3 in Bahrain after the Gulf war; and how many of them are currently owned by the United Kingdom Government. [35360]

Mr. Soames: All JP 233 munitions in Bahrain were returned to the UK after the Gulf war.

Hawk Trainer Crash, Portugal

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 416, in respect of the crash of a Hawk trainer, when the NATO standardisation agreement came into operation. [35691]

Mr. Soames: NATO standardisation agreement 3531 first came into operation in 1964.

Official Secrets (Military Accidents)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to alter the provisions contained in official secrets legislation in relation to military incidents resulting in (a) injuries and (b) fatalities; and if he will make a statement. [35703]

Mr. Soames: There are no provisions in official secrets legislation relating specifically to such incidents. Service board of inquiry reports on military incidents resulting in fatalities are released to the next of kin of deceased service personnel, on request, subject to the minimum of security requirements.

Armed Forces

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 16 May, Official Report, column 559, if he will break down the figures for armed forces by (a) year and (b) service for each year since 1991. [35751]

Mr. Soames: The strength of the Regular armed forces by service, on 1 April for each year since 1991, was as follows:

| | 1991 | 1992 | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 | 1996 |
| RN/RM | 62,100 | 62,100 | 54,400 | 55,800 | 50,900 | 48,300 |
| Army | 154,600 | 152,400 | 140,900 | 128,600 | 115,900 | 113,400 |
| RAF | 88,400 | 86,000 | 80,900 | 75,700 | 70,800 | 64,700 |
| Total | 305,100 | 300,500 | 281,200 | 260,100 | 237,600 | 226,400 |
| Others[1] | 2,100 | 2,000 | 1,900 | 1,600 | 1,000 | 1,000 |

[1]Locally Engaged Service Personnel. Army figures include Gurkha strengths.
All figures contain an element for personnel undergoing training.

Unidentified Flying Objects

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which office within his Department deals with sightings of unidentified flying objects. [35845]

Mr. Soames: The focal point within my Department for reports of sightings of unidentified flying objects is Secretariat(Air Staff)2a.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by (a) date and (b) location for the last 10 years unexplainable sightings of unidentified flying objects received by his Department; and what action was subsequently taken. [35844]

Mr. Soames: My Department evaluates reports of "unexplained" aerial phenomena solely in order to establish whether they may have any defence significance. Unless there is evidence to indicate that the UK air defence region may have been compromised, and to date no sighting has provided such evidence, my Department does not investigate or seek to provide an explanation for what was observed. The question of unexplainable sightings has not therefore arisen.

Animal Welfare Advisory Committee

Sir Roger Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further progress has been made in forming an Animal Welfare Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement. [36469]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In my previous answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) of 20 December 1995, Official Report, column 1173, I undertook to make a further announcement about membership and detailed procedures of the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee. The committee has now been formed under the chairmanship of Dr. Jeremy Lucke, a former president of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. The committee will be meeting later in the summer to agree working arrangements and will submit an initial report on these to my Department's chief scientific adviser. It is intended that unclassified versions of the committee's substantive reports will be published.

Anglo-French Co-operation

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each current joint programme or initiative being undertaken with the French Ministry of Defence. [35737]

Mr. Soames: Full information on such programmes is not held centrally. The following comprises the bulk of co-operative programmes, in which the French armed services are involved with our armed services:

Organisations/groupings

North Atlantic Treaty Organisation

United Nations

Western European Union

Organisation for Security Cooperation in Europe

Partnership for Peace

Franco British Euro Air Group

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings (a) he has (b) other Defence Ministers have had with their French counterparts in the last 12 months. [35738]

Mr. Soames: As one would expect, Defence Ministers have met their French counterparts in bilateral and multilateral forums on numerous occasions over the past 12 months.

Tidworth Garrison

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress with the private finance initiative project for the water and sewerage works at Tidworth garrison. [36468]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am pleased to announce that, following expressions of interest from over 50 companies and outline proposals from 14, we have now selected Wessex Water Services Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Wessex Water plc, as the preferred bidder for the supply of water and sewerage services for Tidworth Garrison. Detailed contract negotiations will now commence with Wessex Water with the aim of achieving full transfer of responsibility at the beginning of 1997.

The application of private finance will not only represent a saving to the taxpayer but will provide a higher standard of service for all customers at no extra cost, as well as allowing the MOD to focus its efforts on its core business, that of supporting the operational activities of the armed forces.

Bastille Day Parade

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what units of the (a) Army and (b) Royal Air Force will participate in the Bastille day parade in France on 14 July. [35736]

Mr. Soames: Eight RAF aircraft will participate in the fly-past along the Champs Elysee to celebrate Bastille day on 14 July. The composition of the RAF participation is as follows:

One VC10 tanker from 101 Squadron RAF Brize Norton

Four Tornado GR1s from XV Squadron RAF Lossiemouth

Three Harrier GR7s from 3 Squadron RAF Laarbruch

NAAFI

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to finalise the new Navy, Army and Air Force Institutions charter; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [35766]

Mr. Soames: The MOD-NAAFI charter has now been approved and has been submitted for printing. A copy of the charter will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

PRIME MINISTER

Transsexuals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister which department and which Minister has been assigned overall responsibility for parliamentary issues concerning transsexuals; and if he will make a statement. [35269]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 24 June 1996, Official Report, column 14. No Minister or Department has been assigned overall responsibility for parliamentary issues concerning transsexuals. Where, as in this case, issues may touch on the responsibilities of a number of Departments, Ministers and officials in the different Departments work closely together to ensure effective co-ordination.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to lay before Parliament and publish the annual report of the Serious Fraud Office for 1995–96. [36309]

The Attorney-General: The report was laid before Parliament this morning and then published. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Abuse

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he issues to police forces and local education authorities about joint action to warn pupils of the dangers of drug taking. [35056]

Mr. Sackville: Police forces are involved in a wide range of projects to provide school pupils with information on the dangers on drug misuse. Guidance on the content and organisation of drugs education and the involvement of other agencies, including the police, has been issued by the Department for Education and Employment. In addition, £6 million has been given to schools under the grants for education support and training programme to train teachers and support new projects in drug education and prevention.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications are currently awaiting an initial decision by his Department's asylum directorate; how many appeals against a refusal of asylum are currently being processed by the asylum directorate; and how many appeals against a refusal of asylum, having been processed by the asylum directorate and despatched to the Immigration Appellate Authority, are awaiting hearings by the authority. [35602]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 31 May, there were 66,400 asylum applications awaiting an initial decision. As at the same date, there were 870 asylum appeals awaiting validation and preparation by the asylum directorate and 15,650 appeals awaiting a hearing by the Immigration Appellate Authority.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons granted temporary admission to the United Kingdom pending determination of their application for asylum since 1 January 1994 are recorded as having absconded. [35606]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average time taken by his Department's asylum directorate to process and despatch to the Immigration Appellate Authority an appeal against a refusal of asylum; and what is the average time taken by the authority to hear and determine such an appeal; [35601]

(2) what is the average time currently taken by his Department to reach an initial decision on (a) all asylum applications and (b) asylum applications submitted (i) prior to and (ii) since implementation of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993. [35609]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on the times taken at the various stages of the asylum process are given in the table.

Average times involved in deciding applications for asylum (December 1995–May 1996)

| | Months |
|---|---|
| Time taken for an initial decision to be made (Pre-Act applications) | 43.2 |
| Time taken for an initial decision to be made (Post-Act applications) | 10.7 |
| Time taken by the Home Office to process an appeal | 2.0 |
| Time taken by the Immigration Appellate Authority to determine an appeal | 8.2 |

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number and percentage of asylum seekers are (a) still waiting for consideration of their asylum application to be formally completed by the Home Office and (b) not having their asylum application pursued because his Department has granted them permission to stay. [35634]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 31 May, there were 66,400 asylum applications awaiting an initial decision. Information on the number of asylum seekers granted leave to enter or remain in another capacity in the United Kingdom, prior to their asylum applications being decided, is not held centrally.

Immigration (Detention Centres)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to his Department of detaining persons under Immigration Act powers in immigration service detention centres, prison service establishments and police cells in 1995–96; and what amount of that cost was reclaimed from carrying companies during the same period. [35604]

Mr. Kirkhope: The cost of detaining persons in immigration service detention centres and police cells under Immigration Act powers in the 1995–96 financial year was some £14.2 million. Of this, some £2 million was spent on police cells and the balance on the immigration service detention estate.

No charge is made to the immigration service for the use of Prison Service accommodation but the estimated notional cost of this for the same period is about £9 million.

The Immigration Act specifies certain conditions under which detention costs can be reclaimed from carriers and some £400,000 was reclaimed under these provisions in 1995–96.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average weekly cost of detaining a person under Immigration Act powers in (a) an immigration service detention centre and (b) a Prison Service establishment. [35603]

Mr. Kirkhope: For the 1995–96 financial year, the average cost of detaining a person in a centre within the Immigration Service estate was about £560 per week. This figure includes the cost of administrative support from headquarters.

Persons detained under Immigration Act powers in Prison Service accommodation are normally housed separately in specially designated establishments, where the average cost per place in 1994–95 was £449 per week. This figure excludes headquarters costs.

Immigration (Carriers Liability)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were arrested at Heathrow airport on suspicion of having used or attempted to use forged instruments to board an aircraft in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 to date; how many such persons were formally charged with such an offence in the same periods; and how many such persons were convicted of such an offence in the same periods. [35607]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information is not available in the form requested. The table sets out the available information relating to all arrests at Heathrow airport for offences contrary either to section 1 or the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 or section 3 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that statistical records relating to forged instruments are not kept by reference to the use to which that instrument was being put. All those arrested were formally charged but statistical information on how many of them were convicted is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

| Attempting to obtain a service by deception | 7 | 16 | 29 | 250 |
| Using/possession of a forged instrument | 27 | 37 | 97 | 126 |

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total amount of liability incurred by carriers under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 in each year since 1987; how much has been paid to date; how much has been waived to date; and how much is currently outstanding. [35605]

Mr. Kirkhope: Total charges incurred by carriers under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 in each year since the inception of the Act are as follows: (Charges are shown in £ million).

1988: £ 4.40
1989: £ 7.86
1990: £ 9.63
1991: £12.89[1]
1992: £12.72
1993: £11.04
1994: £13.24
1995: £12.37

[1] The charge increased from £1,000 to £2,000 per inadequately documented passenger on 1 August 1991.

Charges amounting to £94.45 million have been incurred to date. A total of £56.91 million has been paid, £18.73 million waived, and £18.81 million is currently outstanding.

Palestinian Passports

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of recognition of Palestinian passports. [35702]

Mr. Kirkhope: The United Kingdom accepts passports issued by the Palestinian authority, as provided for by the Cairo agreement, as valid for travel to the United Kingdom.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current policy on overtime in the Metropolitan police service. [35259]

Mr. Maclean: The Commissioner informs me that it is his policy that overtime is not worked unless it is operationally necessary, and that officers are compensated in accordance with the provisions of the police regulations.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current funding level of the Metropolitan police service; and if he will list the areas of budget reductions in respect of the Metropolitan police in the current year. [35260]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 6 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington), Official Report, columns 702–03; it is for the commissioner to decide how the budget that my right hon. and learned Friend has approved, which includes a 2 per cent. increase with a further 1 per cent. in reserve, may best be allocated across the Metropolitan police. The Metropolitan police estimates for 1996–97 will be published as a command paper later this financial year.

Prisons (Hepatitis)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to monitor the levels of hepatitis B and C within prisons in England and Wales. [34873]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Robert Key, dated 8 July 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the steps being taken to monitor the levels of Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C within prisons in England and Wales.

The Prison Service has a central system for monitoring hepatitis in inmates based on annual returns from establishments. The information recorded includes the following which relate to the number of new cases of hepatitis identified during each year.

Acute Hepatitis A

Acute Hepatitis B

Chronic Hepatitis B

Acute Hepatitis C

Other Hepatitis

The latest results of this monitoring were published in the annual report of the Director of Health Care (1994–95).

From April 1996 a new monthly system of health care monitoring was introduced. This includes similar questions to the above relating to hepatitis. The new system and distinguishes between new cases identified during the month and actual numbers with hepatitis on a given day. This enables more accurate information on prevalence to be produced.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is issued for the treatment of prisoners with hepatitis B and C. [34875]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Robert Key, dated 8 July 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the guidance which is issued for the treatment of prisoners with hepatitis B and C.

No specific advice is issued to prison doctors on the treatment of hepatitis B but this is managed by the managing medical officer within his/her clinical judgement taking note of specialist advice. The treatment of acute cases of hepatitis C (HCV) is managed along similar lines.

Advice on the treatment of HCV including the necessity to seek consultant advice, provide pre-test counselling and the need for consent to testing has recently been issued, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. This advice was developed in conjunction with the Department of Health and the Public Health Laboratory Service.

London Fire Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hon. Members have made representations to him regarding (a) proposed changes in the level of London's fire service and (b) closures of London's fire stations. [35508]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 4 July 1996]: The London Fire and Civil Defence Authority applied on 6 March for my right hon. and learned Friend's approval under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947 to certain changes in operational fire cover, including the removal of 15 fire appliances from stations around London. No station closures are involved. Correspondence has been received from 53 hon. Members regarding the proposed changes. The application is under consideration.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State has also met my hon. Friends the Members for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) and for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) and the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey.

TREASURY

Value Added Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue in a full year from the imposition of VAT at the standard rate on aircraft fuel. [35324]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The estimate of the revenue in 1995 from the imposition of VAT at the standard rate on aircraft fuel for internal flights is £10 million. Fuel used for overseas flights is zero-rated. Assuming that the imposition of VAT at the standard rate on such fuel would have had no effect on demand, it is estimated that £160 million would have been raised in 1995.

Asset Inflation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to control asset inflation. [35931]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Interest rates are set to achieve the inflation target, which is to keep underlying retail price inflation, RPIX, at or below 2½ per cent. Asset prices are among the indicators that the Government take into account in assessing the prospects for inflation.

Utility Prices

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 286, on the utility component of the retail prices index, what factors underlay the delay in answering the question; and when he first received a draft answer to the question. [36306]

Mr. Jack: I replied when I was in a position to provide a suitable answer. It is not my practice to disclose information relating to the advice given by officials.

Earnings

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, column 22, regarding earnings, if he will provide the figures excluding overtime payments. [35077]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I am placing the available information from the "New Earnings Survey" in the Members' Library.

Tax Relief

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each major item for which tax relief is currently granted; and if he will indicate the current total value of each of these categories of tax relief. [35739]

Mr. Jack: Comprehensive information about the cost of principal tax expenditure and structural reliefs was published in the "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs" in July 1995. A copy can be found in the Library of the House. Estimates for 1995–96 and 1996–97 based on the summer economic forecast will be published in this year's edition later this month.

Privatisation Proceeds

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the proceeds to the Exchequer of each privatisation since 1979 at current prices. [35725]

Mr. Jack: Table 5.6 of the "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1996–97" (HMSO Cm 3201) gives privatisation proceeds by sale in cash terms. The table sets out annual proceeds in cash and current 1996–97 prices. It would not be possible to give current price proceeds on a sale-by-sale basis without incurring disproportionate cost.

Privatisation proceeds (£ million)

| Year | Cash | Current 1996–97 prices |
|---|---|---|
| 1979–80 | 377 | 994 |
| 1980–81 | 210 | 468 |
| 1981–82 | 493 | 1,002 |
| 1982–83 | 455 | 863 |
| 1983–84 | 1,139 | 2,065 |
| 1984–85 | 2,050 | 3,538 |
| 1985–86 | 2,706 | 4,428 |
| 1986–87 | 4,458 | 7,081 |
| 1987–88 | 5,140 | 7,751 |
| 1988–89 | 7,069 | 9,992 |
| 1989–90 | 4,225 | 5,582 |
| 1990–91 | 5,347 | 6,776 |

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many statutory instruments his Department introduced in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) between 1 January 1996 and 1 May 1996 which had the effect of repealing one or more previous statutory instruments without replacing them with a new regulation. [35045]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 July 1996]: This information is not presently available in the form requested, and could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost. However, a list of regulations that have been repealed or amended was placed in the House Libraries by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 8 May.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many written parliamentary questions to his Department in the past 12 months had not received a full answer within five weeks of the question being tabled; and if he will list the reasons in each case. [36307]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Eight out of 2,102. In each of these cases, the answering Minister was concerned to give as complete a reply as possible.

Income Tax

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the levels of income tax in

(a) the 1996–97 and (b) the 1978–79 indexed regimes broken down into the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent. and bottom 50 per cent. and 10 per cent. of taxpayers, showing the total changes in the level of tax and the average gain or loss to each group. [35511]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 July 1996]: Information on the reduction in income tax liability for 1996–97 compared with the 1978–79 indexed regime is given in the table. This comparison is hypothetical since if an indexed version of the 1978–79 tax regime had prevailed over the past 18 years the income base would not have grown as it has.

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Per cent. | 1996–97 £ million | 1978–79 indexed regime £ million | £ million | £ |
| Top 1 | 12,500 | 23,100 | 10,600 | 38,900 |
| Top 5 | 25,400 | 40,700 | 15,300 | 11,200 |
| Top 10 | 33,900 | 52,400 | 18,500 | 6,800 |
| Bottom 50 | 8,700 | 14,000 | 5,300 | 400 |
| Bottom 10 | 90 | 430 | 340 | 130 |

Bad Debts (Tax Treatment)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchquer if he will make a statement on the tax treatment of bad debts on loans made to organisations which are not bankrupt. [35936]

Mr. Jack: The calculation of trading profit for tax purposes follows general accounting principles which, broadly, determine that income and expenditure should be brought into account on an accruals basis. This means that a trader may be charged to tax on money owed to the business in an accounting period even if the money is not actually received. However, if a particular debt to a business is bad or considered by the trader as being doubtful, a deduction may be given in the accounting period in which the debt becomes bad or is considered as doubtful, in effect cancelling out the charge to tax on so much of that debt as is viewed as bad or doubtful.

Capital items—income and expenditure—are excluded form the computation of taxable profits. Generally, loans will be on capital account, with the result that no account may be taken of the extent to which they are bad or doubtful in arriving at the profits for tax purposes, unless they are made in the course of a trade of banking or moneylending or as an adjunct, or as an essential part, of some other trade.

Relief may, however, be given as a capital loss when loans to traders prove irrecoverable, or when a guarantor of a loan to a trade is obliged to make a payment under the guarantee.

Whether a debt is bad or doubtful depends on the particular facts. But while bankruptcy or insolvency of the debtor may be evidence that a debt is bad or doubtful, it is not an absolute requirement at a debtor be insolvent or bankrupt before a debt can be bad or doubtful for tax purposes.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Members' Pay and Allowances

35. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to introduce new proposals on Members' pay and allowances, pursuant to the report of the Top Salaries Review Committee. [34719]

Mr. Newton: The Government have announced their proposals and the House will debate the matter on Wednesday 10 July.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent assessment he has made of levels of right hon. and hon. Members' pay and allowances. [34713]

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Prime Minister's reply of 4 July to the hon. Member for Chorley (Mr. Dover), Official Report, column 505.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the annual salary of a Member of the House of Commons on 1 October 1971; and what that salary would be today if it had been increased annually (a) in line with inflation and (b) in line with the national average increase in earnings. [35641]

Mr. Newton: On 1 October 1971, a Member's annual salary was £3,250. The salary in May this year, the latest date for which figures are available, would be:

(a) £24,041 had it been increased in line with inflation; and

(b) £36,899 had it been increased in line with the national average increase in earnings.

Parliamentary Calendar

36. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent representations he has received about the parliamentary calendar; and if he will make a statement. [34720]

Mr. Newton: A few, including a letter from the hon. Gentleman and the exchanges at Question Time on Monday 10 June, Official Report, columns 19–20.

Sitting Hours

38. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent assessment he has made of the sitting hours of other European parliaments. [34722]

Mr. Newton: I have made no such assessment, but the hon. Gentleman may wish to consult the memorandums from the Director of the German Bundestag and the Secretary General of the French National Assembly which were submitted to the Select Committee on Sittings of the House in 1991–92 [HC 20–II (1991–92), pp 154–160].

Prime Minister's Question Time

34. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to act on the recommendations contained in the seventh report of the Select Committee on Procedure relating to Prime Minister's Question Time, HC 555, Session 1994–95. [34718]

37. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to review the procedures for Prime Minister's Question Time. [34721]

Mr. Newton: The Government have always regarded the arrangements for Prime Minister's questions as a matter for the House to decide, and wish to hear the views of the House. Thursday's debate on parliamentary procedure will provide an opportunity to discuss this and a range of other procedural issues.

Parliamentary Procedures (Efficiency)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will initiate a survey of the efficiency of the procedures of the House. [34723]

Mr. Newton: The efficiency of the procedures of the House falls within the remit of the Procedure Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff Salaries

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the average annual salary, including where appropriate any overtime, on 1 October 1971 of (i) (a) a senior Library clerk, (b) the highest-paid chef, (c) a senior Clerk in the House of Commons and (ii) a ministerial car driver; if he will indicate in each of those cases what that salary would be today if it had been increased annually in line with inflation; and what is the current annual salary for each of those grades. [35642]

Mr. Beith: Figures for salaries of Commission staff prior to 1978 are not available centrally and they can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Since the establishment of the House of Commons Commission in 1978, staff salaries have been included in the Commission's annual reports. Figures for ministerial car drivers are a matter for the Cabinet Office. The earliest figures readily available are those for 1 April 1978. London based salaries are as follows:

Senior Clerk: £7,315–£9,253 p.a

Senior Library Clerk: £5,917–£8,879 p.a

Executive Chef: £9,980 p.a. (at 1 January 1980)'

Those senior Clerks and senior Library Clerks who performed additional night duty were paid an allowance of £1,555 p.a.

Applying the inflation factors for 1 April 1978 (x 3.093) and 1 January 1980 (x 2.454), respectively, these figures become:-

Senior Clerk: £22,625–£28,619 p.a

Senior Library Clerk: £18,301–£27,463 p.a

Executive Chef: £24,490 p.a.

The night allowance becomes £4,810 p.a.

Current salaries for the above grades are as follows:

Senior Clerk
Senior Library Clerk
Executive Chef
} £28,954–£43,802 p.a.

The current rate of night allowance is £4,010 p.a.

' The Refreshment Department did not become a Department of the House until 1980 and staff salaries for that Department did not appear in the Commission's report until that for 1979–80.

In 1992, staff pay scales were radically restructured and they now include an element for performance-related pay so that strict comparison with the earlier pay scales is not valid.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list those parliamentary constituencies he has visited in the last three months on official business and those constituencies he intends to visit in the next three months; and if he will make a statement. [33864]

The Deputy Prime Minister: In the three months to 19 June, I visited the following constituencies on official business:

Birmingham, Hodge Hill

Birmingham, Small Heath

Belfast, East

Belfast, West

Upper Bann

South Antrim

Details of future visits are not given for security reasons, although I shall of course do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those constituencies he has visited in the last three months on official business and those constituencies he intends to visit in the next three months; and if he will make a statement. [34357]

Mr. Freeman: During the last three months I have visited the following constituencies: Ladywood, Widness, Ellesmore Port, Nuneaton, Bristol West, Chester, Richmond (Yorks), Warrington (North), Taunton, South Wirral, Salisbury, South Staffordshire, Newcastle upon Tyne, Central, Montgomery, Shropshire, North, Shrewsbury, and Belfast, East.

I have not yet finalised my ministerial visits for the next three months. I always do my best to give prior warning to hon. Members when I visit their constituencies in an official capacity.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if compliance cost assessments are obligatory for all statutory instruments. [35143]

Mr. Freeman: A compliance cost assessment is required for all statutory instruments that effect business, charities and voluntary organisations. Full details of the requirement to prepare a compliance cost assessment are set out in "Checking the Cost of Regulation: A Guide to Compliance Cost Assessment", copies of which are available in the House Libraries.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what has been the total compliance cost of all rules and regulations since April 1995. [35144]

Mr. Freeman: I regret that information is not held in this form. However, as part of the recent introduction of new compliance cost and risk assessment procedures, I am considering whether assessments of the total cost and benefit of new regulations might be recorded and published in future.

Business Panel

Mrs. Roché: To ask the Deputy Prime Minster if he will list the membership of the panel of business people advising in interchange between the civil service and industry. [35639]

The Deputy Prime Minister [holding answer 4 July 1996]: The members of the interchange panel, who are unpaid, are as follows:

Sir Bryan Nicholson (Chairman)

(Emeritus President of the CBI, chairman of BUPA and Varity Europe Ltd., and Chancellor of Sheffield Hallam university);

Alec Daly CBE

(chairman of the National Manufacturing Council and Deputy Director General of the CBI, chairman of Cray Electronics, and Brent International);

Ian MaAllister CBE

(chairman of Ford Motor Co. Ltd. of Britain);

Mark Radcliffe

(chairman of Upton Management Services Ltd. and Metsec plc, and formerly main board director of the TI Group and Deputy Director General of the CBI);

Nigel Whittaker

(chairman of Cardcast plc, strategic and corporate affairs consultant, and formerly chairman of the Deregulation task force for small business, retail and tourism).

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to promote interchange between the civil service and small businesses. [35638]

The Deputy Prime Minister [holding answer 4 July 1996]: Interchange between all parts of the private sector and the civil service is promoted by the Office of Public Service, Government Departments, and the Whitehall and industry group. I have recently appointed a panel of businessmen from a wide range of sectors, including small businesses, to help increase these exchanges.

WALES

Land Reclamation Schemes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reductions in funding to the Welsh Development Agency for land reclamation schemes have been made in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement on the implications of financial reductions for schemes where tenders had been invited and accepted, subject to Welsh Development Agency approval. [35925]

Mr. Hague: The agency's budget for land reclamation in 1996–97 is £14 million. The other issues are operational matters for the WDA and I will arrange for its chief executive to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each of the land reclamation schemes under way in Wales, indicating the areas being reclaimed in each case. [35926]

Mr. Hague: These are operational matters for the Welsh Development Agency. I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Schools (Opting Out)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number of complaints he has received on each occasion a ballot for opt-out status has been held, indicating whether the complaints concerned the materials and/or activities of those campaigning (a) for and (b) against opting out; and what action was taken about each complaint; [34814]

(2) if he will list the occasions the Welsh Office has scrutinised the leaflets and other materials sent to parents (a) in support of and (b) against schools opting out, indicating whether this scrutiny was preceded by any complaints and whether in case (a) or (b) changes were ordered. [34815]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: It is particularly important that parents of pupils at a school where a ballot on grant-maintained status is taking place should have access to information that is objective and not misleading. As part of the Welsh Office's normal monitoring arrangements of grant-maintained ballots, both the school at which the ballot is taking place and its local education authority are therefore requested to submit for scrutiny copies of any material that they have issued or received in connection with the ballot irrespective of whether there has been a complaint. When complaints about the material that has been circulated to parents or the activities of those campaigning are received, they are investigated by Welsh Office officials. Details of these complaints could, however, by provided only at disproportionate cost.

Education Funding

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much funding in cash and real terms has been spent on the administration of the education department in each of the last four years; and what percentage of the total funding this represents (a) including and (b) excluding the funds of the higher and further education councils in Wales. [34816]

Mr. Hague: The information is given in the following table:

| | 1993–94 | 1994–95 | 1995–96 | 1996–97 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Welsh Office Education Department Running Costs: [1] | | | | |
| Cash | 1.935[2] | 2.000[2] | 1.935 | 1.962 |
| Real term 1994–95 prices | 1.971[1] | 2.000[2] | 1.883 | 1.858 |

| Excluding the Welsh Funding Councils | 2.0 | 1.6 | 1.4 | 1.5 |

[1] DRC figures for staffing costs, travel and subsistence, stationery and training.
[2] Includes translation unit costs.
[3] Excludes LEA Credit approvals.

Casualty Departments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of the publication of hospital performance tables on the recruitment of nurses to greet patients within five minutes of arrival in casualty departments. [35886]

Mr. Hague: I would be surprised if any hospital had recruited nurses solely to greet patients on arrival at casualty departments. The patients charter for Wales requires casualty departments not only to ease the natural concerns of the nearly 800,000 new patients attending accident and emergency departments each year but to make an immediate clinical assessment of the urgency of the treatment and care required.

Information published in the hospital performance tables for the NHS in Wales demonstrates that casualty departments throughout Wales have greatly improved this important aspect of their emergency care.

Higher Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the drop-out rates in higher education in (a) year one, (b) year two and (c) year three—for four-year courses—and the failure rate in the final year of a first degree or its equivalent in the last three years. [34848]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information relating to drop-out rates is not collected centrally. Data collected by the higher education statistics agency—HESA—from academic year 1994–95 will allow us to calculate drop out rates in future years. The rate of final year student failures at first degree level in higher education in Wales over the last three years may be found in the following table. Information relating to the University of Wales for earlier years and data for the 1994–95 academic year are not available.

Failure Rates of Students at First Degree Level in Higher Education in Wales (excluding the University of Wales)

| | Rate per thousand |
|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 6 |
| 1993–94 | 3 |

Departmental Staff

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff have been employed in the education department in each of the last four years indicating the number, by full-time equivalent, employed in each specified area of responsibility within the department. [34817]

Mr. Hague: The information is set out in the following table. Over the period, various responsibilities have been transferred both between divisions within the education department and between the Department and outside bodies, and staffing levels have changed accordingly.

| Staff employed in Welsh Office Education Department[1] | April 1992 | September 1993 | September 1994 | June 1995 | June 1996 |
| Director and Secretary | 2.0 | 2.0 | 2.0 | 2.0 | 2.0 |
| Education Services | [4]21.0 | — | — | — | — |
| Culture and Recreation (including Translation Unit) | — | 32.0 | 23.5 | 23.0 | 22.6 |
| Further and Higher Education | 19.0 | 13.0 | 14.0 | 12.0 | 12.8 |
| Schools Administration | 15.5 | 30.0 | 27.0 | 27.5 | 28.0 |
| Schools Curriculum[3] | 16.0 | 17.0 | 22.0 | 18.0 | — |
| Schools Performance[3] | — | — | — | — | 18.0 |
| HM Inspectorate of Schools | [2]74.0 | — | — | — | — |
| | 147.5 | 94.0 | 88.5 | 82.5 | 83.4 |

[1] Numbers are full-time equivalent.
[2] HM Inspectorate of Schools staff transferred to the newly created Department of Office of Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales in September 1992.
[3] Schools Curriculum Division became Schools Performance Division in 1995.
[4] Education Services Division became Culture and Recreation Division in 1993.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff have been employed in the Industry and Training Department in each of the last four years; and if he will list the number of staff employed to deal with (a) regional selective assistance, (b) the exchange risk guarantee scheme, (c) regional enterprise grants, (d) business development services, (e) training and enterprise council business growth and start-up measures, (f) Business Connect Wales, (g) all training programmes subdivided into specific sectors, (h) the careers services and (i) other programmes in each of these years; and how many full-time equivalents are involved in initiatives financed or carried out by training and enterprise councils. [34818]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office Industry and Training Department was set up in May 1994. The total staff complement of its constituent divisions is set out in the table.

| | 31 March 1995 | 31 March 1996 |
|---|---|---|
| Industrial and training policy division | 20.65 | 20.5 |
| Business services division | 30.57 | 28.05 |
| Training finance and management division | 46.0 | 38.8 |
| Industrial development division | 85 | 88.2 |
| | 182.22 | 175.55 |

Direct comparisons between years are not possible because some work has been transferred between divisions, neither is it possible to disaggregate staffing further because most staff are not engaged solely on the discrete elements identified in the question.

The main divisional functions are:

Industrial and training policy division is responsible for advice and briefing on industrial policy and training policy; for economic briefing; general industrial and employment casework; for liaison with the Ministry of Defence on matters which affect Wales; for securing the effective implementation of the people and prosperity action plan; for the operation of training programmes and initiatives; and for sponsorship of the National Council of Vocational Qualifications in respect of its work in Wales.

Business services division is responsible for small firms policy, and a range of business development services including Business Connect Wales; deregulation; for schemes to encourage innovation and technological development, environmental awareness, and energy efficiency; and for Welsh interests in the energy, steel and telecommunications industries.

Training finance and management division is responsible for contracts with training and enterprise councils and for co-ordination of the Department's operational interest in TECs; for the management of contracts with careers service companies; and for financial management and accountability issues in respect of those programmes.

Industrial development division is responsible for administering the regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grants schemes in Wales and residual work arising from the exchange risk guarantee scheme; for inward investment policy; for the provision of export services and for regional overseas links.

Enterprise Trusts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the enterprise trusts which receive public moneys and indicate for the last year for which figures are available the funding received by each and the principal activities which were financed, separately identifying the administrative costs of each. [34849]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: There are 20 local enterprise trusts or agencies in Wales providing a variety of services in support of local businesses. They are non profit-making and receive funding from a variety of public and private sources, details of which are set out in their audited accounts. The Welsh Office does not directly fund enterprise agencies and to gather the information requested would entail disproportionate costs. The verified enterprise agencies in Wales are as follows:

Antur Dwyryd-Llyn Enterprise Agency
Antur Teifi
Antur Menai
Bersham Enterprise Centre
Clwydfro Enterpise Agency
Coastal Enterprise Agency
Llanelli and Dinefwr Enterprise Company
Made Enterprise Company
Neath and Port Talbot Development Partnership
Pembrokeshire Business Initiative
Cardiff and Vale Enterprise Group
D'Arcy Development
Deeside Enterprise Trust Ltd.
Delyn Business Partnership Ltd.
Enterprise Taff Ely Ogwr Partnership
Innovation Wales Ltd.
Rhondda Development Agency
West Glamorgan Enterprise Trust Ltd.
Foothold, Llanelli
Newport and Gwent Enterprise

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the costs paid by the Welsh Office to cover the grant-maintained ballot and all related costs for Ysgol Dyffryn Tâf, Whitland. [35730]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The cost of administering the ballot at Ysgol Dyffryn Tâf was £1,089. It is open to the school's governing body to apply for financial assistance to help meet the costs incurred in circulating information on grant-maintained status to parents but no claim has been made to date.

Dyspraxia

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the incidence of dyspraxia in Wales; and what help and treatment is available for sufferers. [35728]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally. The responsibility for the assessment and provision for sufferers of dyspraxia, including rehabilitation, is a matter for health authorities.

NHS responsibilities for meeting continuing health care needs, including the provision of rehabilitation, are set out in Welsh health circular WHC(95)7.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each training and enterprise council the percentage of their resources in cash or in kind drawn from private sources. [34819]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: As the information requested will take some time to collate, I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money is provided for each training and enterprise council in Wales; what percentage of it is spent on training; and how many trainees (a) start and (b) complete TEC financed courses. [34820]

Mr. Evans: The information requested is shown in the table:

| TEC | (i) TEC expenditure | (ii) Percentage spent on training | (iii) Total number of starts | (iv) Percentage TEC financed Youth training/youth credit | (v) Completing courses Training for work |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Gwent | 16,265,938 | 63 | 5,769 | 43 | 65 |
| Mid Glamorgan | 16,468,989 | 67 | 6,391 | 47 | 54 |
| North-East Wales | 10,330,623 | 62 | 3,167 | 55 | 61 |
| North-West Wales | 13,203,648 | 66 | 3,427 | 52 | 63 |
| Powys | 4,765,945 | 56 | 886 | [1]n/a | 66 |
| South Glamorgan | 11,369,738 | 65 | 4,405 | 25 | 46 |
| West Wales | 29,438,309 | 66 | 7,860 | 45 | 56 |
| Wales | 101,843,190 | 65 | 31,905 | 48 | 59 |

Source of data:
(i) and (ii) 1995–96 invoice monitoring; (iii) 1995–96 management information; (iv) and (v) DfEE YT/YC and TfW National Follow-up Surveys for 1994–95 (the latest full year for which information is available).
Notes:
[1] Figures not available because responses to the follow-up survey in Powys were insufficient to be statistically reliable.
1. The percentage completion rates relate to the overall starts figures provided and are not adjusted for circumstances in which some trainees (i) switch from one training course to another during the course of their training without having completed the original course or (iii) leave training having achieved a full or part qualification but without fully completing their training plans.
The data needed to provide such an adjustment is not available centrally.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff are employed by each training and enterprise council through funds allocated under Government contracts; and what proportion of them are involved in (a) enterprise, (b) training and (c) administration. [34850]

Mr. Evans: The following table shows the number of staff employed by each training and enterprise council, extracted from TEC annual statutory accounts for 1994–94—latest available.

The figures are not available analysed in the form requested.

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Gwent TEC | 67 |
| Mid Glamorgan TEC | 95 |
| West Wales TEC | 126 |
| South Glamorgan TEC | 70 |
| Powys TEC | 27 |
| TARGED (North West Wales) TEC | 67 |
| North East Wales TEC | 116 |

Workshops Land Reclamation, Tredegar

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that sufficient funds are available during the remainder of the current financial year to enable the Tredegar workshops land reclamation scheme to continue. [36114]

Mr. Hague: These are operational matters for the Welsh development agency. I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for each private finance initiative scheme advertised in the contracts supplement to the Official Journal, the adviser selected and named to assist potential contractors indicating how each was selected. [35891]

Mr. Hague: It is for each bidder for a private finance initiative project to appoint its own advisers. Public sector sponsors of projects may appoint their own advisers, following normal competitive tendering procedures for which guidance is available. Information on such appointments is not held centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the list of advisers currently approved to assist potential contractors seeking clarification in relation to private finance initiative schemes advertised in the contracts supplement to the Official Journal of the European Commission; if he will list the arrangements by which such advisers are allowed to collect fees in exchange for supplying pre-qualification documents to contractors; and if he will make a statement. [35888]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office does not maintain an approved list of advisers for private finance initiative projects, and has not appointed any advisers to assist potential contractors for such projects. It is for the project sponsors to decide whether to make a charge for pre-qualification documents.

A48 Slip Road

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with (a) Hill Samuel and (b) Charterhouse Finance concerning their participation in the consortium to build the multi-storey car park and A48 Eastern avenue slip road at the University Hospital of Wales, Neath, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement. [35890]

Mr. Hague: None.

ENVIRONMENT

Biotechnology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken since his letter G/CC/P50/19364/95 of 11 September 1995 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on playing a pro-active role in developing and implementing interactive mechanisms for safety in biotechnology; and if he will make a statement. [34635]

Mr. Clappison: My Department continues strongly to support a twin track approach to the development of an international framework on biosafety based on the promotion of the United Nations environment programme—UNEP—international technical guidelines for safety in biotechnology and the development of a biosafety protocol to the convention on biological diversity. I am pleased to be able to report that considerable progress has been made.

We welcome the adoption of the UNEP international technical guidelines for safety in biotechnology, first developed by the United Kingdom and the Netherlands, in Cairo in December 1995 and are now actively promoting their use. As a first step, in September 1995, the UK entered a bilateral arrangement with Argentina to apply the then draft guidelines.

The UK fully supported the decision of the second conference of the parties to the convention on biological diversity, held in Jakarta in November 1995, to develop a biosafety protocol. The protocol will focus on the transboundary movement of living modified organisms resulting from modern biotechnology that may have adverse effects on the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity. A draft protocol is to be prepared by the open-ended ad hoc working group established by the conference of the parties. The first meeting will be in Denmark on 22 to 26 July 1996, when I look forward to the UK playing an active and constructive role.

Climate Change

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow G/P50/10981/96, what consideration he has accorded to the work of the Max Plank institute in Mainz and Professor Paul Crutzen in relation to trace gases, the troposphere and climate change. [34636]

Mr. Clappison: The Department is advised by the Hadley centre scientists on matters relating to trace gases, the troposphere and climate change. They are fully aware of, and draw on, the work of Professor Crutzen and his colleagues. Both the Hadley centre and the Max Plank institute contributed to the second assessment report of the intergovernmental panel on climate change, which provides the most comprehensive and authoritative assessment of the science of climate change.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what data is collated by his Department on the prevalence of car boot sales. [35679]

Sir Paul Beresford: No statistics are kept by the Department on the number of car boot sales.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for controlling commercial traders at car boot sales. [35680]

Sir Paul Beresford: The planning system controls the development, including use, of land. Part 4 of schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning (General Development) Order 1995 already restricts the temporary use of land for a car boot sale to 14 days a year. It is not the function of the planning system to preserve existing commercial interests or to inhibit competition between retailers or between methods of retailing, and the planning legislation therefore applies to commercial and non-commercial traders alike. The Government have no plans to introduce a distinction in this matter.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr.Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the housing action trusts in England and Wales at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement. [35726]

Sir Paul Beresford: There are six housing action trusts—HATs—in England—at North Hull, Liverpool, Waltham Forest, Castle Vale (Birmingham), Tower Hamlets and Stonebridge (Brent). There are no HATs in Wales. HATs provide a comprehensive approach to the regeneration of former local authority estates. They are responsible for the management, repair, refurbishment and redevelopment of their housing accommodation; giving tenants a range of options for future home ownership and tenure; and undertaking environmental, economic and social initiatives to help local communities sustain the improvements achieved by public and private investment once the trusts themselves have completed their work.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing units the Liverpool housing action trust operates at the most recent available date; and what plans there are for expansion. [35727]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Liverpool housing action trust has 4,934 housing units. It has no plans for expansion; like all housing action trusts, it was set up as a fixed life organisation to manage and improve housing stock transferred from the local authority.

Waterloo and Wapping Dock Companies

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if (a) the Waterloo Dock and (b) the Wapping Dock companies allow their tenants to lease their apartments; and if he will make a statement; [35729]

(2) what is the extent of the claw-back in the leases of the Wapping Dock and Waterloo Dock companies when the owner sells an apartment; and if he will make a statement. [35732]

Sir Paul Beresford: The terms of these leases are a matter between the tenants and the companies concerned.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's current target for reduction in carbon dioxide emissions. [35900]

Mr. Clappison: The United Kingdom is committed under the framework convention on climate change to return emissions of all greenhouses gases to 1990 levels by the year 2000. We are on course to meet these commitments and expect emissions of carbon dioxide to be 4 to 8 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2000.

At the June meeting of the Environment Council, European Environment Ministers agreed to call on all developed countries to make significant reductions in greenhouse gas emissions in the period after 2000. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has called for developed countries to agree to reduce their total greenhouse gas emissions to between 5 and 10 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

Albert Dock

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company for the Albert dock in 1982; and if he will make a statement. [35733]

Sir Paul Beresford: Merseyside Development Corporation paid £100,000 to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company for the Albert dock.

Development Corporations (Residential Blocks)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the development corporations with residential blocks in their areas and the service charge in each block; and if he will make a statement. [35734]

Sir Paul Beresford: The following urban development corporations have residential blocks in their respective areas: Birmingham Heartlands, Black Country, London Docklands, Merseyside, Trafford Park and Tyne and Wear.

The information on service charges is not held by the UDCs, but would in any case be commercially confidential.

Service Charges (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the service charges made in the Wapping dock, the Waterloo dock and the Albert dock in Liverpool. [35735]

Sir Paul Beresford: The service charges are a matter between the tenants and the companies concerned. My reply to the earlier question on Wednesday 26 June, Official Report, column 135, gives details of the range of services covered by the service charge at Albert dock.

Energy Advice Centres

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals his Department has with regard to the funding of local energy advice centres from September 1996. [35901]

Mr. Clappison: The Energy Saving Trust is responsible for the management and funding of the local energy advice centres. My Department has agreed the trust's proposals to use DOE funds to support the local energy advice centres up to March 1999. The trust is announcing its plans for the local energy advice centres today, at the local energy advice centres' annual conference.

Packaging Waste Regulations

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the regulations implementing the European directive on packaging waste; and when and under which procedure the regulations are expected to be placed before the House for approval. [36154]

Mr. Clappison: I hope to publish a consultation document on the draft regulations in the near future. As provided in section 93(10) of the Environment Act 1995, a statutory instrument containing regulations—on producer responsibility—shall not be made unless a draft of the instrument has been laid before and approved by a resolution of each House of Parliament.

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the forthcoming finance, management and policy review of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. [36400]

Mr. Gummer: As part of the Government's programme of regular five-yearly financial management and policy reviews of non-Departmental public bodies my Department will conduct a thorough review of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. The first stage of this review takes the form of a prior options study. This will assess the extent to which the committee's functions are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether there is scope for privatising, contracting out or transferring all or part of its functions to another body.

The work of the committee, both past and anticipated, will be examined and the results of that examination and of the prior options study will inform a detailed review of the committee's structure and operation.

To minimise the uncertainty that the prior options study will cause, I expect that study to be completed within three months. The time required for the more detailed review cannot be foreseen, but I expect it to last no longer than a further three months.

In carrying out the study, my Department will seek the views of those with an interest in the committee's work, including the regulatory authorities, other Government Departments, the nuclear industry, representatives of non-nuclear users of radioactivity, other advisory committees and non-governmental organisations.

Private Finance Initiative

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he is taking to encourage the private finance initiative in local government; and if he will make a statement. [36368]

Mr. Curry: On 21 May, Official Report, columns 164–65, I announced that my Department would be consulting the local authority associations, and others, on wide-ranging measures to help harness private-sector finance and management expertise. I am now issuing draft capital finance regulations for consultation, with the aim of having regulations in force by the end of October.

Marine Environment

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish guidance on the implementation of the decision on marine and coastal biodiversity agreed at the second conference of the parties of the convention on biological diversity. [35466]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 3 July 1996]: The decision agreed at the second conference of the parties of the convention on biological diversity, to encourage the establishment or strengthening of arrangements for the management of marine and coastal ecosystems, will be given effect in the United Kingdom by actions included in the United Kingdom biodiversity action plan (Cm2428). Commitments made at the fourth North sea conference in June 1995 are also relevant for which implementation guidance was published on 2 July 1996. A good practice guide on coastal zone management will be published later this year. No further guidance is necessary.

SCOTLAND

Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding the restructuring of the nursing services in the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust. [35218]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for NHS trusts to determine the best means of delivering nursing services to secure high quality patient care and the most cost-effective use of resources. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chief executive of the trust for further details.

English Certificates or Money Provisions

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what mechanisms are in place at the Books of Council and Session to establish the substance of an English certificate of money provisions with particular reference to ascertaining whether it falls within the terms of schedule 8, rule 3(4) to the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982. [35946]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Before registering English certificates of money provisions, the keeper of the registers of Scotland ensures that such certificates.

bear certification from an appropriate court are signed by a proper officer of that court are presented within six months of the date of signing.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many English certificates of money provisions were registered with the Books of Council and Session each year since 1990 and in the first half of 1996. [35945]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of English certificates of money provisions registered in the Books of Council and Session each year since 1990 is as follows:

1991: 1,488

1992: 1,917

1993: 2,101

1994: 2,234

1996: 1,012 (first six months).

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the locations of all accidents that occurred on the motorways of Scotland in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will plot this information on a map and place a copy thereof in the Library. [35310]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table lists the number of personal injury accidents in 1995 for motorways in Scotland excluding the M8 through Glasgow. This information has been plotted on a map and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Personal injury accidents in 1995 on motorways [1]

| Route number | Fatal | Serious | Slight | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| M8 | 4 | 26 | 55 | 85 |
| M9 | 1 | 8 | 23 | 32 |
| M73 | 1 | 1 | 10 | 12 |
| M74 | 2 | 23 | 45 | 70 |
| M80 | Nil | 5 | 5 | 10 |
| M90 | Nil | 6 | 19 | 25 |
| M876 | Nil | 3 | 5 | 8 |
| M898 | Nil | 1 | 1 | 2 |
| M823 | Nil | Nil | 2 | 2 |
| Total | 8 | 73 | 165 | 246 |

[1] The figures provided are provisional.

Investors in People Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his letter of 6 June, what public funds have been committed to training through the investors in people initiative; and if he will provide a breakdown of the money allocated to the 311 companies to which he referred in paragraph 5. [34639]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: In the past five years, more than £5 million has been spent on investors in people in Scotland. This money is not allocated directly to individual organisations but is used by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to fund advisers based in local enterprise companies, to fund the assessment body, Investors in People Scotland, and for promotional work. It is not possible to assess the value of support given to each of the 1,762 organisations formally committed to IIP or the 329 organisations which have achieved the standard.

Western Isles Health Board (GP Lists)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the chief executive of the Western Isles health board will respond to the hon. Member's letter, dated 11 April, concerning removal of patients from GP treatment lists; and what are the reasons for the delay in replying. [36020]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A response was sent to the hon. Member on 2 July. The delay was due to an oversight within Western Isles health board.

Illegal Drugs (Deaths)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of deaths in Scotland caused by illegal drugs in each year since 1990; and if he will give a breakdown of specific drugs which caused these deaths. [35674]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 July 1996]: The available information, relating to the years 1992–1994, is contained in a paper published by the Registrar General in June 1995, "Collection of information on drug-related deaths by the General Register Office for Scotland." A copy of this is in the Library of the House. Corresponding figures for calendar year 1995 are being prepared and will be published shortly.

The paper notes that the number of deaths from drugs in Scotland in 1994 of those known or suspected to be drug-dependent was 139. The total number of deaths due to drugs, excluding suicides, was 247.

Alcohol and Tobacco (Deaths)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of deaths in Scotland caused by (a) smoking-related diseases and (b) alcohol-related diseases in each year since 1990. [35673]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 July 1996]: It is not possible to be precise, but the available information is as follows.

In 1992 it was estimated that some 10,600 people in Scotland die each year from smoking-related diseases, including lung cancer, coronary heart disease and stroke.

In some 850 cases a year, the cause of death recorded on the death certificate is a disease identified as being alcohol-related, but alcohol plays a part in the deaths of many more people through its contribution, for example, to violence and road accidents.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of applications for attendance allowance in the United Kingdom in each year since 1987; and how many of these were refused. [35063]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Attendance allowance: Decisions made in each year since 1987

| Year | Total [3] | Claims decided | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | Awarded [1] | Refused |
| 1987[2] | 309,000 | 214,000 | 96,000 |
| 1988 | 323,000 | 207,000 | 115,000 |
| 1989 | 333,000 | 228,000 | 105,000 |
| 1990 | 375,000 | 276,000 | 99,000 |
| 1991 | 472,000 | 357,000 | 115,000 |
| 1992 | 542,000 | 418,000 | 124,000 |
| 1993 | 498,000 | 355,000 | 142,000 |
| 1994 | 492,000 | 349,000 | 143,000 |
| 1995 | 484,000 | 343,000 | 141,000 |

Notes:
[1] Figures include awards to people in hospital or scheduled accommodation at time of award where benefit may not be payable.
[2] Figures exclude, for Great Britain, awards at 1 but include first awards made on review or appeal.
[3] Figures may not sum due to rounding.
[4] The figures giving the available information relates to decisions made in each year.
[5] Disability living allowance was introduced in April 1992 and replaced Attendance Allowance for people under pension age. However, attendance allowance is still available for people who first become disabled over age 65 or who first claim benefit after age 66.

Benefits (Pensioners)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 May, Official Report, column 630, in respect of the figures given, what was the percentage of pensioners who claimed (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit in each region of the United Kingdom for each year since 1970. [34889]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the following tables.

Claimants of pension age in receipt of supplementary benefit/income support 1970 to 1995
Pensioner claimants by DSS administrative regions as a percentage of the regional pensioner population

SOCIAL SECURITY

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who would have been entitled to benefits before the introduction of the Social Security (Persons From Abroad) Regulations 1996 on 5 February have sought asylum since that date. [33833]

Mr. Roger Evans: A total of 7,281 people claimed asylum in-country between February 1 and June 30, the latest date for which figures are available.

Prior to the introduction of the regulations, asylum seekers in this category would have been eligible for income support housing benefit and council tax benefit, subject to the normal qualifying conditions.

Benefit Entitlement (Publicity)

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent on commercial advertising space (a) in Nottingham and (b) nationally, informing the public of possible entitlement to (i) income support, (ii) family credit, (iii) disability working allowance, (iv) housing benefit, (v) council tax benefit, (vi) attendance allowance, (vii) child benefit, (viii) disability living allowance, (ix) incapacity benefit, (x) industrial disablement benefit, (xi) invalid care allowance, (xii) maternity allowance, (xiii) one parent benefit, (xiv) retirement pension, (xv) severe disablement allowance and (xvi) widows benefits. [33877]

Mr. Roger Evans: In 1995–96, more than £2,000 was spent in Nottingham to promote the whole range of benefits available for the elderly. A further £1,175 was spent to promote back to work benefits including family credit and disability working allowance.

A total of £2.6 million was spent nationally on promoting benefits for people returning to work. The benefits promoted were family credit and disability working allowance, but the campaign was also directed at people leaving incapacity benefit. Some £100,000 was spent on a campaign informing people about the January changes to housing benefit rules. It is not possible to say how much of the total spent related to Nottingham.

The Benefits Agency spent £5,963,391 nationally on publicising benefits in 1995–96 by way of leaflets and other publicity. The cost of publicity for Nottingham is included in this total, but it is not possible to identify these individual costs from the national figure.

Family Credit

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much money from the family credit budget will be saved, in each region, as a result of the proposed amendments to family credit regulations to end awards immediately the last child leaves full-time non-advanced education; [35254]

(2) how many families will be affected in each region by the proposed amendments to family credit regulations to end awards immediately the last child leaves full-time non-advanced eduation. [35253]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. However, is estimated that nationally 15,000 families will be affected, with an overall saving of £6 million in the first year.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons an officer acting on his behalf altered the method of payment of maintenance in CSA case reference 1014339731; and for what reasons no explanation for this decision has been given to the absent parent. [35432]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. David Lidington, dated 4 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency case reference 1014339731.

In this particular case, when the parent with care and the absent parent submitted their application forms to the Agency, they both stated that their preferred method for the payment of maintenance was by direct payments from the absent parent to the parent with care.

However, the parent with care later requested that payments be made through the Child Support Agency collection service, as the absent parent had failed to make regular payments to her.

The absent parent was advised of this request. He subsequently telephoned Plymouth Child Support Agency Centre and it was agreed that a standing order mandate would be set up for the payment of maintenance. This has been arranged.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Child Support Agency will send its submissions to the special payments branch about case reference 1002347955. [35135]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. David Lidington, dated 4 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency case reference 1002347955.

This case is currently being progressed by the Dudley Child Support Agency Centre compensation referral team. It has been necessary to clarify aspects of the parent with care's request for compensation. For this reason, a letter was issued to her on 18 June 1996 requesting more information.

To date no reply has been received. Once the necessary information has been received, a submission will be made to the Special Payments Branch as a matter of priority.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total cost of the Child Support Agency advertising campaign for the Greater Manchester area; for what reasons the campaign is located in the Greater Manchester area; what are the aims of the campaign; and what organisation is co-ordinating the campaign [35375]

Mr. Mitchell: The full cost of the campaign will be £180,000. The Greater Manchester area was chosen because the diversity of its population and the size and range of available media make it representative of the country as a whole.

This is a test campaign with three main aims: to address some of the common public misconceptions about child support maintenance; to improve compliance with child support legislation; and to raise the levels of public awareness about the way the child support maintenance system operates. The campaign has been co-ordinated by the Central Office of Information for the Department of Social Security.

Incapacity Benefit (Cynon Valley)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Cynon valley who were formerly in receipt of invalidity benefit have not qualified for the new incapacity benefit. [35355]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs Ann Clwyd, dated 4 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people in the Cynon Valley who were formerly in receipt of Invalidity Benefit (IVB) have not qualified for the new Incapacity Benefit (IB).

The information is not available in the format requested. Statistics for IVB and IB are not kept which are specific to Parliamentary Constituencies but are kept for individual Benefit Offices.

The majority of customers in the Cynon Valley are served by the Aberdare Benefit Office. Figures for the Aberdare Benefit Office are tabled below.

April 1995–May 1996

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Former IVB customers disallowed IB | 469 |

(i) Data provided have been taken from the computerised system and therefore the count excludes a very small number of clerical cases.

(ii) A minority of customers from the Cynon Valley are not dealt with by the Aberdare Benefit Office. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(iii) Aberdare Benefit Office is part of the South Wales Valleys District.

(iv) Data are provisional and subject to amendment.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefit Inquiry Line

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated proportion of callers to the Benefits Agency inquiry line not referred to local Benefit Agency offices; how such inquiries will be dealt with following the closure of the benefit inquiry line; and what are the implications of the impact of the closure of the benefit inquiry line on the take-up of income-related benefits. [35450]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 3 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the estimated proportion of callers to the Benefit Agency enquiry line not referred to local Benefit Agency offices; how such enquiries will be dealt with following the closure of the Benefit Enquiry line; and what are the implications of the impact of the closure of the Benefit Enquiry line on the take-up of income-related benefits.

The Freeline service closes on the 12 July but the Benefit Enquiry Line for people with disabilities will remain open.

The information is not available in the format requested. No records are kept of the callers who contact Freeline and are not referred to their local benefit office.

However research for the BA National Customer Survey 1995 asked about the Freeline service. 37% of customers phoned freeline to find out about eligibility, 25% for general information and 29% for issues relating to individual benefit enquiries. Freeline staff do not have access to the benefit computer systems and are therefore unable to answer specific benefit enquiries. Therefore many customers would need to contact their local benefit office in order to pursue their claim for benefit or resolve their enquiry.

From 12 July when Freeline closes, customers will be encouraged to contact their local benefit offices. The closure of Freeline will allow resources to be refocused so that the customer is in touch with the staff who administer their claims or who can directly link the benefits available with the specific personal details of the customer. Benefit literature is readily available in local offices, post offices and numerous other outlets.

It is not anticipated that the closure of Freeline will have any material impact on the take up of income related benefits.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Asthma

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many registered days of certified incapacity due to sickness and invalidity caused by asthma there were in 1995; and how much this cost in terms of benefits. [35373]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

| | 4 April 1994–12 April 1995 |
|---|---|
| Number of days of certified incapacity due to asthma, excluding days for which statutory sick pay is payable | 17,061,00 [1] (2.3 per cent. of all days of certified incapacity) |
| Estimated cost of sickness and invalidity benefit | £179 million[2] |

Source:

[1] 1 per cent. sample of all claims in Great Britain. Diagnosis taken from the International Classification of Diseases [1975 edition].

Note:

[2] It is not possible to estimate the costs of other benefits, such as income support, which may be payable on grounds of certified incapacity.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those constituencies he has visited in the last three months on official business and those constituencies he intends to visit in the next three months; and if he will make a statement. [35157]

Mr. Lilley: Since the beginning of April this year, I have undertaken official engagements in Eastbourne and Dunfermline, West. I expect to visit other parts of the country in the coming months.

Disability Premium

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of income support severe disability premium withheld by his Department pending the decision in the Bate case; how many claimants were affected; and what use has been made of the funding allocated for the scheme which has been withheld. [35903]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) on 13 June, Official Report, column 260.

Unfortunately, there was an error in the reply in that the information given for the number of suspensions as a result of the Bate case was incorrect. The figure quoted related only to those cases which had been suspended by the Secretary of State following awards made by social security appeal tribunals. It did not include those cases which had been suspended following decisions made by adjudication officers. A figure is not available for the total number of cases which have been suspended as Bate look-alikes.

The information requested on the amount of income support withheld by the Department pending the House of Lords judgment in the Bate case and the number of claimants affected is not available.

The severe disability premium is paid as a component of income support which is funded by means of money voted by Parliament. Any over-spending or under-spending is reported in the annual appropriation account.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement concerning the proposed Housing Benefit (General) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996. [36448]

Mr. Lilley: I submitted these draft regulations for the Social Security Advisory Committee's consideration in April. They were intended to ensure that, as a general rule, housing benefit would meet service charges only where the service relates to the adequacy of accommodation as a dwelling.

I have carefully considered the representations that I have received. These indicate that significant amounts of housing benefit may be being paid in respect of personal services in supported accommodation. I have concluded that the sudden removal of this source of income may cause significant difficulties for many vulnerable people in supported accommodation. I have therefore decided to withdraw the draft regulations, and I am commissioning an urgent inter-departmental review of the arrangements for funding supported accommodation. When the review is complete I will consider what legislation might be appropriate.

TRANSPORT

Private Finance Initiative

16. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of funding by private finance initiative of capital projects designed to improve traffic flow at motorway junctions. [34698]

Mr. Watts: Such projects are generally classified as small-scale improvements and are not large enough to be considered for separate funding under PFI.

Eurofreight Terminal (Wales)

18. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the impact of rail privatisation on the provision of a Eurofreight terminal in Wales. [34700]

Mr. Watts: Privatisation gives the new railfreight companies greater freedom and incentive to increase the proportion of freight carried by rail in Wales, Scotland and England.

Safety At Sea

19. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress Her Majesty's Government have made in improving safety at sea; and if he will make a statement. [34701]

Sir George Young: We have successfully pursued a number of proposals, both in the International Maritime Organisation and in the European Community, leading to agreements on improving standards, including the Stockholm agreement on ferry safety. We shall continue to work towards the implementation of higher standards.

Ferry Safety

23. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to improve the safety of passenger-carrying ferries. [34706]

Mr. Norris: We shall be implementing changes to the SOLAS–safety of lives at sea—convention agreed at the International Maritime Organisation's diplomatic conference in November 1995, concerning evacuation procedures, life-saving equipment and enhanced operational requirements, and we are preparing regulations to implement the Stockholm agreement on ferry survivability.

Salvage Tugs

20. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the current location of salvage tugs contracted by his Department to provide emergency towing around the United Kingdom coast. [34702]

Sir George Young: The contracts for tugs at Stornoway and Dover provide for their return to station on 1 October. As my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping announced on 17 June, the Coastguard Agency will seek tenders for an additional emergency towing vessel to be stationed on the south-west approaches for six months from 1 October. As in previous years, no contracted tugs are stationed during the summer months.

Humber Bridge

21. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the extent to which the Government will write off the Humber bridge debt. [34703]

Mr. Watts: Once the Secretary of State has determined the outcome of the current toll application, he will bring forward an order under the Humber Bridge (Debts) Act 1996.

Fenchurch Street Railway Line

22. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received on the Fenchurch Street line. [34704]

Mr. Watts: Since the award of the LTS rail franchise to Prism Rail plc on 8 May, we have received no representations about the franchise award. I have answered two letters seeking information.

Privatised Rail Network

24. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what mechanisms he plans to introduce to measure the performance of the privatised rail network. [34707]

Mr. Watts: The performance of the privatised rail network is monitored by both the Rail Regulator and the franchising director.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to improve competition among the privatised rail companies. [34690]

Mr. Watts: There is competition for each franchise awarded and each business sold.

Forth Rail Bridge

25. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the last three months on the painting of the Forth rail bridge. [34708]

Mr. Watts: Maintenance of the Forth bridge is now an operational matter for Railtrack. Railtrack has accepted all the recommendations in the Health and Safety Executive's assessment of the bridge, published earlier this year, and is already in the process of prioritising repair and restoration work as part of the written maintenance plan that will be submitted to the House by 30 November this year. As part of this work, Railtrack has invited tenders to undertake 35,000 sq m of painting in 1996–97—a significant increase on the 13,000 sq m painted in 1995–96.

Cumbria Rail Line

26. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last used the north-west coast rail line to Cumbria. [34709]

Sir George Young: I have not used the west coast line to travel to Cumbria. However, on 20 May I travelled on the line to Manchester to open the Manchester airport southern spur rail link.

Oxford-Cambridge Railway Line

27. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assistance he will make available to secure the re-opening of the Oxford to Cambridge via Milton Keynes railway line for passenger traffic. [34710]

Mr. Watts: The proposal by a consortium of interested local authorities is currently at feasibility stage. I understand that the phase 1 study covered the potential of a number of east-west routes and recommended further work on a central corridor which would use existing rail infrastructure via Bletchley. Railtrack has now joined the steering group but it is too early to say whether this will result in a viable proposal worthy of Government support.

Red Routes (London)

28. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest timetable for introducing further red routes in London and for consultation with residential and business occupiers along proposed routes. [34711]

Mr. Norris: The Traffic Director for London is responsible for co-ordinating the introduction of the red route network. Before red routes are introduced, all frontagers are consulted, and full consideration is given to how their needs can best be met. The latest timetable for introducing red routes is contained in the Traffic Director's 1995–96 annual report, a copy of which is in the Library. The aim is to have the network operational by the year 2000.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of capital expenditure on transport during the next financial year will be on (a) roads and (b) non-road transport; and what were the equivalent figures for 1986. [34699]

Sir George Young: The proportion of capital expenditure allocated to national and local roads in the current year is nearly 60 per cent., compared with 70 per cent. in 1986–87—but such an analysis is inevitably subject to fluctuations in the capital budget arising from major projects.

Charter Aircraft

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 34, if he will list the safety reasons that have resulted in the grounding of the aircraft operated by Air Operations of Europe. [35273]

Mr. Norris: I am advised that the Civil Aviation Authority issued a direction, under the Air Navigation Order 1989, to prevent this aircraft from flying because its registration documents, certificate of airworthiness and licences of flight crew appeared to have been issued illegally.

Departmental Property

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the location and function of all buildings owned by his Department but not occupied by Government officials. [35435]

Mr. Norris: Excluding properties acquired for the roads programme, my Department owns but does not occupy the following properties:

Stores Depot at Yate, Bristol

IT Offices at the Oldway Centre, Swansea

Research Sites at Crowthorne and Livingston

International Maritime Organisation Building, London.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) cost, (b) name and (c) duration of all contracts entered into for the purposes of disposing of his Department's land. [35436]

Mr. Norris: The following firms have been appointed to advise on the Department's civil estate, including marketing of sites.

| Company | Appointed | Contract end date | Expenditure (£) 1 April 1996 to 30 June 1996 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Richard Ellis | 1 December 1995 | 30 March 1997 | 9,850 |
| Frere Cholmondeley Bischoff | 1 May 1996 | 31 March 1997 | 0 |
| Aspinwall and Co. | 1 June 1996 | 31 July 1996 | 10,500 |
| Healey and Baker | 1 June 1996 | 31 March 1997 | 0 |

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list (a) the length of leases held by his Department and (b) buildings occupied and run by his Department which contain other Government or next step agency tenants; [35434]

(2) if he will list all properties held by his Department that are (a) leased and (b) owned with their locations and functions. [35433]

Mr. Norris: I have placed a copy of the answer in the Library.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps his Department is taking to improve the access to train services for disabled people at unmanned stations; [35474]

(2) what measures he plans to ensure disabled access to train services at unmanned train stations. [35484]

Mr. Watts: Under the Railways Act 1993, the Rail Regulator has a duty to protect the interests of disabled rail passengers. All train and station operators are required to submit for the Rail Regulator's approval a disabled people's protection policy, as a condition of being granted a licence to operate. Many franchise operators have committed to improving access for disabled passengers. For example, GNR has committed to spending an additional £400,000 per year on improving access to its stations for disabled passengers. Prism Rail plc will spend £14 million on station improvements which will include improved facilities for disabled passengers.

The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 provides the Secretary of State with powers to make regulations to require that new public transport vehicles are accessible to disabled people. The Act will apply to new rail vehicles, as well as to buses, coaches and taxis. Discussions have begun with the rail industry and the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee about the shape of the new regulations. The issue of rail vehicles serving unstaffed or partially staffed stations will be considered in that context.

Train Services (Yorkshire)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what annual funding is made available to West Yorkshire passenger transport authority for operating trains in the Yorkshire area. [35485]

Mr. Watts: A figure is set aside each year from within the all other services block of the revenue support grant for distribution to district councils in metropolitan counties to meet the cost of supporting local rail services. The West Yorkshire passenger transport authority levies the district councils in the WYPTA passenger transport area each year for funding to cover expenditure by the West Yorkshire passenger transport executive on securing such railway passenger services as the authority decides to be necessary. In addition, payments are made to the WYPTE under the terms of certain current deeds of assumption. The combined figure for 1996–97 is £51.18 million. This comprises £45.98 million by way of RSG and some £5.2 million under the terms of those deeds of assumption.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will place a copy of the main construction contract for the Newbury bypass in the Library; [35501]

(2) what assessment he has made of Costain Group plc's ability to meet its contractual obligations in the construction of the Newbury bypass; [35504]

(3) what action he is taking to ensure that Costain Group plc will meet its contractual obligations in the construction of the Newbury bypass; [35503]

(4) what estimate he has made of the costs to his Department's budget of a failure by Costain Group plc to meet its contractual obligations in the construction of the Newbury bypass. [35502]

Mr. John Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Keith Hill, dated 8 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent questions about the award of the A34 Newbury By Pass contract to Costain Group plc.

All contractors employed by the Highways Agency are assessed in terms of their financial stability and capacity to undertake the work for which they have applied to be considered. These assessments were applied to Costain Civil Engineering Limited, the construction company within the Costain Group plc which applied to be considered for this contract, and the company met the pre-qualification criteria.

In this case, where the contract has been let on the basis of the ICE 5th Edition Conditions of Contract, the immediate responsibility for ensuring contractors meet their contractual obligations rests with the Engineer to the contract. In addition, the Agency is continuing to monitor the financial position of Costain Civil Engineering Ltd and the Costain Group plc generally but has no immediate concerns as to their ability to meet all their current contractual obligations to the Agency, including construction of the Newbury Bypass.

We have made no assessment of the costs to the Agency should Costain fail to meet its contractual obligations as this depends on a range of factors, the effect of which will vary with time.

The documents comprising the actual contract awarded to Costain Civil Engineering Limited include the detailed Bills of Quantities which contain price information which is commercially sensitive to the company. The total estimated value of the contract at the time of award has already been announced.

I have now seen the details announced by the company of their proposed deal with a major Malaysian construction and investment group which, if agreed, would strengthen substantially their financial position. Although the deal is subject to the approval of shareholders, this is a positive development which the Agency will follow closely.

Rail Accidents (North-west)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 351, how many fatalities and serious injuries were caused to (a) adults and (b) children in (i) Lancashire and (ii) the North West Regional Railways area for each year since 1990. [35692]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate's accident statistics are not recorded by county, and due to a number of changes to regional railway boundaries since 1990, the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lower Vickers Street, Miles Platting

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when a decision was made to order a public inquiry into the closure of Lower Vickers street, Miles Platting; and what actions were taken between the publication of the draft order and the decision to order a public inquiry. [35500]

Mr. Norris: Eight objections were received following publication of the draft order on 11 December 1995. Officials in the Government office for the north-west spoke to the applicants on a number of occasions over the following months, as the applicants sought to resolve differences with the objectors. When it became clear that satisfactory progress was not being made, officials wrote to the applicants on 14 May to arrange a public inquiry.

Driving Tests

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what powers magistrates may require those convicted of driving offences to retake their driving tests; and what are the figures for the use of this power in each of the last five years [35594]

Mr. Norris: Under section 36 of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988, as substituted by section 32 of the Road Traffic Act 1991, magistrates courts which have ordered drivers to be disqualified for a period of time on conviction on an offence of dangerous driving must also order them to be disqualified until they have passed an extended driving test. These courts may, at their discretion, also order other persons convicted of driving offences involving obligatory endorsement to be disqualified until they have passed the appropriate driving test. The appropriate driving test is an extended driving test where the conviction involves obligatory disqualification, as with the main drink-drive offences, or if the driver has accumulated 12 or more penalty points. In other cases the test is the ordinary test of competence to drive.

Section 36 as substituted came into force on 1 July 1992. The numbers of disqualifications under that section since that date, notified to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency by all courts in England, Wales and Scotland, are as follows:

| | Extended test | Ordinary test[1] |
|---|---|---|
| 1992 (July to December) | 186 | 1,093 |
| 1993 | 1,845 | 4,325 |
| 1994 | 3,128 | 6,224 |
| 1995 | 5,126 | 8,358 |

[1] Includes some ordinary tests ordered in respect of offences committed before 1 July 1992 in accordance with section 36 as first enacted.

The Department has not kept statistics for the period before that date.

M5 Link Road

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the M5 link road to the second Severn crossing will be open. [35611]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 4 July 1996]: I will be pleased to perform the opening ceremony of the M49 which links the M5 in the second Severn crossing shortly. The road will open to traffic as soon as safely possible after the ceremony.

Road Traffic Growth

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken by the Government into the impact of planning policy guidance note 13; and what are their conclusions on the rate of road traffic growth during (a) the next five years, (b) the next 10 years and (c) the next 20 years. [35591]

Mr. Norris: A research project to define the possible economic effects of the draft PPG 13 was published in April 1996; copies of the report have been placed in the Library. The report contains some projections of overall transport impacts, but does not specifically address the future rate of road traffic growth. The Government have commissioned further research into the implementation of PPG 13, and into future land-use patterns, taking account of planning policy guidance and road congestion.

Buses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the budget committed by Her Majesty's Government to promote (a) guided buses and (b) telematics for buses. [35953]

Mr. Norris: The Government have no specific budget for the support of either guided buses or telematics for buses. Bids from local authorities for new or improved transport infrastructure are considered through the annual transport policies and programmes system, and good value projects are supported within the available resources. These projects may include facilities for guided buses and for the provision of information about bus services using telematics. The provision of facilities on vehicles themselves is a matter for the bus operators.

Singapore Airlines

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the rights of Singapore Airlines to land at Heathrow and Manchester. [35956]

Mr. Norris: Singapore Airlines has the rights to operate 17 frequencies a week between Singapore and the United Kingdom. Any number of these can be used for services to Manchester, but no more than 14 a week may be operated to London.

Cycling

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's cycling strategy; and if he will make a statement. [35952]

Mr. Norris: The national cycling strategy will be launched at a conference in London on 10 July. It is a consensus document, which we hope will be widely adopted by local authorities, other public bodies, and commercial interests. The Department of Transport endorses the main thrust of the strategy and will be contributing to the actions proposed, and other Government Departments are likely to do so as well. It is expected that the strategy will continue to evolve, and to adjust to circumstances, under the aegis of a standing national cycling forum.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to require cyclists to carry identification plates and third party insurance. [35947]

Mr. Norris: We have no plans to require cyclists to carry identification plates and third party insurance.

Salisbury Bypass

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a decision about the Salisbury bypass. [35699]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport are considering the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the proposed Salisbury bypass. They will announce their decision on the scheme as soon as possible.

Motor Cycling

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what support his Department is giving to motor cycling in Bristol; and if he will make a statement. [35957]

Mr. Norris: Traffic management, including motor cycling, in Bristol falls to the local highway authority, which has a statutory responsibility to prepare and carry out a programme of measures designed to promote road safety.

Crash Helmets

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the advantage of making compulsory the wearing of crash helmets for cyclists. [35958]

Mr. Norris: We have carefully considered the case for the compulsory wearing of crash helmets for cyclists, and have decided that it is more effective at the present stage for Government actively to promote the voluntary wearing of helmets.

Bus Working Group

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to bring forward proposals to implement the recommendations of his Department's bus working group. [35938]

Mr. Norris: The programme of actions and further discussions I have announced on 8 January is being actively pursued by the bus working group and its sub-groups. Implementation of agreed measures is being taken forward as and when appropriate. The bus working group is to meet again on 5 August to review progress.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the dates of the last meetings of the bus working group's sub-committees; and what items were discussed. [35939]

Mr. Norris: Three bus working group sub-groups are pursuing the programme of actions and further discussions announced on 8 January. The dates of their most recent meetings are as follows: Passenger Information—18 April; Bus Priority—15 May; and Service Provision and Quality—5 July. The main items considered at the relevant meetings were publication of a revise of "Keeping Buses Moving", the Department's guide on bus priority measures, publication of a new "Good Practice Guide" on passenger information, operator entry requirements, issues relating to bus headway spacing, and the development of quality partnerships.

Eye Tests

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on EU regulations on eye tests for heavy goods vehicle drivers. [35954]

Mr. Norris: The second EC driving licence directive requires a new uncorrected vision standard for drivers of lorries and buses. This will apply to new applicants for licences from 1 January 1997. The Government intend to consult further on a proposal to permit existing licence holders to renew their licences provided that they continue to meet current legal requirements. Those who can do so only under preserved rights provisions, which require them only to comply with the eyesight standards which applied when they obtained their licences, would be required to certify that they have a minimum level of recent driving experience and have not been involved in an accident where eyesight might have been a factor.

Sustrans Project

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the Sustrans project. [35959]

Mr. Norris: The national cycle network being promoted by the charity, Sustrans, is making good progress. Much of the detailed work will be undertaken by local highway authorities.

The Department welcomed the initiative to develop the network. We have already said that, where feasible, we would help to ensure safe and convenient crossings arrangements where the network crosses trunk roads. Sustrans has been invited to identify with the Highways Agency desirable trunk road crossing points.

We were pleased to help Sustrans last month with the launch of its "Safe Routes to School" conference. This three-year demonstration project offers opportunities to local authorities to consider the strategic role which walking and cycling to school can play in helping to achieve local authority objectives.

Transport Policies and Programmes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost to local authorities submitting TPP bids in the latest year. [35922]

Mr. Norris: We have made no such estimate. It is for individual local authorities to decide on the precise content of their transport policies and programmes submissions, although we encourage them to keep the size of TPPs to a minimum—see paragraphs 17 and 18 of local authority circular 2/96, copies of which have been deposited in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total of (a) TPP bids received in the last year, (b) the amounts of those bids approved and (c) the proposition of (b) funded by his Department. [35921]

Mr. Norris: The total of TPP bids from local authorities for 1996–97 was £2,260 million, of which £795 million—35.2 per cent.—was accepted as part of the local transport capital settlement announced on 19 December 1995.

Northern Line

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which stations on the Northern line (a) were improved during 1995–96 and (b) are due to be improved in 1996–97. [35894]

Mr. Norris: (a) During 1995–96 London Underground Ltd. made improvements to the following Northern line stations:

Balham
Brent Cross
Burnt Oak
Chalk Farm
Clapham North
Clapham South
Colindale
Finchley Central
Hampstead
Kentish Town
Old Street
Tufnell Park

(b) LUL is making improvements to the following Northern line stations during 1996–97:

Clapham Common
Hampstead
Kentish Town
Mornington Crescent
Old Street
Oval
Tooting Bec
Tooting Broadway.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much London Transport spent upgrading facilities on the Northern line in 1995–96; and how much it expects to spend in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [35893]

Mr. Norris: During 1995–96, London Underground Ltd. invested a total of £104 million in capital projects on the Northern line.

(a) LUL has a budget of £96 million for capital investment in the Northern line during 1996–97

(b) LUL's budget for investment in the Northern line during 1997–96 is £93 million.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to build an east London river crossing, and if he will make a statement. [35919]

Mr. Norris: In the transport strategy for London announced in April, the Government proposed a multi-modal local crossing between Beckton and Thamesmead at Gallions Reach as one potential element of a "package" of new crossing for East London. This proposal supersedes the old east London river crossing scheme, for which we propose to publish draft revocation orders as soon as possible.

Road Surfaces

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on environmentally friendly surfaces and the use of whisper concrete on motorways. [35754]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mrs. Teresa Gorman, dated 8 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question concerning environmentally friendly surfaces and the use of whisper concrete on motorways.

It is the Department's policy to encourage the use of environmentally friendly surfaces both by permitting the recycling of existing surfaces where possible and by the use of low noise road surfaces where technically suitable and cost effective to do so.

Following the satisfactory completion of trails whisper concrete is now permitted as an option for all roads where concrete is technically suitable.

Bypasses (Yorkshire)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the benefits to local communities of bypasses in Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement. [35853]

Mr. Watts: Bypass schemes to be built on the trunk road network are assessed during the design stage in accordance with my Department's procedures which are set out in the design manual for roads and bridges. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Following completion of a bypass an assessment of the effects of the scheme is undertaken in terms of traffic and accidents. Since 1989, the following post-opening studies have been made for bypass schemes in Yorkshire:

A616 Stocksbridge bypass: (November 1989)

A65 Settle and Gigglewick bypass: (February 1990)

A65 Addingham bypass: (February 1992)

A1079 Market Weighton bypass: (June 1992)

A650 Drighlington bypass: (October 1993)

A65 Draughton bypass: (December 1993)

Bypasses promoted by local highway authorities which are included in their transport policies and programme submissions to the Department are assessed using similar procedures.

The provision of bypasses can bring very substantial benefits to local communities in terms of relieving bottlenecks to through traffic, enhancing the environment and improving road safety.

Infrastructure, North-West

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the need to improve the transport infrastructure in the north-west. [34705]

Sir George Young: We receive representations about improving transport infrastructure in the north-west, as we do from other parts of the country. My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for local transport chaired the regional annual consultative committee for the north-west in Chester earlier this year, at which he heard the local authorities' view on transport needs in their region.

Rail Speed Restrictions

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many temporary speed restrictions were notified by Railtrack's weekly operating notices to Regional Railways North East in the period (a) April to June 1994 and (b) April to June 1996; [35880]

(2) how many temporary speed restrictions were in place on tracks used by Regional Railways North East passenger services on 1 April 1994 and how many are in place currently; and if he will list the locations and nature of each of the temporary restrictions at these dates. [35879]

Mr. Watts: I have asked Railtrack to provide the relevant information. Once this is available, I will write to the hon. Member.

Rail Franchising

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has commissioned into the number of stops by intercity trains which were removed from the timetable by British Rail during the three months prior to the award of franchises for the private sector operation of services which would otherwise have stopped at those stations; and if he will make a statement. [35884]

Mr. Watts: We have not commissioned research. For train operating companies which are subsidiaries of the British Railways Board, timetable changes are a matter for the board.

For franchised services, the franchising director develops a contractually binding passenger service requirement based on the British Rail timetable in operation at the time the PSR is drawn up. He is not minded to include in PSRs services that are not being provided in the British Rail timetable. The PSR is subject to consultation with local authorities and rail users consultative committees.

In specifying the PSR, the franchising director has regard to the need to protect vulnerable services, to give franchisees flexibility to plan service provision for commercial services, and to provide value for money. He takes into account the commitments of bidders to provide timetabled services over and above the PSR when assessing franchise bids.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the instructions given to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising to ensure in future that the minimum service requirements established through passenger service requirements which he issues through the franchising process are based upon the established pattern of activity by British Rail InterCity services and discount any cessation of services made in the immediate run-up to the franchise being issued. [35883]

Mr. Watts: The franchising director's existing objectives, instructions and guidance require that, when setting service levels for services being franchised for the first time, he should take as his starting point the service being provided by British Rail at the time when the specification is drawn up. This does not preclude the inclusion in the passenger service requirement of services which have previously been withdrawn by British Rail. Local rail users are free to press for the inclusion of such services in the service requirement during the period of public consultation which the franchising director undertakes for each franchise.

Rail Disruptions

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much compensation was sought by Regional Railways North East from Railtrack for disruption to its passenger services as a result of temporary speed restrictions in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and *(c)*1996–97 to date. [35881]

Mr. Watts: The performance regime was not in place until December 1995. Compensation paid under the performance regime is a commercial matter for Railtrack and the operators involved.

Transport Council

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Transport Council held in Luxembourg on 17 and 18 June. [36228]

Sir George Young: The Transport Council met in Luxembourg on 17 and 18 June. I represented the United Kingdom on the first day and my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping did so on the second.

The Council took a vote on one item, a mandate for the Commission to open negotiations with the United States on the regulatory framework for a possible future EU-US common aviation area. This was opposed by the United Kingdom but was approved with the support of other member states. The mandate is restricted to negotiations on "soft rights" such as competition rules and ownership and control of airlines. Any second stage, including a mandate for negotiations on "hard rights" such as market access, would require a separate Council decision. Member states retain the right to conduct bilateral negotiations with the US while Community-level negotiations are under way.

The Council reached agreement with the European Parliament in the conciliation procedure on guidelines for the Trans-European transport network. The next stage is for the Council and the European Parliament to adopt the agreed text, formally and separately, to bring the guidelines into force.

The Council reached political agreement on a proposed directive concerning the safety of domestic passenger ferries. The Council also reached political agreement on a draft directive to harmonise codes used to record information on driving licences.

The Council discussed a directive to extend until 2001 the present arrangements for harmonisation of summer time start and end dates, but deferred a decision until its October meeting.

The Council agreed a mandate for the Commission to negotiate an agreement between the Community, the European organisation for the safety of air navigation—

Eurocontrol—and the European Space Agency on a European contribution to a global navigation satellite system.

The Council agreed general conclusions accepting a report on aviation safety, which was presented to the Council by the Commission, and calling for further work.

The Council discussed four policy papers prepared by the Commission, on air traffic management, the external costs of transport, public passenger transport, and maritime strategy.

The Commission presented progress reports to the Council on its negotiations with Switzerland on land and air transport, and on the work of the research task forces on intermodality and the train of the future.

The United Kingdom blocked a number of "A" points submitted for adoption by the Council in accordance with the Prime Minister's statement of 21 May.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what preparations he has made for Her Majesty's Government presidency of the Council of Transport Ministers; and if he will make a statement. [35916]

Sir George Young: Officials are considering the administrative implications of the United Kingdom's presidency of the Council of Ministers in the first half of 1998. No formal preparations have yet been made in relation to the Transport Council.

Trunk Roads

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to help road users to identify high-standard all-purpose trunk roads. [36229]

Mr. Watts: Motorways are our highest standard trunk roads. The Government's road improvement programme has established a second category of all-purpose trunk roads which offer similar levels of service to motorways, with dual carriageways, purpose-built interchanges and restricted frontage access. I consider that we should now do more to publicise the second category of roads near motorway standard, so that road users can more easily identify the quality of route they should expect. This will also help locations which, although not directly served by the motorway network, nevertheless benefit from excellent trunk road connections and so good accessibility to national and international markets.

Following discussion with the Minister with special responsibility for the south-west, I announced on 4 July that the section of the A38 which connects Plymouth to the national motorway network will be the first to benefit from the new designation—which will be called an expressway. I will be giving consideration to extending this more widely to other high standard all-purpose trunk roads in England.

EU Transport Funding

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to secure EU funding for a Trans-European network feasibility study for the Bristol-Penzance main railway; [35949]

(2) how many projects have been endorsed and submitted by Her Majesty's Government to the EU Commission for funding under financial regulations 2236/95 for transport initiatives; if he will list them; and if he will set out the steps taken to secure Commission allocation of funds. [35948]

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom put forward, for funding under the Trans-European networks financing regulation EC 2236/95, 16 projects in 1995 and 18 projects in 1996, including the Great Western line development study, which covers the Bristol-Penzance line. These are listed in the table. The allocation of funds to individual projects is determined by a committee of member states' representatives on the basis of a set of Commission proposals, themselves based on member states' bids. Officials maintain regular contact with the Commission to ensure that the proposed allocation is based on a thorough and accurate knowledge of the projects concerned.

Speed Limit Signs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission an inquiry into the effectiveness of speed limit signs on roads; and if he will make a statement. [34874]

Mr. Norris: Aspects of speed limit signing have been, and continue to be, part of the Department's research programme.

Millennium Exhibition

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what administrative arrangements he is making to ensure that the development of passenger traffic on the River Thames is co-ordinated with the organisation of the millennium exhibition. [34876]

Mr. Norris: The primary responsibility for all aspects of the millennium exhibition will rest with the company formed to operate it. The development of River Thames passenger services to the exhibition will be for the operator in conjunction with boat operators and the Port of London Authority. The Department of National Heritage and the Government office for London will each have a role in co-ordinating action.

Ministerial Visit

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to visit Congleton by train; and what route he plans to take. [35885]

Sir George Young: I have no current plans to visit Congleton.

Road Programme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the new roads and (b) the major road works planned to begin in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [35920]

Mr. Watts: The new road schemes announced for a start in 1996–97 are as follows:

A12 Hackney Wick—M11 Link Contract 1, London

A12 Hackney Wick—M11 Link Contract 3, London

A13 Wennington—Mar Dyke, Essex

A13 West of Heathway—Thames Avenue Improvement, London

A34 Newbury Bypass, Berkshire (Contract awarded June 1996)

A40 Gypsy Corner Improvement, Ealing, London

A40 Western Circus Junction Improvement, Ealing/Hammersmith, London—London Primary Route Signing Project

Decisions about the start of works on programmed schemes in future years depend on their relative priorities and the resources available.

The following major maintenance schemes will be carried out during 1996–97—that is, work over £1 million in value, including bridge maintenance and strengthening work:

M1 Junction 34 North

M1 Junction 34 Northbound Exit

M1 Junction 2 Strengthening of flyovers

M4 Junction 2 Elevated Structure—Replacement of Crosshead

M4 Junction 5–6

M4 Junction 10 Sliproads

M4 Junction 18–19

M5 Junction 24 Bridge Maintenance

M6 Junction 15–14 (Southbound)

M6 Junction 33—MP 3820

M6 Junction 36–37

M6 Midland Links Bescot Viaduct—Repairs to viaduct supports

M18 M1 Junction 1

M23 Junction 8–9 North

M23 Junction 8–9 Central

M25 Junction 26–27

M27 Junction 8–10

M53 Junction 9–10

M62 Junction 11–12

M180 Brigg Bypass

A1(M) Bowburn to Bradbury

A1 Kingsway to Lobley Hill

A2 Jubilee Way

A2 Brenley to Harbledown

A3/A31 Surrey Bridge Strengthening

A4 Sutton Court Road to Chiswick Roundabout

A10 Great Cambridge Road—Bush Hill Park Bridge Replacement

A19 Moor Farm to Beckworth

A27 Shoreham Bypass

A38 Branston to Barton (Southbound)

A40 Western Avenue—Bridge repairs

A46 Kenilworth Bypass—Resurfacing (Stage 1)

A5103 M56–M63

Major maintenance works in 1997–98 and 1998–99 will be determined following analysis of the up-to-date condition information which will be collected this year and next.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Right of Hot Pursuit

Sir John Cope: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now seek an agreement between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic in respect of the right of hot pursuit similar to that reached allowing Spanish police the right of hot pursuit of suspected terrorists into France. [33816]

Sir John Wheeler: I understand that the 'hot pursuit' arrangements between Spain and France to which my right hon. Friend refers are part of those countries' commitments as signatories to the Schengen agreement. Although neither the United Kingdom nor the Republic of Ireland are signatories, there are arrangements between the two countries for dealing with cross-border terrorist incidents.

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much grant aid was committed by the Local Enterprise Development Unit in each of the Northern Ireland constituencies in the period 1990 to 1995. [34977]

Mr. Ancram: LEDU assistance in each of the Northern Ireland constituencies in the period 1990 to 1995 was as follows:

| Constituency | Amount committed £ |
|---|---|
| Belfast East | 4,599,390 |
| Belfast North | 7,410,213 |
| Belfast South | 7,421,601 |
| Belfast West | 8,826,576 |
| East Antrim | 3,865,682 |
| East Londonderry | 6,027,513 |
| Fermanagh and South Tyrone | 6,118,240 |
| Foyle | 6,345,457 |
| Lagan Valley | 7,413,171 |
| Mid Ulster | 7,065,516 |
| Newry and Armagh | 6,382,322 |
| North Antrim | 3,685,661 |
| North Down | 3,634,786 |
| South Antrim | 7,655,512 |
| South Down | 8,149,437 |
| Strangford | 4,640,272 |
| Upper Bann | 6,521,397 |
| Total | 105,762,746 |

Industrial Development Board

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many inward investment projects were secured by the Industrial Development Board in the period 1990 to 1995 in each constituency in Northern Ireland; how many jobs were created, and how much each investment was worth. [34975]

Mr. Ancram: Information on investment projects by externally owned companies secured by the Industrial Development Board is available in the form requested only for the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1996. Details are set out in the table:

Inward investment: 1993–96

| Parliamentary constituency | Number of projects | Jobs promoted | Total investment (£000) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Belfast, East | 4 | 64 | 65,032 |
| Belfast, North | 3 | 119 | 2,217 |
| Belfast, South | 3 | 33 | 3,142 |
| Belfast, West | 9 | 804 | 62,784 |
| East Antrim | 3 | 339 | 13,691 |
| East Londonderry | 4 | 403 | 55,291 |
| Fermanagh and South Tyrone | 8 | 700 | 29,455 |
| Foyle | 15 | 2,297 | 190,190 |
| Lagan Valley | 7 | 1,994 | 179,845 |
| Mid Ulster | 6 | 510 | 43,389 |
| Newry and Armagh | 7 | 499 | 28,607 |
| North Antrim | 4 | 8 | 20,955 |
| North Down | 2 | 91 | 5,490 |
| South Antrim | 11 | 1,827 | 196,786 |
| South Down | 2 | 91 | 5,403 |
| Strangford | 1 | 41 | 1,676 |
| Upper Bann | 16 | 1,241 | 95,999 |

The precise location of part of one project announced in 1995–96 has still to be decided; consequently, the table excludes the 215 jobs promoted and £4,277,000 of investment associated with that element of the project.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much grant aid was committed by the Industrial Development Board under selective financial assistance to client companies in each of the Northern Ireland constituencies in the period 1990 to 1995. [34976]

Mr. Ancram: Information on selective financial assistance offers is available in the form requested only for the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1996. Details are set out in the table:

| Parliamentary constituency | Value of selective financial assistance offers (£'000) |
|---|---|
| Belfast, East | 8,819 |
| Belfast, North | 2,711 |
| Belfast, South | 2,394 |
| Belfast, West | 35,925 |
| East Antrim | 18,359 |
| East Londonderry | 22,242 |
| Fermanagh and South Tyrone | 24,499 |
| Foyle | 50,417 |
| Lagan Valley | 68,143 |

Indecency Offences

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many men have been (a) convicted of, and (b) cautioned for, public indecency offences over the last three years in Northern Ireland and the equivalent figures for England and Wales; and what are the present guidelines under which the RUC proceeds in relation to cautioning for such offences and the equivalent Home Office guidelines in England and Wales. [35321]

Sir John Wheeler: Statistics and guidelines relating to England and Wales are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Males convicted of indecency offences in Northern Ireland

| | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Gross indecency offences | 13 | 10 | 19 |
| Indecent assault on females | 69 | 86 | 85 |
| Indecent assault on males | 15 | 12 | 18 |
| Indecent exposure offences | 23 | 16 | 17 |
| Indecent behaviour | 223 | 300 | 279 |

The computerised recording of cautions commenced only in 1995. From 1 January 1995 to 4 July 1996, 66 persons were cautioned for the offences of gross indecency, indecent exposure with intent to insult a female, indecent exposure or indecent behaviour.

Adult and juvenile caution schemes are operated by the Royal Ulster Constabulary based on the precept that criminal offenders should not necessarily be prosecuted for their offences. The purpose of the formal caution is:

(a) to deal quickly and simply with less serious offenders;

(b) to divert offenders from unnecessary appearance in the criminal courts; and

(c) to reduce the likelihood of reoffending.

Consideration is given as to whether a caution is in the public interest. Factors taken into account are the nature of the offence; the likely penalty if the offender was convicted by a court; the offender's age and state of health; the offender's previous criminal history; the offender's attitude towards the offence.

The views of the aggrieved party as regards the decision not to prosecute are considered; however the victim's consent to police administering a caution, although desirable, is not essential.

Set-aside land

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what hectarage in Northern Ireland is given up to set-aside land; and if he will make a statement. [35354]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 1391.66 hectares have been set aside in Northern Ireland in 1996 under the arable area payments scheme and 10.55 hectares under the five-year set-aside scheme.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many kilometres of river bank run along set-aside land; and if he will make a statement. [35353]

Mr. Ancram: It is not known how many kilometres of river bank run along set-aside land in Northern Ireland as this information is not collected.

All-party Talks

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amounts and proportion of the cost the Irish Government have agreed to pay toward the all-party talks; and if he will indicate the areas of activity the payments will relate to. [35323]

Mr. Ancram: The British and Irish Governments are sharing in equal proportions from 10 June 1996, the various running costs of the negotiations, excluding strand one. This includes various categories such as expenditure relating to the three independent chairmen and their staff, allowances/grants paid to delegates and parties relating to their attendance for the purpose of the negotiations, press accommodation and catering contract costs. Final figures on costs incurred between 10 and 30 June 1996 are not yet available.

Small Businesses

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many small businesses have received assistance in Northern Ireland under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in each of the last 12 months. [36153]

Mr. Ancram: Figures are available for the last financial year. The number of loans to Northern Ireland small businesses guaranteed under the small firms loan guarantee scheme during the period are as follows:

| Month | Number of loans |
|---|---|
| April 1995 | 7 |
| May 1995 | 5 |
| June 1995 | 2 |
| July 1995 | 8 |
| August 1995 | 9 |
| September 1995 | 2 |
| October 1995 | 8 |
| November 1995 | 1 |
| December 1995 | 1 |
| January 1996 | 6 |
| February 1996 | 13 |
| March 1996 | 11 |

Some companies may have received more than one loan.

Secondary School Funding

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the present age weighted pupil units that exist for post-primary school financing in the five area education boards and those for the voluntary grammar sector; and if he will make a statement. [35318]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows.

The age weighting of pupils depend on the form being attended. The range of age weightings in each educations and library board area and in the voluntary grammar school sector is as follows:

| | Form 1 | Form 2 | Form 3 | Form 4 | Form 5 | Form 6 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Belfast | 1.80 | 1.75 | 1.85 | 1.95 | 2.02 | 2.30 |
| North-eastern | 1.83 | 1.75 | 1.83 | 1.92 | 2.02 | 2.30 |
| South-eastern | 1.90 | 1.80 | 1.90 | 2.00 | 2.01 | 2.51 |
| Southern | 1.60 | 1.60 | 1.60 | 1.80 | 1.80 | 2.50 |
| Western | 1.66 | 1.66 | 1.66 | 1.66 | 1.66 | 2.32 |
| Voluntary grammar schools | 1.60 | 1.60 | 1.60 | 1.80 | 1.80 | 2.40 |

The actual amount of resources available to individual schools depends on the cash value of each age-weighted pupil unit and this varies from board to board and in the voluntary grammar school sector.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the budget unit costs arising over the last three financial years from allocations under local management of schools post-primary funding (a) in each of the five area boards, (b) as between voluntary and controlled grammar schools and (c) in maintained integrated schools and in each case set out the reasons for the differences in unit costs. [35319]

Mr. Ancram: The table details the pupil per capita expenditure costs over the last three financial years:

| Education and library board | Secondary schools £ | Grammar controlled £ | Schools voluntary £ | Controlled integrated[1] £ | Grant maintained integrated schools £ |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | | | | | |
| Belfast | 2,398 | 2,211 | | n/a | |
| North Eastern | 2,213 | 2,033 | | n/a | |
| South Eastern | 2,129 | 2,032 | 2,214 | n/a | 2,424 |
| Southern | 2,079 | 2,249 | | 3,128 | |
| Western | 2,094 | 2,053 | | n/a | |
| 1994–95 | | | | | |
| Belfast | 2,465 | 2,246 | | n/a | |
| North Eastern | 2,274 | 2,108 | | n/a | |
| South Eastern | 2,183 | 2,092 | 2,263 | n/a | 2,512 |
| Southern | 2,143 | 2,311 | | 2,949 | |
| Western | 2,192 | 2,123 | | n/a | |
| 1995–96 | | | | | |
| Belfast | 2,529 | 2,289 | | n/a | |
| North Eastern | 2,301 | 2,140 | | n/a | |
| South Eastern | 2,213 | 2,122 | 2,381 | n/a | 2,964 |
| Southern | 2,156 | 2,331 | | 2,529 | |

[1] There is only one controlled integrated secondary school.

Differences between the figures reflect a range of differing factors, including, relative need between education and library boards, local needs and priorities within education and library boards, differing levels of need between schools, expanding enrolments and different levels of delegation between sectors. An additional factor affecting integrated schools is the high initial per capita cost of newly established schools.

Student Grants (Eligibility)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to enable Northern Ireland-born citizens' children whose parents have been resident in British dependent territories to be eligible for student grants and fees. [35346]

Mr. Ancram: There are no plans to change the residence requirements, which are common throughout the United Kingdom.

Industrial Research and Technology Unit

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of public expenditure in Northern Ireland has been spent on the industrial research and technology unit in each of the last five years; and what is the planned proportion for the next two years. [36147]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Industrial Research and Technology Unit under its chief executive, Mr. F. G. McConnell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from F. G. McConnell to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 8 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me, as Chief Executive of the Industrial Research and Technology Unit (IRTU), to reply to your question about the unit's expenditure.

IRTU's total expenditure since its establishment in March 1992 and planned expenditure for future years together with the corresponding Public Expenditure amounts are as follows:

| | IRTU £ million | Northern Ireland public expenditure block £ million | IRTU expenditure as proportion for total NI public expenditure Percentage |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 14.3 (Actual) | 6,580 (Actual) | 0.2 |
| 1993–94 | 18.2 (Actual) | 7,085 (Actual) | 0.3 |
| 1994–95 | 18.2 (Actual) | 7,407 (Actual) | 0.3 |
| 1995–96 | 16.9 (Actual) | 7,823 (Estimate) | 0.2 |
| 1996–97 | 17.8 (Planned) | 8,015 (Planned) | 0.2 |
| 1997–98 | 17.8 (Planned) | 8,210 (Planned) | 0.2 |
| 1998–99 | 17.8 (Planned) | 8,273 (Planned) | 0.2 |

I hope your will find this reply useful.

Emigrants

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland emigrants have returned to Northern Ireland in each of the last three years. [36151]

Sir John Wheeler: The most recent information on migration flows to and from Northern Ireland is for the mid-year period extending from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995. Information for this year and for the two previous years, 1992–93 and 1993–94, is shown in the table.

The years 1992–93 and 1993–94 show net inward migration of 3,600 and 1,110 respectively. The year 1994–95 shows a slight net outward migration of around 200.

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Total migration | 17,344 | –13,703 | 3,641 | 15,367 | –14,303 | 1,064 | 15,884 | –16,123 | –239 |
| Total rounded | 17,300 | –13,700 | 3,600 | 15,400 | –14,300 | 1,110 | 15,900 | –16,100 | –200 |

Emigrants leaving Northern Ireland are shown as a negative contribution to the net migration calculation for the year in question. Immigrants entering Northern Ireland are shown as a positive contribution.

It is not possible to determine from the data available whether those recorded as immigrants are past emigrants from Northern Ireland returning home or persons coming to live in Northern Ireland for the first time.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money was allocated to the making it back home scheme in 1995–96; and how much is planned to be allocated in 1996–97. [36148]

Mr. Ancram: The allocation of funding for making it back home for 1995–96 was £60,000, and the budgeted provision for 1996–97 is £96,400.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Ban

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign Commonwealth Affairs under what legislative powers the Commission of the European Union has placed a ban on the export of British beef to any nation; what are the penalties for breaching such a ban; and how the decision of the Commission will be enforced. [24069]

Mrs. Browning: I have been asked to reply.

Following notification of EU decision 96/239, we have ceased to issue export health certificates for products covered by the decision. Failure to meet the provisions of the decision could leave the United Kingdom liable in the event of an unfavourable judgment in national courts or the European Court of Justice. The Customs and Excise (Management) Act 1979 enables Customs to detain goods presented for export which are subject to the decision.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the European directives on which the European Commission based its decision to ban the export of beef or beef products by the United Kingdom to third countries; and what action he is taking to test the legality of that ban. [26481]

Mrs. Browning: I regret that the hon. Member has had to wait so long for a reply.

The decision of the European Commission to ban the export of beef and beef products from the United Kingdom is based on the following directives:–

Council directive 90/425/EEC of 26 June 1990 concerning veterinary and zootechnical checks applicable in intra-Community trade in certain live animals and products with a view to the completion of the internal market (OJ No. L 224, 18.8.1990, p29), as amended.

Council directive 89/662/EEC of 11 December 1989 concerning veterinary checks in intra-Community trade with a view to the completion of the internal market (OJ No. L395, 30.12.1989, p13), as amended.

As regards the action taken, I, together with ministerial colleagues, have brought an action under article 173 of the treaty of Rome, challenging the legality of the ban before the Court of Justice of the European Community. In the context of that action, the United Kingdom has applied to the court for interim relief—essentially a suspension of the ban pending judgment in article 173 action—under articles 185 and 186 of the treaty.

The United Kingdom has also intervened before the Court in support of a separate article 173 challenge to the ban launched by the National Farmers Union. In addition, the United Kingdom will be submitting written observations to the court contesting the ban's legality, as part of a procedure for a preliminary ruling under article 177 of the treaty, arising out of an application by the NFU for judicial review of measures taken by the Ministry to implement the ban.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from, and what meetings he has had with, the International Meat Trade Association, since 20 March, about the consequences of the European Community ban on British exports of beef; and if he will make a statement. [26361]

Mrs. Browning: The Government have received numerous representations, both oral and written, from the International Meat Trade Association since 20 March about the ban on British beef exports. MAFF Ministers and officials have met IMTA officials and members on several occasions during that period. IMTA members also made representations to Coopers and Lybrand in the context of the two reports which the Government commissioned, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the consequential losses incurred by the meat, livestock and ancillary industries resulting from the ban on British beef exports. [28116]

Mrs. Browning: A full audit of the consequential losses incurred by the meat, livestock and ancillary industries resulting from the ban on British beef exports could be calculated only at disproportionate cost and would raise questions of commercial sensitivity. However, the effects include the following: exports valued at nearly £800 million in 1995 have been stopped; clean cattle prices have fallen by up to 20 per cent.; beef consumption has fallen; beef stocks have been devalued; staff have been laid off or made redundant; and businesses have taken on large debts.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy in respect of the holding of car boot sales on agricultural land with particular reference to set-aside land. [35513]

Mr. Baldry: European Union rules currently prohibit any lucrative use of set-aside land incompatible with the growing of an arable crop. The European Commission has ruled that this prohibition applies even to local or charitable events where the proceeds go to someone other than the farmer. It therefore applies to car boot sales. The Government consider this restriction to be unwelcome and unnecessary and are continuing their efforts to persuade the Commission to relax its ruling.

Beef Intervention Stock

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current size of the beef intervention stock held in the United Kingdom; and how much of this stock was purchased in each year. [24417]

Mr. Baldry: As at 21 June 1996, United Kingdom beef intervention stock levels stood at around 9,000 tonnes. In December 1992, the stock level was approximately 160,000 tonnes. In the following year, about 22,000 tonnes came into intervention and around 86,000 tonnes were sold. There were no sales into intervention in 1994 and 1995 when sales from intervention were around 64,000 tonnes and 17,000 tonnes leaving a stock total in December 1995 of around 5,500 tonnes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has for disposal of the beef intervention stock held in the United Kingdom. [24418]

Mr. Baldry: The Commission is expected to adopt a regulation which requires United Kingdom intervention stocks purchased prior to this year, that is between 1991 and 1993, to be destroyed. Beef purchased into intervention since March this year will be stored until such time as the Commission, in consultation with the Beef Management committee, deems it appropriate to place it back on the market.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what amount of the beef which was placed in intervention stores in each of the last five years currently remains in intervention; what steps he has taken to ensure that it complies with current requirements in respect of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and what are the equivalent beef intervention stocks in other EU member states; [30049]

(2) how much beef was held in intervention stores for each EU member state in each of the last five years. [30050]

Mrs. Browning: The levels of intervention stocks for each member state at the end of each calendar year for 1991–1995 were as set out:

| Tonnes | Belgium | Denmark | Germany | Greece | Spain | France | Ireland | Italy | Luxembourg | Netherlands | UK |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1991 | 5,974 | 35,230 | 103,386 | — | 3,882 | 163,266 | 199,524 | 51,947 | — | 2,623 | 139,529 |
| 1992 | 2,666 | 39,093 | 174,492 | — | 12,895 | 186,379 | 241,843 | 53,069 | — | 1,774 | 159,849 |
| 1993 | 184 | 22,131 | 17,499 | — | — | 21,275 | 166,424 | 20,985 | — | 681 | 85,614 |
| 1994 | — | 1,150 | — | — | — | 590 | 27,403 | 4,518 | — | — | 22,015 |
| 1995 | — | 71 | — | — | — | 36 | 345 | — | — | — | 5,072 |

As at 21 June 1996, UK beef intervention stock levels stood at around 9,000 tonnes.

Intervention stock is unlikely to contain BSE-infected material. Community rules currently require that beef purchased into intervention must be derived from steers aged less than 30 months at slaughter, or 24 months in the case of bull beef. BSE has never been clinically diagnosed in an animal aged less than three years, and only in two animals—both heifers—aged between three and four years. In addition, specified bovine offals would be excluded and obvious nervous and lymphatic tissues removed during cutting. Beef stored in intervention is subject to regular and comprehensive controls, including analyses, to ensure that it remains safe to eat.

Beef (Fast Food)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to require fast food and other eating establishments to restore British beef to their menus clearly labelled as such. [24881]

Mrs. Browning: No, the Government do not have the legal powers to introduce legislation requiring retail or catering establishments to sell British beef, as this would be a restrictive trade practice. The Government, in consultation with the beef industry and the Meat and Livestock Commission, continue however to do all that they can to persuade such establishments to restore British beef to their menus.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations have been consulted by his Department regarding the situation in the meat and livestock industry. [28117]

Mrs. Browning: MAFF Ministers and officials have consulted, and continue to consult, organisations representing every part of the meat and livestock industry, including producers, consumer groups, breed societies, livestock exporters, feed manufacturers, welfare organisations, the veterinary profession, scientists, the medical profession, local authorities, the Commission, other member states, abattoirs, cutting plants, cold stores, meat exporters, renderers, retailers, wholesalers, caterers, economists, hauliers, livestock auction markets, tenants, landowners, the Meat and Livestock Commission, the banking industry and research establishments. Recent consultation papers laid in the Library of the House will indicate the names of those organisations consulted.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost of the slaughter of cattle of five years old and above in herds in Scotland which have had an incidence of BSE. [23364]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 28 March 1996]: It is estimated that there is somewhere in the order of 149,144 animals in Scotland in herds which have an incidence of BSE and are five years old or above. Slaughtering animals alone at a cost of about £50 head would cost around £7.5 million. More substantial would be the economic costs to the meat and dairy industries and compensation to farmers for loss of stock and replacement.

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if meat now entering the United Kingdom has had removed all the bovine offals required to be removed in United Kingdom production. [24216]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 2 April 1996]: Although some other countries have introduced similar controls to the UK, prohibiting the sale of bovine offals for human consumption, this is not a pre-condition of importation into the UK. However, imports of beef from animals aged over 30 months are currently prohibited except from 14 countries outside the EU where there have been no recorded cases of BSE.

Abattoirs (Rendering Capacity)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has, and over what period, to increase the rendering capacity available to Welsh abattoirs; and if he will make a statement. [29609]

Mr. Baldry: There are currently three Welsh abattoirs involved in the over-thirty-month scheme and the scheme carcasses from these are being processed by three approved rendering plants. Renderers are working to a national plan agreed by the industry through the United Kingdom Renderers Association. The industry is currently processing about 28,000 scheme animals each week and hopes to improve on this through the introduction of extra capacity which indirectly will be of benefit to all abattoirs, including Welsh ones, through the national plan.

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums were (a) allocated and (b) taken up in respect of decommissioning fishing vessels in each of the last three years; and what use was made of surplus funds. [35519]

Mr. Baldry: Sums of £8.4 million, £8.9 million and £12 million were allocated for decommissioning schemes in 1993, 1994 and 1995 respectively. Corresponding uptake in these years was £7.8 million, £8.8 million and £9.6 million. Normal Government accounting rules applied to these underspends.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make it his policy to publish the findings of his review into the common fisheries policy before 25 July; and if he will make a statement; [35723]

(2) if he will make a statement on the outcome of his review into the common fisheries policy; what changes he now proposes to make to it; and how he intends to bring about reforms within the intergovernmental conference. [35724]

Mr. Baldry: The common fisheries policy review group has almost completed its work and I understand that it plans to publish its report before 25 July. Fisheries Ministers will wish to study the report and to hear the views of the industry before reaching final conclusions on it. The Government have already made it clear that they will be putting proposals to the intergovernmental conference to enable the problem of quota hoppers to be resolved.

Beef Industry (Compensation)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those areas where EU compensation payments would be automatic to support the United Kingdom beef market, setting out the circumstances and triggers whereby it would come into effect. [24000]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 2 April 1996]: Community arrangements act to support the United Kingdom beef market in several respects, including:

- Premiums payable on beef cows and other male animals under the suckler cow and beef special premium schemes;
- beef offered for sale into intervention when average market prices in the EU fall below 84 per cent. of the intervention price and where, in an individual member state, the average market price falls below 80 per cent. of the intervention price;
- Subsidies, or export refunds, payable on cattle and beef exported to certain destinations outside the EU to enable EU exporters to complete on world markets;
- Premiums payable on male dairy calves taken out of production by the age of 20 days; and
- subject to upper limits, 70 per cent. of the basic compensation paid in respect of UK animals aged over 30 months which are currently unable to be sold into the human food chain.

All of the above measures are subject to detailed rules set out in the relevant Community legislation.

Veal Calves

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of British veal calves recently sent to France have been reared for beef; and what provisions exist to prevent these animals from being re-imported into the United Kingdom. [25861]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 April 1996]: Community rules, in place since 1990, required that any UK calf exported to another member state must be slaughtered on or before the age of six months. This precluded their use for production of beef.

Beef

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion by weight of prime British beef has been slaughtered at over 30 months of age in recent years. [25859]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 19 April 1996]: Precise information on the slaughter age of prime beef cattle in recent years is not available. However, we estimate that between 5 and 10 per cent. of steers and heifers slaughtered annually are likely to be aged over 30 months.

Quarantine Conditions

Mr. Byers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the minimum standards that have to be met by the owners of quarantine kennels. [28930]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 14 May 1996]: The standard requirements under the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974 for the design, construction, operation and management of authorised quarantine premises for dogs and cats are set out on form ID50. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

Cattle Culling

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reasons for, and the consequences of, the halving of allocations of cattle under the 30-month scheme to the St. Merryn, Cobden's and West Devon meat abattoirs. [30802]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 June 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Intervention Board to reply direct.

Letter from George Trevelyan to Mr. David Nicholson, dated 8 July 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about reduction in the allocations of cattle under the Over 30 Month Slaughter Scheme (OTMS) to St Merryn, Cobdens and West Devon Meat.[30802]

The number of cattle that can be slaughtered each week under the OTMS is limited by the rendering capacity that is available. In the first two weeks we operated the scheme in England and Wales on the basis of around 20 abattoirs. However, that was a "pump-priming" exercise and it was quite clear that it was necessary to increase the number of participating abattoirs in order to provide more equitable geographical coverage for producers. From week commencing 27 May, therefore, the number of plants was doubled and, as a consequence, it was necessary to reduce the allocations to the original abattoirs. Nevertheless, even under the new arrangements around 20% of the English allocation is in the West Country.

Since slaughtering under the scheme began more than 208,000 animals have been processed and in each of the last four weeks the throughput has averaged more than 28,000 limited only by rendering capacity. We are beginning, therefore, to make significant inroads into the backlog.

We are exploring all possible means of stepping up the rate of slaughtering. The renderers themselves are increasing their capacity over a period of time and we are bringing on stream cold storage capacity to allow carcasses to be stored prior to rendering. As a result, St Merryn Meat are now slaughtering additional cattle each week. We are also investigating the possibility of making more use of direct incineration. In combination these measures will allow us to increase the present allocations to abattoirs on the list over the coming weeks.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the House of Commons Library and the Public Information Office.

TREASURY

"Monthly Digest of Statistics"

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlay the number of groups in respect of which he has produced quarterly figures in table 15.10 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics"; and if he will list figures for the groups hitherto excluded. [35712]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information in table 15.10 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" is presented in accordance with the periodicity of collection. The data are published at the aggregate division level classified to the standard industrial classification 1992. Data are published on a quarterly basis only where the periodicity of collection allows aggregation to this level. The periodicity of collection is primarily determined by article 4 of EC regulation No. 3924/91 and as stipulated in the products of the European Community—Prodcom—list, ISBN 92-827-5164-3.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the weights to be assigned to each of the items in ratio 1 in table 15.10 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics", indicating the weights attached in 1973. [35711]

Mrs. Knight: No weights are used in the calculation of the import penetration ratios published in table 15.10 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics". However, the proportion of gross domestic product represented by each sector of industry can be derived from table 2.2 of the United Kingdom national accounts publication. Figures for 1973 are available from the Office for National Statistics databank which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library.

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the figures for import penetration of the United Kingdom market for manufactures by imports from other EU countries for each year since 1970; [35713]

(2) if he will list the revised figures for import penetration of the United Kingdom market for manufactures for each year since 1970; [35715]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of the shift to standard industrial classification 1992 on the figures for import penetration of the United Kingdom market for manufactures; [35710]

(4) what has been the import share of the United Kingdom market for manufactures in each year since 1980; and what is his forecast for long-term change in that share. [35932]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Import penetration figures for the period 1970 to 1994—and quarterly figures for 1995—the most recent figures available, can be found in publications as indicated in the following table. These publications can be assessed in the House of Commons Library, with the exception of the February 1989 edition of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics". A copy of the relevant table of this edition will be placed in the Library today. The table also indicates the standard industrial classification on which the data are based.

| 1993 | 1992 | Monthly Digest Table 15.10 | May 1996 |
| 1994 | 1992 | Monthly Digest Table 15.10 | June 1996 |

Figures are not available for the years 1989 to 1992. Publication of the import penetration figures was reinstated in the April 1995 edition of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" in table 15.10 based on the introduction of the standard industrial classification 1992. Revised figures for 1993, 1994, and 1995 figures for those industries where data are collected on a quarterly basis will be published in the July 1996 edition later this month. Import penetration figures are not available on an EU country breakdown basis. The Office for National Statistics has made no forecasts for future import penetration levels.

The 1995 figures for those industries where data are collected on a quarterly basis will be published in the July 1996 edition later this month. Import penetration figures are not available on an EU country breakdown basis. The Office for National Statistics has made no forecasts for future import penetration levels.

Defence-related Manufacturing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the civilian population was engaged in defence-related manufacturing in each year since 1979. [35967]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The available information is provided in the following table.

Employment dependent on defence expenditure as a proportion of civilian population: United Kingdom[1]

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1978–79 | 0.9 |
| 1979–80 | 0.9 |

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been (a) the absolute and (b) the percentage change in the number of jobs in United Kingdom manufacturing since 1993; and what are the figures for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. [35934]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested for the United Kingdom is shown in the following table. OECD comparisons for the period requested are not available.

Employees in manufacturing in the United Kingdom: at March (seasonally adjusted)

| 1993 | 1996 | Change | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 000 | 000 | 000 | per cent. |
| 3,922 | 3,938 | 16 | 0.4 |

Trade Deficit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the deficit in trade in manufactures is being financed. [35988]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The current account deficit over the past two years has been less than ½ per cent. of GDP, and around one third of the deficit on trade in manufactures, with strong surpluses on trade in services and overseas investment income. The current account deficit is financed by capital account inflows—net overseas investment in the UK—reducing net external assets. But the UK's net external assets have recently been rising, to £70 billion at the end of 1996, Q1. This reflects net capital gains on our net assets outweighing any capital inflows.

Composite Insurance Companies

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the regulatory organisations within his Department which have responsibility in relation to composite insurance companies. [36034]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury has no direct regulatory responsibilities for composite insurance companies as such. However, marketing of life business, including that of composite insurance companies, is regulated under the Financial Services Act 1986 for which the Treasury has policy responsibility. The main FSA regulators responsible for life business are the Securities and Investments Board, the Personal Investment Authority and the Insurance Brokers Registration Council.

Interest Rates

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy on interest rates. [36273]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Interest rates are set to achieve the inflation target of 2½ per cent. or less.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff Salaries

Sir David Mitchell: To as the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list the staff of the House whose salary plus additional payments take their emoluments above the salaries of (a) hon. Members, (b) Under-Secretaries, (c) Ministers of State and (d) Cabinet Ministers. [35651]

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities are debt free; if he will list them and the party or parties currently in political control of them; and if he will make a statement on his Department's policy in respect of local authority indebtedness. [35662]

Sir Paul Beresford: The table sets out the list of those authorities that expected to be debt-free on 1 April 1996, and their current political control. We continue to encourage local authorities to reduce their outstanding debt using sums that they have set aside for this purpose.

Cinema and Leisure Park, Wearmouth

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the planning proposals for a multi-screen cinema and leisure park on the site of the former Wearmouth colliery, Trindon street and Dallion New road; when departmental officials last discussed the proposals with (i) the Tyne and Wear development corporation, (ii) Cowies, (iii) Camborough Ltd, (iv) Sunderland local authority, (v) IGP Developments, (vi) Vaux Ltd, and (vii) the Bowie Group; when he expects to make a decision on the planning applications; and if he will make a statement. [35700]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State has received one representation about these proposals from agents acting for Cowies. The proposals have been drawn to his attention by the Tyne and Wear development corporation and by reports on the local media. On 21 and 24 June, The Secretary of State issued directions under article 14 of the Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order 1995 preventing the local planning authorities, the Tyne and Wear development corporation and Sunderland city council, from determining the applications until he had considered whether or not he should call them in. Copies of the applications and documentation were received by the Government office for the north-east on 21 June and these are being considered at present.

No discussions have taken place between departmental officials and Cowies, Carnborough Ltd, Vaux Ltd or the Bowey Group. Departmental officials have spoken to Sunderland city council once and on several occasions to the Tyne and Wear development corporation, in connection with the application.

Council Homes

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average time taken to re-let council homes in each of the metropolitan councils; and if he will make a statement. [35859]

Mr. Curry: Local authorities in England are requested to provide information on the average time they take to re-let council dwellings, excluding those let after major repair work in their annual housing investment programme—HIP1—returns.

The latest available figures, which relate to dwellings let during the financial year 1994–95, are given in the 1995 "HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Roadside Advertisements

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations control the placing of advertisements on roadside verges; and what plans he has to relax them. [35966]

Sir Paul Beresford: The display of all outdoor advertisements, including those on roadside verges, is subject to the provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992. My Department issued a public consultation paper, in February 1996, canvassing the possible abolition of the regime of areas of special control of advertisements. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library. The proposals would not permit additional advertising on roadside verges, which would remain at the discretion of local planning authorities.

If the verge forms part of the highway, additional powers to control advertisements are available to highway authorities under the Highways Act 1980, for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is responsible.

Water Closet Cisterns

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have been held with sanitary ware manufacturers, the water companies and Ofwat to reduce the current gallonage in WC cisterns, and if he will make a statement. [35852]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: WC flush volumes have been widely discussed by all interested parties following the publication of "Using Water Wisely" and "Water Conservation Government Action".

Any reduction in the present maximum WC flush volume will be considered by the Water Regulation Advisory Committee as part of its remit to consider the technical requirements of regulations that will replace the water byelaws. I expect to announce the membership of that committee shortly.

Private Finance Initiative

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount contributed by capital projects through the private finance initiative for each of the metropolitan districts to date; and if he will make a statement. [35849]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information relating to individual local authority projects is not collected by my Department. However, the private finance initiative has high potential to enhance the amount and value of local authority investment, and I am taking a number of measures to promote it.

Education Expenditure (Devon)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was Devon's education standard spending assessment in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97; and in each case what was the percentage change on the previous year. [36187]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested on Devon county council's education standard spending assessment is as follows:

| | Amount £ million | Percentage increase over previous year |
|---|---|---|
| 1994–95 | 321.710 | 2.3 |
| 1995–96 | 328.421 | [1]2.1 |
| 1996–97 | 345.862 | 5.3 |

[1] Percentage increase over 1994–95 SSA, adjusted to £321.573 million to reflect the abolition of compulsory inter-authority recoupment for most pupils on 1 April 1995.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36012]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information cannot be provided.

Density and Sparsity Effects

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to review his Department's guidelines on the density and sparsity effects in respect of the provision of services by local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [36039]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department has commissioned research on the effects of sparsity and density of population on the costs of providing local authority services. Reports from both research studies are expected to be received this month. Their findings will be discussed with the local authority associations. The findings and the associations' views will be available to us when we reach decisions on standard spending assessments for 1997–98.

Sea Level Rises, East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of likely sea level rises in East Anglia in (a) 2020 and (b) 2050 as a result of temperature increases; and if he will make a statement. [36024]

Mr. Clappison: The Department's climate change impacts review group has recently provided an independent review of the impact of climate change on the UK. In its report "A Review of the Potential Effects of Climate change on the UK," sea level is projected to rise by 12 to 19cm by 2020 and 23 to 37cm by 2050. Sea level rise in East Anglia will be exacerbated by the effect of land sinking. Allowing for this, a sea level rise of up to 50cm can be expected by 2050.

We recognise that climate change is a global problem which all countries have a responsibility to address. The UK is on course to go further than the commitment that we made under the UN framework convention on climate change to return emissions of greenhouse gases to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

At the second conference of the parties to the FCCC in Geneva on 8 to 19 July 1996, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be urging developed countries to honour their commitments and also to reduce emissions by 5 to 10 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

Health and Safety Bodies

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the forthcoming finance, management and policy review of the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive. [36367]

Sir Paul Beresford: As part of the Government's programme of regular five-yearly finance, management and policy reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department will conduct a thorough review of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, which will begin today. As with all prior options studies, this will assess the extent to which the HSC/E's functions are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether there is scope for privatising, contracting out or transferring all or part of its functions to another body. It will draw on work which has already been done in this area.

The progress made by HSC/E since the previous review in 1991–92 will be examined and the results of that examination and of the prior options study will inform a review of HSC/E's policy and financial management systems. An essential component of Government policy is to maintain high standards of health and safety and the review will reflect this.

In carrying out the study, my Department will consult widely with relevant organisations with an interest in HSC/E's work.

Environment Council

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 25 June. [36665]

Mr. Gummer: Together with my noble Friend the Earl of Lindsay, I represented the United Kingdom at the Environment Council in Luxembourg on 25 June.

Common positions were reached on proposed directives on the marketing of biocidal products and on the control of emissions from off-road vehicles. In both cases the United Kingdom was able to secure its negotiating objectives.

The Council agreed conclusions on a community strategy to reduce carbon dioxide emissions from passenger cars and on the EU position for the second conference of the parties to the UN framework convention on climate change, which is to be held in Geneva later this month.

Council conclusions were also agreed on water policy and on the EU position for the first meeting of the open-ended ad hoc working group to prepare a bio-safety protocol for the conference of the parties on biological diversity.

The Council agreed a recommendation on the keeping of wild animals in zoos, a mandate to approve the Espoo convention, and a negotiating mandate on a proposed agreement for the conservation of whales in the Mediterranean and Black seas.

The Council failed to reach a decision on the Commission's proposal on the marketing of genetically modified maize.

There were useful policy debates about the review of the fifth environmental action programme and on the proposed amendment of directive 90/219 on the contained use of genetically modified organisms. Both dossiers will be taken forward under the Irish presidency. Progress on the negotiations with major fur-exporting countries over the use of leghold traps and on the preparations for the third conference of the parties to the convention on biological diversity was noted.

Planning Policy

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue for public consultation the revised text of planning policy guidance note 1, "General Policy and Principles". [36689]

Mr. Gummer: I have today issued for consultation our proposals for revising PPG1. The present text of PPG1 was published in March 1992. Its content has been refocused to provide a more strategic commentary on planning policy. More detailed guidance on specific planning issues is given in the other PPGs in the series.

The revised text:

- reaffirms the role of the planning system in meeting the needs of a growing and competitive economy;
- emphasises the contribution of the planning system to achieving sustainable development;
- identifies ways in which mixed use development can be promoted;
- updates guidance on design considerations in planning in the light of the Government's quality in town and country initiative;
- restates the limited circumstances in which it is appropriate to use planning obligations to secure development;
- explains the operation of the plan-led system; and
- contains new sections on the citizens charter and propriety.

Comments on the revised draft PPG1 have been invited by 30 September 1996.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those constituencies he has visited in the last three months on official business and those constituencies he intends to visit in the next three months; and if he will make a statement. [35758]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Birmingham, Ladywood on 6 and 7 May for the ministerial meeting of the Western European Union, and East Kilbride on 20 May for meetings at the Overseas Development Administration office there. He has announced no plans for further visits within the UK on official business in the next three months.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the decision of the International Court of Justice issued 8 July regarding the legality of nuclear weapons. [36125]

Mr. David Davis: We are studying the detail of the Court's advisory opinion which was issued yesterday.

Mr. Raghbir Singh

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was notified of the resolution carried by the European Parliament over the case of Mr. Raghbir Singh; if he has notified the Home Secretary of the resolution; and if he will make a statement. [36475]

Mr. David Davis: The European Parliament's resolution on the case of Mr. Raghbir Singh was sent to member states' permanent representatives to the European Union after its adoption on 20 June. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary was notified of the resolution on 3 July.

TRANSPORT

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the venue and purpose of the visits Her Majesty's Government's Transport Ministers have made to the United States of America since their appointment. [35913]

Sir George Young: The Minister for Railways and Roads visited Atlanta and Washington in November 1995 on a fact-finding mission on road traffic management measures. The Minister for Local Transport, Road Safety and Transport in London addressed the international congress on alcohol and drug dependency in San Diego in August 1995 and looked at San Diego's local transport systems. In 1993, he went on a fact-finding mission to Chicago to study parking enforcement systems.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the benefits which will accrue to South Yorkshire from the construction of the channel tunnel rail link; and if he will make a statement. [35846]

Mr. Watts: I expect that all regions of the UK, including South Yorkshire, will benefit from the construction of the channel tunnel rail link, which will reduce journey times by 30 minutes.

Rail Freight

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of freight is currently moved by rail; and what measures he intends to take to encourage the movement of freight by rail. [36243]

Mr. Watts: Rail moved 6 per cent. of freight handled in the UK in 1994–95, the most recent period for which figures are available. The key to improving market share is privatisation. Five of BR's freight businesses, which in total carry more than 90 per cent. by volume of rail freight in Great Britain, have already been privatised. BR aims to privatise the only remaining business, Railfreight Distribution, by the end of this year.

We continue to make available grants to encourage the shift of freight from road to rail.

Channel Tunnel (Freight)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage the transport of freight through the channel tunnel. [36239]

Mr. Watts: On 6 June, the Government announced that Railfreight Distribution, BR's channel tunnel rail freight business, was to be offered for sale. Privatisation will enable the business to be put onto a sound financial footing so that the growth potential of freight services via the channel tunnel can be exploited on a commercial basis, thereby furthering the objective of transferring more freight from road to rail.

Networker Trains

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent reports he has received of design faults leading to safety problems in the construction and delivery of the Networker trains for the north Kent lines. [36032]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 8 July 1996]: Prescribed equipment failures on rolling stock are statutorily reportable where the incident occurs or is discovered on running lines. Earlier this year a coupling failure occurred on a Networker train which was undergoing maintenance in a works depot. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is also aware of a number of brake disc failures. HSE has investigated these incidents and is satisfied that suitable measures are in place to maintain safety standards.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Drug Abuse Resistance Education

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much funding is given by her Department to promote DARE projects; what assessment she had made of the impact of DARE projects in schools; and if she will make a statement. [35907]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department provided £80,000 of support in 1995–96 to Kirklees local education authority for an innovative drugs education project, through the grants for education support and training programme. One element of the project was the evaluation of the DARE programme in the region's schools. My right hon. Friend plans to publish an evaluation document covering all GEST innovative drugs education projects, including that in Kirklees, later in the year.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers have taken early retirement on medical grounds in each of the last 10 years. [35752]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows the latest information for England and Wales.

Teachers Superannuation Scheme members retiring on ill-health grounds[1]

| Financial year | Maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools[2] | Other sectors[3] | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1986–87 | 2,060 | 650 | 2,710 |
| 1987–88[4] | 1,930 | 620 | 2,550 |
| 1988–89 | 2,680 | 740 | 3,420 |
| 1989–90 | 3,260 | 910 | 4,170 |
| 1990–91 | 3,900 | 1,010 | 4,910 |
| 1991–92 | 3,580 | 1,050 | 4,630 |
| 1992–93 | 3,650 | 1,210 | 4,860 |
| 1993–94 | 4,290 | 1,380 | 5,670 |
| 1994–95 | 4,740 | 1,470 | 6,210 |
| 1995–96[5] | n/a | n/a | 5,980 |

[1] Where a person was not in teaching service immediately prior to retirement, their last known sector is shown.
[2] Excludes those last recorded as: in sixth form colleges (except for 1987–88); peripatetic teachers; supply teachers; teachers providing nursery, primary or secondary education other than at school.
[3] Includes all other members of the teachers superannuation scheme, for example, those whose last service was in: special schools, further education, higher education, supply teaching.
[4] Includes a small number of teachers last recorded in sixth form colleges.
[5] Provisional. Information by sector is not available.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many (a) letters and (b) other communications she has received from local education authorities opposing the nursery voucher scheme; and if she will list the local education authorities; [35717]

(2) how many (a) letters and (b) communications she has received from parents opposed to the nursery voucher scheme. [35718]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received many letters, as well as other forms of communication, from local authorities and parents. The majority have been seeking clarification and information about the nursery education voucher scheme.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those constituencies she has visited in the last three months on official business and those constituencies she intends to visit in the next three months; and if she will make a statement [35760]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: During the last three months I have visited the following constituencies on official business:

Cardiff Central Glasgow Central Norfolk North-west
Norfolk South
Newcastle Upon Tyne Central
Blackpool South
Dartford
Hendon South
Rochford
Hastings and Rye
Barking
Dagenham
Southend East
Gosport
Lewisham Deptford
Norfolk Mid
Wyre Forest
Surbiton
Norfolk South-west

During the next three months, I intend to visit the following constituencies on official business:

Exeter
Bury St. Edmunds
Kingston Upon Hull East
Kingston Upon Hull North
Kingston Upon Hull West
Milton Keynes North-east
Milton Keynes South-west
Luton North
Coventry South-west
Shropshire North
Norfolk South-west

Executive Job Clubs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what criteria she uses to evaluate the effectiveness of executive job clubs; [36169]

(2) what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of executive job clubs in delivering job opportunities to members. [36162]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 9 July 1996:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions to him about Jobclubs. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Employment Service currently maintains a network of 1,197 Jobclubs throughout the country. This will provide places for around 204,000 unemployed people during 1996/97. This includes a number of specialist Jobclubs for particular groups of people including a number catering for the needs of unemployed executive and professional job seekers.

There are currently 121 such which constitute some 10% of the total network.

The performance of all Jobclubs is assessed on a regular basis to provide information which will improve the effectiveness of the Employment Service in helping unemployed people back into work. Management information is collected monthly and is used to monitor the operation of each Jobclub and the programme as a whole. The latest national information shows that in 1995/96 just over 95,500 people were placed into jobs following participation in a Jobclub. Jobclubs contributed almost 15% towards the placing into work of long term unemployed people achieved by the Employment Service. In addition a further 24,300 Jobclub participants took up other opportunities such as training places or starting their own business.

Although regular evaluations of the programme have been carried out, none of these have specifically focused on executive Jobclubs. The criteria used to evaluate the effectiveness of Jobclubs include their success in getting people into work, whether they improve the flow of information on jobs to participants and whether participants' job search is increased.

Details of the evaluations can be obtained through the House of Commons library.

I hope this is helpful.

Education Awards Regulations

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to amend section 12(2)(a) of the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1995 to give local education authorities powers to consider applications on an individual basis; and if she will make a statement. [36111]

Mr. Forth: The Department has no plans to amend regulation 12(2)(a) of the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much her Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36005]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information that the hon. Member requires could be provided only at disproportionate cost to the Department. The Department does not maintain this information in the form requested.

Women and Training

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she will publish the figures in the report on women and training carried out for her Department by Hilary Metcalf and Claire Calender at the Policy Studies Institute; and when their completed report was received by her Department. [34968]

Mrs. Gillan: The Department has not yet received a version of the report from the Policy Studies Institute which is suitable for publication. It is hoped that a suitable version will be received later this year.

Local Education Authority Budgets

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will publish a table, in ascending order, of the amount of each shire local education authority's education budget, which is not passed on to schools, (a) in overall cash terms and (b) as an amount per child. [36369]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table gives the amount of total expenditure on schools in 1996–97, in cash terms and per pupil, not delegated to the governing bodies of individual schools. The figures have been derived from the local management of schools budget statements produced by the authorities under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

| | GSB—ASB (see note below) £ 000 | | Per pupil (£) |

| Hampshire | 115,905 | Cambridgeshire | 799 |
| Lancashire | 135,554 | Warwickshire | 859 |

1. The amount held centrally in respect of LEA maintained schools is calculated by taking the General Schools Budget (GSB), the total planned expenditure on LEA maintained schools, and deducting the Aggegated Schools Budget (ASB) which is the amount delegated to an LEA's schools.

2. All new authorities established at 1 April 1996 under the Local Government Act, 1992 have been excluded from the table.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average class size in grammar schools for the most recent year for which information is available at (a) key stage 3, (b) key stage 4 and (c) sixth forms. [35878]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The latest available information is as follows:

Average size of one teacher classes in grammar schools in England—January 1995

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Pupils aged mainly under 14 | 26.5 |
| Pupils aged mainly 14 and 15 | 21.6 |
| Pupils aged mainly 16 and over | 11.3 |

PRIME MINISTER

St. Andrew's Hospital, Bromley by Bow

10. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will visit St. Andrew's hospital, Bromley by Bow. [34936]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 9 July. [35157]

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 9 July. [35158]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

SCOTLAND

Cairngorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 56, how many of the representations he has received about the proposed Cairngorm funicular railway ask that he call in the application for his own determination. [35214]

Mr. Kynoch: To date, my right hon. Friend has received a total of 1,920 letters requesting that he intervenes in this matter.

Council Housing

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the changes in council housing expenditure in (a) Stirling, (b) Aberdeen, (c) Tayside, (d) Aberdeenshire, (e) East Ayrshire and (f) Dumfries and Galloway in real terms between 1989–90 and 1998–99; and what were the reasons for these changes. [35661]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Final decisions on the allocation of resources to individual local authorities for 1998–99 will not be taken until early in 1998 following completion of the 1997 public expenditure survey. However, expenditure on their own stock in 1989–90 by each housing authority covering the areas requested, at 1995–96 prices, is shown in the table.

| Authority | £ million |
|---|---|
| Stirling | 11.1 |
| Aberdeen | 18.9 |
| Tayside (comprising) | |
| Angus | 7.1 |
| City of Dundee | 30.5 |
| Perth and Kinross | 9.6 |
| Aberdeenshire (comprising) | |
| Banff and Buchan | 5.4 |
| Gordon | 10.1 |
| Kincardine and Deeside | 4.7 |
| East Ayrshire (comprising) | |
| Cumnock and Doon Valley | 4.0 |
| Kilmarnock and Loudoun | 11.3 |
| Dumfries and Galloway | |
| Annandale and Eskdale | 5.7 |
| Nithsdale | 7.9 |
| Stewartry | 2.3 |
| Wigtown | 4.0 |

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed change in expenditure in council housing in real terms, between 1989–90 and 1998–99; and what are the reasons for this change. [35658]

Mr. Robertson: Planned net provision in 1998–99 for capital expenditure by local authorities on their own stock is £167 million at 1995–96 prices, compared with £208 million in 1989–90 on the same basis. This reflects the amount which we consider can be afforded for council housing investment within the resources available to the Scottish Office block and takes account of the reduction in council housing stock as a result of right-to-buy sales and stock transfers.

Housing Organisations

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet the organisations concerned with housing in Scotland. [35657]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Ministers regularly meet organisations concerned with housing in Scotland. This year I have met, among others, a number of local authority housing conveners, the housing committee of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the chairman and members of the board of Scottish Homes, and representatives from the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations, Shelter (Scotland), the Chartered Institute of Housing and various private developers and lenders. I have also visited a number of local authorities and housing associations and participated in a number of events related to housing. Further meetings and engagements are planned for the remainder of the year.

Homelessness

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the last time he met Shelter to discuss homelessness in Scotland. [35660]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend met Shelter (Scotland) and some other housing organisations on 2 October 1995 to discuss a wide range of housing issues, including homelessness. I meet with housing organisations regularly and last met Shelter (Scotland) on 21 June 1996 when I addressed its one-day conference.

Stalking

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to ensure that the criminal and civil law in Scotland provide effective measures against stalking; and if he will make a statement. [36762]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate considers that the common law of Scotland is adequate to deal with the menace of stalking. Such conduct can broadly be described as actions calculated to lead to the harassment of another person, whether they are intended to do so or whether they in fact do so. While such conduct frequently occurs on repeated occasions, it need not necessarily do so.

As far as the criminal law of Scotland is concerned, any conduct which is liable to create alarm and annoyance can give rise to a charge of breach of the peace. The types of conduct commonly referred to as stalking fall within that definition, even though the conduct complained of might in other circumstances be perfectly innocuous and lawful. Whether in any particular case the actings of an accused constitute a breach of the peace is a question for the court, which falls to be determined in the light of the circumstances of the individual case. The court is entitled to hold that the accused's conduct amounted to a breach of the peace, where something has been done in breach of public order or decorum and might reasonably be expected to have led to one or more members of the public being alarmed or upset. It is not necessary for the prosecutor to prove that actual harm was suffered by a third party. Nor is it necessary for the prosecution to establish that an accused person actually intended such a result.

In a case in 1961 the High Court of Justiciary upheld a conviction of breach of the peace where the accused had become infatuated with a young woman. The accused had formed a habit of waiting outside her place of employment, looking at her and following her and her fiancé. The young woman became alarmed and agitated and her fiancé angry and indignant. The High Court of Justiciary accepted that such conduct amounted to a breach of the peace. That is a good example of the flexibility with which the Scottish criminal courts can apply the common law offence of breach of the peace. In recent years persons who have engaged in stalking in Scotland have been successfully prosecuted on charges of breach of the peace.

Those who have made improper use of the public telephone system, by making offensive or menacing telephone calls, have been successfully prosecuted for contraventions of section 43 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

In Scotland, a police constable may arrest, without warrant, anyone he reasonably suspects to have committed or to be likely to commit a breach of the peace.

The maximum sentence available for a conviction of breach of the peace depends on the court in which the case is prosecuted. The maximum sentence of imprisonment ranges from 60 days in the district court to life imprisonment in the High Court. The choice of court, which is determined by the Crown, reflects the gravity of the particular offence.

The joint consultation paper which has been published today by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary identifies a number of deficiencies in the existing criminal law in England and Wales. These are difficulties over the requirement to prove intent on the part of the accused. There are also difficulties where the accused's behaviour is ostensibly routine and harmless and therefore not caught by existing laws. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is satisfied that these difficulties do not arise in Scotland, where the activities of stalkers are struck at by the common law offence of breach of the peace which, as explained above, covers a wider range of activity than the similar offence in England and Wales.

The common law of Scotland also provides the victims of stalking with certain civil remedies. When personal molestation or assault is seriously threatened an order for interdict may competently be sought from the sheriff court or the court of session. Interim interdict can also be granted. A person who fails to abide by the terms of an order for interdict or interim interdict is liable to be held in contempt of court and subjected to admonition, censure, fine or imprisonment. The maximum penalty which can be imposed by way of imprisonment for contempt of court is two years. It is also competent for a fine to be imposed.

Children (Communications Skills)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his letter of 11 June relating to the work of Maria Spychiger's Swiss institute, what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated in relation to the value of music teaching for children in encouraging communications skills. [34637]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The Scottish Office Education and Industry Department has not commissioned research in this area. I do, however, recognise the valuable contribution which music makes to the overall educational development of students. Work currently in train to define agreed core skills may well pave the way for a fuller assessment of the contribution made by music to the development of communication skills in particular.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Telecommunications Council on 27 June. [35747]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I represented the UK at the Telecommunications Council held in Luxembourg on 27 June.

The Council reached political agreement on a common position on a directive amending the open network provision framework and leased lines directives 90/387/EEC and 92/44/EEC to a competitive environment. Germany indicated its intention of voting against the common position. The Council also reached political agreement on a common position on a directive on the processing of personal data and the protection of privacy in the telecommunications sector. Portugal indicated its intention of abstaining on the common position.

In addition, the Council reached political agreement on a common position on a decision on inter-administration telematic networks for statistics relating to the trading of goods between member states—EDICOM. Germany and the UK indicated their intention of voting against the common position. The Council reached political agreement on brief conclusions inviting the Commission to present a proposal to amend the ONP voice telephony directive 95/62/EC, and to report regularly to the Council on universal service in telecommunications.

Following discussion by the Council, three proposals—on Community postal services, telecommunications licensing, and on the promotion of linguistic diversity in the information society—were referred back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for further discussion. There was also an informal lunchtime discussion of satellite personal communications systems, and of the problem of the century date change for computer systems.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the annual average rate of change in manufacturing output for each five-year period since 1975. [35935]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested is in the table.

Average annual change in the level of manufacturing output

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1975–80 | –1.0 |
| 1980–85 | 0.4 |
| 1985–90 | 3.4 |
| 1990–95 | 0.3 |

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the United Kingdom share of exports of manufactures by the main manufacturing countries for each year since 1980; and what is his forecast of long-term change in that share. [35933]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested is given in the table.

UK value share of exports of manufacturers by the main manufacturing countries.

| Year | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 9.3 |
| 1981 | 8.2 |
| 1982 | 8.1 |
| 1983 | 7.6 |
| 1984 | 7.3 |
| 1985 | 7.5 |
| 1986 | 7.3 |
| 1987 | 7.8 |
| 1988 | 7.9 |
| 1989 | 7.8 |
| 1990 | 8.2 |
| 1991 | 8.2 |
| 1992 | 7.9 |
| 1993 | 7.8 |
| 1994 | 8.0 |

Source:

Based on estimates derived from OECD data.

Note:

Main manufacturing countries consist of UK, Belgium, Luxembourg, France, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, US, Canada and Japan.

Manufactured goods are defined as sections 5 to 8 of the Standard Industrial Trade Classification.

Steel Contracts

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the total value of contracts from each Government Department for steel produced in Sheffield in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [35855]

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Defence Exports and Imports

Mr. George: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value in real terms of (a) defence export deliveries for each year from 1980 to the present and (b) defence imports for each year from 1980 to the present. [35827]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is not available in real terms. Current price figures are published by the Ministry of Defence in "UK Defence Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each of the safeguard verification exercises that have been undertaken by international agencies in the United Kingdom since 1990, indicating those which have been adapted to assist Euratom and Russian nuclear authorities in refining safeguards applications. [35929]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since 1990 Euratom, jointly with the International Atomic Energy Agency at certain major installations have conducted several hundred safeguards inspections at installations in the UK where nuclear material is used. Euratom verification activities in the UK during 1992 alone involved almost 2,500 days of effort on the part of Euratom personnel. All these inspections contribute to increasing Euratom's safeguards efficiency and refining its safeguards techniques.

Euratom has conducted two exercises in the UK, one at Dounreay and the other at the Sizewell A power station, with safeguards inspectors from Gosatomnadzor—GAN, the Russian nuclear regulatory body—to demonstrate the application of Euratom safeguards. Such exercises are part of a continuing programme to assist in the development of safeguards systems in Russia.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the discussion on the effect of the century date change on computer systems at the recent meeting of the European Telecommunications Council. [35721]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I raised this problem and described the potentially significant consequences involved in tackling it. Ministers were appraised of the seriousness of the issue. It was agreed that the European Commission should establish an informal task force to consult more widely and report back to the Council of Ministers.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Sims) on other issues raised at the Telecommunications Council.

Rural Sub-post Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent guidelines his Department has published in respect of the uniform business rate relating to rural sub-post offices. [36290]

Mr. Oppenheim: None. Matters concerning the uniform business rate are primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Stagecoach Holdings plc

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the investigations carried out by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into Stagecoach Holdings plc; if he will list those occasions on which Stagecoach Holdings plc has taken his Department to court over actions taken in response to these investigations; and on how many occasions the actions of his Department have been upheld it the courts of law. [36116]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The acquisitions by Stagecoach of the following companies were referred to, and investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under the merger provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973:

| Company | Date report published, Cm. nos. |
|---|---|
| Portsmouth Citybus Limited | July 1990 Cm 1130 |
| Formia Limited | December 1990 CM 1382 |
| Lancaster City Transport Limited | December 1993 CM 2423 |
| Mainline Partnership Limited | March 1995 Cm 2782 |
| S B Holdings Limited | April 1995 Cm 2845 |
| Ayrshire Bus Owners Limited (A1 Service) | November 1995 Cm 3032 |
| Chesterfield Transport (1989) Ltd | January 1996 Cm 3086 |

The MMC carried out two further investigations involving Stagecoach:

The Competition Act 1980

Southdown Motor Services Limited (a subsidiary of Stagecoach). Published June 1993. Cm 2248.

The monopoly provisions of the FTA

The supply of bus services in north-east England. Busways (a subsidiary of Stagecoach). Published August 1995. Cm 2933.

Three applications for judicial review were initiated by Stagecoach against the MMC and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in respect of the MMC's reports on the company's acquisitions of Mainline, SB Holdings and A1 Service and the Secretary of State's decisions following those reports. In relation to Mainline and SB Holdings, Stagecoach withdrew its applications on 20 June 1996 so far as they related to my right hon. Friend; the proceedings brought by Stagecoach against the MMC were dismissed by the court on 5 July 1996. In relation to the A1 case the petition for judicial review by Stagecoach was dismissed by the court of session in Edinburgh against both the MMC and my right hon. Friend on 20 June 1996.

Milk Marque

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he was informed that the Director General of Fair Trading had been asked to appear before the Agriculture Committee to discuss progress in his inquiry into Milk Marque. [36044]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Chairman of the Agricultural Select Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare (Sir Jerry Wiggin), wrote to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 2 July 1996 to inform him that the Director General of Fair Trading had been invited to appear and give oral evidence on the progress of his consideration of the competition issues affecting Milk Marque.

Select Committees

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many occasions the Director General of Fair Trading has been asked to explain the progress of an inquiry to a Select Committee. [36046]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I understand that John Bridgeman, the Director General of Fair Trading, has given evidence to two Select Committees, the terms of reference of which have touched upon ongoing Office of Fair Trading inquiries: one on the stock exchange, the other on petrol retailing. He is also due to give evidence to the Agriculture Select Committee inquiry into the dairy industry.

Post Office

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of Crown post offices in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire, for each of the last five years. [36452]

Mr. Oppenheim: I understand from the Post Office that the number of Crown post offices in Crewe and Nantwich in each of the last five years was as follows:

End March 1992: 2
End March 1993: 2
End March 1994: 2
End March 1995: 1
End March 1996: 1

As a result of changes to the regional structure of Post Office Counters Ltd. in 1993, it has not yet been possible for them to compile the equivalent information for Cheshire. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is available.

Maternity Leave

Ms Jowell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the need to review arrangements related to maternity leave with particular reference to employer notification requirements; and if he will make a statement. [34969]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I receive representations on various aspects of statutory maternity rights, but am not aware that the employer notification requirements are a matter of particular concern.

Ms Jowell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many women in each year since 1992 informed their employers of their intention to return to work after maternity leave by providing the minimum 21 days' notice. [34966]

Mr. Taylor: The requirement to give—where practicable—at least 21 days' notice of intention to return applies only to the right to reinstatement after extended maternity absence. Pregnant employees with at least two years service qualify for that right. The Government do not generally collect statistics on the numbers of women meeting this notification requirement. However, according to the Policy Studies Institute report "Maternity Rights in Britain", which the Government co-sponsored, the proportion of all women reporting the right to reinstatement—that is, women with the necessary qualifying service—who gave employers formal notice of return was 41 per cent. in 1979 and 72 per cent. in 1988.

Inward Investment

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's performance in attracting internationally mobile investment projects in 1995–96. [36687]

Mr. Lang: My Department's Invest In Britain Bureau announced in its annual review of operations, published today, that 1995–96 was yet another record year for inward investment and jobs coming to the United Kingdom.

Between 1 April 1995 and 31 March 1996, the IBB recorded 477 direct investment projects by overseas-owned companies in the UK. Based on information supplied by companies at the time of their announcements, it is estimated that these projects will create 48,256 new jobs. Compared with last year's figures, this represents an increase of 10 per cent. in terms of projects and 30 per cent. in terms of jobs.

These results demonstrate how attractive the United Kingdom's competitive business environment is to overseas investors—helping to make Britain the enterprise centre of Europe.

The results also provide evidence of the successful partnership the Invest In Britain Bureau has with many public and private sector organisations involved in the promotion of inward investment both at home and abroad.

I am arranging for a copy of the review to be placed in the Library of the House.

Export Licences

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 366, from what date the placing of statistical analyses of export licences in the Library at six-monthly intervals will commence. [35667]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 4 July 1996]: A statistical analysis of export licences which have been issued and refused in the calendar period 1 January 1996 to 30 June 1996 will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as it has been compiled. The exercise will thereafter be repeated at six-monthly intervals, as opposed to 12-monthly, which has been the practice hitherto.

Energy Advice Centres

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to maintain the current level of funding to the local energy advice centres from September 1996. [35763]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have been asked to reply.

The Energy Saving Trust is responsible for the management and funding of the local energy advice centres. My Department has agreed the trust's proposals to use DOE funds to support the local energy advice centres up to March 1999. The trust is announcing its plans for the local energy advice centres on 8 July, at the local energy advice centres annual conference.

Meat Exports

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the size of the United Kingdom meat processing export trade as of 1 March. [24099]

Mrs. Browning: I have been asked to reply.

Provisional data on the exports of meat and meat preparations from the UK, from March 1995 to February 1996, as recorded in the Overseas Trade Statistics, are shown in the table. Meat originating from the UK is not separately identifiable.

| | £ million | Tonnes |
|---|---|---|
| Total exports of meat, meat offal and preparations of meat and offal | 1,395 | 779,022 |
| of which: | | |
| Bovine meat and bovine offal (fresh, chilled or frozen) | 600 | 279,804 |
| Other meat and other offal (fresh, chilled or frozen) | 701 | 463,105 |

| | £ million | Tonnes |
|---|---|---|
| Preparations of bovine meat and bovine offal | 15 | 5,826 |
| Other preparations of meat and offal[1] | 79 | 30,286 |

[1] Includes some bovine meat which is not separately identifiable.

DEFENCE

NATO

9. Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on United Kingdom policy towards NATO. [34905]

Mr. Portillo: The UK is, and will continue to be, among the firmest supporters of NATO. We are making a major contribution to the NATO-led operation in the former Yugoslavia and to the longer-term evolution of the alliance as the key to European security.

Procurement Programme

16. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of his Department's policies on defence equipment purchasing on employment in the United Kingdom. [34913]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Consideration of defence industrial factors, including employment implications, is a requirement of our central equipment procurement decision-making processes. My Department's policy of seeking best value for money, wherever possible through competition, has helped UK industry to remain competitive and successful both at home and abroad.

21. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of United Kingdom jobs reliant on the manufacture of defence equipment. [34919]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer my hon. Friend to table 1.10 on page 12 of the 1995 edition of "UK Defence Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library. The 1996 edition of "UK Defence Statistics" will be published on 18 July 1996.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of (a) the evidence submitted by his Department to the Review Board for Government Contracts on the inclusion of marketing the selling expenses in the overhead rate on non-competitive contracts, (b) the evidence submitted during the review board's consideration of this issue as part of its sixth general review (1990), (c) the evidence submitted to the working party established to consider this issue subsequent to the sixth general review and (d) the evidence submitted on this issue as part of the seventh general review (1993). [35860]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The "evidence" held by my Department comprises a large volume of file correspondence, letters, minutes, working notes and briefing material covering a four-year period of negotiations with the CBI. The background to these negotiations over the treatment of marketing and selling expenses in non-competitive contracts is described in the reports of the Review Board for Government Contracts covering the sixth (1990), seventh (1993) and eighth (1996) general reviews of the profit formula for non-competitive contracts. There is now a clearer understanding between the Department and the CBI over the treatment of marketing and selling expenses, in the context of the relevant Government accounting convention.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the civilian technical advances which have been developed from defence contracts in the last five years. [35854]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Most defence research and development contracts let by MOD contain conditions which vest the intellectual property rights in the contractor concerned. It follows that, for many firms, the major benefit of defence contracts is the garnering of general skills and capabilities. The Ministry of Defence keeps no central record of the applications of these general skills and capabilities and to gather this information would be disproportionately expensive.

However, in the last five years there have also been notable technical advances of a more specific nature from defence research developments funding. More than 200 exploitation agreements have been signed, examples of the technologies are:

Flat panel loud speakers

Acoustic filters (for mobile telephones)

Fireman's helmet

Frozen blood

Fabric printing

Radar reflectors for small craft

Synthetic rubber

Helmets for parachutists

Treatment plant for polluted water

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what weighting is given to areas of high unemployment in the consideration of tenders for defence contracts. [35309]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Consideration of defence industrial factors, including employment implications, is a requirement of our central equipment procurement decision-making processes. My Department's policy of seeking best value for money, wherever possible through competition, has helped UK industry to remain competitive and successful both at home and abroad.

Royal Navy (Electronic Systems)

17. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the Royal Navy's use of electronic navigation and charting systems. [34915]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Electronic chart display and information systems are the subject of a Royal Navy navigation research programme that ensures the most up-to-date advice is obtained on this emerging technology. The Royal Navy at present has four different electronic navigation and charting systems undergoing trials and assessment at sea, which are producing encouraging results.

Permanent Joint Headquarters

18. Mr Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the Permanent Joint Headquarters. [34916]

Mr. Soames: The Permanent Joint Headquarters, which will very shortly become fully operational, will provide a centre of excellence for the preparation and conduct of joint operations. It will also be a focus for developing and enhancing the UK's joint operations capability.

Nimrod

19. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the proportion of defence procurement jobs in the contract allocation for the Nimrod aircraft which will be in Scotland. [34917]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We are currently assessing bids in response to an invitation to tender for a replacement for the Nimrod maritime patrol aircraft. All relevant factors, including employment considerations, are being taken into account. As yet, however, no final decision has been taken, and it would, therefore, be inappropriate to comment on the precise content of the bids.

22. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to upgrade the maritime patrol aircraft fleet; and if he will make a statement. [34920]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A competition to find a replacement for the Nimrod was launched in January 1995. Three bids have been received and these are being assessed. Given that the competition has reached a very sensitive stage, I cannot comment in detail on any of the bids. I hope to make an announcement before the House rises for the summer recess.

Army Recruitment

20. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the response has been to the current Army recruitment advertising campaign, with particular reference to the television campaign. [34918]

Mr. Soames: As at 21 June 1996, there had been a 40 per cent. increase in enlistments compared with the first quarter of 1995–96. This very welcome and encouraging improvement in recruiting is a result of the initiatives taken last year and in particular the increased weight placed on advertising, especially on television.

Territorial Army and Reserve Forces

23. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future role of the Territorial Army and reserve forces. [34921]

Mr. Soames: The reserve forces are an integral and essential part of the United Kingdom's armed forces. The Government are committed to making greater and more flexible use of them in the future, and the recently passed Reserve Forces Act 1996 will allow us to do just that.

Service Men (Active Service)

24. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries in which British service men are currently deployed on active service. [34922]

Mr. Soames: British service personnel are deployed on peacekeeping operations under United Nations mandate, including the implementation force, and at permanent stations, in the following countries:

Angola
Ascension Islands
Bosnia
Brunei
Croatia
Cyprus
Diego Garcia
Falkland Islands
Georgia
Germany
Gibraltar
Hong Kong
Iraq
Italy
Kuwait
United Kingdom

This list does not include countries where loan service personnel are based, where training exercises are being conducted and where there are minor commitments involving individual service men and women.

25. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces are currently deployed abroad at present. [34923]

Mr. Soames: Approximately 48,000 members of the British armed forces are currently deployed abroad. This figure includes a number of personnel temporarily engaged on UN-mandated missions in the former Republic of Yugoslavia, Iraq, Cyprus, Angola and Georgia.

Expenditure

26. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the effect on the defence capability fo United Kingdom forces of reducing defence expenditure to the level of the European average; and if he will make a statement. [34924]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Reducing defence spending to the current NATO European average would involve cuts of more than £4.5 billion per year, which is about half the entire procurement budget.

Married Quarters Estate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on the maintenance of the married quarters housing estate in each of the last five years. [36121]

Mr. Soames: Total works expenditure on the married quarters estate was not separately identified and aggregated FY95–96. The total expenditure on married quarters works for 1995–96 was £165.5 million, of which we estimate that £40 million was spent on improvements leading to upgrade.

27. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Army Families Federation concerning the sale of the married housing stock. [34925]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence met the chairman of the Army Families Federation on 2 July to discuss the sale of the married quarter estate and he plans to see the chairman of the Association of RAF Wives tomorrow; he has also corresponded with them. In addition, Ministers have had four meetings to discuss the sale of the married quarters estate with those organisations: on 12 June 1995 with my noble Friend the then Under-Secretary of State for Defence; on 24 October 1995 and 4 March 1996 with my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence; and with me on 30 April 1996. In addition, my right hon. Friend plans to meet the chairman of the Association of RAF Wives tomorrow. A detailed briefing was provided by officials on 13 December 1995 following the publication of the preliminary information memorandum.

28. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has in respect of the disposal of married quarters at Dale camp, Chester. [34926]

Mr. Arbuthnot: These married quarters are included in the proposed sale of the married quarters estate in England and Wales. They are among those which we currently intend to lease back initially from the purchaser.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the sale of married quarters estate at RAF Finningley. [36124]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A number of my Department's married quarters at RAF Finningley were sold in December 1995. The remainder are currently intended for inclusion in the sale of the married quarters estate.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from members of the building industry, mortgage lenders and estate agents about the consequences for the housing market of the sale of his Department's married quarters housing stock in England and Wales. [36203]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am not aware of any such representations.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of Ministry of Defence married quarters in England and Wales (a) by county and (b) by local authority at the latest available date. [36204]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the level of the guaranteed payment each year to the purchaser of the married quarters estate in England and Wales, under the terms of the sale set out in paragraph 4.2.4 of his Department's preliminary information memorandum; [36192]

(2) how many properties his Department is committed to vacating each year under the guaranteed release provision of sale of the married quarters estate as set out in paragraph 4.2.3 of his Department's preliminary information memorandum; [36193]

(3) what is the fixed factor which will be used to reduce the open market rental value of the married quarters estate in order to calculate the MOD rent, as set out in paragraph 4.3 of his Department's preliminary information memorandum; [36194]

(4) what proportion of the profits from disposals of properties in the married quarters estate will accrue to his Department under the terms of the sale of the estate as set out in paragraph 4.4 of his Department's preliminary information memorandum. [36195]

Mr. Arburthnot: The detailed information requested is commercially confidential. As the preliminary information memorandum explains in paragraph 4.3, the aggregate open market rental value will be reduced by a fixed factor taking account of my Department's repairing obligation, the overall size of the letting and the quality of my Department's covenant. The guaranteed payment will be set at a level equivalent to the rent on a declining proportion of the estate, and would take effect only if my Department retained a much lower proportion of the estate than we expect to do. The guaranteed release has been set at a similarly conservative level, to leave my Department with sufficient flexibility to cope with any reasonably foreseeable requirement for quarters from the existing estate.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to collate information on the sale of the married quarters estate by parliamentary constituency. [35731]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The information sought could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many married quarters unfit for service families his Department owned in each district council area in North Yorkshire; and how many of these homes were empty on 30 March (a) 1991, (b) 1992, (c) 1993, (d) 1994, (e) 1995 and (f) 1996. [35984]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have been required to vacate married quarters in North Yorkshire as a result of leaving the armed services in each of the last four years. [35985]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 8 July 1996]: Records are not kept centrally and details could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the recommendations produced in July 1992 by the review into the safety of United Kingdom nuclear weapons conducted by a working party led by Professor Oxburgh, have been implemented; which of the recommendations have yet to be implemented; for what reasons they have not yet been implemented; and if he will make a statement. [32763]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 17 June 1996]: The report of the working party lead by Professor Oxburgh published in July 1992 made 20 recommendations, of which 18 have now been implemented. Careful consideration was given to the recommendation on the involvement of UK nuclear weapons design authorities in weapon and missile inspections—recommendation 2—but it was concluded that the concerns that lead to this recommendation could be met without the direct involvement of the design authorities in all such inspections. With no immediate requirement for a future nuclear weapons system, it is premature to take forward the recommendation—recommendation 20—on defining a strategy for the safety justification of a new weapon system.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 366, what are the established procedures for reporting unplanned occurrences involving a nuclear weapon on British territory; and when these procedures were first established. [36542]

Mr. Soames: The established procedures are designed to ensure that there is no delay in effecting an appropriate response to any unplanned occurrence involving a nuclear weapon. The precise arrangements would depend on the seriousness of the event. Thus an accident entailing a potential hazard to public safety would lead to involvement of the emergency services and appropriate elements of the Nuclear Accident Response Organisation. Section C of the guidance "Local authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency Plans", a copy of which is in the Library of the House, describes the procedure for alerting the emergency services to a transportation accident. The circumstances of a more minor incident would be reported only within the MOD. A system of upward and outward alerting has existed for as long as there have been nuclear weapons in the UK: these procedures have been continually reviewed and developed over the years.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year his Department started to compile and maintain a central record of accidents or suspected accidents involving nuclear weapons controlled by Britain or the USA on British territory; and what is the current security classification of this record. [36541]

Mr. Soames: Compilation of a central database commenced in 1993. It is classified secret.

Surplus Clothing and Equipment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department received from the sale of surplus (a) uniforms, (b) other clothing and (c) non-combat equipment in each year since 1990. [35973]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Disposal Sales Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, DSA, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Keith Ellender to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 9 July 1996:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the level of receipts received from the sale of surplus uniforms, clothing and other non-combat equipment in each year since 1990. This matter falls to me as Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency.

The total sum received by the MOD from the sale of surplus non-combat material (ie. excluding Government-to-Government sales of warlike platforms) is as follows:

| Financial year | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 19.8 |
| 1991–92 | 24.3 |
| 1992–93 | 26.1 |
| 1993–94 | 27.6 |
| 1994–95 | 49.8 |
| 1995–96 | 39.1 |

Records of sales were not kept on a commodity basis before FY 1993/94, and I regret that I am therefore unable to identify the level of receipts obtained for clothing (including uniforms) before then. Prior to FY 1995–96 surplus uniforms were usually mutilated for security reasons, and sold as scrap textiles by public auction or competitive tender, together with other soiled and scrap clothing. Our records show that the total value of clothing and textiles sold by these methods was £820k in FY 93/94 and £979, in FY 94/95. In May 1995 a storage and marketing agreement for the sale of surplus clothing and textiles was placed with a contractor on a profit-sharing basis. The MOD's share of the receipts from sales of clothing in FY 1995/96 totalled £845k, comprising £375k from sales of uniforms and £470k from the sale of other clothing. A further £456k was obtained during this period from the sale of miscellaneous textiles under the same agreement.

Hawk Aircraft

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the Hawk aircraft which have been or will be exported to Indonesia in the current and next year are destined for service with Indonesian counter-insurgency or ground attach squadrons; and with which squadrons; [35425]

(2) how many of the British-supplied Hawk aircraft exported to Indonesia between 1978 and 1995 have been or are in service with Indonesian counter-insurgency or ground attack squadrons; and to which squadrons these aircraft belong. [35424]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The squadrons to which Indonesian Hawk aircraft might be assigned are a matter for the Indonesian Government. We have no evidence to suggest that the aircraft have been used in a counter-insurgency role.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many British-supplied Hawk aircraft exported to Indonesia since 1978 have been situated at any time in (a) Kupang, West Timor or (b) the Oecusse enclave; and which Indonesian squadrons are involved; [35429]

(2) how many of the British-supplied Hawk aircraft exported to Indonesia since 1978 have at any time been stationed in (a) East Timor or (b) West Papua; and to which squadrons these aircraft belong; [35423]

(3) at which Indonesia air bases the Hawk aircraft which have been or will be exported to Indonesia this year or next year are to be stationed; and to which Indonesian squadrons these aircraft will be assigned; [35427]

(4) at which Indonesian air bases the British-supplied Hawk aircraft exported to Indonesia between 1978 and 1995 have been stationed; and to which Indonesian squadrons these aircraft have been assigned. [35422]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Indonesian Government.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) written and (b) oral assurance Her Majesty's Government have received from the Indonesian Government since 1978 that British-supplied Hawk aircraft would not be sited at any time in (a) East Timor or (b) West Papua. [35428]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No such assurances have been sought.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now provide details of military assistance provided to Indonesia; and if he will make a statement. [35826]

Mr. Soames: Details of military assistance remain confidential between Governments.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of each of the overseas offices of the Defence Export Services Organisation, indicating when each office was established, how many staff are employed in each office and what is the 1996–97 budget in each case. [35976]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is as follows:

| Country | Number of staff | Budget (1996–97) £000 | Founded |
|---|---|---|---|
| Riyadh | 2 | 95 | 1984 |
| Kuwait | 3 | 140 | 1988 |
| New Delhi | 6 | 108 | 1984 |
| Kuala Lampur | 4 | 156 | 1986 |
| Seoul | 3 | 240 | 1988 |
| Canberra | 2 | 92 | 1989 |
| Jakarta | 3 | 79 | 1991 |
| Bangkok | 3 | 123 | 1992 |
| Ankara | 2 | 73 | 1988 |
| Brunei | 1 | 135 | 1995 |

Former RAF Bases

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which consultants and agencies within his Department carried out the environmental assessments of the former air bases at (a) RAF Alconbury and (b) RAF Greenham Common prior to their proposed disposal; and when the land quality statements were produced for each site. [36134]

Mr. Soames: An environmental assessment at RAF Alconbury was carried out by ERM EnviroClear Ltd. and a land quality statement was produced in June 1996. RAF Greenham Common was passed for disposal before the introduction of the new procedures and therefore no land quality statement has been produced. Investigations have been carried out, however, by different contractors into a number of environmental and safety issues.

Future Aircraft Carrier

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many companies registered their interest in industrial involvement in future aircraft carrier studies as set out in future purchase number NSM13C/61713 of his Department's contracts bulletin Vol. 10 No. 16. [34852]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Twenty-eight companies registered interest following the possible future purchase announcement NSM13C/61713 for future aircraft carrier studies which appeared in the MOD contracts bulletin Vol. 10 No. 16.

Equipment Expenditure

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on (a) imported and (b) home-produced defence equipment during each of the past three years in real terms; and if he will make a statement. [35159]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Precise information in the form requested is not available. Each year, my Department makes an estimate of the proportion of its equipment expenditure which is spent in the UK, overseas, and on collaborative projects. In the last three financial years for which estimates have been made, this breakdown was as follows:

| Year | United Kingdom | Collaborative (£ million; 1994–95 prices) | Overseas |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 7,836 | 914 | 748 |
| 1993–94 | 7,212 | 870 | 736 |
| 1994–95 | 6,846 | 723 | 737 |

It is this series of estimates which underlies figures 8 in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1996", Cm 3223, showing that over the past five years equipment expenditure (i) in the UK, (ii) on collaborative projects and (iii) overseas has been in the ratio 81:10:9.

Land Mines

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's estimate of the number of anti-personnel land mines currently deployed throughout the world. [35238]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I understand that the UN estimates there to be between 60 million and 110 million land mines emplaced worldwide.

Peacekeeping Operations

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of British forces' contribution to peacekeeping operations worldwide. [34909]

Mr. Soames: Our continuing contributions to peacekeeping operations around the world represent a substantial commitment, fully consistent with our position as a permanent Security Council member. They include, among others, some 10,500 ground troops with the NATO implementation force in Bosnia, supported by over 900 air and maritime personnel offshore and in Italy.

UN Special Negotiator, Baghdad

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of the work of Rolf Ekeus, UN special negotiator in Baghdad. [35743]

Mr. Soames: My Department strongly supports the work of Ambassador Rolf Ekeus, executive chairman of the UN Special Commission, in his task of destroying Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and establishing a long-term monitoring regime to ensure that Iraq does not reacquire such weapons. His work is wholly consistent with our security policy objectives in the middle east.

The United Kingdom makes a major contribution to the Special Commission's activities in Iraq and will continue to do so.

Defence Housing Executive

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by grade and by job description the total number of people employed in the Defence Housing Executive and the number in each grade with a housing management qualification, naming the qualifications concerned; and if he will make a statement. [36196]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what incentives exist for employees of the Defence Housing Executive to attend accredited courses on housing management; and if he will make a statement. [36198]

Mr. Soames: Civil servants employed in the Defence Housing Executive are eligible to apply for assistance, in accordance with established Ministry of Defence regulations, to enable them to undertake externally-provided courses in housing management. This takes the form of an agreed number of days paid study leave plus financial assistance towards fees, registration and the purchase of text books and other materials. In addition, the DHE supports its own national vocational qualifications centre providing resource and financial support to those undertaking this qualification. The possession of such qualifications does not entitle staff to any additional pay allowance.

In addition, the DHE actively encourages its housing management staff to join the Institute of Housing.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees of the Defence Housing Executive will be attending academic courses on housing management in the next academic year; and at which establishments. [36197]

Mr. Soames: Two members of the Defence Housing Executive will be undertaking academic courses in housing management during the next academic year. One is studying for BA (Hons.) at Northumbria university and the other BA (Hons.) at Southampton university. The courses are being undertaken on a part-time basis in parallel with the students continuing to perform their full-time jobs.

Unoccupied Dwellings

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 April, Official Report, columns 38–41, how many dwellings were (a) owned by his Department and (b) unoccupied in each parliamentary constituency in each county of Great Britain during 1995. [36404]

Mr. Soames: The information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Logistic Information Systems Agency

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key targets for the chief executive of the Logistic Information Systems Agency for 1996–97. [36647]

Mr. Soames: The chief executive of the Logistic Information Systems Agency has been set the following key targets for 1996–97:

Key Target 1. To agree customer information systems programmes for the financial year 1996–97 and deliver them to the following criteria:

95 per cent. on time

95 per cent. within costs

80 per cent. not adjusted for time or cost

Key Target 2. To deliver the benefits of the LISA/EDS partnership as contractually agreed and develop plans to enhance revenue receipts for inclusion in the LTC planning process.

Key Target 3. To develop a total quality action plan and make significant progress in its implementation by 1 April 1997.

Key Target 4. To develop and implement a plan to achieve investors in people accreditation by April 1998.

Key Target 5. To establish unit costs for LISA output, creating a baseline in FY 96–97, against which subsequent year on year reductions can be achieved.

Key Target 6. To establish baselines and institute mechanisms which incorporate appropriate benchmarks and performance indicators and enable better management of overall agency performance against targets.

NORTHERN IRELAND

"Making Belfast Work"

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much money has been spent in each of the district electoral areas in Belfast by "Making Belfast Work" since its establishment; [34979]

(2) if he will list the expenditure under the "Making Belfast Work" scheme in each of the four Belfast constituencies since its establishment. [34978]

Mr. Moss: Information on "Making Belfast Work" projects before 1994–95 is not on a central database. However, details of projects funded under the "Making Belfast Work" initiative since its inception to the end of the 1991–92 financial year were published in the MBW strategy proposals launched in April 1994. Information for the 1992–93 and 1993–94 years is also available.

Project details for the 1994–94 and 1995–96 years are on a central database, although it is not possible to aggregate the financial information on either a district electoral or constituency basis because projects often cover more than one electoral area or constituency.

Documents containing the available information have been placed in the Library.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when an announcement will be made on NFFO contracts for Northern Ireland. [35780]

Mr. Ancram: Consideration of the composition of a second non-fossil fuel obligation order is nearing completion. An announcement is likely to following within the next few weeks.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to (a) award NFFO contracts to a wide range of technologies and (b) support United Kingdom-based industry. [35753]

Mr. Ancram: The purpose of the non-fossil fuel obligation system is the promotion of renewable energy sources at low cost to electricity consumers. So Government made it clear in announcing the second NFFO competition in Northern Ireland on 1 November 1994, that (i) the size of the subsequent order would depend entirely on the quality and prices of the bids received; (ii) the competition would be open to all renewable technologies; and (iii) to maintain a balanced portfolio of renewables, the amount of wind power included in the order would be limited.

Since most of the 79 NFFO bids were from UK-based developers, the final composition of the order is likely to reflect broad support for UK-based industry.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the reason for delay in publishing details of successful NFFO bids. [35781]

Mr. Ancram: The second non-fossil fuel obligation competition in Northern Ireland was heavily subscribed with 79 applications. Though a most encouraging level of response, each project required both technical and financial appraisal, and this process took longer than anticipated.

Following completion of the appraisals the Department of Economic Development was then obliged to consult with both the Director General of Electricity Supply and Northern Ireland Electricity plc. This process has now been completed and an announcement is likely to follow within the next few weeks.

New Businesses

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new businesses were started up in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [36149]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 8 July 1996]: There is no comprehensive count of new business start-ups. However, information on VAT registrations can provide a useful indication of the number of businesses created and estimates for the years 1990 to 1994 are given in the table. Figures for 1995 are not yet available. It should be noted that many start-up businesses are below the VAT threshold in their initial months.

VAT registrations in Northern Ireland

1991: 3,700

1992: 3,700

1993: 4,000

1994: 3,900

SOCIAL SECURITY

Statutory Pay

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for 1994–95, the number of employees for whom a recovery of statutory maternity pay was claimed by employers from the national insurance fund. [35656]

Mr. Heald: The Government Actuary's Department has estimated that the number of employees for whom a recovery of statutory maternity pay was claimed by employers in 1994–95 was 370,000.

Notes:

1. Figure rounded to the nearest 10,000.

2. Figures do not assume that all women will receive SMP for 18 weeks.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in a full year of allowing employers to recover fully the statutory sick pay that they pay. [35655]

Mr. Heald: The estimated extra benefit cost in 1996–97 is £880 million.

Note:

1. Government Actuary's Department estimate, rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of female employees in the most recent available year who (a) received statutory maternity pay, (b) were excluded from entitlement to statutory maternity pay because of earnings below the lower earnings limit, and received maternity allowance instead, (c) were excluded from entitlement to SMP because they were abroad, and received maternity allowance instead, (d) were excluded from entitlement to SMP because they were in legal custody, and received maternity allowance instead, (e) received incapacity benefit during pregnancy and the period after confinement and (f) received no SMP, maternity allowance or incapacity benefit during pregnancy. [35646]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is given in the table and relates to 1993–94, the latest year for which information is available.

| | 1993–94 |
|---|---|
| Estimated number of statutory maternity pay (SMP) recipients | [1]370,000 |
| Maternity allowance awards to women excluded from SMP as earnings less than Lower Earnings Limit | [2]3,300 |
| Maternity allowance awards to women excluded from SMP as outside the European Economic Area | [2]Nil |
| Maternity allowance awards to women excluded from SMP as in legal custody | [2]200 |

[1] Government Actuary's Department estimate rounded to nearest 10,000, it does not assume that all women receive 18 weeks SMP.

[2] Figures taken from 1 per cent. sample of maternity allowance claims made in Great Britain.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of employees who received statutory sick pay, giving a breakdown by sex and age, for the most recent available year. [35644]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Data on the number of payments made by employers in 1992–93 are shown in the table. These include figures for people who have received more than one payment.

| Age | Men | Women |
|---|---|---|
| Under 20 | 30,000 | 29,000 |
| 20 and up to 24 | 247,000 | 293,000 |
| 25 and up to 29 | 337,000 | 394,000 |
| 30 and up to 34 | 337,000 | 348,000 |
| 35 and up to 39 | 298,000 | 301,000 |
| 40 and up to 44 | 271,000 | 305,000 |
| 45 and up to 49 | 276,000 | 333,000 |
| 50 and up to 54 | 231,000 | 271,000 |
| 55 and up to 59 | 212,000 | 214,000 |
| 60 and up to 64 | 167,000 | 58,000 |
| 65 and over | 40,000 | 2,000 |
| Total | [1]2,448,000 | [1]2,547,000 |

1. Totals do not sum due to rounding.

2. Figures are taken from a 1 per cent. sample of statutory sick pay payments made by employers in UK and rounded to the nearest 1,000.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for the most recent available year (a) the amount of statutory sick pay paid to all employees, (b) the number of employees receiving statutory sick pay, (c) the number of employees who are not entitled to statutory sick pay because of low earnings, and who received incapacity benefit instead and (d) the number of employees who are not entitled to statutory sick pay because of low earnings who receive no other benefits during their period of illness. [35654]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is for 1992–93 and is as follows:

The total value of statutory sick pay payments by employers was £814 million[1].

The number of SSP payments made by employers was 4.8 million[1]. This figure includes people who may have received more than one payment in the year.

The number of people who claimed sickness benefit because their earnings were below the lower earnings limit for the payment of national insurance contributions was 38,000[2].

Notes:

[1] Figures taken from a 1 per cent. sample of all payments made by employers in Great Britain.

[2] Figure taken from a 1 per cent. sample of all claims to sickness benefit in Great Britain.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amounts recovered by employers for (a) statutory sick pay and (b) statutory maternity benefit; and what were amounts paid in (i) sickness benefit and (ii) maternity allowance in each year since 1980. [35645]

Mr. Heald: The available information is in the table.

£ million

| Year | Statutory sick pay | Statutory maternity pay | Sickness benefit[1] | Maternity allowance |

[1] Sickness benefit and invalidity benefit were replaced by incapacity benefit in April 1995.

Outturn figures from 1980–81 to 1994–95, and estimated outturn figure for 1995–96.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral statement of 24 June, Official Report, columns 37 and 38, if he will place in the Library the evidence from which he calculated the percentage of asylum seekers who are found to be genuine refugees. [35635]

Mr. Roger Evans: The most recent summary of Home Office asylum decisions can be found in the Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 9/96, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the Refugee Council report, "Welcome to the UK". [35686]

Mr. Evans: The report highlights the fact that asylum seekers who are not entitled to benefits can rely on a network of support and assistance. The report does not show the kind of destitution that many critics suggested would come about as a consequence of our determination to tackle the problem of bogus asylum seekers.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what monitoring he has undertaken into the impact of the Social Security (Persons From Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendment Regulations 1996. [35685]

Mr. Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, gave the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 25 June, Official Report, columns 142-44.

Maternity Leave

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women took maternity leave for each year from 1992; and what proportion they represented (a) of all women employees and (b) all employees. [34967]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available.

War Pensions

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, columns 635–36, in which wars or military operations the additional 72,727 people in receipt of war disablement pension between 1990 and 1995 were disabled. [36120]

Mr. Heald: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, applications for consideration for a war pension can relate to any period of service in the armed forces including peacetime and training activities.

National Disability Council

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the National Disability Council will report on its activities during the 1995–96 financial year. [36664]

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has today laid before Parliament the first annual report of the National Disability Council.

The NDC has reported on its activities since it was created in January 1996 and set out what it hopes to achieve during 1996–97.

The report shows that the NDC has been influential with Government and has a proactive approach to identifying what more can be done to ending discrimination against disabled people.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Chief Adjudication Officer (Report)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the 12th annual report of the chief adjudication officer; and if he will make a statement. [36686]

Mr. Roger Evans: The report is being published today. The chief adjudication officer's findings record a year of mixed achievement for the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service. We are pleased that, overall, the percentage of decisions correct in every respect shows an improvement on the previous year, but we are disappointed that the momentum of that year had not been carried forward to produce an even better performance.

Both the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service are committed to improving standards of adjudication. The chief adjudication officer will continue to work with the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service in this task, which will become all the more demanding and important in the short term whilst the jobseekers allowance is being introduced. His findings will, as he suggest, also provide an important contribution to the current review of the legal framework for decision and appeals.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Director General of the Prison Service

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has given to the Director General of the Prison Service concerning the making of public statements on prison policy and operational matters. [34999]

Miss Widdecombe: Guidance on such matters is contained in the agency chief executives' Handbook, a copy of which is in the Library.

Police (Compensation Actions)

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many actions for compensation following alleged maltreatment by police were taken in the civil courts against the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1996; and, of that number, how many (a) were discontinued, (b) were decided in favour of the Metropolitan police, (c) were decided against the Metropolitan police, (d) were settled out of court and (e) are still pending. [35486]

Mr. Maclean: The commissioner informs me as follows:

| | Discontinued | Settled out of court | Decided in favour of the Metropolitan police | Decided against the Metropolitan police |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1991 | n/a | 74 | 7 | 9 |
| 1992 | n/a | 85 | 10 | 11 |
| 1993 | n/a | 140 | 8 | 6 |
| 1994 | n/a | 174 | 23 | 11 |
| 1995 | 15 | 140 | 28 | 22 |
| 1996 (to 3 July) | 6 | 47 | 4 | 9 |

I understand that records of cases pending are not kept as a high percentage are never formally discontinued.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases of actions for compensation following alleged maltreatment by police taken in the civil courts against the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1996, the commissioner (a) accepted liability and (b) issued an apology. [35487]

(2) for each financial year from 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1996, what was the cost of (a) internal and (b) external legal fees expended separately by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis in respect of actions for compensation following alleged maltreatment by police taken in the civil courts against the commissioner; [35488]

(3) what was the cost of (a) internal and (b) external, legal fees expended by the Metropolitan police in respect of actions for compensation following alleged maltreatment by police taken in the civil courts against the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for each financial year from 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1996; [35489]

(4) on what dates between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1996, civil court actions for compensation following alleged maltreatment were decided against the Metropolitan police; and how much was awarded in each case. [35491]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1996 actions for compensation following alleged maltreatment by police were settled out of court; and where made public, what was the amount of the settlement in each case. [35490]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available centrally.

Recidivism

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the most recently available numbers of prisoners reconvicted within (a) two years, (b) four years and (c) five years of discharge from each category C prison. [35595]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for the most recently available number of prisoners reconvicted within (a) two years, (b) four years and (c) five years of discharge from each category C prison.

The information requested is not immediately available and I will write to the hon. Member when we have the figures.

Prisons (Boards of Visitors)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of members of prison boards of visitors. [35598]

Miss Widdecombe: The total number of boards of visitors members currently serving as at 3 July is 1,711.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time members of prison boards of visitors currently serve. [35596]

Miss Widdecombe: Based on a representative sample of the 252 members who left the work of boards of visitors during 1995, the average length of time members of boards of visitors serve is 5 years 4 months.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of prison boards of visitors had served for longer than 14 years on 1 January. [35599]

Miss Widdecombe: The number of boards of visitors members who had served for longer than 14 years on 1 January is 140.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of prison boards of visitors have served for longer than 15 years. [35597]

Miss Widdecombe: The number of boards of visitors members who have served for longer than 15 years as at 3 July is 139.

Violent Offenders

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners who were convicted of an offence involving violence against the person are currently in an open prison. [35689]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners, convicted of an offence involving violence against the person, currently being held in open prisons.

The latest available information is for 31 May 1996. On that date there were 800 prisoners held in open prisons in England and Wales who were recorded as being sentenced for an offence in the group "violence against the person".

Metropolitan Police (Civil Damages Awards)

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 325, on civil damages awards against the Metropolitan police, for what reasons this information is not held on a divisional basis. [35524]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the commissioner that, as a result of a recent consultative exercise, and an improved computer system the database will contain the requested information from later this year.

Fire Authorities

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the discretion of fire authorities to vary fire cover between districts and towns in their areas. [35970]

Mr. Sackville: The deployment of fire service resources within a brigade area is a matter for the relevant fire authority in the light of its statutory responsibilities under the Fire Services Act 1947. Under section 19 of the Act the authority may not, however, reduce the number of fire stations, fire appliances or firefighting posts in a particular area without the consent of my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will rank fire authorities by the capital amounts spent on (a) new fire stations, (b) renovated and upgraded fire stations and (c) fire engines for each year since 1990. [35969]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will rank fire authorities in England by the amount spent on fire cover per 1,000 inhabitants for the latest year for which figures are available. [35971]

Mr. Sackville: Figures for the net expenditure per head of population for fire brigades in England and Wales during 1994–95 were published by the Audit Commission in April. (Local Authority Performance Indicators 1994–95; Volume 3. Police and Fire Performance Indicators—ISBN 0 11 8864467—a copy of which is in the Library).

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he gives to chief fire officers on the assessment of fire risk and the corresponding fire cover needed. [35968]

Mr. Sackville: Guidance on the above matters is given in Fire Service circular No. 4/1985 which was issued on 22 May 1985. A copy is held in the Library.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 April, Official Report, column 366 if he will undertake an immediate review of past EC directives with a view to removing all gold plating. [35042]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 July 1996]: No. As I said in my answer to a question from the hon. Member on 29 April at column 405, I could do so only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Escapes

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful escapes by prisoners occurred in each year since 1988 from (a) prison and (b) escort. [35911]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many successful escapes by prisoners occurred in each year since 1988 from (a) prison and (b) escort.

The requested information is given in the attached table. (The first full year for which figures are available is 1989–90.)

| Year | Escapes from establishment | Escapes from escort | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1989–90 | 146 | 111 | 257 |
| 1990–91 | 225 | 111 | 336 |
| 1991–92 | 308 | 155 | 463 |
| 1992–93 | 232 | 115 | 347 |
| 1993–94 | 171 | 125 | [1]296 |
| 1994–95 | 151 | 66 | 217 |
| 1995–96 | 52 | 70 | 122 |

[1] In 1993–94, 23 of the escapes were from escorts that, prior to contracting out, would have been the responsibility of the police. In 1994–95 there were 15 such escapes and in 1995–96, 34.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlay the interval leading up to the publication of the Prison Service annual report for 1994–95. [53861]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what factors underlay the interval leading up to the publication of the Prison Service annual report for 1994–5.

Factors underlying the delay included changes at Director level during a critical time in the preparation of the report and other priorities, in particular the implementation of the security recommendations in the Woodcock Report and the introduction of mandatory drug testing. In addition a major revision of the report was undertaken following the publication of the Learmont Report.

Work is currently underway on the 1995–96 report which we expect will be published later this year.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what grants were made by the Prison Service to non-profit-making organisations during the (a) current and (b) last financial year. [35869]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about grants made by the Prison Service to non-profit making organisations during the current and last financial year.

The expenditure for 1995–96 and from April 1996 to June 1996 is given in the attached table.

| Grants | 1995–96 | 1996–97 April to June 1996 |
|---|---|---|
| Community Service Volunteers | 192,000 | 48,000 |
| Prisoners Abroad | 88,357 | 23,389 |
| NACRO | 226,000 | — |
| National Association of Prison Visitors | 82,000 | 10,000 |
| Prison Visitors Centres | 637,465 | 189,310 |

Prisons (Working Schedules)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of reviewing the locking schedules in prisons in England and Wales. [35866]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the estimated cost of reviewing the locking schedules in prisons in England and Wales.

A review of a typical prison including checking on site and subsequent inputting of data might take up to two weeks at a total estimated cost of £1,200.

Prisons Costs Review

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of implementing the findings of the review of the open prison estate. [35865]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of implementing the findings of the review of the open prison estate.

The cost of implementing the recommendations arising from the review is being examined as part of the preparation of the Prison Service's implementation plan.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the statistical analysis of the cost drivers of publicly-operated prisons undertaken by the Home Office research and statistics directorate as referred to in paragraph 11 of the review of comparative costs and performance of privately and publicly operated prisons produced by Coopers and Lybrand. [35134]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if he will publish the statistical analysis of the cost drivers of publicly operated prisons undertaken by the Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate as referred to in paragraph 11 of the Review of Comparative Costs and Performance of Privately and Publicly Operated Prisons recently produced by Coopers and Lybrand.

The Research and Statistics Directorate's analysis is undertaken every year to compare publicly managed prisons and is used for a range of management purposes by the Prison Service.

The analysis uses regression analysis, a statistical technique, to identify the relationship between the cost of a prison, and a group of independent variables (for example, size of prison, prisoner mix and so on). In other words, to identify which variables appear to explain existing variations in costs. From this is derived an equation for calculating a "predicted" cost for each prison, in the light of the known variables, which can then be compared with its actual cost.

Using this methodology, the variables with the greatest statistical links to costs are:

baseline certified normal accommodation

the number of category A prisoners whether of not sentenced category B prisoners are held the number of unsentenced adult prisoners

the number of unsentenced prisoners under 21

the degree to which the prison is in open conditions.

These variables, and their relative weightings, were used to help select the public sector prisons most comparable to the privately managed prisons in Coopers and Lybrand's study.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were received for appointment as chairman of the Criminal Cases Review Commission; and which recruitment consultants were appointed to assist in the selection procedure. [36253]

Mr. Kirkhope: Thirty-seven applications were received in response to the advertisement for the post of chairman of the Criminal Cases Review Commission, and 87 candidates were drawn from other sources. Recruitment and Assessment Services was appointed to assist in the selection process.

Mr. Raghbir Singh

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to respond to the resolution carried in the European Parliament over the case of Mr. Raghbir Singh. [36360]

Mr. Howard: I have noted the resolution carried in the European Parliament. I have no plans to respond.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received about the case of Raghbir Singh from (a) members of the British Sikh community, (b) right hon. and hon. Members and (c) from other individuals and organisations. [36401]

Mr. Howard: The number of representations received from members of the British Sikh community and from other individuals and organisations is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For the number of representations from right hon. and hon. Members, I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the reply given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 1 July 1996, column 311.

Stalking

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish his proposals to deal with stalking; and if he will make a statement. [36688]

Mr. Howard: I am today publishing a joint consultation paper with the Lord Chancellor on stalking. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Stalkers can have a devastating effect on the lives of their victims, who are entitled to expect that the law will protect them. But this is a difficult area in which to legislate as stalkers often behave in ways which do not overtly threaten their victims. But its sheer, oppressive persistence makes this activity so threatening.

The consultation paper proposes a new tort which will allow the victims of stalkers to seek an injunction against further harassment. It also proposes two new criminal offences which are intended to ensure that stalkers can be punished for activity which causes people to fear for their safety or which more generally causes harassment, alarm or distress.

It is important that any new measures against stalkers deal effectively with the problem whilst at the same time do not prevent people from going about their lawful business. That is why it is important for the Government to consult on this subject.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many temporary release failures have occurred at Buckley Hall prison since December 1994; what is the percentage of total temporary decisions that have resulted in temporary release failures at Buckley Hall prison; and what is the percentage of total temporary decisions that have resulted in temporary failures at male category C prisons. [33772]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 24 June 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 9 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on temporary release failures at Buckley Hall prison since December 1994 and the percentage of total temporary release decisions that have resulted in temporary release failures at male category C prisons.

Since December 1994, seven hundred and sixty four prisoners have been released on temporary licence from Buckley Hall prison, of which thirty eight (4.9 per cent) have failed to return on time. Recent improvements in risk assessment at Buckley Hall has resulted in a drop in the failure to return on time rate to 2.6 per cent. for the first quarter of 1996–7.

The percentage of total temporary release decisions at all male category C prisons which have resulted in failures to return since December 1994 is 0.4 per cent.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost, for each police authority, of policing car boot sales in the last year for which figures are available; and if it is policy for site owners to contribute to such costs. [35586]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 8 July 1996]: This information is not collected centrally. If the organisers of car boot sales request a police presence, chief officers of police can consider making a charge under section 15 of the Police Act 1964 for the provision of special police services.

HEALTH

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995 the mean and range of the delays between advice being issued by the Committee on Safety of Medicines relating to compulsory variation of a product licence and a letter in terms of paragraph 6 of schedule 2 of the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations Etc.) Regulations 1994 or previous equivalent legislation begin issued; and what assessment he had made of the performance of the Medicines Control Agency and Committee on Safety of Medicines in this regard. [35090]

Mr. Malone: In 1993 and 1994 there were no compulsory variations.

In 1995 there were three compulsory variations, two of which related to the same safety issue. The times between advice being formulated by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and a letter being issued under paragraph 6 of schedule 2 of the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, etc.,) Regulations 1994 were on2, 82 and 84 days.

No specific assessment has been made of this issue.

Community Care Funding

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the reply sent by members of the Cabinet expenditure committee to each of the eight matters drawn to their attention by the Alliance of Service Users, Carers, Advocates, Purchasers and Providers in Community Care. [35633]

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his response to the letter dated June 1996 from the President of the Association of Directors of Social Services, on behalf of the Alliance of Service Users, Carers, Advocaters, Purchasers and Providers in Community Care, headed "Funding for Community Care". [36002]

Mr. Bowis: I am considering my response to the matters raised by the Alliance of Service Users, Carers, Advocates, Purchasers and Providers in Community Care.

Asthma and Diabetes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into the relationship between life style and (a) asthma and (b) diabetes; and if he will make a statement. [35857]

Mr. Horam: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Nutrition

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he is taking to ensure the implementation in all NHS hospitals of their "The Health of the Nation" nutrition guidelines for hospital catering with particular reference to (a) helping patients needing assistance with eating and drinking while their meals are hot, (b) reviewing patients at risk of malnutrition as agreed in their individual care plan and (c) setting up local groups including patient representatives to implement the guidance; and if he will make a statement; [35838]

(2) what action he is taking to ensure the implementation in all NHS hospitals of their "The Health of the Nation" nutrition guidelines for hospital catering in respect of patients with sensory disabilities; and if he will make a statement. [35839]

Mr. Horam: These are matters for local management. Further detailed guidance on catering good practice, "Hospital catering—Delivering a quality service", which includes a section relating to the nutrition guidelines, will be issued on 16 July. I will place copies of this guidance in the Library.

Medical Reports (Access)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to entitle people to gain access to all medical reports made about them by clinicians who have not been responsible for their clinical care, with particular reference to reports commissioned by insurance companies; and if he will make a statement. [35842]

Mr. Horam: A person already has a right of access to medical reports, if held on computer, under the Data Protection Act 1984. The European Community directive on data protection, 95/46/EC, requires the extension of our existing data protection to certain manually held records. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department is currently consulting on the implementation of the directive in the United Kingdom. We shall be considering in due course what action is called for.

Speech and Language Therapy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will revise the funding available for specialist speech and language therapists' posts, clarify the code of practice in respect of responsibility for speech and language therapy and ensure that children receive speech and language therapy which they have been clinically assessed as needing; and if he will make a statement. [35840]

Mr. Bowis: The funding of speech and language therapists' posts is a matter for individual health authorities. The code of practice already makes clear the respective responsibilities of health and education authorities in the provision of speech and language therapy for children with statements of special educational needs. The Department of Health and the Department for Education and Employment encourage close collaboration between authorities locally.

Paediatric Intensive Care Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will develop a national strategy to facilitate a rapid increase in the number of training places for (a) general and (b) paediatric intensive care nurses; and if he will make a statement. [35912]

Mr. Malone: It is for local employers, in conjunction with their local education and training consortia, to determine the skills needed and the number of staff required to deliver the services they have contracted to provide. The National Health Service Executive retains overall responsibility and issues annual education and training planning guidance. Nurse training commissions are set to rise generally by about 14 per cent. in 1996–97. The number of students entering paediatric intensive care courses in England has increased consistently since 1991.

Enuresis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned on the importance of regular contact between professional staff and families of people undergoing treatment for enuresis; and if he will make a statement. [35835]

Mr. Bowis: The National Health Service Centre for Reviews and Dissemination is carrying out a systematic review of interventions to manage enuresis.

Continuing Health Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that continuing health care remains an integral part of the national health service; and if he will make a statement. [36396]

Mr. Bowis: Continuing health care is one of the six key medium term priorities for the NHS set out in the "Priorities and Planning Guidance" 1996–97 and 1997–98. Copies are available in the Library.

Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the membership of the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing. [36648]

Mr. Horam: I announced the established of the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing on 10 January 1996 at column 231, when the Reverend Dr. John Polkinghorne was appointed chairman.

The 13 members are:

Professor Marcus Pembrey, Institute of Child Health, London;

Professor Peter Harper, University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff (both specialists in clinical genetics);

Professor Kay Davies, Keeble College, Oxford (genetic science);

Dr. Hilary Harris, Manchester (general practice);

Mrs. Wendy Johnston, nurse and counsellor, Belfast City Hospital (nursing and genetic counselling);

Mr. Phillip Webb, General Manager, Zeneca Diagnostics (industry);

Dr. Sally Macintyre, Director, Medical Research Council's Medical Sociology Unit, University of Glasgow;

Professor John Harris, Professor of Bioethics and Applied Philosophy, University of Manchester;

Professor Robert Downie, Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of Glasgow;

Professor John Durant, Assistant Director, Science Museum (public perception of science);

Mr. Matthew Parris, The Times;

Mrs. Christine Lavery, Society of Mucopolysaccharide Diseases and founding trustee of the Genetic Interest Group (patient interest organisation); and

Dr. Sultana Saeed, formerly Lecturer in Law, University of London.

Prisons (Health Services)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities are responsible for health services in which prisons in England and Wales. [34877]

Mr. Bowis: Responsibility for ensuring the provision of health care in prisons rests with the Prison Service, not health authorities.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Libraries

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the number of public libraries in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36385]

Mr. Sproat: The number of public libraries in Cheshire in the last five years was as follows—all figures as at 31 March, including mobile libraries:

1995: 68

1994: 68

1993: 68

1992: 70

1991: 70

Information about the number of libraries in individual towns is not held centrally.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much her Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36004]

Mr. Sproat: My Department spent £11,208 on taxi services during 1995–96.

National Lottery

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the grants awarded by the national lottery to organisations in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire. [36384]

Mr. Sproat: To date, nine awards totalling £759,594 have been made to organisations in Crewe and Nantwich. Seventy-one awards, totalling £7,567,292 have been made to organisations in Cheshire. The information is as follows:

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what steps she has taken to maintain public confidence in the fairness and random selection of numbers in the national lottery; [34080]

(2) if she will place in the Library copies of the correspondence and representations which her Department has received from the independent auditor of the national lottery; [34083]

(3) what analysis her Department has made of the patterns of the numbers drawn in the national lottery in each week of its operation so far; and if she will place a copy of that analysis in the Library. [34085]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 24 June 1996]: This is an operational matter for Oflot. I have therefore asked the Director-General of the national lottery to write to the hon. Member and to place copies of his response in the Library of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Security Facilities Executive

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to maintain the budget for the headquarters of the Security Facilities Executive in real terms over the planning period; and if he will make a statement. [35722]

Mr. Freeman: It is primarily for the chief executive to decide on the proportion of his running costs budget to be allocated to the headquarters of his agency, depending on estimated income from departmental customers. However, this is among the issues I take into consideration when setting annual performance targets and assessing the value for money of the agency.

WALES

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the locations of all accidents that occurred on the motorways of Wales in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will plot this information on a map and place a copy thereof in the Library. [35304]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were 211 personal injury road accidents on Welsh motorways—M4 and A48(M)—in 1995, which were recorded by the police and forwarded to the Welsh Office. A map plotting the location of these accidents on the motorway network could be produced only at disproportionate cost. However, appendix II of "Road Accidents: Wales 1995" includes a map showing the location of the 28 fatal and serious motorway accidents. A copy of the publication is available in the Library of the House.

A list of ordnance survey grid references for each of the 211 accidents has also been placed in the Library of the House.

Woods

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of woods in Wales which (a) were open to the public in 1979 and (b) are open to the public now. [35325]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not available.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has recently been taken to increase the funding for closed circuit television cameras in Wales. [35698]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I announced the Welsh winners of the Home Office closed circuit television challenge competition on 21 June 1996. The Government made £726,000 available for 14 CCTV schemes in Wales.

The following schemes were supported:

Aberystwyth town centre and station

Bryn Hafren comprehensive school, Barry

Glan Ely high school, Cardiff

Llanrumney high school, Cardiff

Cardiff high school

Cardigan town centre

Derfwendeg primary school, Cefn Hengoed

Llandudno town centre

Llangefni town centre

Gurnos housing estate, hospital, shops, school and two business estates, Merthyr Tydfil

Blaenbaglan primary school, Neath and Port Talbot

Dwr-y-Felin lower school, Neath and Port Talbot

Penarth town centre

Swansea enterprise park

Mental Handicap (Residential Places)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many residential places for (a) adults and (b) children with mental handicap have been purchased by (i) health authorities and (ii) social services departments in the past year. [35924]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No information is held about residential places purchased by health authorities. The number of people in mental handicap hospitals is given in "Care in Wales for People with a Mental Illness and People with a Mental Handicap", the report prepared pursuant to section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, (House of Commons Paper No. 350).

The number of people with learning disabilities supported by local authorities in independent sector placements at 31 March 1995 was as follows:

Private and registered voluntary care homes: 238

Registered private nursing homes: 35

(1994 figures—the latest available—included for Clwyd and Powys).

The number of people in local authority residential care homes for people with learning disabilities at 31 March 1995 is in the table.

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Children (under 16) | 8 |
| Adults | 385 |
| Total, all ages | 393 |

(1994 figures given for Gwent and Powys).

Set-aside Land

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many kilometres of river bank run along set-aside land; and if he will make a statement. [36056]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what hectarage is currently set-aside land; and if he will make a statement. [36156]

Mr. Evans: The statistics for the 1996 crop year have not yet been collated. In 1995, 5,023.27 hectares were set aside, which included 4,457.45 hectares under the arable area payments scheme, and 565.82 hectares under the five-year set-aside scheme.

Agriculture

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the likely contribution to increased rural employment of policies associated with the Government's implementation of the Agri-environment Council regulation 2078/92; and if he will make a statement. [36054]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Such an assessment will form part of the socio-economic evaluation of the Welsh schemes approved under EC regulation 2078/92 when they are subject to policy review five years after their launch.

High-board Diving

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the centres which have facilities for high-board diving in Wales. [36251]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is one high-board diving facility in Wales, at the Empire pool, Cardiff.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children have statements of special educational needs in each of the new county boroughs; and what percentage of children of school age this is in each local education authority. [34853]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not yet available by unitary authority. They will be asked in January 1997 for information in respect of 1996.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many decisions to cease to maintain a statement were made in the last year for which figures are available for each of the old county councils. [34854]

Mr. Evans: The information requested is as follows:

Number of pupils whose statements were discontinued after their needs were reassessed during 1995[1] either following a review under the Education (Special Education Needs) Regulations 1994 or following a parental request under Section 172 of the Education Act 1993

NHS Trusts (Pay)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those trusts which have performance-related pay elements in their remuneration systems for executive directors; and if he will list the explicit criteria set out for the award of performance-related awards. [36199]

Mr. Hague: Performance-related pay is identified in the annual reports and accounts of NHS trusts, which are placed in the Library of the House. My Department expects trusts to set explicit criteria in determining remuneration, including performance-related pay, which focus on the individual's contribution towards the quality of patient care, including patient charter targets and other matters such as improved value for money or financial control.

South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the auditors' report into the affairs of the South and East Wales Ambulance NHS trust. [36200]

Mr. Hague: I expect to receive audited annual accounts by 31 July 1996. This will be followed by a management letter giving details of any particular issues of concern to the auditor. The timing of the issue of the management letter is a matter for the auditor.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South and East Wales Ambulance NHS trust concerning the calculation of the final outturn on the 1995–96 overspend, and indications arising from internal management accounts for the first quarter of 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [36201]

Mr. Hague: None. The first quarter runs for 1996–97 are not due with my Department until 19 July 1996.

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Gwent health authority concerning the authority's report into the appointment by internal advertisement of a senior manager already in receipt of an NHS redundancy payment in January; and if he will make a statement; [36476]

(2) what consultations he has had with his independent observer on the Gwent health authority non-executive director's study group into the appointment by internal advertisement of a senior manager already in receipt of an NHS redundancy payment in January; and if he will make a statement. [36477]

Mr. Hague: None. My Department has been kept informed of developments by the health authority, and I will receive a copy of the report. The authority will let me know what action it intends to take following its meeting on 12 July.

EstateCare Group

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on the transfer to the private sector of the EstateCare Group of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. [36811]

Mr. Hague: Following extensive negotiations, the design and project management functions of the EstateCare Group have been sold to a new company, EstateCare Group Ltd., formed by Capita plc and a team of senior managers from the existing EstateCare Group.

The purchase price of £175,000 offered good value for money and the sale ensures the best possible prospects for the majority of EstateCare's staff and continuity of service for NHS trusts in Wales.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to ensure that the new unitary authorities in Wales operate to the standards in accordance with the principles of the citizens charter. [36812]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Officials have written to all chief executives of local authorities in Wales to encourage them to produce their own local charters. These charters will need to include public services for people who live and work in rural communities, in accordance with the White paper "A Working Countryside for Wales". The letter is being circulated widely in Wales, and I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Ban

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he has taken to (a) consult law officers and (b) obtain counsel's opinion on the claim of the EC that it has the power to ban British beef exports to markets outside the EU; [24880]

(2) what assessment he has made of the liability of the EC for (a) actions at law and (b) payment of compensation from their imposition of a ban on the export of British beef. [24882]

Mrs. Browning: This Government have challenged the ban on the export of British beef—as set out in Commission decision 96/239/EC—in the European Court of Justice. A decision on this issue will take some time, so a petition for interim relief from the ban has also been entered. The Government will be seeking costs but not damages from the court.

In the meantime, the United Kingdom is striving to work with our European colleagues to lift the ban by implementing the framework programme as described to the House on 24 June 1996, Official Report, columns 21-22.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations were made to the countries which had a ban on the import of United Kingdom beef before 20 March; and what indications were given in each case of the action that would be necessary to secure the lifting of the ban. [30358]

Mrs. Browning: I very much regret that the hon. Member has had to wait so long for a reply.

Thirty seven countries had imposed a ban on the import of United Kingdom beef prior to 20 March. Details of the specific reasons given for the introduction of these bans, and of the representations made by the UK Government to each individual country, could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, vigorous lobbying to persuade the authorities concerned to lift the ban has taken place in all cases.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the cost, in terms of beef product export sales, of bans on British beef introduced by non-EU countries in each of the last seven years. [29617]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 16 May 1996]: Any estimate of the value of beef export sales which might have been achieved had the bans imposed by a number of non-EU countries not been imposed would be highly speculative. The value of UK bovine products exports to non-EU countries would have been significantly higher than the £62.6 million they were worth last year.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will itemise all import restrictions imposed by Argentina on the importation of beef meat and beef meat products from the United Kingdom. [29620]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 16 May 1996]: I very much regret that the hon. Member has had to wait so long for a reply.

My officials were advised by the British embassy, Buenos Aires, in August 1991 that the Argentine authorities had imposed a temporary ban on the import of all meat and meat products derived from bovines, ovines and caprines from the UK. This ban has continued despite vigorous lobbing to persuade the Argentine authorities to lift the restrictions.

Beef (Fast Food Companies)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to make it unlawful for fast food companies not to offer their customers a choice between British and imported beef. [31763]

Mrs. Browning: The Government, in consultation with the beef industry and the Meat and Livestock Commission, continue to do all that they can to persuade such establishments to restore British beef to their menus. However, the Government have no powers to prescribe purchasing decisions.

Butchers

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he intends to give retail butchers whose turnover has reduced as a result of bovine spongiform encephalopathy. [34277]

Mrs. Browning: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister to the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 17 June 1996, Official Report, columns 378–80.

Salmon

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in respect of cranial and opercular deformities in genetically engineered salmon; and if he will make a statement. [35871]

Mr. Baldry: We have received no representations on these subjects.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 139, when the invoices for livestock export certification undertaken by his Department's staff between 13 and 16 February were issued; and when the amounts invoiced were received. [35755]

Mrs. Browning: The invoices for livestock export certification undertaken by MAFF staff were issued on 17 April 1996. Of the 12 invoices issued five have so far been paid in full. Those payments were received on 29 April, 9 May, 20 May, 29 May and 26 June 1996.

Plant Genetic Resources Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the international technical conference on plant genetic resources held in Leipzig; and if he will place in the Library copies of United Kingdom submissions to the conference, with the global plan of action agreed at the conference. [35930]

Mr. Boswell: The fourth international technical conference on plant genetic resources of the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations took place in Leipzig from 17 to 23 June 1996. The conference unanimously adopted a global plan of action for the conservation and sustainable utilisation of plant genetic resources for food and agriculture, and a Leipzig declaration on conservation and sustainable utilisation of plant genetic resources for food and agriculture.

The United Kingdom delegation participated fully in the negotiations, but the United Kingdom made no formal submission to the conference.

Final copies of the adopted text of the global plan and of the declaration have not yet been made available by the FAO, but I shall arrange for copies of the final negotiating drafts, as adopted, to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the payment rate to abattoirs for slaughter of £107.50 per beast was arrived at. [35774]

Mr. Baldry: A provisional fee of £87.50 per animal presented for slaughter under the over 30-month scheme was agreed by the Intervention Board executive agency in consultation with representatives from the slaughtering industry. There was no established rate for this work when the scheme was set up and the provisional fee, which covers slaughtering, butchering, staining and preparation for dispatch to a rendering plant or cold store, took into account uncertainty about costs on a disrupted market and the fact that income would not be derived from the offals. This provisional fee is guaranteed only for slaughterings up to and including 16 June. A substantive rate will be determined following an "open books" examination of slaughterers' costs by an independent third party which will report its findings shortly.

Sea Level Rises, East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes to sea defence or coastal protection policy and funding he plans to make to respond to predicted sea level rises in East Anglia by (a) 2020 and (b) 2050; and if he will make a statement. [36023]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry fully recognises the need to plan for possible sea level rises and has, since 1989, issued guidance to operating authorities inter alia on allowances for particular stretches of coastline.

For East Anglia the allowance recommended by the Ministry is 6 mm per year or 6 cm per decade. Also, MAFF advice on best practice for coastal defences recommends that consideration is given to incorporating flexibility as coastal defences are renewed or improved to allow for any future change in predictions, particularly where coastal defences have an effective life beyond 2030.

The second report of the UK climate change impacts review group announced on 2 July 1996 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment provides an analysis of impacts in the UK and suggests that sea levels could rise at a rate of 5 cm per decade, with more rapid sea level rises along the East Anglian and south coast, taking into account predicted vertical land movements.

The Ministry will keep under review guidance on the allowances to be made in the planning of coastal defence measures for sea level rise in the light of the CCIRG report and continuing national and international studies. The Ministry also funds research projects addressing the implications of climate change to ensure a consonant coastal defence response. In addition, the Ministry funds a national tide gauge network which monitors changes in sea level and geological movement. Decisions on future funding, through Ministry grants, will continue to be based on an analysis of priority works, taking account of the impact of climate change.

Foot and Mouth Disease

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are in place to protect Great Britain against the possibility of foot and mouth disease being introduced into Great Britain through the importation of elephants. [36666]

Mrs. Browning: Foot and mouth disease is a significant animal health problem in some parts of the world. That is why we have amended the Importation of Animals Order 1977. From the date of the amending order coming into force, it will be possible for elephants to be imported into Great Britain only under the authority of a licence. Any licences issued will contain specific animal health requirements to ensure that Great Britain's freedom from foot and mouth disease, and other diseases to which elephants are susceptible, is not compromised.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in each year since 1989 renderers were prosecuted for failure to comply with regulations relating to BSE governing the production, distribution and supply of rendered material. [31253]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 June 1996]: There have been no prosecutions of renderers under legislation relating to BSE regarding the production, distribution and supply of rendered material since 1989.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on European Union negotiations of failures since 1989 by feed mills, rendering plants and abattoirs to implement fully BSE-related regulations. [31245]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 June 1996]: The Commission and our European partners recognise the increasingly stringent steps taken since 1988 to ensure compliance with BSE measures. Perceived shortcomings in the operation of earlier measures have not helped the UK in EC negotiations.

Shingle

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the size in millimetres of (a) the shingle available on Shingles Bank that it is proposed is used for beach nourishment and replacement and (b) the largest licensed shingle commercially available. [35307]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 2 July 1996]: The nominal maximum size of the shingle available from Shingles Bank is 50 mm; for the commercial source offered in response to tender it was 30 mm.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what context the possibility of European Union legislation on dietary supplements was raised in the intergovernmental conference; what steps were taken at that conference by his Department to seek to promote access to consumers to such supplements throughout the European Union unless there is a proven health risk; and if he will make a statement. [35378]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The possibility of European Union legislation on dietary supplements has not been discussed at the intergovernmental conference so far as I am aware.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which division of his Department will deal with matters arising from the forthcoming European Commission discussion document on dietary supplements; what plans that division has to consult with pan-European consumer organisations, with particular reference to Consumers for Health Choice; and if he will make a statement. [35379]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 8 July 1996]: Responsibility within the Ministry for matters relating to dietary supplements rests primarily with the consumer and nutrition policy division, which will take the lead in dealing with matters arising from any discussion document on this subject issued by the European Commission. In doing so it will consult interested parties, including Consumers for Health Choice.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the research held by his Department on the effects of organophosphorous sheep dips on people; and if he will make a statement. [35514]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 8 July 1996]: As part of the continuing review of the use of organophosphorus sheep dips by the Veterinary Products Committee, the Veterinary Medicines Directorate considers a very large quantity of published scientific literature on organophosphates, including papers on the effects in animals and humans. A list of references has been placed in the Library of the House. Information received from commercial companies in support of applications for marketing authorisations for veterinary medicinal produce is subject to the confidentiality restrictions of section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the risks to people and the environment of (a) Propetamphos and (b) Diazinon, when used in organophosphorus sheep dips. [35515]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 8 July 1996]: Organophosphates for use on sheep and cattle are classified as veterinary medicines. Before they may be marketed in the UK all veterinary medicines, including organophosphorus sheep dips containing Propetamphos and Diazinon, must be authorised in accordance with EC and UK legislation. This requires assessment of scientific data provided by the applicant company against the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy, to ensure that they are safe and effective when used in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions, including the wearing of protective clothing where appropriate. Safety includes safety to the operator, to the consumer of any food products from treated animals, to the environment, and the health and welfare of the treated animal.

ENVIRONMENT

Business Rates Relief

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many village post offices and general stores he expects to benefit from business rates relief over the next 12 months. [35666]

Sir Paul Beresford: Some properties of these kinds already benefit from discretionary rate relief on hardship grounds, but numbers are not held centrally. We estimate that up to 30,000 properties would be likely to benefit from our proposed scheme of rate relief for village shops, post offices and some other small rural businesses. The scheme would require primary legislation.

Departmental Staff Losses

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what expenditure his Department has incurred on redundancy payments; and what future additional pension liabilities have been incurred by early retirement within his Department since 1990. [36021]

Sir Paul Beresford: There have been no compulsory redundancies in my Department during this period. The total cost since 1990 of early retirements on voluntary terms and of severance payments to staff leaving before the age of 50 on such terms is:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| DOE and next steps agencies | 7.9 |
| Property Services Agency | 243.3 |

These figures are net of Treasury funding—that is, 80 per cent.—of the cost of departures occurring after 1 October 1994.

Ms Armstong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reduction of staff in his Department since 1990; and how many staff have left as a result of (a) competitive tendering from the Department's services, (b) transfers under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to next steps agencies, (c) premature retirement and (d) redundancy. [36022]

Sir Paul Beresford: The numbers of staff employed by my Department have been reducing since 1990. The figures are published in my Department's annual report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Included in these figures are departures from DOE (central) and the Government offices since 1990 in the following categories:

(a) competitive tendering from the Department's services: 24

(b) transfers under TUPE to next steps agencies: 0

(c) premature retirement: 436

(d) redundancy: 0

Council Tax

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate his Department has made of the revenue required to be raised by council tax in 1996–97 to meet local government expenditure from the 1995–96 financial year. [36036]

Sir Paul Beresford: Each year, billing authorities estimate the surplus or deficit on council tax collection from previous years which they propose to take into account in setting their council tax for the current year. A deficit would represent income to be raised in 1996–97 to meet expenditure from a previous financial year. However, in setting the council tax for 1996–97, billing authorities in aggregate assumed a surplus from 1995–96 and earlier years of £106 million, rather than a deficit.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the Government-approved council tax increase for local government for the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 in percentage terms. [36037]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government do not set an approved level of council tax increase.

Cheshire County Council (Budget)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the last five years the budget awarded by his Department to Cheshire county council. [36449]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department does not award budgets to local authorities. Each authority is responsible for setting its own budget taking into account a number of considerations, including the capping criteria announced by the Secretary of State. In each of the last five years, Cheshire county council set its budget requirements[1] close to the maximum amount permitted under the capping criteria:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 619.800 |
| 1993–94 | [2]587.400 |
| 1994–95 | 608.008 |
| 1995–96 | [3]583.690 |
| 1996–97 | 613.042 |

[1] In 1992–93, this was known as the precept, under the community charge system.

[2] Responsibility for further education transferred from local authorities to the Further Education Funding Council on 1 April 1993.

[3] Responsibility for police services in shire areas transferred from County Councils to free standing Shire police authorities on 1 April 1995.

Energy Advice Centres

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of people currently employed in each of the local energy advice centres. [36549]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This is a matter for the local energy advice centres and the Energy Saving Trust, which is responsible for the management and funding of the centres.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total budget for local energy advice centres in each year from 1993 to date; and in each year how much of that budget was provided from (a) his Department, (b) the Energy Saving Trust and (c) other bodies. [36543]

Mr. Jones: The total expenditure, with the proportion provided by the Department of the Environment, on the local energy advice centre pilot study in each of the relevant years is as follows:

| | £ million | Per cent. |
|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 1.76 | 70 |
| 1994–95 | 2.62 | 64 |
| 1995–96 | 3.51 | 63 |

The balance of the expenditure came from other sources. The Energy Saving Trust did not directly provide any funds before April 1996.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have received energy saving advice from local energy advice centres in each year since 1993. [36545]

Mr. Jones: The number—rounded to the nearest thousand—of clients who received advice from local energy advice centres in each year is as follows:

1993–94: 26,000

1995–96: 100,000

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the work and effectiveness of local energy advice centres. [36547]

Mr. Jones: We monitored the efficiency and effectiveness of the local energy advice centres through regular reports from the Energy Saving Trust and reports from comprehensive market research running in parallel with the pilot study. The Energy Saving Trust has now taken over responsibility for this research programme. These reports demonstrate that the impartial and free advice provided by the pilot study centres has proved very effective, and substantial efficiency gains in its delivery have been achieved.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals his Department has for (a) the funding and (b) other support for local energy advice centres after September; and if he will make a statement; [36548]

(2) what is his estimate of the amount of funding local energy advice centres will receive from (a) his Department, (b) the Energy Saving Trust and (c) other bodies, after September. [36544]

Mr. Jones: The Energy Saving Trust is responsible for the management and funding of the local energy advice centres. My Department has agreed the trust's proposals to use DOE funds to support the local energy advice centres up to March 1999. The trust announced its plans for the local energy advice centres at the local energy advice centres' annual conference on 8 July.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the financial saving on energy bills and (b) the savings in carbon dioxide emissions (i) per customer and (ii) in total, that has resulted from energy/saving advice given by local energy advice centres, to the latest available date. [36546]

Mr. Jones: Estimated savings attributable to advice from local energy advice centres are as follows:

| Year | Financial £ | Carbon Dioxide emission |
|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | Per client: 38Total: 1 million | Per client: 458 kilogramsTotal: 11,900 tonnes |
| 1994–95 | Per client: 30Total: 1.7 million | Per client: 350 kilogramsTotal: 20,000 tonnes |
| 1995–96 | Per client: 30Total: 2.4 million | Per client: 350 kilogramsPer client: 35,000 tonnes |

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Security Standards)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of setting minimum security standards for all prison establishments in England and Wales. [35864]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. George Howarth, dated 10 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the cost of setting minimum security standards for all prison establishments in England and Wales.

The Prison Service has a phased programme to develop minimum security standards, but has not yet reached a decision on the appropriate standards to apply to all prison establishments in England and Wales. Until this work is complete, it is not possible to provide an estimate of the cost of setting minimum standards.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36007]

Mr. Howard: Information about the values of payments on taxi cab fares is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cheshire Police

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the last five years the total budget allocated by his Department to Cheshire police. [36531]

Mr. Maclean: Cheshire police authority's budgeted expenditure on policing for each of the last five years is set out in the table.

Cheshire Police Authority Budgeted expenditure on policing

| Year | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 74.5 |
| 1993–94 | 78.7 |
| 1994–95 | 88.3 |
| 1995–96 | 93.1 |
| 1996–97 | [1]98.5 |

[1] This figure is the total of the budget set by the police authority and the special grant for additional police officers in 1996–97.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of (a) constables and (b) special constables in the services of the Cheshire police for each of the last five years. [36532]

Mr. Maclean: The information is in the table.

Cheshire Constabulary

| Year | Constable strength as at 31 March | Special Constables strength as at 31 December |
|---|---|---|
| 1991 | 1,424 | 299 |
| 1992 | 1,413 | 274 |
| 1993 | 1,447 | 387 |
| 1994 | 1,453 | 320 |
| 1995 | 1,487 | [1]321 |
| 1996 | 1,536 | [1]274 |

[1] As at 31 March.

Prisoners (Taxis)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions during the last 12 months private taxis have been used to transport prisoners (a) to and (b) from Doncaster prison; what category were the prisoners on each occasion; and if he will make a statement. [36295]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 10 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the use of taxis to escort prisoners at Doncaster prison.

Taxis are used at Doncaster prison to take prisoners to and from hospital appointments at short notice.

During the last 12 months, 65 prisoners were escorted from the prison using taxis. Of these, 52 were category B, five were category C and eight were category D. There is no record of the number of prisoners arriving at Doncaster by taxi.

Cheshire Fire Service

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of fire stations closed in the Cheshire fire service area in each of the last five years; [36472]

(2) if he will list the number of firefighters employed by the Cheshire fire service in each of the last five years; [36471]

(3) if he will list the number of appliances operated by the Cheshire fire service in each of the last five years. [36473]

Mr. Sackville: The position on 1 January in each of the last five years is as follows:

| | 1 January 1992 | 1 January 1993 | 1 January 1994 | 1 January 1995 | 1 January 1996 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Pumping appliances | 40 | 39 | 39 | 47 | 47 |
| Special appliances | 21 | 21 | 21 | 12 | 16 |
| Wholetime firefighters | 614 | 638 | 632 | 624 | 628 |
| Retained firefighters | 186 | 176 | 189 | 201 | 194 |

No fire stations have been closed in the area served by Cheshire fire brigade during this period.

Sex Offenders

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of police officers who have committed sexual offences against children from among those listed in "Sentencing and Supervision of Sex Offenders", while serving, and for which they were subsequently prosecuted, since 1972. [36514]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not kept in the form requested, or for the period requested. However, records of the numbers of serving police officers in England and Wales convicted for sexual offences are available for the years 1993 and 1994. These show that one officer in 1993 and three officers in 1994 were convicted for sexual offences. The records are not broken down by type of offence and the 1993 records do not include the Metropolitan police.

Colchester Young Offender Institution

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the selection procedure for the new commandant in charge of the high-intensity training centre, Colchester; [36206]

(2) what training is being given (a) to the commandant and (b) to other military staff at the young offender regime at Colchester; [36208]

(3) on what legal basis the commandant at the high-intensity training centre, Colchester will be allowed to conduct adjudications; [36210]

(4) how many military and Prison Service employees will be employed at the high-intensity training centre, Colchester; and what will be their duties. [36216]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 10 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about staff issues at Colchester young offenders institution.

The commandant will be appointed when the Prison Service is satisfied that he is competent to discharge the responsibilities of that post. The commandant is undertaking training planned by the Prison Service College both at the college and at prisons.

Training for other military staff to be appointed to the young offender institution includes a three week programme designed and provided by the Prison Service College.

The commandant as governor of Colchester young offender institution will conduct adjudications under the powers in the Young Offender Institution Rules.

Staff at the young offender institution, in addition to the governor, will be:

a Prison Service governor grade 4, responsible for the day to day running of the institution;

a unit manager and two shift supervisors appointed from the military corrective training centre;

16 prison officers, of whom eight will be from the Prison Service and the other eight appointed from the military corrective training centre;

a Prison Service administrative officer.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what will be the Prison Service title of the high-intensity centre, Colchester; [36207]

(2) when he plans to open the high-intensity training centre Colchester; [36209]

(3) what is the current estimated unit cost per place at (a) the high-intensity training centre, Colchester, (b) Thorn Cross and (c) Her Majesty's prison, Feltham; [36214]

(4) how much (a) has been and (b) will be paid to the Ministry of Defence for the use of premises at the military corrective centre at Colchester as a high-intensity prison; [36215]

(5) what arrangements will be made at the high-intensity training centres to ensure minimum security standards. [36220]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 10 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about the high intensity training centre at Colchester.

The formal title will be Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution Colchester. It will usually be known as Colchester young offender institution, and is expected to open in the autumn.

The current estimated figures for annual cost per place are £28,700 for Colchester, £27,200 for the high intensity training programme at Thorn Cross young offender institution and £17,280 for Feltham.

Nothing has yet been paid to the Ministry of Defence for accommodation. The cost to the Prison Service will be £101,000 per annum, in addition to which the Service will pay the actual cost of utilities and a contribution in lieu of rates.

Colchester Young Offender Institution and the High Intensity Training Centre at Thorn Cross Young Offender Institution will comply with Prison Service security requirements for prisoners held in open conditions.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements will be made for the provision of through and after care at the high-intensity training centre, Colchester; [36212]

(2) how many hours out of cell will be provided to offenders at the high-intensity training centre, Colchester; and what will be the range of activities; [36217]

(3) how many (a) probation, (b) education and (c) psychology posts will be made available at the high-intensity training centre, Colchester; [36218]

(4) what the average term served at the high-intensity training centre, Colchester will be, and at what point of their sentence the offenders will be received. [36219]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 10 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent questions about facilities at Colchester young offenders institution.

The staff to prisoner ratio will be higher than normal, with one personal officer to every two or three prisoners, and prisoners will benefit from the presence of a full time welfare officer in the military corrective training centre. The young offender institution will operate a sentence planning system in which a probation officer and the welfare officer will participate. The probation officer will spend one day a week at the institution.

Prisoners at Colchester young offender institution will normally be out of their rooms from 7.00 am until 8.00 pm or 10.00 pm. Most of this time will be spent in purposeful activity including education, vocational training, physical education, first aid training, drill, and cleaning and tidying their kit or accommodation.

Education will be provided by the military corrective training centre's two full-time education officers. The education branch of the Adjutant General's Corps at the Colchester garrison may also be used for prisoners identified with special educational needs.

There will be no psychologists at Colchester but support will be available from the Prison Service area psychology unit at Highpoint prison.

Prisoners will normally serve the last six months of their sentence at Colchester.

Private Prisons

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who conducts adjudications at private prisons in England and Wales. [36211]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 10 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about adjudications at contracted prisons.

All adjudications at a contracted prison are carried out by the on-site Prison Service controller, who is a Crown servant.

Young Offender Institutions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to close young offender institutions. [36213]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 10 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about plans to close young offender institutions.

Finnamore Wood young offender institution closed on 16 May 1996. No firm decision has been taken to close any other young offender institution, although the future role of open young offender institutions is under consideration following the recent review of the open estate.

Driving Insurance (Prosecutions)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 April, Official Report, column 523, how many (a) arrests and (b) police cautions, there have been for driving without insurance in each of the last five years; how many (i) custodial sentences, (ii) fines and (iii) suspended sentences, have been handed down following prosecutions for driving without insurance in each of the last five years; what has been the reconviction rate for driving without insurance in each of the last five years; and what action he is taking to discourage drivers from driving without insurance. [36221]

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of people arrested for specific offences is not available centrally.

The number of written warnings for the offence of driving without insurance cannot be distinguished from other insurance offences in the statistics available centrally. The following list gives the number of written warnings issued by the police in England and Wales for all vehicle insurance offences:

Written warnings given for vehicle insurance offences in England and Wales

1990: 22,788
1991: 21,198
1992: 18,285
1993: 16,701
1994: 15,277

Figures for 1995 are not yet available.

The penalties available for the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks do not include custodial and suspended sentences. The following list shows the number of fines imposed following conviction for this offence:

Fines imposed at all courts for the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks in England and Wales

1991: 166,923
1992: 182,019
1993: 203,976
1994: 199,884

Figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Statistics of reconviction rates for this offence are not available.

The enforcement of road traffic law, including the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks, is a matter for chief officers of police. As the hon. Member knows, there were 446,559 court proceedings for this offence in England and Wales during 1994.

Mr. Raghbir Singh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations have been received from Raghbir Singh about (a) conditions in his prison and (b) on requests for escorted leave from prison for compassionate purposes; what action has been taken in respect of (a) and how many requests made under (b) were (1) accepted and (92) refused. [36402]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 9 July 1996]: I have received one letter from Raghbir Singh which contains representations about his conditions in prison. He has made two requests for escorted leave for compassionate purposes. The details of these requests are contained in the reply given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 1 July, Official Report, column 312.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail applications have been made by Raghbir Singh and how many (a) have been refused and (b) are under consideration. [36403]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 9 July 1996]: Raghbir Singh has applied once to the High Court and once to the Court of Appeal for leave to apply for judicial review, and for a writ of habeas corpus. On each occasion, the court refused the application and, although the written application to the court included a request for bail, that was not pursued in court.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many statutory instruments his Department introduced in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) between 1 January 1996 and 1 May 1996 which had the effect of repealing one or more previous statutory instruments without replacing them with a new regulation. [35041]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 July 1996]: The information that the hon. Member requests is as follows:

1994

1994/3205: The Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 (Isle of Man) (Revocation) Order 1994

1995

1995/267: The Public Health (Ships and Aircraft) (Isle of Man) (Revocation) Order 1995

1995/376: The Recreation Grounds (Revocation of Parish Council Bylaws) Order 1995

1995/1296: The Air Navigation (Isle of Man) (Revocation) Order 1995

1995/1297: The Civil Aviation (Isle of Man) (Revocation) Order 1995

1 January to 1 May 1996

1996/1140: The Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 (Jersey) (Revocation) Order 1996

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appellate Authority

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons detained under Immigration Act powers were released on bail by the Immigration Appellate Authority in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 to date. [35600]

Mr. Streeter: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals against a refusal of asylum are currently outstanding with the Immigration Appellate Authority. [35608]

Mr. Streeter: As at the end of June 1996, there were 16,809 appeals outstanding.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Baltic Exchange

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate English Heritage has made of the cost of rebuilding the St. Mary Axe facade of the Baltic exchange; and if she will permit the listing of the building to be withdrawn. [35898]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: English Heritage has not estimated the cost of rebuilding the St. Mary Axe frontage of the Baltic exchange. I have asked English Heritage to let me have a report on the exchange's listed status. However, it should be borne in mind that such a review can consider only evidence relating to the building's architectural or historic interest. Commercial or economic considerations would not be relevant; these are matters which can be addressed in the context of an application for listed building consent. General guidance on requests to delist buildings is given in paragraphs 6.26 and 6.27 of planning policy guidance note 15.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects the BBC to introduce a weekly cash instalment scheme for payment of the television licence fee. [36942]

Mr. Sproat: The Government laid a regulation yesterday that will enable the BBC to introduce an easy entry scheme for payment of the television licence fee. This scheme will enable people in receipt of at least one income-related state benefit to pay for their first licence in small weekly cash instalments over a period of six months, in arrears. The BBC intends to launch a national pilot of the scheme later this summer.

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the recent decisions which have been made concerning the funding and organisation of the national millennium exhibition. [33889]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 21 June 1996]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many statutory instruments her Department introduced in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) between 1 January 1996 and 1 May 1996 which had the effect of repealing one or more previous statutory instruments without replacing them with a new regulation. [35043]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 4 July 1996]: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Stagecoach Holdings plc

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much (a) his Department and (b) the Monopolies and Mergers Commission have spent in total in carrying out investigations into Stagecoach Holdings plc; and how much his Department has spent defending actions taken by his Department against the company in the courts of law. [36019]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information about (i) could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In relation to (ii), information about the total costs incurred by the Department in defending court actions brought by Stagecoach could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

British Energy

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will withdraw the sale of British Energy if the sale proceeds are less than the lowest market capitalisation value as set out on page 9 of the share offer prospectus. [36557]

Mr. Lang: I am confident that the privatisation of British Energy will achieve value for money for the taxpayer.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade under what export licence category electric shock weapons are classified. [36483]

Mr. Oppenheim: Entry PL5001.d of the Export Goods (Control) Order, 1994, as amended.

South West Industrial Development Board

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 459–60, if Mr. Kenneth Holmes was chairman of his Department's South West industrial development board at the time of (a) the offer and (b) the payment of regional selective assistance to Marine Projects (Plymouth) Ltd. for (i) the first and (ii) the second project. [35264]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: Mr. Holmes was a member of the industrial development board from January 1980 and chairman from January 1984 until January 1991. I explained in my answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 460, that he played no role in the granting of regional selective assistance to Marine Projects (Plymouth) Ltd. during that period. But to amplify that answer, Mr. Holmes—in view of potential conflict of interest—saw no departmental papers relating to the applications and absented himself from the relevant board discussions.

Companies (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 463, if he will state (a) the amount that had already been paid to the eight companies by his Department, (b) the amount remaining unpaid and (c) the amount that has been recovered by (i) date of last payment and (ii) date of the receiver's appointment or the company liquidation. [35261]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: In all eight cases, the amounts paid and remaining unpaid were the same on the date of last, if any, payment and the date on which receivers or administrators were appointed.

| | Amount paid £ | Amount remaining unpaid £ |
|---|---|---|
| Orca Aircraft Ltd. | 50,000 | 150,000 |
| Strategic Alloys Ltd. | 400,000 | 100,000 |
| South West Farm Processors Ltd. | 100,000 | 100,000 |
| Crissan Marine Ltd. | nil | 120,000 |
| Lobbs Clotted Cream Ltd. | 170,000 | 215,000 |
| ROM-Data Corporation Ltd. | 750,000 | 98,500 |
| Redruth Brewery Ltd. | 380,000 | 100,000 |
| Porthcurno Management Co. Ltd. | nil | 500,000 |

In the case of Orca Aircraft Ltd., £42,500 has been recovered subsequent to appointment of the receivers.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 461–64, what assessment he has made of the effect on the effectiveness of Mr. Roger Harris, as chairman of his Department's South West industrial development board, of the number of occasions on which he is caused to absent himself from board meetings due to a potential conflict of interest; and if he will make a statement. [35262]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: Since becoming chairman of the board in February 1991, Mr. Harris has absented himself from discussion of 35 cases because of potential conflicts of interest, but the board has discussed 77 other cases during that period as well as a wide range of other industrial development issues affecting the south-west and Mr. Harris has proved a very effective chairman. When he has had to absent himself, other board members have stood in for him and the board has continued to be able to provide valuable advice.

DEFENCE

Public Record Office Files

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the files with the class marks ES1/367–380 recorded at the Public Record Office concerning effluent from a pipeline to the River Thames are currently retained by his Department; and if he will release them. [36137]

Mr. Soames: In line with the open government initiative, arrangements are being made to review the papers listed at the Public Record Office under references ESI/367-380 to see whether release into the public domain is now possible. I will write to the hon. Member on completion of the review process.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the file with the class mark AIR 28/1317 recorded at the Public Record Office concerning RAF Wittering between January 1959 and December 1960 is currently retained by his Department; and if he will release it. [36138]

Mr. Soames: In line with the open government initiative, arrangements are being made to review the papers listed at the Public Record Office under reference AIR 28/1317 to see whether release into the public domain is now possible. I will write to hon. Member on completion of the review process.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36009]

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many studies have been carried out by the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston since 1966 to examine the effect of an accident involving nuclear weapons; and how many of these studies have examined the dispersal of nuclear materials in the event of such an accident. [36135]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Rather than individual studies, the Atomic Weapons Establishment maintains a continual programme of research into, and assessment of, the effects of a nuclear weapons accident, including dispersal of nuclear materials. Numerous weapon accident exercises are conducted to test procedures and personnel.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the names of the exercises held since 1966 for testing the Department's arrangements for dealing with an accident involving nuclear weapons controlled by (a) Britain and (b) the United States of America; in what year each of these exercises was held; and which service was primarily in charge of each of these exercises. [36136]

Mr. Soames: The 1995 "Statement on the Defence Estimates" described the programme of regular nuclear accident response organisation exercises and the basis on which these are categorised. The definition of these categories has developed over the years but, from the records which are available, the following exercises since 1986 would have been commensurate with what we currently consider to be major or medium level.

Information on exercises before 1986 and on minor exercises is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Note (1):
Standardisation exercises test the RAF Immediate Force response fire teams for the transportation of nuclear weapons. These exercises were re-categorised from minor to medium level during 1993.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how frequently the Nuclear Weapons Safety Committee produces a report on its activities; when the first such report was produced; and what are the current security classifications of each of these reports. [36490]

Mr. Soames: The Nuclear Weapons Safety Committee does not produce a regular series of reports. However, meetings of the committee have been minuted since it was established in 1959. The preparation of separate reports would be dependent on the nature of committee business but this is invariably sensitive. The security classification of the committee's paperwork ranges from restricted to top secret.

Army Base Repair Organisation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual cost of the Army Base Repair Organisation in each of the last 10 years. [36165]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Army Base Repair Organisation under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. R. Drew to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 10 July 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the cost of the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO) in each of the last 10 years as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of ABRO.

ABRO was launched as a Defence Agency on 1 April 1993; you will understand therefore that it is not possible to provide financial information prior to that date. The Agency has however published and widely distributed its Annual Report and Accounts for each financial year since launch. The figures are as follows:

| | 1993–94 | 1994–95 | 1995–96 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Full costs | 260.9 | 263.4 | 260.7 |
| Cash expenditure[1] | 156.0 | 155.6 | 155.7 |

[1] As a Defence Agency ABRO is still required to repor on a cash basis.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce or expand the Army Base Repair Organisation. [36164]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Army Base Repair Organisation under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. R. Drew to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 10 July 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about what plans he has to reduce or expand the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO) as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of ABRO.

ABRO is a Defence Agency and operates within the framework set out in the Framework Document. The role of the Agency is defined as the provision of base repair support to the Army in peace, transition to war and war. It is tasked to conduct repair and re-manufacture work by its Army and other customers.

It is my job to ensure that the Agency conducts its business in the most cost effective way and to make proposals for the strategic direction of the Agency in the ABRO Corporate Plan. You may recall that in my letter to you of 12 June 1996, I explained that in recent years ABRO has been scaling down its in-house facilities to match capacity to the reducing requirement placed on it by the new defence profile. A major facility at Old Dalby in Leicestershire will close by the end of the year, while a smaller one at Ashford in Kent will close by the end of September. I also explained that I have been progressively exposing all the Agency's activities to commercial competition, through a vigorous Competing for Quality programme.

The Agency will continue to seek to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of ABRO operations to deliver better value for the taxpayers' money. This will be achieved both through internal organisational improvements and through taut management of a very wide range (approaching 2,000 in number) of contracts placed with industry. It is demand from customers that will ultimately determine the expansion or reduction of ABRO activities.

I have enclosed a copy of the ABRO Corporate Plan 1996 which explains the direction we are taking in greater detail and a copy of our Annual Report for 1995/1996. I hope that these are helpful to you.

Former Royal Air Force Bases

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 341, on environmental assessments of former RAF stations, if land quality statements are made available to local councils and members of the public if requested. [36186]

Mr. Soames: My Department will make available, upon request, copies of individual land quality statements to local authorities and to members of the public.

Vehicle Maintenance

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of repairs, maintenance and servicing of Army vehicles is carried out by private sector contractors. [36166]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Army Base Repair Organisation under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. R. Drew to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 10 July 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the percentage of repairs, maintenance and servicing of Army vehicles carried out by private sector contractors as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO).

The total workload handled by ABRO for the repair, servicing and maintenance of Army vehicles amounts to more than 2 million man-hours per year (this does not include repairs carried out within the Field Army, nor the repair of major and minor vehicle assemblies such as engines and transmissions held in store). Some 35% of this work is currently carried out by commercial contractors under contracts managed by ABRO.

It should be noted that the work carried out by commercial contractors amounts to some 65% of the work associated with the Army's commercial type vehicle fleets. The preponderance of work conducted in-house by the Agency is on specialist and armoured vehicles which are of strategic importance to the Army and where either facilities available within industry are limited or the army requires to maintain its own facilities to cope with operational surges or to protect strategic capability.

Much of the work carried out in-house by ABRO on commercial type vehicles, is in support of units of the Field Army under the command of Land Command. This and the other equipment repair support activities carried out for Land Command are being exposed to competition with commercial sector in a market test competition. The results of the competition are due to be recommended to Ministers by the end of January 1997.

Trident Programme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 387, if he will give a breakdown of the £700 million yet to be spent on the Trident programme. [36231]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The £700 million of committed expenditure which has yet to be spent forms part of an estimated £1.61 billion of remaining expenditure on the Trident acquisition programme. A breakdown of the estimated remaining expenditure figure is:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Submarine | 487 |
| Strategic weapon system | 516 |
| Tactical weapon system | 70 |
| Buildings/works | 11 |
| Dockyards | 266 |
| Warhead/miscellaneous—unallocated contingency | 260 |

Service Personnel (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of dwellings owned and occupied by service personnel in Cheshire. [36456]

Mr. Soames: My Department does not record nor does it need to hold this information.

Married Quarters Estate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's married housing quarters at Lulworth camp, Dorset, are to be sold as part of the MOD's housing sell-off. [36205]

Mr. Arbuthnot: None. The quarters concerned are held by my Department on a lease which may be assigned.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the consultants providing advice to his Department relating to the sell-off of the married quarters estate. [36480]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Apart from independent advisers, the following consultants have provided advice at various stages since we began to develop the proposal to transfer the married quarters estate to the private sector announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 30 November 1995, Official Report, columns 810-11:

Financial and accountancy advice
NatWest Markets
Coopers and Lybrand
Price Waterhouse

Legal advice
Government Property Lawyers
Herbert Smith

Property advice
Savills
Cluttons
Knight, Frank and Rutley
Chestertons
DTZ Debenham Thorpe

Public relations advice
Brunswick

In addition, three firms specialising in Scottish law provided advice prior to the decision to exclude Scotland from the transaction.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's policy for its married housing stock; what has been the total cost to date of payments to consultants advising on the privatisation of this stock; and what is the percentage change in rent charge for this stock between 1995–96 and 1996–97. [34965]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The Government's policy is to improve the quality and management of service housing. The sale of the married quarters provides the right basis for real improvements in service housing which are long overdue. The total cost to date of the employment of consultants since we began to develop this proposal, which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 30 November 1995, Official Report, columns 810-11, amounts to some £3.8 million, exclusive of VAT, on the basis of invoices received at 4 July 1996. The percentage increase in families' accommodation charges payable by service personnel between 1995–96 and 1996–97 was between 10 and 25 per cent., depending on the type of quarter occupied; the average increase was some 14.5 per cent. This increase was recommended by the independent Armed Forces Pay Review Body which also makes recommendations on pay. All personnel received a net increase in pay despite the increases in accommodation net charges. Two examples, based on the increase between 1 April 1995 and 1 December 1996 would be a major—depending upon pay scale and type of quarter—receiving a basic pay increase of £122.40 and accommodation charge increase of £33, giving a net gain of £89.40 per month and a lance corporal receiving a basic pay increase of £60.60 and accommodation charge increase of £22.20, giving a net gain of £38.40 per month. Both the Government and the review body have made it clear that the increases in charges have no connection with the sale of the married quarters estate or the way in which charges are set.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision his Department has made for the rehousing of families of service personnel living in married quarters at RAF Finningley. [36122]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 9 July 1996]: Families were provided with alternative accommodation, as they were posted to other stations. To ensure minimum disruption, however, some families were allowed to remain at Finningley until the end of the school year before making a permanent move.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the provision of married quarters housing for members of his Department serving at RAF Cranwell. [36123]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 9 July 1996]: My Department is committed to providing married quarters to all eligible service families including those at RAF Cranwell. Works to improve the standard of living accommodation are under way, including modernisation of 230 officers' and 157 airmen's quarters. We have plans to build 34 new houses.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs are provided by the Defence Exports Services Organisation; and at what cost to public funds. [36593]

Mr. Arbuthnot: During 1996–97, the Defence Export Services Organisation will employ 686 staff—including project staff whose costs do not come out of public funds—at an estimated cost to public funds of £12.784 million.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to public funds of the Defence Exports Services Organisation in each year since 1991. [36596]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Final outturn figures for the Defence Export Services Organisation for 1991–92 to 1995–96 are as stated.

£ million

| Year | Gross Exp | Receipts | Net DESO |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 29.99 | 18.94 | 11.05 |
| 1992–93 | 31.87 | 19.98 | 11.89 |
| 1993–94 | 43.08 | 27.06 | 16.02 |
| 1994–95 | 50.26 | 39.32 | 10.94 |
| 1995–96 | 58.27 | 41.19 | 17.08 |

Sting Ray Torpedo

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the contract for the development of the life extended Sting Ray torpedo will be placed. [36866]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am pleased to announce that we have today placed a contract worth some £109 million with GEC-Marconi underwater weapons division for the development of the life extended Sting Ray.

The Sting Ray lightweight anti-submarine torpedo has been in service with the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force since 1983 and it is planned to extend its life by replacing expired components, and by so doing to improve its performance to maintain the weapon's effectiveness in the first two decades of the next century.

WALES

Menai Strait (Marine Nature Reserve)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will designate the Menai strait as a marine nature reserve. [36998]

Mr. Hague: I published the requisite notice today. Representations should be made by 23 August. If, at the end of that time, there are no objections, the order designating the area as a marine nature reserve may be made with or without modifications.

Road Improvement Schemes

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in taking forward motorway and trunk road improvement schemes under the private finance initiative. [36997]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have decided that the A55 dualling from Llanfair PG to Holyhead—an important improvement to which my predecessors and I have consistently attached great priority—should be taken forward as a design, build, finance and operate scheme under the private finance initiative. Subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures, I expect construction of the whole of the improvement across the island of Anglesey will commence in autumn 1998, and that the scheme will be completed some three years later at around the same time as would have been the case if the construction had been undertaken by means of conventional procurement.

Preparatory work is continuing on the A465 dualling between Abergavenny and Hirwaun, and the M4 relief road between Magor and Castleton, but it will be some time before decisions are required on the method of procurement. Nevertheless, it is my intention that these schemes should also be pursued as potential design, build, finance and operate contracts.

SCOTLAND

Veterinary Service (Orkney)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that a resident vet is available to serve the outer north islands of Orkney; and if he will make a statement. [35870]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Under the highlands and islands veterinary services scheme, veterinary services to the outer north islands of Orkney were provided for a considerable number of years by a resident vet who was a member of a large practice based in Kirkwall. The practice subsequently withdrew the resident vet for purely commercial reasons. The practice has not, however, withdrawn its service, operating now exclusively from Kirkwall. Following the revised arrangements for this scheme introduced recently, there is now a second practice, again operating from the mainland, which provides a veterinary service to these islands. My noble Friend's responsibility in operating this scheme is not to ensure the actual physical location of veterinary practitioners, only that adequate services are made available at reasonable cost to crofters and persons of like economic status in designated areas of Scotland. In the case of the outer north islands of Orkney, I am satisfied that such a service is readily available.

Cairngorms Funicular Railway

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been commissioned by (a) his office and (b) Highlands and Islands Enterprise to estimate the job retention and creation of the proposed Cairngorms funicular railway; and what alternative options for the upgrading of the skiing facilities have been evaluated. [35161]

Mr. Kynoch: No research into such matters has been commissioned by the Scottish Office. The research commissioned by Highlands and Islands Enterprise is an operational matter for that organisation and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of children registered as working by each local authority in (a) the current year and (b) 1986. [36313]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: This information is not collected centrally.

Expenditure and Revenue Report

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to update the Government expenditure and revenue in Scotland report, last published in October 1995; and if he will make a statement. [37121]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is intended that the Government expenditure and revenue in Scotland report should become an annual publication. The next edition, covering the period 1994–95, is scheduled to be published on 21 October 1996.

Haemophilia

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to the use of synthetic factor 8 for the treatment of haemophilia; and if he will make a statement. [37122]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Synthetic, or recombinant, factor 8 is a new treatment considered appropriate for some patients with haemophilia. The treatment is an alternative to the plasma-derived factor 8 currently in use and supplied free of charge to the NHS by the Scottish national blood transfusion service. To assist with the costs involved in the acquisition of the new product, which is available only from commercial sources, I have agreed to make available funding of £1.1 million in the current year. Future arrangements will depend on the speed and extent of the transition from plasma-derived factor 8 to recombinant. This will be kept under review.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the results of research undertaken by his Department into industrial injuries in respect of the income and resources of recent claimants. [35683]

Mr. Roger Evans: The results were published in December 1995 by Social and Community Planning Research, which was commissioned to carry out the research on behalf of the Department. A copy of the report, "Survey of Claimants of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit", by Nigel Tremlett and David Dundon-Smith, is in the Library.

Family Credit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of disregarding family credit in the calculation of (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit in the next financial year. [35682]

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimates are £230 million and £75 million respectively.

Notes:

1. Based on data from the 1991–92–93 Family Expenditure Surveys, uprated to 1996–97 benefit and price levels.

2. Figures are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36010]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available.

TRANSPORT

M25 (Widening)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many months the widening scheme for the M25 between junctions 6 and 8 is behind schedule; [35585]

(2) how much of the additional costs incurred on the delay in the M25 widening construction project between junctions 6 and 8 will be borne by (a) the contractors and (b) the Government; [35584]

(3) what additional costs construction delays have added to the cost of the M25 widening scheme between junctions 6 and 8; [35583]

(4) what is the current estimated total cost of the M25 widening scheme between junctions 6 and 8; [35582]

(5) what are the reasons for the delay in completing the widening scheme for the M25 between junctions 6 and 8; [35581]

(6) over what period 24-hour working has been in operation on the M25 road widening scheme between junctions 6 and 8; [35532]

(7) what reviews his Department has carried out of the Highways Agency's management of the M25 widening scheme between junctions 6 and 8; [35531]

(8) what is the current projected date for completion of the M25 road widening project between junctions 6 and 8; [35530]

(9) what inadequacies in the project specification have been discovered in the M25 widening project between junctions 6 and 8 subsequent to the commencement of work; [35529]

(10) what date his Department was first informed that the completion of the M25 widening project between junctions 6 and 8 might be delayed. [35528]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay, dated 9 July 1996:

As you know, I have been asked by the Minister for Railways and Roads to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about the M25 between junctions 6–8.

The improvements between junctions 6 and 8 are under construction and I am afraid that these roadworks are taking much longer to complete than we originally estimated. We are very conscious of the stresses caused by delays to traffic and clearly we regret any delays to our schemes. But the possibility of delay is always present when carrying out complicated major civil engineering works.

The section is one of the busiest of the M25 and includes the major M25/M23 interchange at junction 7. To cope with the volume of traffic it carries, it needed to be widened from three lanes each way to four lanes. It is one of the oldest sections of the M25, having been in use for some 20 years. Major maintenance was due and, to minimise overall traffic disruption, we decided to do it at the same time as the widening. This included renewing the worn-out existing road surface, upgrading bridges and installing lighting.

Work started in March 1994 and it gradually became clearer during Summer 1994 that the implementation of the project would be delayed.

We discovered that the original 'capping layer', which is the lowest layer of the road construction lying about one metre deep, had deteriorated to the extent that it was too weak to support the new upper layers of the reconstructed carriageway pavement. Although some allowance was made in the Contract for replacement of deteriorated capping material, the scale of what we found was far in excess of what was foreseen. The Contractor can only replace this capping layer in a piecemeal way to fit in with traffic phasings.

The other major problem we had to contend with was unexpected premature development of ruts in the wheel tracks on the new road surfacing material. The material used, hot rolled asphalt, has been developed over many years, and used throughout the country. The reasons for the problems in this case are unclear. We suspect the cause to be an exceptional combination of site specific factors, which include the high number of lorries that use this section of the M25, the temporary traffic management arrangements which concentrated the lorries into one lane and the exceptional heat of last summer, which could have affected the newly laid asphalt materials. As a precaution to reduce the risk of future rutting, we have instructed the Contractor to adopt an enhanced asphalt specification but the rutted areas of new surfacing have to be replaced.

Our best estimate of the likely completion date for this project is December this year, but as with any major construction scheme, this date is subject to many variables such as the weather or other unforeseen problems.

The Highways Agency was established in 1994 as an executive agency of the Department of Transport, and is responsible for managing a safe, efficient and environmentally acceptable trunk road system throughout England, on behalf of the Secretary of State. We work closely with our parent Department, the Department of Transport, but the Highways Agency is responsible for operational matters.

Under the Contract, the Contractor is responsible for the size of his workforce, the amount of plant used and the hours worked. At present, the Contractor works 24 hours a day from Monday to Friday and 7.00 am to 6.00 pm on Saturdays and Sundays. Also, when changes to traffic management arrangements are required, they are often made on Saturday and Sunday nights. On weekdays nights the level of activity is less than during the day. This pattern is likely to continue until Autumn.

The principal reasons for the delays in completing the widening and refurbishment of this project are the problems caused by having to replace the capping layer and the premature formation of ruts in the resurfaced carriageways as described earlier.

The original tender price for the project was £46 million. The contract, which follows a standard form used in the Civil Engineering industry, contains clauses enabling the contractor to be paid for extra work and related delays. Negotiations on the amount of these extra payments are likely to continue for some while.

The Highways Agency will fund the replacement of both the deteriorated capping layer materials and the rutted asphalt surfacing. It will also fund extra costs arising from adopting the enhanced asphalt specification. This is because neither of these problems have been found to be the fault of the Contractor. The amount of the additional costs has not yet been evaluated.

The original contract period for this project was 15 months, from March 1994 when work commenced, until June 1995. This 15 month period did not take into account the major difficulties which were discovered during construction and was set in an attempt to minimise the time taken on the project. The major problems we have encountered have regrettably delayed the works and the latest estimated completion date is December 1996, subject as I have already explained, to the many variables that can affect construction progress.

I visited this site in early July and can assure you that I remain fully aware of the adverse effects the prolongation of the works is having on the travelling public. I apologise for the inconvenience caused but we are continuing to press for the earliest possible finish. I have every confidence that once the scheme is completed, drivers will find the widened carriageways, the improved signing and new street lighting will provide much better driving conditions.

Your office has asked about the proposed scheme to widen the M25 east of the J6–8 project. The current position is that proposals to widen this stretch of M25 went to Public Exhibition in June 1994. Following the November 1995 review of the Roads Programme, this scheme has now been placed in the new longer term category. Widening is still expected to be necessary in the future but does not need to be undertaken yet. As a result, all preparation work has ceased.

Aircraft Leasing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 80, if he will list the names of the companies involved in the wet lease applications received in 1995. [35274]

Mr. Norris: The following companies were involved in wet lease applications in 1995:

| UK lessee airline | Foreign lessor airline |
|---|---|
| Air 2000 | Canada 3000 Airlines |

Sea Empress Incident

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry into the Sea Empress disaster. [35961]

Mr. Norris: The chief inspector of marine accidents intends to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State within one year of the incident.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the clean-up operation following the Sea Empress oil spill off the Pembrokeshire coast; and if he will make a statement. [36996]

Mr. Norris: The clean-up operation has made excellent progress. The majority of beaches have now been cleaned of the heavy pollution immediately following the spill. Pembrokeshire's prime resort beaches at Tenby and Saundersfoot were restored in time for the Easter break and Tenby north beach has recently been awarded the prestigious European blue flag for high standards of cleanliness and water quality. It is one of only four beaches in Wales to achieve this.

The main efforts in the on-going clean-up operation are now concentrated on the most inaccessible areas of coastline. However, the strong winds and high waters of the Pembrokeshire coastline continue to reveal isolated patches of buried oil, tar balls from oil broken down at sea and some sheening effects as oil residues are washed out. All beaches continue to be monitored closely and "hit squads" are immediately brought into action to deal with any localised problems of this kind. Resources will continue to be deployed for as long as is necessary to complete the clean-up operation.

Airline Partnerships

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the extent of his responsibilities in respect of partnership agreements between United Kingdom and foreign airlines. [35917]

Mr. Norris: Partnership agreements and other forms of alliance between UK and foreign airlines are commercial matters for the airlines concerned, subject to UK and EC rules on ownership and control. Competition aspects are matters for the UK and EC competition authorities.

Excalibur Airways

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investigations the Civil Aviation Authority has undertaken into allegations of unsafe operations during flights operated by Excalibur Airways. [35977]

Mr. Norris: The CAA advises me that all but one of the complaints it received concerning flights operated by Excalibur were related to contractual and commercial arrangements between the airline and its customers. The single safety complaint concerned a faulty door. An inspection for the aircraft confirmed that, although the normal electrical method of opening one of the aircraft doors had an intermittent fault, it could still be operated both manually and pneumatically. The CAA does not consider that passenger safety was compromised.

Air Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom of the Council of Ministers' decision to empower the EU to negotiate with the United States of America on behalf of EU states regarding air rights. [35955]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 8 July, Official Report, columns 76-77.

As noted in that reply, member states retain the right to conduct bilateral negotiations with the US while Community-level negotiations are under way.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to restart the Bermuda II negotiations with the United States of America. [35918]

Mr. Norris: Negotiations are scheduled to resume in the week beginning 15 July.

Save Our Ships Campaign

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will receive a delegation from the National Union of Rail, Maritime and Transport Workers, RMT, to discuss the Save Our Ships campaign. [35914]

Mr. Norris: Ministers and officials regularly meet representatives of shipowners and the seafaring unions to discuss issues of common interest. My hon. Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping would be happy to consider a request from the RMT for a meeting.

Motorways

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what provision will be made for public consultation on the cost-benefit analysis and environmental and traffic impacts of motorway widening schemes; [35829]

(2) if he will list the motorway widening schemes currently in the national roads programme; and which of these will undergo (a) environmental assessment, (b) cost-benefit analysis and (c) a public inquiry. [35716]

Mr. Watts: All motorway widening schemes are subject to public consultation and statutory procedures when details of cost-benefit analysis and environmental and traffic impact assessments are available for public scrutiny and debate.

The following motorway widening schemes are currently in the programme.

All will be subject to the preparatory processes including environmental assessment, cost-benefit analysis and, depending on the weight and nature of any objections received, a public inquiry.

Those marked with an asterisk are in the longer-term category to be brought forward only after substantial progress has been made with the main programme.

Maritime Strategy Paper

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the European Commission's paper on maritime strategy; and if he will make a statement. [35951]

Mr. Norris: We aim to send a response to the Commission in September. We are currently consulting interested parties and shall listen carefully to views expressed by Members of the House in Committee on 10 July. I shall arrange for a copy of the response to be placed in the House Library.

Seafarers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to ensure British seafarers are employed on the same terms and with the same incentives as are available to employers resident in other nations of the EU. [35960]

Mr. Norris: Terms and conditions of employment are primarily a matter of negotiation between employer and employee.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) statutory instruments and (b) guidance notes his Department issued since January relating to local authorities. [35937]

Mr. Norris: The statutory instruments relating to local authorities issued since January are:

The Public Airport Companies (Capital Finance) Order (SI 604).

The Road Traffic Act 1991 (Amendment to Schedule 3) (England and Wales) Order (SI 500).

The Road Traffic (Special Parking Area) (London Borough of Newham) (Amendment) Order (SI 1112).

Air Traffic Control System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the new air traffic control system for the United Kingdom to come into operation; and if he will make a statement. [35923]

Mr. Norris: The Swanwick air traffic control centre, which will control aircraft flying over England and Wales, is due to come into operation in December 1997. The new Scottish air traffic control centre at Prestwick, which will control aircraft over Scotland and Northern Ireland, is expected to become operational in the winter of 2000–01.

Light Rail Funding

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of light rail funding (a) nationally and (b) in the Greater Manchester area. [36282]

Mr. Norris: Bids for light rail schemes are submitted to my Department during the annual transport policies and programme round. I am prepared to consider supporting light rail schemes, including extensions to the Greater Manchester metrolink, provided it can be demonstrated that light rail is the most cost-effective solution to a particular urban transport problem. Schemes must attract significant private sector and local investment and be put forward as part of a package bid, incorporating a coherent transport strategy to achieve modal shift from the private car. However, light rail is expensive and not the only solution to urban transport problems. The difficulties and costs associated with developing schemes should not be underestimated.

M42

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will exercise his discretionary powers to grant compensation to those dwellings in Barstow lane affected by his proposals to widen the M42. [35999]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Iain Mills, dated 10 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about compensation for properties on Barston Lane affected by the M42 widening proposals.

Once a new or improved road has been opened to traffic for 12 months people who consider that their home has depreciated in value as a result of the physical factors arising from the use of the new or improved road may claim compensation under Part 1 of the Land Compensation Act 1973 (compensation for injurious affection). The physical factors are noise, vibration, smell, fumes, smoke and artificial lighting and the discharge of substances onto land.

There are no powers to grant compensation to owners of dwellings affected by a road proposal prior to it being opened to traffic for 12 months. Owners who need to move for reasons unconnected with the road but who are unable to sell privately because of the threat of road improvements may apply to have their homes purchased by the Highways Agency. The Agency will consider purchase if all the qualifying criteria are met. The enclosed guidelines explain this in more detail.

GUIDELINES FOR DISCRETIONARY PURCHASE UNDER S246(2A) OF THE HIGHWAYS ACT 1980 OF LAND IN ADVANCE OF THE START OF WORKS

Introduction

The Highways Agency acts on behalf of the Secretary of State for Transport to build and improve trunk roads and motorways. If your enjoyment of your home is seriously affected by a proposal to build or improve a trunk road or motorway, you may ask the Highways Agency to buy it even if it is not needed for the proposed scheme.

Each application for discretionary purchase will be considered on its merits. These guidelines indicate the general manner in which cases will be considered.

Considering your application

The Agency has no obligation to buy property which is not needed for a road scheme as the relevant powers under section 246(2A) of the Highways Act 1980 are discretionary. Some applications will not be successful, but in such cases you may be entitled to compensation under Part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973 after the road or the road improvement has been opened. Your home may also be eligible for noise insulation.

Section 246(2A) of the Highways Act 1980 makes pre-conditions which have to be met before an application can be considered. These are described in paragraphs 1 and 2 below. If your application meets these pre-conditions we will then consider it in two stages:

First to see if, in our opinion, your enjoyment of your property will be seriously affected and, if we think it will be,

Second, to decide whether to offer to buy, taking account of the information in your application.

The factors we consider in deciding on serious effect are set out in paragraph 3 and those we take into account in deciding whether to offer to buy are set out in paragraphs 4–7.

STATUTORY PRE-CONDITIONS

Before your application can be considered:

1. Work on blighted land

The proposed road scheme must include work on land which is statutorily blighted within the meaning set out in the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. This means in most instances that the Agency has safeguarded the route by notifying the local planning authority, or has announced the preferred route for the scheme, or has published or made compulsory purchase orders for the scheme. If no land qualifies as being blighted (for example, in the case of maintenance work or, in some cases, widening within the highway boundaries), or the land that is blighted is remote from your property, the Agency may not be able to buy your property.

2. Qualifying interest

You must have a "qualifying interest" (as set out in section 149(2) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990) in the property which will be seriously affected. This broadly means you must be an owner-occupier. In the case of a dwelling, you must either:

be living in your property at the date on which the Agency contracts to purchase it and have owned it and lived there for at least six months before this date; or if the property is empty, it must not have been empty for more than twelve months and you must have lived there during the six months prior to it becoming empty. You will not have a qualifying interest if the property is let by you or if you are a tenant.

The rules for commercial and industrial properties are similar to those for dwellings, except that in order for it to be eligible the property must have an annual value for rating purposes not exceeding £18,000.

ASSESSMENT OF SERIOUS EFFECT

3. Serious effect

The Agency must be of the opinion that your enjoyment of your property will be seriously affected by either the construction or the use of the road. Serious effect may be caused by a number of factors including:—

(a) Noise: If the predicted noise levels at your property are:

when due to construction, well in excess of 70 dB(A) (12 hour$_{L_{10}}$) or more for a substantial period of the day over at least three months; or predicted to increase by 1 dB(A) to a level of at least 68 dB(A) (18 hour$_{L_{10}}$), due to the use of the road;

we will normally consider that your enjoyment of your property will be seriously affected by noise. In assessing the predicted or relevant noise level, the Agency will take into account the benefits of any proposed environmental mitigation measures. These may include noise fencing or earth mounds and road surfacing may also be taken into account. A Glossary of terms related to Noise Measurement may be found in Appendix 1.

(b) Diminution in Value: If, at the time of assessment, your property is or is likely to be, in the opinion of the Agency, significantly diminished in value as a result of the road proposal, we will normally consider it seriously affected. Diminution in value is the amount that the value of your property has been reduced due to the road scheme and is normally expressed as a percentage of the assessed unaffected market value. The diminution will be assessed by our Valuer but you may submit any valuation advice you may have obtained. As a guide, diminution in value of less than 15 per cent. would not normally be considered to have seriously affected your enjoyment of your property.

(c) Medical Conditions: If you, or a dependant living with you in the property, suffer from a medical condition (such as a respiratory condition or tinnitus, but not stress or anxiety) and, in the opinion of the Agency, this medical condition is likely to be severely aggravated by physical effects, such as dust, noise or pollution, from either the construction of the road or its use, we are likely to consider that your enjoyment of your property will be seriously affected.

The factors listed in these guidelines are not exhaustive. Other factors or combinations of factors may cause serious effect and the Agency will take these into account when considering your application.

DECIDING WHETHER TO OFFER TO BUY—(EXERCISE OF DISCRETION)

4. Foreknowledge

We will not normally exercise discretion to buy if you bought your property after the Preferred Route for the scheme affecting your property had been published or the route had been safeguarded (this means notified to the local planning authority) and we consider that at the date of purchase the extent of information in the public domain concerning the proposed scheme was such that a reasonable person could have foreseen the general effects that the road proposal might cause upon the enjoyment of the property.

5. Your efforts to sell the property

In all cases you must have made reasonable efforts to sell the property before your application will be considered. You should be able to produce evidence that the property has been on the market for not less than three months at what is, in the opinion of the Agency's Valuer, a realistic market price. You must also show that no offer within 15 per cent. of the unaffected market value has been received or, if one has been received, that it has been subsequently withdrawn due to the presence of the proposed scheme.

6. Reasons for sale

Once we have concluded that your property will be seriously affected, that it was not purchased with foreknowledge, and that you have attempted to sell it on the open market, we must be satisfied that there are pressing reasons for selling and that severe hardship will occur if you are unable to sell. The reasons for selling must be, in most cases, caused by factors unrelated to the road scheme. For example, you should be able to demonstrate at least one of the following:

(a) a need to move to a larger or different home, such as the need to accommodate a growing family or the need to move home for employment purposes;

(b) external financial pressures that necessitate the sale of property, such as the need to realise assets in conjunction with divorce or to release funds in connection with your business, or if you are threatened with re-possession;

(c) you, or a dependant living with you, in the affected property, have developed a medical condition (such as a severe handicap causing inability to negotiate stairs) which necessitates selling and which is not related to the proposed scheme;

(d) you, or a dependant living with you, in the affected property, have a medical condition which is likely to be severely aggravated by the effects of the construction work or the use of the highway and this is supported by satisfactory written medical evidence. However, as this reason is linked to the construction or use of the road, we will not normally make an offer to buy earlier than nine months in advance of the start of the construction of the road. If you make an application on medical grounds early in the life of a scheme, you may be asked to re-apply later when the scheme reaches the relevant stage.

7. Noise and diminution in value

We will not normally offer to buy your property unless we are of the opinion that it will be seriously affected by BOTH diminution in value AND noise arising during the construction period or during the first year following the opening of the road to traffic (see paragraph 3 above for an explanation of serious effect). An exception is when the accepted reason for moving is based upon medical grounds as set out in paragraph 6(d) above.

APPLICATIONS AND OFFERS

8. Agreement to purchase

We normally expect to arrive at a decision on a properly completed application within three months of its receipt. If we offer to buy, the offer will be open for acceptance by you for one month and will be subject to agreement on price and exchange of contracts within six months of the date of the offer. If you fail to meet these timescales the offer to purchase may be withdrawn.

9. Compensation

We will offer to buy your property at a price, assessed at the date of the offer, which disregards the scheme proposals. You will be required to bear your surveyor's and legal fees and moving expenses except where your reason for sale is related to the proposed scheme. In cases where the reason for sale is related to the proposed scheme, such as medical conditions as described in paragraph 6(d), we will also reimburse your agents and legal fees and we may also make payments for Disturbance. We will not make Home Loss payments.

10. How to apply

Use the copy of Form G1 attached as Appendix 2 of these Guidelines, or contact any of the Highways Agency offices listed in appendix 3 and ask for a further copy. When you, or your agent, have completed it, send it together with all the attachments to the appropriate office set out in appendix 3.

You should note that these Guidelines may be amended or withdrawn at any time without notice. Please check with one of the Highways Agency offices to ensure that this is the current version.

Appendix 1: Glossary of terms related to Noise Measurement and Typical Noise levels.

Appendix 2: Form G1.

Appendix 3: List of Relevant Highway Agency Offices addresses and telephone numbers.

APPENDIX 1

1. Glossary of terms related to noise measurement dB(A): dB or decibel is the unit used for the measurement of sound on a logarithmic scale. (A) is the weighting applied to the decibel unit to represent the frequency response of the human ear.

L10(18 hour): The arithmetic mean of the hourly $L_{10}$ noise levels between 0600 and 2400 hours on a normal working day. $L_{10}$ is the noise level exceeded for one tenth of a period of one hour.

Leq: The equivalent continuous sound level in dB(A). This is the sound level which, if maintained continuously for a stated period of time, would give the equivalent amount of noise energy as the varying levels would over the same period.

2. Typical noise levels

0 dB(A): Threshold of hearing

35 dB(A): Quiet bedroom

40 dB(A): Library

50 dB(A): Ordinary conversation

60 dB(A): Office environment

62.5 dB(A): Communication starts becoming difficult

70 dB(A): Passenger car (60 km/h at seven metres distance)

81 dB(A): Modern twin-engined jet

83 dB(A): Heavy diesel lorry (40 km/h at seven metres distance)

90 dB(A): Hazard to hearing from continuous exposure

95 dB(A): Pneumatic drill (unsilenced) at seven metres

120 dB(A): Threshold of pain.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his proposals to widen the M42. [35998]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Iain Mills, dated 10 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about proposals to widen the M42.

The original intention was to widen the motorway between its junctions with the M5 at Junction 1 and the M6 at Junction 7. We consulted the public about proposals for widening in June 1994. As you know, following the road programme review in 1995, it was decided that the more pressing need was to widen the section from Junction 3A (the M40 connection) north to Junction 7 and a scheme for that length was placed in the main programme. We are currently reviewing it to see whether the scheme objectives can be met in a more cost effective way. In doing so, we shall take account of the responses to the earlier proposals.

The section from Junction 1A to 3 is now for the longer term. Work on all longer term schemes will be taken forward as the main programme is completed.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the criteria and methodology used by the Highways Agency to establish loss of value to properties affected by widening of the M42. [35997]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Iain Mills, dated 10 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking if he would publish the criteria and methodology used to establish the loss of value to properties affected by the M42 widening.

The criteria and methodology used for the M42 are the same as for any other road scheme. In the case of discretionary purchase the published guidelines explain that diminution is the amount by which a property has been or will be reduced in value due to the road scheme and is normally expressed as a percentage of the assessed unaffected market value. Diminution in value of less than 15% would not normally be considered to have seriously affected enjoyment of the property. Diminution will be assessed by our valuer by applicants may submit any valuation advice they have obtained. In assessing the unaffected market price the valuer is instructed to disregard all scheme effects including the effects on a property valuation caused by the local purchase of property and its tenanting or subsequent resale by the Highways Agency. If, on the bases of the external examination, diminution is assessed at less than 15%, the valuer should consider whether an internal examination is likely to have a material effect on the valuations and, if it is considered it will, should seek to carry out and report on this basis.

Signposts (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the director of the Highways Agency concerning motorway signposts to Bolton at the M6–M61 junction; and if he will make a statement. [36263]

Mr. Watts: The Highways Agency is signing Bolton in the way explained in my letter of 2 May to my hon. Friend.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what repair work has had to be undertaken on the approach roads to the second Severn crossing as a result of defective steel work; and what has been the effect on traffic flows. [35987]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Spellar, dated 10 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the approach roads to the Second Severn Crossing.

Defects in some of the welding and some lack of fit were found in steelwork to some of the bridges but I am pleased to say that all the defects have now been put right. All but a very small number of weld defects were repaired prior to the opening of the motorway to traffic. Those repairs carried out after the opening involved minor traffic management at Pilning Roundabout, which did not affect traffic flows.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the remuneration of catering personnel employed in newly privatised rail services. [36163]

Mr. Watts: None.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the budget allocated to Cheshire county council for insulation against transport noise in each of the last five years. [36540]

Mr. Norris: The resources that my Department allocates to local authorities for construction or improvement of transport infrastructure may, where appropriate, be used partly to cover the cost of insulation against traffic noise, but we do not normally keep separate records of this element of scheme costs.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the budget allocated to Cheshire county council by his Department for (a) new road building projects and (b) road maintenance for each of the last five years. [36536]

Mr. Norris: Allocations to Cheshire for new road building projects and principal road maintenance are as follows:

£ million

| | New roads | Road maintenance |
|---|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 16.169 | 4.480 |
| 1993–94 | 13.995 | 7.520 |
| 1994–95 | 12.325 | 5.429 |
| 1995–96 | 16.728 | 4.915 |
| 1996–97 | 17.820 | 3.090 |

My Department funds only structural maintenance of principal roads. Most central Government support for highway maintenance expenditure comes from the Department of the Environment through the local government finance system.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the budget allocated to Cheshire county council by his Department for (a) street lighting improvements and (b) traffic calming measures for each of the last five years. [36537]

Mr. Norris: None of the resources that my Department has allocated to Cheshire county council in the last five years has been specifically targeted on street lighting or traffic calming. It is for the council to decide the proportion of its minor works, packages and local safety scheme allocations it wishes to spend on these services.

Allocations to Cheshire for minor works, packages and local safety schemes in the last five years are as follows:

1992–93: £0.529 million

1993–94: £1.017 million

1994–95: £0.940 million

1995–96: £1,286 million

1996–97: £1.284 million

Driving Theory Test Centres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which driving theory test centres have been set up within 20 miles of another centre serving a district whose population density is between 1,250 persons per square kilometre and 100 persons per square kilometre. [36298]

Mr. Norris: The table lists driving theory test centres located within 20 miles of a centre situated in a district with a population density between 1,250 and 100 persons per square kilometre.

Windscreen Insurance Discs

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is studying the advantages of windscreen insurance discs; and what progress she has made. [36389]

Mr. Norris: We are awaiting the results of the insurance industry's study of the comparative benefits of various measures to tackle motor insurance evasion before reaching any conclusion.

Sleeping Policemen

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the extent to which the increased use of sleeping policemen has affected response times of the emergency services.[36237]

Mr. Norris: Departmental guidance to local highway authorities has been to introduce less severe speed reduction measures along relevant routes. Speed cushions have become increasingly chosen for such routes, and the Road Hump Regulations 1996 (SI 1483), have been written to encompass their design and use. In 1994, to minimise the effect that traffic calming may have on emergency service response times, a code of practice for fire and ambulance services traffic calming was agreed. The Department of Transport, in conjunction with the Joint Committee on Fire Brigade Operations, the Department of Health's ambulance policy advisory group and the local authority associations, commends the code to its members.

Road Traffic Casualties

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the number of road traffic casualties in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years; [36538]

(2) if he will list the number of road traffic casualties involving (a) buses and coaches and (b) heavy goods vehicles in (i) Crewe and Nantwich and (ii) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36539]

All casualties by area and road user type: GB: 1991 to 1995

Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with whom he has discussed the effect of European Commission plans to cut exhaust emissions of vehicles on new car prices and costs to petrol and diesel fuel vehicle users; and if he will make a statement. [36000]

Mr. Norris: Regular discussions are held between this Department and other Government Departments and also motor and oil industry organisations as to the implications of new European Union proposals affecting vehicle and fuel standards.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year.[36016]

Mr. Norris: Separate records of taxi cab fares are not maintained.

Regional Bus Monopolies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to prevent the creation of private sector regional bus monopolies. [36038]

Mr. Norris: The Government believe that concentration in the bus industry is properly regulated through the general competition law regime, principally merger control. Mergers are considered on their merits by the competition authorities to determine whether there are competition issues that should be addressed.

Road Accidents

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents involving under-age drivers occurred (a) in the Greater Manchester area and (b) nationally during each of the past three years; and how many fatalities resulted from such accidents. [36265]

Mr. Norris: The information is shown in the following tables.

Accidents involving an under-aged[1] car driver in the Greater Manchester area: 1993 to 1995

Trunk Roads

Sir Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the control of development adjacent to trunk roads; and if he will make a statement. [37120]

Mr. Watts: Good communications are vital to the economy. It is therefore important that trunk roads continue to meet their prime function of catering for long distance through traffic. We will ensure that they do so by maintaining strict control of new accesses to them. This applies particularly to motorways—where we will continue to consider new access only for motorway service areas, maintenance compounds and major transport centres such as airports—and to high standard rural trunk roads of strategic importance.

Where new or modified accesses from trunk roads to new development are allowed, or where the traffic demands on a trunk road would materially increase as a result of new development, we will also continue to ensure that those responsible for the development pay for any highway works needed to cater for the resulting extra traffic.

I am nevertheless concerned that the additional costs imposed on developers under this policy have sometimes been excessive. In some cases, this has led to much-needed investment being lost altogether. I have therefore today issued new guidelines on the principles which the Highways Agency will adopt when considering development proposals affecting trunk roads. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Of particular importance is that developers will in future be expected to pay only for improvements necessary to ensure that conditions on the trunk road are, as far as possible, no worse than if the development had not taken place. Other changes affect the design life of developer-funded highway works; and introduce greater flexibility to take account of environmental concerns and existing constraints on the network, and the potential to increase the use of public transport, cycling and walking.

I am confident that the new guidelines will significantly reduce burdens on intending developers and encourage sustainable development while maintaining effective protection for the most important trunk roads.

Wheel Loss

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions in the past five years his Department has issued advice intended to reduce the danger of road traffic accidents attributable to lost wheels to (a) manufacturers and (b) operators of heavy commercial vehicles. [35241]

Mr. Norris: At the Institute of Road Transport Engineers conference in May 1991, my Department launched a pamphlet dealing with the subject of wheel loss and giving advice to operators.

We are in constant contact with manufacturers and operator's trade associations on this problem through my Department's representation on the British Standards Institution committee for wheels and tyres and other forums.

Dartford-Thurrock Crossings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the impact on the public sector borrowing requirement of the Dartford-Thurrock river crossings in each year since 1988. [35830]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 8 July 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours, dated 10 July 1996:

As you know, the Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the impact on the public sector borrowing requirement of the Dartford-Thurrock river crossings in each year since 1988.

The impact on the PSBR of the Dartford-Thurrock river crossings can be shown by the net expenditure incurred by the Department of Transport/Highways Agency since 1988 and is as follows.

| | £000s |
|---|---|
| 1988–89 | 1,105.7 |
| 1989–90 | 3,717.3 |
| 1990–91 | 22,804.5 |
| 1991–92 | 20,486.6 |
| 1992–93 | 6,327.7 |
| 1993–94 | 4,051.2 |
| 1994–95 | 4,993.8 |
| 1995–96 | 2,502.6 |
| 1996–97 | [1]116.8 |
| Total | 66,106.2 |

[1] To the end of June.

These are net totals as some expenditure incurred by the Department of Transport has been offset by contributions by Dartford River Crossing Ltd.

The above totals not only include works costs on the three river crossings but also on related project work such as traffic control systems, toll booths and works on the approach roads.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce the regulations to apply section 20A of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, covering compensation to mobile home owners. [36326]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on 25 April, Official Report, column 248.

Central Railway plc

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he had received by 1 July about the Central Railway plc proposal to build a new railway; and how many were (a) in favour and (b) against. [36479]

Mr. Watts: Some 13,650 representations have been received, of which about 200 support the proposal and 13,450 are opposed. These figures include representations which, having regard to the postal dispute or certain other considerations, have been accepted as valid although they were received after 1 July.

Rail Franchising

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission a survey of the wages of catering staff in privatised rail franchises. [36170]

Mr. Watts: No.

Merchant Navy Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher), of 17 June, Official Report, column 342, what statistical information relating to Merchant Navy seafarers was discontinued; when his Department decided to discontinue the collection and publication of these statistics and for what reasons; if the decision was announced to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [36356]

Mr. Norris: The statistics no longer published were based on the Merchant Navy Establishment, a register, maintained by the General Council of British Shipping. The register was a list of seafarers available for employment under National Maritime Board agreements. The Merchant Navy Establishment was discontinued in September 1990, following six months' consultation between the General Council of British Shipping and the trade unions. As the statistics were a by-product of a register held outside Government for non-statistical reasons, no announcement was made to Parliament.

Statistics of seafarers employed on vessels entered with the Chamber of Shipping continue to be available from the chamber's fleet and manpower inquiry and are published by the Department in merchant fleet statistics.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Budgets

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will list for each local education authority in England (a) the potential school budget expressed as a percentage of its standard spending assessment, (b) the potential school budget expressed as a percentage of its general schools budget and (c) the totals and averages for England for (a) and (b) for the year 1996–97; and if she will make a statement; [35851]

(2) if she will list for each local education authority in England (a) the education standard spending assessment, (b) the general school budget, (c) the potential school budget and (d) the general school budget expressed as a percentage of its standard spending assessment for 1996–97; and if she will make a statement. [35850]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table provides the information requested. The entries for general schools budget and potential schools budget have been derived from the local management of schools budget statements produced in respect of LEA—maintained schools under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988, and therefore excludes expenditure, recouped from LEAs, on grant-maintained schools.

Education Awards Regulations

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many representations she has received since 1990 from (a) hon. Members, (b) local education authorities and (c) education and other professional bodies regarding the effects of section 12(2)(a) of the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations. [36112]

Mr. Forth: The Department has received a number of representations on this subject from various parties but does not keep information in the form requested.

Sex Offenders

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if her Department keeps a list of suspected sex offenders; [36506]

(2) if she will list, in respect of those lists of convicted sex offenders held by her Department which may be consulted, (a) the number of names on each list currently, (b) those who have access to each list, (c) what the lists are used for, (d) how long it takes on average to check a reference with such lists, (e) under what circumstances people are placed on the lists, and (f) how the procedure described in (e) above is conveyed to local authorities. [36505]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not keep lists of convicted or suspected sex offenders. It does maintain a list, list 99, which contains details of people who are either barred from teaching and related employment in England and Wales or are subject to restrictions on their employment. Some of these people have been convicted of sex offences, but the list does not contain any explanation of why an individual has been barred.

Teachers (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the number of teachers employed by the Cheshire education authority for each of the last five years. [36503]

Mr. Robin Squire: The full-time equivalent numbers of teachers employed by Cheshire education authority, in the nursery, primary, secondary and special education sector, are shown as follows. Teachers in grant-maintained schools are excluded throughout.

| As at January of: | Full-time equivalent |
|---|---|
| 1992[1] | 8,210 |
| 1993 | 8,140 |
| 1994 | 8,040 |
| 1995 | 8,120 |
| 1996 | 8,190 |

[1] Teachers in sixth form colleges are included in 1992 but excluded thereafter.

Class Sizes (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the average class size for schools in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years; and what was the national average. [36501]

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is shown in the following table:

Average class size in classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools

Position in January each year

| | Cheshire LEA Area | | England | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Primary | Secondary | Primary | Secondary |

School Security

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to respond to the recommendations of the working group on schools security published in May in respect of the provision of additional long-term funding specifically allocated for improving school security. [36488]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government have accepted all the recommendations of the working group on school security. New money earmarked specifically for school security will be provided under the grants for education support and training programme in 1997–98. The DFEE also contributed £2 million to this year's Home Office closed circuit television challenge scheme so that an extra 112 schools can install security cameras.

Higher Education Entrants (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the number of students from Cheshire entering higher education in each of the last five years; and what was the national average. [36504]

Mr. Forth: Centrally held information on student numbers is not available at local education authority level. The following tables show the number of new mandatory awards and discretionary awards made to higher education students by Cheshire local education authority and by all local education authorities in England, for the years 1990–91 to 1994–95, the latest year for which data are available.

New higher education awards made by Cheshire local education authority

| | Academic years | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1990–91 | 1991–92 | 1992–93 | 1993–94 | 1994–95 |

| All new higher education awards | 197.9 | 230.9 | 268.8 | 282.8 | 276.6 |

[1] National figures have been grossed up to compensate for partial returns.

[2] 1991–92 does not include data in respect of the London residuary body estimated to be 8,600 mandatory awards; an accurate breakdown of these figures is not available.

Bus Passes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines her Department issues in respect of the issue of bus passes to schoolchildren who live more than three miles away from their secondary school. [36395]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department issued guidance on the provision of home to school transport to local education authorities in England in a letter of 21 January 1994, a copy of which is in the Library. This makes it clear that free transport is always necessary for pupils of compulsory school age—five to 16—who attend their nearest suitable school if it is beyond statutory walking distance. LEAs also have a discretionary power to assist pupils whose parents have chosen to send them to a school other than their nearest suitable one, even if it is beyond walking distance, by paying their reasonable travelling expenses either in whole or in part.

School Closures (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the number of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools closed in (i) Crewe and Nantwich and (ii) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36500]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table gives the numbers of primary and secondary schools for which closure proposals were approved for implementation in Cheshire for each of the last five years. No closure proposals were approved for the Crewe and Nantwich area. In many cases, schools which are formally closed aré amalgamated with other schools or are replaced by new schools.

| | Primary | Secondary |
|---|---|---|
| 1991 | 10 | 2 |
| 1992 | 18 | — |
| 1993 | 9 | 1 |
| 1994 | 12 | 2 |

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will update all the information printed in her answers of 27 November 1995, Official Report, column 445, and 30 November 1995, Official Report, columns 854–55, regarding assisted places provision and finance in three named schools in the Manchester, Gorton constituency. [36481]

Mrs. Gillan: Actual expenditure on the assisted places scheme in the 1995–96 financial year was £104.76 million. Provision for 1996–97, when the expansion of the scheme begins, is £117 million.

The figures relating to the three named schools in the Manchester, Gorton constituency remain unchanged from those given on 27 and 30 November 1995 for the current academic year 1995–96, pending receipt of the schools' final claims.

The numbers of assisted pupils at each school in the forthcoming academic year 1996–97, and the amounts spent on them, will depend on parental demand and take-up of places. Under the expansion programme, Manchester grammar school has been allocated 10 additional entry places, Manchester high school for girls, 10 such places, and William Hulme's grammar school, 30 such places.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Test Ban Treaty

18. Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the comprehensive test ban treaty negotiations. [35178]

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the negotiations in Geneva towards completion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty. [35950]

Mr. David Davis: The negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty adjourned in Geneva on 28 June, without agreement but with the chairman of the ad hoc committee, Ambassador Ramaker of the Netherlands, having tabled a full treaty text. Ambassador Ramaker has asked delegations to study this carefully with a view to reaching agreement when the conference on disarmament reconvenes on 29 July. We are now doing so and shall work for the earliest possible agreement.

Saudi Arabia

20. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next meet his counterpart in Saudi Arabia to discuss British-Saudi relations. [35181]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary had extensive discussions with the Saudi Foreign Minister during his visit to Jedda last week. Relations between the UK and Saudi Arabia are in very good shape.

Western Sahara

21. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to persuade the Government of Morocco to reach a settlement with Polisario in the Western Sahara. [35182]

Mr. Hanley: We continue to urge both Morocco and Polisario to co-operate fully with the UN and its operation in the Western Sahara, MINURSO, in reaching a settlement to the conflict.

I stressed this point with the Moroccan Deputy Foreign Minister during his recent visit.

Indonesia

22. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK relations with Indonesia. [35183]

Mr. Hanley: UK relations with Indonesia are very good.

China

23. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Chinese Government about abuses of human rights in that country. [35184]

Mr. Hanley: I raised human rights in China during my talks with Chinese leaders in Peking in January, and again with the Chinese Foreign Minister in The Hague on 20 April.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations between the United Kingdom and the People's Republic of China. [36266]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Our relationship with China is of great importance—particularly because of our shared interest in the successful transfer of sovereignty over Hong Kong next year.

Kashmir

24. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the conduct of recent elections held in Kashmir. [35185]

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recent election procedures in Jammu and Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [35190]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the oral answer that my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) earlier today.

Middle East Peace Process

25. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current developments in the middle east peace process. [35186]

Mr. Hanley: We give full support to the continuation of the peace process and look to both Israel and the Palestinians to fulfil their undertakings under the Oslo accords.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process in the Palestine—Israel dispute. [36274]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We welcome the confirmation by Prime Minister Netanyahu of his intention to proceed with the peace process.

We look forward to full implementation of the Israel—Palestine interim agreement, and the declaration of principles. Resumption of negotiations with Syria is also important.

Yousef Salam

26. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 151, to the hon. Members for Linlithgow and for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) and his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East of 24 June, Official Report, column 14, what discussions he has had with the German authorities about the content of the Stasi files referred to and the time scale proposed by the German authorities for a trial of Yousef Salam alias Yassir al-Shuraidi. [35187]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have had occasional contact with the German authorities about the evidence implicating Yassir al-Shuraidi in the 1986 bombing of the "La Belle" discotheque. The investigation into the bombing remains a matter for the German authorities.

We understand from the German authorities that no date has yet been set for Yassir al-Shuraidi's trial.

South Africa

27. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recent elections in South Africa. [35188]

Mr. Hanley: The local government elections in KwaZulu-Natal on 26 June completed the process of democratic elections in South Africa. We are pleased that these elections took place in a generally peaceful and orderly way, and we wish the newly elected local authorities every success.

Sudan

28. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he (a) has made to and (b) received from, the Government of Sudan since the signing of the peace charter in Sudan. [35189]

Mr. Hanley: I discussed the political charter and other matters with the Sudanese ambassador on 2 July.

We look to all sides in the Sudanese civil war to make genuine moves towards peace.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government on the incidence of female genital mutilation in the north of Sudan. [36171]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have made no formal representations to the Government of Sudan on this subject.

At the last session of the UN Commission for Human Rights, in April 1996, the United Kingdom co-sponsored a resolution which stressed the obligations of states to enact and enforce legislation against the perpetrators of acts such as female genital mutilation.

Western European Union

30. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current criteria for the admission of new members to the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement. [35191]

Mr. David Davis: Article XI of the modified Brussels treaty permits the members of Western European Union, by agreement, to invite any other state to accede to the treaty on conditions to be agreed between them and the states so invited.

Such conditions would need to take into account the facts that the mutual defence guarantee of the modified Brussels treaty implies prior membership of NATO and that at Maastricht EU members were invited to accede to WEU on conditions to be agreed in accordance with article XI of the modified Brussels treaty.

Common Fisheries Policy

31. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress he has made towards re-negotiating the common fisheries policy at the intergovernmental conference. [35192]

Mr. David Davis: The UK will shortly be tabling proposals in the IGC to address the problem of quota hopping.

Nigeria

32. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current political situation in Nigeria. [35193]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) Official Report, columns 373-74, on 3 April; we remain deeply concerned about the lack of progress towards restoring human rights and democracy in Nigeria.

Cyprus

33. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the political situation in Cyprus. [35194]

Mr. David Davis: The Cyprus problem has gone unresolved for too long. In May, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary appointed Sir David Hannay to strengthen the Government's efforts to work with all parties concerned to bring about a solution.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances marriages at St. Andrew's Anglican church, Kyrenia, Cyprus, are recognised by United Kingdom authorities; and if he will make a statement. [36224]

Mr. Davis: The practice of this Department is to recognise, for its administrative purposes, the validity of church marriages conducted in northern Cyprus, provided that they are conducted in accordance with all local requirements, and are valid in the place of celebration. The legal validity of any particular marriage will depend on the facts of the individual case and would be a matter for the courts to determine.

Iran

34. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations between Britain and Iran. [35195]

Mr. Hanley: We restored relations with Iran on 27 September 1990.

We and our European Union partners made it clear at Edinburgh in December 1992 that improvements in Iran's behaviour, particularly on human rights, the fatwa on Mr. Rushdie and terrorism, would be important in determining the extent to which closer relations and confidence in Iran could be developed. Our approach remains unchanged.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the threat of Iranian-sponsored terrorism in respect of United Kingdom personnel abroad. [35344]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We remain alert to the threat to UK interests from Iranian-sponsored terrorism both in the United Kingdom and overseas and take all appropriate precautions against that threat.

Hong Kong

35. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs when he last met the Chinese ambassador to discuss Hong Kong. [35196]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary last met Jiang Enzhu on 15 February. Our discussions with the Chinese authorities on Hong Kong issues take place at various levels in capitals and elsewhere.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people are currently living in camps in Hong Kong; and what is his policy on their future. [36275]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: On 1 June 1996 there were 18,125 Vietnamese living in camps in Hong Kong. This includes 1,347 refugees, for whom the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is responsible, 332 people undergoing screening to determine whether they are genuine refugees, and 16,446 non-refugees whose future lies in Vietnam. It remains our objective to complete the repatriation of non-refugees before the transfer of sovereignty over Hong Kong.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.[36277]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Hong Kong in January and looks forward to visiting again before too long. His travel plans are not yet firm.

Yemen

36. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with the Yemen. [35197]

Mr. Hanley: We enjoy good relations with Yemen. The recent successful visit of the Yemeni Foreign Minister to the United Kingdom, and mine to Yemen last year, demonstrated our mutual wish further to improve co-operation.

Burma

37. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent events in Burma. [35198]

Mr. Hanley: We remain deeply concerned about the situation in Burma. We issued a statement on 22 May. Our ambassador in Rangoon followed this up with a démarche to the State Law and Order Restoration Council on 7 June.

Together with our EU partners, we have consistently pressed the SLORC to work with Aung San Suu Kyi and Burma's other democratic groups to achieve national reconciliation and democratic reform. We shall continue to do so.

We make it clear to the SLORC that resumption of normal relations is conditional on progress in this and other key areas, including human rights.

Intergovernmental Conference

38. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate as to when the current IGC will end. [35199]

Mr. David Davis: There is no fixed timetable for the intergovernmental conference. But Heads of Government confirmed at the Florence European Council in June that the conference should end by mid-1997 if possible.

Council of Ministers

39. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are currently in place to enable the general public to be informed of the topics to be considered at each meeting of the Council of Ministers of the European Community. [35200]

Mr. David Davis: Details of the topics to be discussed at forthcoming Council meetings are published in the Official Report on a monthly basis.

English Language Teaching

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the British Council and the private sector compete on an equal basis in respect of teaching English as a foreign language. [36141]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The British Council does not teach English in this country and is not therefore in direct competition with English language schools in the UK. We try to ensure that so far as possible the Council's network of teaching centres overseas competes on an equal footing with the private sector by insisting that it operates on a self-funding basis and is not subsidised from the grants in aid from this Department.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the involvement of his Department in the effort to reduce the illegal import of drugs from Colombia. [36278]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Kingdom has provided over £13 million worth of drugs-related assistance to Colombia since 1989. This has included training and equipment for various Government Departments and agencies responsible for drug control. This Department's assistance has since 1993 focused on anti-drugs training for the Colombian anti-narcotics police. In recent weeks, this Department has paid for a course in container profiling to assist the detection of drugs in sea freight at the port of Barranquila and for the production of educational videos for use in drug prevention work in Medillin.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current United Nations policies to combat drug abuse; and if he will make a statement. [36276]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Kingdom strongly supports the leading role played by the United Nations drug control programme in co-ordinating the international fight against the scourge of drugs. We particularly support its regional and sub-regional approach, based on solid work at national level, and its efforts to promote greater focus on drug control issued in all relevant parts of the UN system. The United Kingdom is currently the third largest donor to the programme, to which three Government Departments, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Overseas Development Agency and the Home Office, all contribute funds. UN drugs control projects funded by Her Majesty's Government are carefully monitored.

Council of Europe

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet his opposite numbers in the Council of Europe. [36280]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no firm plans for a meeting with his opposite numbers in the Council of Europe. The next scheduled Council of Europe ministerial meeting is in Strasbourg on 6 and 7 November 1996.

British Council

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British Council's promotion of British interests overseas. [36279]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The British Council forms an integral part of the UK's overall diplomatic and aid effort overseas. Its activities are at a record level, with the Council operating 228 offices in 109 countries compared with 108 offices in 79 countries in 1980.

Former Yugoslavia (War Criminals)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made as regards the arrest and extradition of indicted war criminals in the former Yugoslavia, with particular reference to Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic. [35239]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have repeatedly called upon the parties to execute all arrest warrants issued by the international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, including those issued against Dr. Karadzic and General Mladic.

Implementation force troops will arrest anyone indicted by the tribunal whom they come across in the course of their duties, should the opportunity arise. As IFOR forces increase their presence throughout Bosnia in the run-up to the elections, indicted persons will find themselves at greater risk of arrest.

EU Directives

Mr. Brian David Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many directives were approved by the Council of Ministers in each year since 1992. [35240]

Mr. David Davis: According to the latest data in the Commission's CELEX database on Community legislation, the number of directives adopted by the Council is as follows:

1992: 93

1993: 66

1994: 49

1995: 38

1996: 6

The CELEX database figures do not include acts of day-to-day management whose validity does not exceed a few weeks and purely informative documents of minor importance.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of China concerning the use of child labour; and if he will make a statement. [36318]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We continue to be deeply concerned about reports of the exploitation of child labour in China. We take every suitable opportunity to raise our concerns about all forms of human rights abuse in China with the Chinese authorities, both bilaterally and in conjunction with our EU partners. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs did so during his talks with Chinese leaders in Peking in January, and again with the Chinese Foreign Minister in The Hague on 20 April.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Pakistan concerning child and bonded labour; and if he will make a statement. [36320]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We regularly raise our concerns about child and bonded labour with the Government of Pakistan. Poverty clearly exacerbates the problem, but is not an excuse for abusive child labour; there is no justification for bonded labour. We welcome steps taken to improve the situation, but much remains to be done.

Bahrain

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whom the Minister of State met to discuss human rights during his recent visit to Bahrain; and if he will make a statement. [36322]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: During his recent visit to Bahrain, the Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), discussed human rights with the Amir, the Prime Minister and the Ministers of the Interior and of Foreign Affairs.

Russia (British Visas)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the current facilities are for people who are waiting while applying for visas at (a) the British embassy in Moscow and (b) the British consulate general in St. Petersburg. [36323]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The visa section in Moscow has been completely refurbished and enlarged this year. There are eight counter positions for visa officers, seating for 108 applicants and standing room for a further 50, clear signposting and washroom facilities. Shelter is provided for those queuing outside.

The St. Petersburg visa section moves shortly into much improved and larger premises. These will provide for three visa officer positions at the reception counter, public seating for 20 and standing for 50, and washroom facilities.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the average time taken to process a visa application at (a) the British embassy in Moscow and (b) the British consulate general in St. Petersburg in each of the last five years. [36324]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The target time laid down in best practice for processing straightforward visit visa applications at all entry clearance issuing posts, is the same day if practical or 24 hours. Bulk applications from local courier firms of travel agents are processed, by agreement, in 10 days.

Moscow and St. Petersburg have operated according to these target times.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications have been refused in each of the last five years from (a) the British embassy in Moscow and (b) the British consulate general in St. Petersburg. [36325]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The information is as follows:

Visa refusals at Moscow:

1991: 1,087

1992: 1,502

1993: 1,624

1994: 1,894

1995: 3,121

Visa refusals at St. Petersburg, where the visa service started in November 1993:

1993: 116

1994: 622

1995: 762

The rates of refusal represent 3 per cent. and 4 per cent. respectively of applications received.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

World Bank (Child Labour)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the World bank in the consideration of development projects concerning child labour. [36319]

Mr. Hanley: No formal representations have been made to the World bank concerning child labour. The ODA played an active role in the World bank consultation on the world development report 1995 "Workers in an Integrated World" and helped ensure that the issue of child labour was properly addressed in the document.

TREASURY

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are currently claiming unemployment benefit; and what was the figure in 1979. [35483]

Mrs. Angela Knight: On the consistent, seasonally adjusted basis, the number of people claiming unemployment-related benefits—unemployment benefit, income support or national insurance credits—in the United Kingdom was 2,167,600 in May 1996 and 1,086,800 in May 1979.

Fish Export Certificates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of how fish importers can verify EUR1 certificates issued by customs of exporting countries of fish or prawns; [35653]

(2) what assessment he has made of how fish importers can verify the origins of imported fish and prawns under the present EUR1 certificate system. [35652]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Advice to importers is set out in customs notice 826. This recognises the difficulties that importers may experience in trying to establish whether a certificate is valid or whether goods shown on it are eligible for preferential tariff treatment. The notice warns of the potential further duty liability and advises importers to consider the advantages of including a clause in their contracts allowing them to recover any such duty charge from the supplier. Whether importers chose to take precautions against such business risks is, however, a matter of commercial judgment.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to claim compensation for inaccurate EUR1 certificates from the customs offices of exporting countries. [35522]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The trade agreements between the European Community and third countries do not provide for the payment of compensation.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what redress his Department (a) has taken and (b) proposes to take against customs offices of an exporting country who issue EUR1 certificates which turn out to be inaccurate. [35577]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The UK has made strong representations concerning these difficulties at EC meetings and gained considerable support from other member states. At the end of May, the Council of Ministers asked the Commission to produce proposals by 31 December 1996, taking into consideration suggestions by the UK and other member states, to tackle the problem of retrospective duty demands arising from inaccurate preference documents.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to eradicate fraud in respect of the issuing of invalid EUR1 certificates. [35521]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The customs authorities in the country of export are responsible for issuing EUR1s, verifying any certificates returned by foreign import authorities and considering sanctions against exporters who abuse the system. Customs confirms that appropriate action is taken against UK exporters who are found to have made false EUR1 declarations.

Isle of Wight (Tax System)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Isle of Wight council to give the Isle of Wight a separate tax system. [35592]

Mr. Jack: I have received no representations from the Isle of Wight council about giving the Isle of Wight a separate tax system.

EU Contributions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the United Kingdom's net contribution to the EU for each year since 1975 in 1975 prices. [35708]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom's net contributions to the EU for the period 1975–76 to 1994–95, in 1975–76 prices are set out in the table.

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1975–76 | 16 |
| 1976–77 | 198 |
| 1977–78 | 434 |
| 1978–79 | 535 |
| 1979–80 | 528 |
| 1980–81 | 118 |
| 1981–82 | 104 |
| 1982–83 | 317 |
| 1983–84 | 395 |
| 1984–85 | 443 |
| 1985–86 | 368 |
| 1986–87 | 439 |
| 1987–88 | 618 |
| 1988–89 | 374 |
| 1989–90 | 733 |
| 1990–91 | 605 |
| 1991–92 | 246 |
| 1992–93 | 543 |
| 1993–94 | 533 |
| 1994–95 | 392 |

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those constituencies (a) he and (b) members of his Department have visited in the last three months on official business and those constituencies he intends to visit in the next three months; and if he will make a statement. [35759]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My ministerial colleagues and I have visited various parliamentary constituencies as part of our official duties. We also expect to make further visits in the future. A detailed list of the various places visited by five Ministers over a period of six months could be compiled only at the cost of a great deal of official time and expense to ensure complete accuracy.

Tobacco Industry (Employment)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to protect the employment of employees in the tobacco industry; and if he will make a statement. [36045]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Government's role is to create the right conditions for employment growth across the whole economy through a stable macro-economic climate and a flexible labour market. Excessive employment protection can damage employment prospects by acting as a disincentive for businesses to create jobs.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the extent of revenue losses due to cross-border shopping and tobacco smuggling is currently estimated to be; [36157]

(2) if he will make a statement on the discrepancy between the tobacco industry and HM Customs and Excise figures in relation to revenues lost to the Exchequer from cross-border shopping and tobacco smuggling. [36041]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs' estimate of excise duty revenue lost from legitimate personal importation of duty paid tobacco products for the year ending 30 June 1995 is £120 million. Additionally, VAT receipts of £30 million are estimated to have been lost. Thus, the estimate for the total loss of tax revenues from such legitimate cross-border shopping for the year ending 30 June 1995 is £150 million.

Customs does not currently have a reliable estimate of the extent of excise duty losses due to smuggling of tobacco products. It is working with the tobacco and alcoholic drinks industries with the aim of achieving an objective measurement of smuggling of excise goods.

Customs is currently discussing with the tobacco and alcoholic drinks industries the most reliable basis for estimates of revenue lost from the legitimate personal importation of duty paid alcohol and tobacco products.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36006]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Expenditure on taxi cab fares is included in the published running costs.

Building Societies

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many building societies there were in 1976; and how many there are currently. [36462]

Mrs. Angela Knight: At the end of 1976, there were 345 authorised building societies. There are currently 79, including the National and Provincial, which is expected to be acquired by Abbey National plc later this year.

Small Firms

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans next to meet representatives of the small firms sector. [36270]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Chancellor of the Exchequer meets representatives of the small firms sector frequently.

Oil and Gas Revenues

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the cumulative total for Government revenues from oil and gas production from 1979–80 to 1996–97 expressed in 1995–96 prices. [36286]

Mr. Jack: Total receipts of taxes and royalties from North sea oil and gas production are estimated to be about £130 billion from 1979–80 to 1996–97, at 1995–96 prices—measured by the GDP deflator. The summer economic forecast projects North sea tax and royalty receipts of £3.2 billion, and an increase in the GDP deflator of 2¼ per cent., in 1996–97.

Privatisations

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of debt (a) nominally and (b) in 1995–96 prices written off in each of the privatisations and sale of Government assets since 1979 for each company privatised. [36284]

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 13 March, columns 612–13. Since then, Railtrack has been successfully privatised. On that sale, £1,229 million originally allocated to Railtrack on vesting was written off and debt on commercial terms of £589 million injected—1995–96 prices. The revised total for debts written off is therefore £23.78 billion. Debts injected total £14.53 billion.

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the cumulative total privatisation receipts from 1979–80 to 1996–97 in 1995–96 prices. [36285]

Mr. Jack: The cumulative total of privatisation proceeds from 1979–80 to 1995–96, in 1995–96 prices, was £81.3 billion. The Government's privatisation proceeds targets for 1996–97 is £4.5 billion.

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the privatisation receipts since 1979–80 to date for each company privatised (a) cash and (b) at 1995–96 prices. [36283]

Mr. Jack: Table 5.6 of the public expenditure statistical analyses 1996–97 (HMSO Cm 3201) gives privatisation proceeds by sale in cash terms. The following table sets out annual proceeds in cash terms and in 1995–96 prices. It would not be possible to give current price proceeds on a sale-by-sale basis without incurring disproportionate cost.

Privatisation proceeds

| Year | Cash | 1995–96 prices |
|---|---|---|
| 1979–80 | 0.4 | 1.0 |
| 1980–81 | 0.2 | 0.5 |
| 1981–82 | 0.5 | 1.0 |
| 1982–83 | 0.5 | 0.8 |
| 1983–84 | 1.1 | 2.0 |
| 1984–85 | 2.1 | 3.4 |
| 1985–86 | 2.7 | 4.3 |
| 1986–87 | 4.5 | 6.9 |
| 1987–88 | 5.1 | 7.5 |
| 1988–89 | 7.1 | 9.7 |
| 1989–90 | 4.2 | 5.4 |
| 1990–91 | 5.3 | 6.4 |
| 1991–92 | 7.9 | 8.9 |
| 1992–93 | 8.2 | 8.8 |
| 1993–94 | 5.4 | 5.7 |
| 1994–95 | 6.4 | 6.6 |
| 1995–96 | 2.4 | 2.4 |
| Total | 64.0 | 81.3 |

Banks and Building Societies

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the benefits of mutual status; and if he will make a statement. [36463]

Mrs. Angela Knight: During the recently concluded consultation on the draft Building Societies Bill, a number of societies, and others, mentioned the benefits of mutual status. We are currently considering these responses along with all the others we have received.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the difference in operating ratios between retail banks and mutual building societies. [36451]

Mrs. Knight: The rates offered by individual banks and building societies are publicly available, and the financial press provides regular comparisons between them.

British Industry (Investment)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to bring investment in British industry to a level comparable with major competitors. [36271]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Since 1979, the ratio of business investment to GDP has been very similar in the UK to that in most other G7 countries. Our policies to deliver macro-economic stability and strengthen the long-term performance of the economy will continue to promote a climate in which businesses can plan ahead and invest with confidence.

Business Investment

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the future levels of business investment. [36269]

Mrs. Angela Knight: My right hon. and learned Friend is planning to meet the CBI on 12 September. I note that the CBI, in common with virtually all other independent forecasters, expects investment to accelerate in both 1996 and 1997.

Utility Prices

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 286, if he will express in real terms and where the year of privatisation equals 100 the utility component of the RPI including VAT in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest available period for (i) gas prices, (ii) electricity prices, (iii) electricity and gas prices, (iv) water prices and (v) gas, electric and water prices. [36378]

Mr. Jack: The information requested is given in the table:

| | Gas | Electricity | Electricity and gas | Water | Gas, electricity and water |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Year of privatisation | 1986 | 1990 | 1990 | 1989 | 1990 |
| 1979 | 77 | 98 | 94 | 73 | 91 |
| May 1996 | 80 | 100 | 97 | 146 | 104 |

The components of the retail prices index for electricity and gas, and for gas, electricity and water, assume a privatisation year of 1990—the year that electricity utilities were fully privatised. These figures have been deflated by the RPI, and include VAT for gas and electricity.

Tobacco-related Jobs

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what change there has been in the number of tobacco-related jobs in the United Kingdom since 1 January 1993. [36558]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The latest information specific to tobacco-related jobs relates to September 1993. This is shown in the following table. Annual estimates, beginning in September 1995, will be available from September 1996.

Employees in Great Britain: September 1993 (thousands)

| Standard industrial classification 1992 | |
|---|---|
| Manufacture of tobacco products | 8.0 |
| Wholesale of tobacco products | 2.1 |
| Retail sale of tobacco products | 5.2 |
| Total | 15.3 |

Source: ONS.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy for the collection of revenues from commercial trading at car boot sales. [35527]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 July 1996]: Those who trade commercially at car boot sales are expected to meet their tax obligations in the same way as any other trader. Equally, those who fail to meet these obligations are liable to investigation by the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise. The tax authorities are continually on the look-out for any areas where there might be tax evasion.

Control Totals

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in percentage terms the annual alteration in control totals of each Department for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [36254]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 9 July 1996]: These figures can be calculated from table 2.2 of the public expenditure statistical analyses 1996–97, Cm 3201. The latest estimates for 199[illegible] were published in the public expenditure outturn White Paper, Cm 3318, on 9 July.

Pensioners (Taxation)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in receipt of a state pension pay (a) higher rate income tax, (b) basic and lower rate income tax only and (c) the lower rate of tax only. [36358]

Mr. Jack: The esitmated numbers of taxpayers by marginal rate in receipt of state retirement pension—men aged 65 or over and women aged 60 or over—at 1996–97 income levels are given in the table.

| | Number of taxpayers (millions) |
|---|---|
| Lower rate | 1.50 |
| Basic and lower rate | 1.65 |
| Higher rate | 0.15 |
| Total | 3.30 |

HEALTH

GP Fundholding (Wakefield)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the savings held by general practitioner fundholder practices in the Wakefield district has been used under provision 25(2)(c)(i) and (ii) of statutory instrument No. 706 (1996); what measures were used by the local health authority to satisfy itself that such expenditure complied with paragraph 25(3)(b); and what expenditure was devoted to activities which duplicate medical provision at Pontefract general infirmary. [33854]

Mr. Malone: In the first four years of the scheme[1], 15 per cent. of fundholder savings in Wakefield health authority were used on improving practice premises for the benefit of patients.

Regional health authorities were responsible for managing the scheme during this period, including ensuring that savings expenditure was in accordance with regulations. More detailed information is not available centrally.

[1]The latest period for which audited information is available.

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each general practitioner fundholder practice in the Wakefield district the amount (a) of savings by financial year, (b) spent to date and (c) retained in balances; [33855]

(2) what contracts for medical services have been let by general practitioner fundholding practices in the Wakefield district to acute or community NHS trusts lying outside the Wakefield district. [33857]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 368, if he will make it his policy to collect data on the incidence of multiple sclerosis by health authority region. [35964]

Mr. Horam: It is for health authorities to decide how best to determine the local needs of their population and then purchase services accordingly to meet those needs within their available resources.

Migraine

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department is giving to a European randomised double blind trial of BMS-180048 compared with oral sumatriptan and to a placebo in the treatment of acute migraine attacks; and if he will make a statement. [35836]

Mr. Malone: The Department is not contributing funds to this trial, which is industry sponsored.

Mental Illness

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned relating to (a) attentional bias in schizophrenia and (b) severe mood disorder and mood changes over time; and if he will make a statement. [35825]

Mr. Bowis: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Cancer Services (Trent)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into the provision and effectiveness of services for cancer in the Trent NHS region; if he will make an assessment of progress towards "The Health of the Nation" targets; and if he will make a statement. [35837]

Mr. Horam: The national health service executive has funded the Trent institute of health services research to look at the provision and effectiveness of services for cancer in Trent, and the assessment of progress against "The Health of the Nation" targets. This work commenced in October 1993 and is scheduled for completion around September 1997.

General Practitioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to make GPs directly accountable to local health authorities; and if he will make a statement. [36178]

Mr. Malone: We are currently undertaking a major consultative exercise on the future development of primary health care services.

"Primary Care: The Future", the report on the first stage, was published on 10 June 1996.

We will decide on further action after the second stage of consultation is completed in the autumn.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will ensure that community health councils are given the right formally to inspect those services provided on general practitioner premises which were formerly provided by NHS trusts or health authorities; and if he will make a statement; [36190]

(2) if he will confer upon community health councils the statutory duty to assist complainants through NHS complaints procedures; if he will make it a right of all patients to receive support, advice and advocacy from their local community health council with any complaint that they have about the NHS and its services; if he will ensure that all community health councils are adequately resourced and staffed specifically to undertake this statutory duty and if he will make a statement. [36158]

Mr. Malone: We have no plans to change the statutory rights or duties of community health councils.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if community health council members, and co-opted members are covered by NHS insurance while on CHC business; and if he will make a statement. [36118]

Mr. Horam: Community health council members and co-opted members are not covered by national health service insurance. The NHS executive would consider any cost or damages arising from claims against CHCs on a case-by-case basis.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that when the commercial price of medicines is less than the standard NHS prescription charge, the commercial price is charged to patients; and if he will make a statement. [36115]

Mr. Malone: No. The prescription charge has never been related either to the cost of medicines or to the cost to the national health service of dispensing them. It is an amount which successive Governments have seen as reasonable for those who can afford to do so to pay towards the costs of their medicines.

Systolic Blood Pressure

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the mean systolic blood pressure in the adult population for each year since 1979, for each nation of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [36050]

Mr. Horam: The table shows the mean systolic blood pressure for the adult population of England in each of the years 1991 to 1994 inclusive. The fall in blood pressure between 1991 and 1994 is statistically significant. Data for England before 1991 are not available on a comparable basis. Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Sex Offenders

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of employees of his Department who have committed sexual offences against children, from among those listed in "Sentencing and Supervision of Sex Offenders" while serving, and for which they were subsequently prosecuted, since 1972. [36521]

Mr. Bowis: I know of none.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department keeps a list of suspected sex offenders. [36528]

Mr. Bowis: No. The Department's consultancy service index contains details of some ex-child care workers who have resigned, been dismissed, or moved to less sensitive posts in circumstances which suggest that the welfare or safety of children has been, or may be, put at risk.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of employees or volunteers in voluntary organisations who have committed sexual offences against children, while serving and for which they were subsequently prosecuted since 1972. [36520]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not collected.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in respect of those lists of convicted sex offenders held by his Department which may be consulted (a) the number of names on each list currently, (b) those who have access to each list, (c) what the lists are used for, (d) how long it takes on average to check a reference with such lists, (e) under what circumstances people are placed on the lists and (f) how the procedure described in (e) above is conveyed to local authorities. [36527]

Mr. Bowis: The Department operates a consultancy service, which enables local authorities and private and voluntary child care organisations in England and Wales to check on the suitability of those they propose to employ to work with children.

Procedures for making referrals to the consultancy index are set out in circulars to local authorities and child care organisations issued jointly by my Department, the Home Department, the Department for Education and Employment and the Welsh Office.

Employers are encouraged to notify names to the consultancy service index in circumstances where a member of their staff has put the welfare of children at risk. There is no requirement for a conviction before referring a name to the index.

The index also contains the names of child care workers, or former child care workers, notified to the Department by the police following conviction for certain offences. In addition, it incorporates the Department for Education and Employment's list 99, a register of staff barred for working in educational establishments.

Checks against the index are normally processed within 24 hours of receipt of an inquiry. If a positive identification is made, the prospective employer is advised to seek a reference from the organisation which referred the name to the index.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of statements taken in each individual local authority inquiry into abuse of children looked after or in care since 1972. [36519]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he issues in respect of the procedure for joint investigations between local authority social services departments and police forces for investigating allegations regarding abuse against children receiving a service from social services departments. [36526]

Mr. Bowis: Guidelines for joint investigations of allegations of abuse against children are contained in "Working Together under the Children Act 1989", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number and names of local authority inquiries into the sexual abuse of children looked after or in care since 1972; and which of these reports were made public. [36518]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the procedure for area child protection committees dealing with internal investigations into abuse of children in receipt of services from local authority, voluntary and private organisations. [36529]

Mr. Bowis: It is for each individual area child protection committee to devise its own procedures for investigating abuse of children. The procedures should be derived from and consistent with the guidance given in "Working Together under the Children Act 1989", copies of which are available in the Library. Internal investigations should include an independent element.

Operations Waiting Times (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the waiting times for (a) non-urgent operations and (b) urgent operations for hospitals in the Cheshire health authority for each of the last five years; and what is the national average figure. [36458]

Mr. Horam: Such information as is available on waiting times at hospitals in Cheshire is contained in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics, England" copies of which are available in the Library. On 31 March 1996, hospitals in Cheshire reported no one waiting more than one year for admission. Nationally, the average time waited by people still on a waiting list is 3.7 months compared with 7.6 months five years ago.

Young People (Deaths)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of young people who have previously been looked after or in care at any time after 1984 whose subsequent deaths have been recorded in coroner's reports under each of the verdicts in the Coroners Rule 1984, (SI 1984 No. 552). [36523]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Opticians

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of opticians accepting NHS patients in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36495]

Mr. Malone: Below are the number of ophthalmic opticians, OOs, and ophthalmic medical practitioners, OMPs, under contract with Cheshire family health services authority to carry out national health service sight tests as at 31 December each year. Separate figures for Crewe and Nantwich are not held centrally.

| Year | OOs | OMPs | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1991 | 153 | 17 | 170 |
| 1992 | 171 | 13 | 184 |
| 1993 | 157 | 16 | 173 |
| 1994 | 174 | 15 | 189 |
| 1995 | 178 | 20 | 198 |

Preventive Medicine

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the NHS funding formula is revised to give greater weighting to community health and preventive medicine programmes; and if he will make a statement. [36388]

Mr. Horam: A team of independent researchers from the universities of Plymouth and Kent have been commissioned to develop a needs weighting for community health services.

Blood Donations

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the figures for donations of blood in the area covered by the Lancaster centre (a) in each of the two years before its closure and (b) in the period since its closure. [36058]

Mr. Horam: Donations of blood in the area covered by the Lancaster centre in the periods covered by the question have been:

| | 1994 | 1995 | 1996 |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1st quarter | 13,198 | 15,401 | 16,044 |
| 2nd quarter | 13,928 | 14,964 | 14,004 |
| 3rd quarter | 14,327 | 16,270 | — |
| 4th quarter | 15,111 | 15,155 | — |
| Total | 56,564 | 61,790 | — |

The Lancaster centre remains open, both as a donor centre and as a blood bank. Only the bulk processing and testing work it previously undertook was transferred to other centres in March 1996. The figures above for the second quarter of 1996 relate to the period since that transfer took place.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each local authority in England and Wales the number of children registered as working in (a) 1986 and (b) the last year for which figures are available; [36312]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of (a) children working in the United Kingdom and (b) violations of the registration requirements. [36316]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not collected centrally. Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce legislation further to restrict child labour; and if he will make a statement. [36314]

Mr. Bowis: None.

NHS Advertising

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the NHS spent on advertising costs in each region in each year since 1990–91. [35342]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 2 July 1996]: The information requested is not available. It is not possible to extract information on advertising costs from expenditure on areas such as health promotion initiatives and measures to improve local accountability, including the production of annual reports and information about services.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EC Documents

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will state for each Session since 1990–91 (a) the number of motions made consequent to debates on documents of the European Community considered in European Standing Committees, (b) the number of amendments relating thereto tabled in the House, (c) the number of Divisions arising and (d) the number of motions amended. [36310]

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Motions are made in the House to take note of European Community documents following reports from European Standing Committees:

Sessions:

1990–91: 30

1991–92: 11

1992–93: 51

1993–94: 31

1994–95: 37

1995–96: 24 (up to 4 July 1996)

(b) Amendments to such motions moved in the House (information is not available as to amendments tabled but not moved).

Session 1990–91: 1

(c) Divisions on such motions:

Sessions:

1990–91: 2 (in the case of one motion both the amendment and main question were divided on)

1991–92: 0

1992–93: 3

1993–94: 5

1994–95: 2

1995–96: 1 (up to 4 July 1996)

(d) No such motions have been amended.

Members' Pay and Allowances

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list (a) for each of the last 10 years, the annual rate for (i) hon. Members' pay and (ii) each category of allowance and (b) the proportion of hon. Members who draw these amounts in full, together with the average amount paid for each category in the most recent year for which figures are available. [36202]

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

i. Annual salary (as at 1 January each year)

| Year | Full salary £ | Number of members who draw the full salary |
|---|---|---|
| 1987 | 18,500 | [1]— |
| 1988 | 22,548 | [1]— |
| 1989 | 24,107 | [1]— |
| 1990 | 26,701 | [1]— |
| 1991 | 28,970 | 649 |
| 1992 | 30,854 | 648 |
| 1993 | 30,854 | 650 |
| 1994 | 31,687 | 646 |
| 1995 | 33,189 | 646 |
| 1996 | 34,085 | 649 |

[1] This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The average amount paid for salary-related costs for 1995–96 was £33,413.

ii. Travel allowance; motor mileage allowance rates shown are in pence per mile, as at 1 April each year. Allowances reduce where aggregate mileage exceeds 20,000 at any point during a year, 1 April to 31 March.

| Year to 31March | Rate 1 | Rate 2 | Rate 3 | Number of members exceeding 20,000 miles |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1987 | 21.3 | 32.0 | 46.9 | [1]— |
| 1988 | 22.7 | 34.1 | 53.5 | [1]— |
| 1989 | 23.3 | 35.4 | 56.0 | [1]— |
| 1990 | 25.4 | 39.3 | 61.9 | [1]— |
| 1991 | 28.8 | 43.4 | 68.2 | [1]— |
| 1992 | 28.8 | 43.4 | 68.2 | [1]— |
| 1993 | 28.8 | 43.4 | 68.2 | 163 |

| Year to 31March | Rate 1 | Rate 2 | Rate 3 | Number of members exceeding 20,000 miles |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1994 | 29.5 | 44.4 | 69.8 | 151 |
| 1995 | 30.5 | 46.0 | 72.2 | 187 |
| 1996 | 31.3 | 47.2 | 74.1 | 176 |

[1] This information is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The following table shows the number of Members whose spouse and employees have taken up their full journey entitlement. Information for the years 1987 to 1991 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

| Year to 31 December | Full spouse entitlement | Full employee entitlement |
|---|---|---|
| 1992 | 62 | 90 |
| 1993 | 83 | 118 |
| 1994 | 67 | 80 |
| 1995 | 84 | 31 |

The average travel allowance expenditure per Member—including spouse and employee costs in 1995–96 was £13,552.06.

iii. Office costs allowance figures as at 1 April each year

| Year to 31 March | Allowance £ | Members' take up of full allowance |
|---|---|---|
| 1987 | 21,302 | [1]— |
| 1988 | 22,588 | [1]— |
| 1989 | 24,903 | [1]— |
| 1990 | 27,166 | [1]— |
| 1991 | 28,986 | [1]— |
| 1992 | 39,960 | [1]— |
| 1993 | 40,360 | [1]— |
| 1994 | 41,308 | [1]— |
| 1995 | 42,754 | [1]— |
| 1996 | 43,908 | [1]— |

[1] This information is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The average expenditure per Member for the 1995–96 financial year was £42,507.15.

iv. Additional costs allowance figures taken as at 1 April each year

| Year to 31 March | Allowance £ |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 8,674 |
| 1988 | 9,298 |
| 1989 | 9,914 |
| 1990 | 10,570 |
| 1991 | 10,786 |
| 1992 | 10,901 |
| 1993 | 10,958 |
| 1994 | 11,268 |
| 1995 | 11,661 |
| 1996 | 11,976 |

Information relating to Members taking the maximum allowance could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The average expenditure per Member for the 1995–96 financial year was £10,525.13.

v. Secretarial pensions—restricted to 10 per cent. of the office costs allowance for each Member. Figures taken at 1 April each year.

| Year to 31 March | Allowance £ |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 2,130 |
| 1988 | 2,258 |
| 1989 | 2,490 |

| 1991 | 2,899 |
| 1992 | 3,996 |
| 1993 | 4,036 |
| 1994 | 4,131 |
| 1995 | 4,275 |
| 1996 | 4,391 |

vi. Private Member's Bill allowance is limited to £200 per Bill, and the total expenditure for 1995–96 financial year was £600. Three Members used the full allowance.

vii. Winding-up allowance is limited to Members who leave the House.

| Year to 31 March | Allowance £ |
|---|---|
| 1994 | 13,769 |
| 1995 | 14,251 |
| 1996 | 14,636 |

Average expenditure per claimant for 1995–96 financial year was £3,791.39.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the locations of all accidents that occurred on the motorways of Northern Ireland in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will plot this information on a map and place a copy thereof in the Library. [35305]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. Frank Field, dated 8 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about accidents on the motorways in Northern Ireland.

A schedule listing injury accidents which occurred on the motorways in 1995 is attached together with a map, a copy of which has been placed in the library.

Arson

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set up a task force to deal with ritualised arson attacks on Protestant churches and Orange halls. [35320]

Sir John Wheeler: The attacks on Protestant and Orange halls are serious criminal offences and as such the responsibility for investigation rests with the RUC. I understand, however, that it is not intended, at this time, to form a special task force for this purpose, but I can assure the hon. and learned Gentleman that the RUC is fully committed to prevent such attacks and a detailed thorough investigation will always be carried out.

Heart Surgery

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the current average waiting time for heart surgery for children (a) in Northern Ireland and (b) in each of the four area health and social services boards; [35497]

(2) how many children are currently on the waiting list for heart surgery (a) in Northern Ireland and (b) in each of the four area health and social services boards: [35517]

(3) if he will list the changes in spending on cardiac catherisations in each of the four area health and social services boards over the last five years; [35499]

Mr. Moss: Information is not collected centrally on the number of children in Northern Ireland waiting for heart surgery. The information held in the Department relating to the waiting list shows only the total number of patients and the lengths of time which they have been waiting. For this reason, it is not possible to provide a "current" average waiting time for children presently on the list. However, in regard to those children—aged 14 and under—who had cardiac surgery during the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 the average waiting time was as follows:

| Board of residence | Days |
|---|---|
| Eastern Board | 121 |
| Northern Board | 91 |
| Southern Board | 131 |
| Western Board | 269 |
| Total for NI | [1] 151 |

[1] The information in regard to 1995–96 is still provisional.

Information is not collected centrally on expenditure on cardiac catheterisations.

Railways Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to privatise Northern Ireland Railways. [36357]

Mr. Moss: There are no plans at present to privatise Northern Ireland Railways.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cattle Culling

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the need for national legislation to provide for the implementation of a policy of culling cattle. [25867]

Mrs. Browning: The Department's on-going consideration of options for the selective slaughter of cattle in relation to bovine spongiform encephalopathy cover all the relevant aspects of the options including the need for a proper legislative basis.

Beef

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consumer research he has commissioned into consumer preference for beef marked as of British origin in fast food outlets. [35709]

Mrs. Browning: The Government do not undertake consumer research of that nature. However, I understand that the Meat and Livestock Commission, with which we are in close contact, does carry out consumer research into consumers' preferences about the origin of beef products.

Hong Kong (Quarantine)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Governor of Hong Kong on reform of the present quarantine system. [35764]

Mrs. Browning: I am of course aware of the views of the Governor of Hong Kong on this issue, as these have been well reported in the media. I can confirm, however, that he has made no direct representations on this to me, my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food or, to the best of my knowledge, anyone in my Ministry.

Rabies

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that veterinary surgeons have unrestricted access to the inactivated rabies vaccines approved by his Department for use on animals under their care. [35762]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 29 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith), column 710.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the percentage of the European Union budget that goes to the common agricultural policy. [35777]

Mr. Baldry: Currently about half the European Union budget is spent on the common agricultural policy. This compares to about two thirds in 1988.

Agricultural Subsidies

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the European Union budget goes to providing agricultural subsidies to the 1 per cent. of landholders. [35778]

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not available.

New Zealand Lamb

Mr. Dover: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on the quotas for the importation of New Zealand lamb of the worldwide ban on the export of British beef imposed by the European Commission. [31065]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 June 1996]: We do not consider the EU ban on exports of British beef to have any significant effect on the New Zealand lamb quota.

Furthermore, at a recent meeting of the World Trade Organisation International Meat Council, the New Zealand delegate took a similar view.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed BSE cases in England for each of the last 36 months. [33306]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 June 1996]: The number of confirmed BSE cases by date of confirmation in England for each of the last 36 months is:

| Month/Year | Cases |
|---|---|
| May 1993 | 2,384 |
| June 1993 | 2,815 |
| July 1993 | 1,876 |
| August 1993 | 2,322 |
| September 1993 | 2,210 |
| October 1993 | 2,228 |
| November 1993 | 2,762 |
| December 1993 | 2,013 |
| January 1994 | 1,678 |
| February 1994 | 2,655 |
| March 1994 | 2,754 |
| April 1994 | 2,141 |
| May 1994 | 1,634 |
| June 1994 | 2,140 |
| July 1994 | 1,223 |
| August 1994 | 1,338 |
| September 1994 | 1,612 |
| October 1994 | 1,757 |
| November 1994 | 1,642 |
| January 1995 | 1,441 |
| February 1995 | 1,746 |
| March 1995 | 1,434 |
| April 1995 | 967 |
| May 1995 | 1,220 |
| June 1995 | 1,098 |
| July 1995 | 1,080 |
| August 1995 | 894 |
| September 1995 | 827 |
| October 1995 | 920 |
| November 1995 | 945 |
| December 1995 | 655 |
| January 1996 | 785 |
| February 1996 | 1,000 |
| March 1996 | 736 |
| April 1996 | 545 |
| May 1996 | 515 |
| June 1996 | 939 |
| Total | 58,023 |

There is a delay of around several weeks while diagnostic tests are completed, between the slaughter of BSE suspect animals and the confirmation of the case as being BSE. Procedural changes within the veterinary investigation service significantly reduced processing capacity from March to May, and the subsequent increase in June represents clearance of the backlog. A similar backlog resulting from public holidays and Christmas was cleared in February.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest date on which a BSE confirmed bovine was born. [33034]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 June 1996]: As at 9 July, the latest date on which a confirmed BSE bovine was born was 17 June 1993.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many statutory instruments his Department introduced in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) between 1 January 1996 and 1 May 1996, which had the effect of repealing one or more previous statutory instruments without replacing them with a new regulation. [35034]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 2 July 1996]: In 1995, the following statutory instruments repealed one or more previous statutory instruments without replacing them with a new regulation:

The Dairy Products (Hygiene Regulations 1995: (S.I. 1995/1086)(6.S.I.s)

The Spreadable Fats (Marketing Standards) Regulations 1995: (S.I. 1995/3116)(4 S.I.s)

The Miscellaneous Food Additives Regulations 1995: (S.I. 1995/3187)(2.S.I.s)

The Food (Miscellaneous Revocations and Amendments) Regulations 1995: (S.I. 1995/3267)(8.S.I.s)

The Ministry has not found any such instruments in respect of 1994 or 1996, up to 1 May.

TRANSPORT

Pilots' Hours

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has in respect of pilots' hours; and if he will make a statement. [35915]

Mr. Norris: We have been working within the joint aviation authorities with regard to the production of new standards to be set out in joint aviation requirements operations, subpart Q.

Aviation Standards

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inspections the Civil Aviation Authority has undertaken to assess the adherence of Ghana to international civil aviation regulations. [35978]

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority has made two inspections this year of flights originating from Ghana to assess adherence to International Civil Aviation Organisation safety standards. These checks took place in February and May respectively. Neither check revealed any safety levels that fell below ICAO requirements.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report column 349, what conclusions (a) his Department and (b) the Civil Aviation Authority reached following the inspections in Bulgaria. [36252]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 July 1996]: The Civil Aviation Authority was generally content with the level of safety achieved in Bulgaria. It has made a number of recommendations on procedural and organisational matters which have been passed to the Bulgarian authority. As the audit did not reveal any significant variations from the International Civil Aviation Organisation's minimum safety standards, we will continue to permit Bulgarian airlines to operate services into the UK.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the gross proceeds in each year since 1994–95 of the sales so far made of the former subsidiaries of British Rail and Railtrack, excluding any payments relating to profits made while these organisations were still in the public sector. [35900]

Mr. Watts: The gross proceeds of such sales received to date are as follows:

1994–95: £5.75 million

1995–96: £2,454 million

1996 to date: £1,054 million

The sales figure for BR subsidiaries is subject to post-completion adjustments.

The 1995–96 figure includes £1,822 million received for the three rolling stock leasing companies.

The 1996–97 figure includes the proceeds of the first instalment in respect of Railtrack shares.

Comparative Cost Analysis

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government have undertaken a comparative cost analysis between increased investment in public transport and reconstructing new roads and improving old ones. [36281]

Mr. Norris: The relative costs and benefits of investment in roads and public transport can depend significantly on the type of schemes considered. In recognition of the wider environmental benefits that public transport can offer, the Government set out in the recent Green Paper, "Transport: The Way Forward" their intention to switch the emphasis in public spending from roads to public transport.

EU Bus and Coach Directive

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 402, when he expects the European Commission to publish its proposals for a bus and coach directive. [36570]

Mr. Norris: The Commission has not yet issued a proposal for a European bus and coach directive. We do not know when a proposal will be made, but believe that it may be later this year.

Traffic Growth

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest figures for traffic growth (a) on the motorway network, (b) on other roads, and (c) by region; and how these relate to those on which the Department's traffic congestion or stress maps, published earlier this year, were based. [36059]

Mr. Watts: Over the period between 1985 and 1995 traffic on motorways increased at an annual average rate of 6.4 per cent.: on other roads the annual growth was 2.9 per cent. Figures for annual traffic growth for the regions are not available and could not be provided at reasonable cost.

The Department's traffic congestion or stress maps were produced using the national road traffic forecasts high and low projections and taking account of the composition of traffic on each part of the network. The latest published NRTF forecasts (1989) predict:

Percentage per annum growth

| | Low forecast | | High forecast | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1995–2005 | 2005–2015 | 1995–2005 | 2005–2015 |
| Cars | 1.706 | 1.431 | 2.615 | 1.904 |
| Goods vehicles | 1.444 | 1.459 | 2.467 | 2.496 |
| Others | 1.688 | 1.717 | 2.828 | 2.901 |

Source: National Road Traffic Forecasts.

Other vehicles include light goods vehicles below 3.5 tonnes gross vehicle weight, buses and coaches.

New Car Assessment Programme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 104, when work on the new car assessment programme will be completed. [36622]

Mr. Norris: It is hoped to have the assessment completed in September.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Council Grants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the total grants provided by the Sports Council for sporting activities in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire, for each of the last five years. [36348]

Mr. Sproat: The Sports Council's grant in aid from public expenditure to all sports organisations in Crewe and Nantwich and in Cheshire for each of the last five years is as follows:

| Year | Crewe and Nantwich £ | Cheshire £ |
|---|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 20,000 | 251,089 |
| 1992–93 | 10,000 | 295,081 |
| 1993–94 | — | 279,028 |
| 1994–95 | 157,318 | 319,326 |
| 1995–96 | 41,822 | 209,452 |

Since the introduction of the national lottery, grants awarded by the Sports Council from the national lottery sports fund for sports projects in Cheshire total £4,716,999. These include the following grants for sports projects in Crewe and Nantwich:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Bunbury Cricket Club | 23,560 |
| Crewe Rollers BMX Club | 9,412 |
| Crewe Vagrants Sports Club | 495,300 |
| Nantwich Cricket Club | 90,000 |

Statutory Nuisance

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what monitoring is undertaken by her Department to review the operation of legislation concerning statutory nuisance as it relates to national heritage issues. [36245]

Mr. Sproat: I should first point out that the policy responsibility for statutory nuisance rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Although this Department is responsible for listing buildings of special architectural or historic interest for their protection we do not monitor or review whether they are causing a statutory nuisance. The Environmental Protection Act 1990 places a duty on local authorities to investigate a complaint made by anyone living within its area about a possible statutory nuisance. It is for the local authority to decide whether a statutory nuisance exists and what action to take in the light of all the relevant circumstances. A complainant can also seek an abatement notice from a magistrates court under the 1990 Act.

Crewe Alexandra Football Club

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the total grants provided by (a) her Department and (b) the Football Trust to Crewe Alexandra football club for each of the last five ears. [36349]

Mr. Sproat: (a) My Department has made no direct grants to Crewe Alexandra.

(b) The Football Trust made a grant of £581,913 to Crewe Alexandra towards the new west and north stands, along with a loan of £150,000, repayable over five years, on 31 March 1995. In addition, Football Trust grants to Crewe for safety measures and ground improvements in each of the last five years are as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 40,158 |
| 1992–93 | 64,087 |
| 1993–94 | 45,641 |
| 1994–95 | 7,593 |
| 1995–96 | 15,029 |
| Total | 172,508 |

Works of Art

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art during the half-year ended 30 June, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institutions; and if she will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit.

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows.

|---|---|---|
| A painting Erminia finding the wounded Tancred, by Guercino (1591–1666) | 3,500,000 | Decision deferred until after 15 July 1996 |

| A pair of George II open armchairs by William and John Linnell (c 1753) | 192,307 | Decision deferred until after 16 July 1996 |
| A marble bust of Henry Fuseli by E H Bailey (1824) | 128,000 | Decision deferred until after 16 July 1996 |

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half-year ended 30 June of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed by testators or executors in the matter of allocation; and if she will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of inheritance tax. [36223]

Mr. Sproat: The information which the hon. Member requests is as follows:

| Item(s) | To whom allocated | Conditions/ wishes expressed |
|---|---|---|

Channel 4

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make it her policy not to privatise Channel 4. [36769]

Mr. Sproat: Channel 4 has demonstrated great success in meeting its high quality public service broadcasting remit. However, it must be right to keep the position of any statutory body under review and to consider whether it should remain in the public sector.

Royal Parks Review Group

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she has accepted the recommendations made by the royal parks review group in its report on Richmond and Bushey parks; and if she will make a statement on the group's final conclusions in respect of progress made since the inception of the group. [37308]

Mr. Sproat: The Secretary of State and I have now considered the group's report on Richmond and Bushey parks in detail. As with previous reviews—the first on Hyde park and Kensington gardens, the second on St. James's, Green and Regent's parks and the third on Greenwich park—the review group, chaired by Dame Jennifer Jenkins, has examined a wide range of issues relating to the role and management of the parks, and consulted with a great number of individuals and organisations before arriving at its conclusions. These conclusions were discussed at a one-day conference, of which I was able to attend a part, and were, in the main, well received. The conference delegates supported the thrust of the recommendations, with lively discussion on a number of matters and the views expressed were considered by the group in submitting the report to the Secretary of State.

The group's recommendations focus on the opportunities to provide for changing demands and pressures without losing sight of the parks' prime function of providing a green open space, and I can confirm that I accept them in principle. Indeed, action has already been taken on some matters, although consultation will be required before others are taken forward. Many will be affected by the availability of financial resources.

The group's principal recommendations are intended to reduce the impact of traffic on each park, with a view to improving the safety of pedestrians and wildlife, and restoring the ambience of the parks. One of the group's chief recommendations is that subject to the outcome of traffic studies, Richmond park should be closed to through traffic at busy weekends. I agree that consideration should be given to this recommendation and have asked the Royal Parks agency to consult the London borough of Richmond Upon Thames, the Traffic Director for London and local interest groups, with a view to carrying out the necessary studies within the next year. No decision will be taken until the discussions have been completed and the results of the studies carefully assessed.

Commenting on the injuries caused to deer by traffic crossing the park during the hours of darkness, the group also suggests that Bushey park should be closed to traffic at dusk, rather than midnight. This would bring Bushey park in line with other royal parks, including Richmond park, many of which already close to traffic at dusk. I have asked the agency to discuss this proposal with those most likely to be affected. A decision will be taken in the light of these discussions.

In considering ways in which the impact of traffic on each park might be reduced, the group expressed concern about the size and location of major car parks in the two parks: most notably the Pen Ponds car park in Richmond park and the Diana car park in Bushey park. Whilst I agree that the degree of erosion caused in the Pen Ponds area is threatening the long-term stability of the park, I also accept that for many visitors this area would otherwise be out of reach, and I have asked the Royal Parks agency to consider how the needs of less mobile visitors can be taken into account without further damage to the park's ecology. The agency will also consider whether alternative parking space can be provided elsewhere, but on the perimeter of the park.

The group's proposals for the Diana car park in Bushey park are part of a wider recommendation that the size and location of all car parks should be reassessed, with a view to better integration within the landscape, and the Royal Parks agency plans to discuss options with its landscape consultants as to how this might be achieved.

The group also suggests that car parking charges should be considered. Although car parking charges were introduced in Hyde park and Regent's parks during 1994, this was mainly to deter commuters and shoppers from taking up spaces which should properly be reserved for use by park visitors. The situation in Richmond and Bushey parks, where surveys have shown a far higher percentage of regular and local visitors, is quite different. I have asked the Royal Parks agency to examine the financial viability of this proposal and to consult the local authority and regular park users.

The group also highlights the importance of the listed buildings in each park, and makes specific recommendations for many of these. It recommends that Pembroke lodge in Richmond park should be refurbished, to include improved catering and toilet facilities. I am pleased to report that an advertisement by the Royal Parks agency for a privately-financed development scheme has already attracted several expressions of interest.

Upper lodge in Bushey park, is currently being offered for residential use on a 125 year lease by the Crown Estate, which has agreed to take the review group's recommendations into account, and this will undoubtedly benefit the future of the building.

Again in Bushey park, Bushey house, currently occupied by the National Physical Laboratory is mentioned by the group, and discussions have already begun with the NPL about how the group's recommendations might be implemented. These will continue.

In its report, the group asks the Government to reaffirm their commitment to opening up for public use wherever possible the various enclosures in private occupation within the royal parks, and to reaffirm the policy against new building in the royal parks unless essential for public use and enjoyment. I am pleased to do so. Discussions with the Crown Estate and others continue to address the first issue; on the second, the Royal Parks agency is assessing the role of all buildings in the parks, and considering how to make the best use of them. I can confirm that any new building would take place only if considered to be of benefit to park visitors.

I was particularly interested to read the group's views on sport in the two parks, and pleased to note the group's recommendations, which assess how the changing needs of sports enthusiasts can be met in future years, without spoiling the character of the parks.

Like the review group, I endorse the recommendation to relocate the golf centre to the disused nursery site at Chohole gate, and have asked the Royal Parks agency to discuss with the relevant authorities the impact of such a scheme on the surrounding road network. I note the opportunities for private investment and for improving what is already a much loved facility. Any change to the existing arrangements will undoubtedly have an effect on the current contractor and I am pleased to note that they have been involved in discussions and assured that they will be included in any future tender.

As Minister responsible for the royal parks I am conscious of the fact that many organisations put back into the parks as much as they take out, and I have been pleased to note the group's recommendation that a joint sports club working party should be established to discuss the group's recommendations on how sports facilities can best be integrated into the parks.

The group made a number of other recommendations to improve the ambience of the parks, including improvements to entrances, highlighting links with the Thames and other attractions and ensuring that wherever possible the landscape of each park is maintained without artificial or unsightly boundaries. Discussions have already begun on a number of these matters, which impact on sports clubs and neighbouring properties.

I also note the group's comments about the potential benefits of the Longford river, of making sections more accessible to the public, and endorse the recommendation to establish a working party to discuss these with local residents and interested groups.

The full cost of implementing the recommendations is not yet known as further studies are required in many instances and it will also be necessary to consider the royal parks' requirements alongside other demands on my Department's budget. In the main however, all expenditure will have to be met from the Royal Parks agency's current and future maintenance budgets. However, the agency will be seeking sponsorship, private finance or lottery funding where appropriate.

With its report on Richmond and Bushey parks, the group also submitted its final conclusions, based on its findings in the five years since its inception in 1991. Many of its comments on the management of the royal parks are encouraging and applaud the progress which has been made by the Royal Parks agency over the past three years: the appointment of landscape architects for all parks, the pedestrianisation in front of Buckingham palace in St. James's park, the restoration of the Avenue gardens in Regent's park, improved catering facilities in Hyde park and Greenwich park—all carried out alongside continuing high horticultural standards.

The report also refers to projects which have not, as yet, been progressed. In some cases this is due to the unavailability of necessary funds; in others the prioritisation of work had resulted in concentration on other, more pressing objectives. Nevertheless, I believe that what the Royal Parks agency has already achieved within the three year's since its creation, is truly impressive.

I am most grateful for the contribution and time Dame Jennifer and her group have given to the review and for their comprehensive reports and constructive recommendations. Their work over the past five years has helped to shape the future of the royal parks and is much appreciated.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Unpaid Court Fines

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each year since 1990 the total number of (a) distress warrants, (b) attachment of earnings orders and (c) direct deductions from income support issued by the Sunderland magistrates court for unpaid court fines of £150 or less. [35701]

Mr. Streeter: (a) The information requested in respect of distress warrants for unpaid fines under £150 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the total number of distress warrants issued by the court each year for the years 1990 to 1995 is:

1990: none

1991: 462

1992: 808

1993: 882

1994: 956

1995: 1,663

For the period 1 January 1996 to 31 May 1996 the number is 595. It is estimated that 98 per cent. of warrants issued between 1991 and May 1996 were for amounts under £150.

(b) No attachment of earnings orders for fines under £150 have been made in any of the years 1990 to 1996.

(c) No direct deductions from income support have been made for fines under £150 in any of the years 1990 to 1995. For the period 1 January 1996 to 31 May 1996, the number is 16.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Homes

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of council dwellings owned by each metropolitan council and the total number in each sold off in each of the last three years and the total income accruing to each council for each year. [35848]

Mr. Curry: The available information reported by authorities is in the following table. Actual cash receipts will depend on the extend to which sales had been financed by loans from the authorities.

Plymouth Development Corporation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what selection procedure, was followed in respect of (a) the successful candidate and (b) the unsuccessful candidates for the position of chairman of the Plymouth development corporation. [36498]

Sir Paul Beresford: All candidates for the post of the chairman of the Plymouth development corporation were subject to the same selection procedure. Executive recruitment consultants were employed following a competitive tendering exercise and, through them, the post was advertised both nationally and locally and a search was conducted. A sift was conducted of the candidates identified by this process and a long list of candidates was prepared who were contacted by the consultants to confirm their suitability. This long list was then reduced to a short list by a panel comprising two officials from the Department of the Environment and an outside independent member. All candidates on this short list were interviewed by the panel. The panel then submitted their recommendation to Ministers who took the final decision.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the remuneration paid to each member of the Plymouth development corporation. [36496]

Sir Paul Beresford: The remuneration paid to each member of the Plymouth development corporation is as follows:

Chairman: £27,365
Deputy chairman: £9,285
Board member: £5,430

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many candidates (a) applied for the chairmanship of the Plymouth development corporation and (b) were interviewed; and how many of (a) and (b) came from Plymouth. [36499]

Sir Paul Beresford: There were 57 applicants for the chairmanship of the Plymouth development corporation. During a detailed selection procedure a long list of candidates was identified and all candidates on the long list were interviewed by the executive recruitment consultants. A selection panel then decided on a short list of three candidates all of whom were interviewed by the panel. Of the full list of applicants 10 gave addresses in Plymouth and 22 of the others lived or worked in Devon and Cornwall and two of them live in the Plymouth area, but none within the City of Plymouth.

Workplace Accidents (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of people (a) injured and (b) killed in workplace accidents in (i) Crewe and Nantwich and (ii) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36535]

Sir Paul Beresford: The number of people (a) injured and (b) killed in workplace accidents in (i) Crewe and Nantwich and (ii) Cheshire for each of the last five years is as follows:

| | Crew and Natwich | | Cheshire | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Injured | Killed | Injured | Killed |
| 1994–95 | 194 | nil | 2,891 | 4 |
| 1993–94 | 178 | nil | 2,896 | 7 |
| 1992–93 | 222 | 1 | 2,816 | 6 |

| 1990–91 | 279 | nil | 3,002 | 9 |

"Policy Appraisal and the Environment"

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants have been given formal training on the use of "Policy Appraisal and the Environment"; and what plans the Department has to increase awareness of "Policy Appraisal and Environment" among Government Departments. [35643]

Mr. Clappison: A total of 248 members of my Department were given formal training on the use of "Policy Appraisal and the Environment". I understand that 93 members of Government Departments received training from the Civil Service College.

As far as increasing awareness of "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" is concerned, consultants have been appointed who will evaluate the degree to which "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" has been used by Government Departments and recommend how the integration of environmental considerations into policy making in government can be reinforced. Green Ministers intend to publish a booklet of case studies which will show what measures Departments have taken to ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account in policies and programmes. All directors in my Department have recently been reminded of the guidance in "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" and of the need to appraise policies with a significant environmental impact.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 222, if he will list the non-ministerial departments which will be included in the work of the consultants appointed by his Department to evaluate the degree to which "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" has been used by Government Departments. [36625]

Mr. Clappison: "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" is intended to guide those in central Government who are charged with advising Ministers on policies. The evaluation will therefore aim to consider appraisal practices throughout central Government only. It will not include executive agencies or other organisations.

Colliery Accidents

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the rate of underground accidents involving serious injury or fatality in British collieries in 1995; what it was in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; and when the statistics concerning underground safety in 1995 will be published. [36327]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not available in the form requested except for the period 1 October 1995 to 31 December 1995.

The rate was:

Fatalities: 0.18 per cent.

Major injuries: 3.15 per cent.

The provisional accident figures for 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 are expected to be published on 23 July 1996.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the letter from the Under-Secretary of State dated 16 November 1995, if he will instruct the Local Government Commission to consider the case for a parish council for Cleethorpes during its forthcoming review of the electoral arrangements for north-east Lincolnshire. [36676]

Sir Paul Beresford: The scope of the periodic electoral reviews carried out by the Local Government Commission under schedule 13(2) of the Local Government Act 1992 does not include parish boundaries or the creation of new parishes. There would need to be a separate parish review and this would involve a substantial amount of work. To direct the commission to undertake this extra work would delay completion of the periodic electoral reviews, already well overdue in a number of places, to which we must give preference.

Director General of Electricity Supply

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the (i) speeches, (ii) reports and (iii) other statements made by the Director General of Electricity Supply in relation to his statutory duties concerning the environment. [36626]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Under section 3(3) of the Electricity Act 1989 the Director General of Electricity Supply has a duty "to promote efficiency and economy on the part of persons authorised by licences to supply or transmit electricity and the efficient use of electricity supplied to consumers".

He also has a duty to take account, when exercising all the functions in section 3(3) of the Act

"the effect on the physical environment of activities connected with the generation, transmission or supply of electricity".

The implementation of those duties is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Director General of Gas Supply

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the (i) speeches, (ii) reports and (iii) other statements made by the Director General of Gas Supply in relation to her statutory duties concerning the environment. [36627]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Under section 4 (2) of the Gas Act 1986 as substituted by section 1 of the Gas Act 1995, the Director General of Gas Supply has a duty "to promote efficiency and economy on the part of persons authorised by or under this Part to carry on any activities, and the efficient use of gas conveyed through pipes".

She also has a duty to take into account, when exercising all the functions in section 4 (2) of the Act, as similarly substituted,

"the effect on the environment (whether by pollution or otherwise) of activities connected with the conveyance of gas through pipes."

The implementation of those duties is a matter for the Director General of Gas Supply.

Planning Policy (South Devon)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will (a) call in the application by McAlpine to the Torbay borough council local plan for a 63-acre business park on the banks of the Dart valley, south Devon and (b) set up an inquiry in public to take place before an inspector from his Department prior to the final determination of the application being made. [36730]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering whether this application should be called in for his own decision and he will reach his conclusion as soon as practicable given the complex issues involved. If the application is called in, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will appoint an inspector to conduct a public local inquiry and report to him on the merits of the proposal.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the prior options review of the Planning Inspectorate. [37309]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As part of the usual arrangements for next steps agencies, a prior options study of the Planning Inspectorate has been carried out. The review concluded that the core functions of the inspectorate, which is to hear appeals or objections against decisions of local planning authorities, should not be abolished, privatised or contracted out in whole to the private sector. The review recommended that the inspectorate should remain as an executive agency in the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office. The review also recommended that certain non-core functions should be considered for market testing or contracting out.

The Government have accepted these recommendations which were informed by the views of a large number of organisations who responded to the invitation to submit evidence. Action is already in hand to follow up a number of other detailed recommendations to improve the service offered by the inspectorate and to subject more of its activities to competition.

I have today placed a copy of the report in the Library of the House, along with a copy of the evaluation report into the Planning Inspectorate. The latter explains what the inspectorate was set up to do and how it has met its ministerial key performance targets.

Rural White Paper

Sir Kenneth Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will respond to the third report of the Environment Committee on "Rural England: The Rural White Paper" (HC 163 of Session 1995–96). [37420]

Mr. Gummer: Our response is being published today.

We welcome the Committee's report as a contribution to the continuing debate about the future of rural areas in England. The response gives our considered reaction to the recommendations made in the report.

We agree with the Committee that targets are important and we shall continue our efforts to develop targets in support of rural policies. We will produce a report later this year on the progress we have made in achieving the White Paper's commitments and we shall continue to monitor and report on progress annually.

Packaging Waste

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be able to publish draft regulations to give effect to producer responsibility for packaging waste. [37479]

Mr. Gummer: Together with my right hon. Friends the President of the Board of Trade, and the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales I am today publishing a consultation paper, with draft regulations, which set out the Government's proposals for producer responsibility obligations for packaging waste and which will give effect to the EC directive on packaging and packaging waste—94/62/EC. Copies are being placed in the Library. This is the most outstanding example of partnership between government and industry to achieve an important environmental goal. We hope that the rest of Europe will follow this example. The regulations are based on the principles of a shared approach and the 15 December agreement as set out in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 7 May, Official Report, columns 73–75. They are the outcome of a very substantial series of discussions with business to find the best way in which we can work together to meet an environmental goal, in this case the need to recover greater value from the 8 million tonnes of packaging waste which we generate each year.

This is a pioneering process of partnership and dialogue which has wider lessons for how we seek to achieve environmental objectives. Inevitably there were differences of view along the way and difficult judgments on the right balance between fairness, effectiveness and minimising burden. There will be many issues in these proposals requiring further careful consideration on which the Government are keen to obtain views. Nevertheless I believe that there is a growing consensus on the best way forward, and the active and continuing involvement of all sectors is the right way to generate a sustainable long-term approach, as well as achieving the co-operation necessary between businesses.

As an example of how we can help businesses assess what is required, I am making available on request a PC-operable disc which will calculate the tonnage obligation for an individual business in relation to its own processes and patterns of trade.

There are three underlying aims which the Government remain committed to achieve:

(i) A more sustainable approach to dealing with packaging waste by internalising the costs of meeting higher targets for recovery and recycling. This harnesses the efficiency and creativity of the supply chain to meet environmental goals. Additional costs to business may, like other costs, be passed onto consumers, to the extent that they are not absorbed;

(ii) To help implement the EC directive for which the United Kingdom worked so hard. The main purpose of the EC directive on packaging and packaging waste is to ensure a single market for the free circulation of packaging but, in addition, member states must meet the minimum targets for recycling and recovery;

(iii) To achieve both these ends in the most efficient and least burdensome manner. The principle of having the choice of doing so through collective business-led schemes, which have the maximum freedom and flexibility in which to operate, remains a fundamental objective.

We are greatly encouraged by the work now under way to develop collective business-operated schemes, and in particular the efforts to establish VALPAK, which is supported by 60 leading UK businesses. The establishment of such schemes will be evidence that when given the opportunity, industry will deliver environmental targets with real efficiency gains.

This is a new approach. We have endeavoured to achieve a wide measure of consensus, but we will need to monitor closely the operation of the regulations and review their impact and effectiveness. The Advisory Committee on Packaging has proposed a framework for future monitoring and review which we fully endorse. The committee will have a major part to play over the next two years and we shall follow its advice carefully in the future development of this initiative.

Phurnacite

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the disposal of contaminated waste following the Health and Safety Executive investigation into the burning of phurnacite in Abercwymboi; and if he will list the sites under consideration for that disposal. [34655]

Mr. Hague: I have been asked to reply.

This is an operational matter for the Welsh Development Agency. I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Custody (Deaths)

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people have died in police custody from alcohol or drug-related causes in each of the last 10 years; [36133]

(2) how many people have died in police custody in each of the last 10 years. [36155]

Mr. Maclean: The information collected and published centrally excludes the Metropolitan police and is contained in the table. Information for the Metropolitan police is published annually in the report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, copies of which are available in the Library.

Licensed Trade (Toughened Glassware)

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to encourage the use of toughened glassware in the licensed victuallers trade; [36142]

(2) what consultations he has had with representatives from the licensed victuallers trade about the possibility of introducing toughened glassware for use within the industry; [36144]

(3) what plans he has to require the licensed victuallers trade to use toughened safety glassware; [36143]

(4) what estimate he has made of the possible reduction in the number of injuries in pubs, clubs and restaurants involving drinking glasses or glass bottles if toughened safety glassware were introduced into the industry. [36145]

Mr. Maclean: Licensing authorities already have wide powers under both the liquor and entertainment licensing laws to require the use of toughened glass or synthetic drinking vessels on particular occasions or in particular premises if they consider the circumstances justify their doing so. We have no plans to require the licensed victuallers trade to use toughened, safety glassware. I am aware of the research which has been carried out into the relative merits, from a public safety point of view, of toughened safety glassware and ordinary, annealed, glassware.

We have had no recent representations from the licensed victuallers trade on this issue.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of (a) injuries per year and (b) injuries to members of staff per year, in pubs, clubs and restaurants, which involve drinking glasses or glass bottles. [36146]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is based on the 1988 and 1992 British crime surveys which estimate that annually there were about 32,000 incidents of violence—woundings and common assaults—in and around pubs, clubs and other licensed premises involving bottles or drinking glasses. Of these, about half, or 17,000, resulted in the victim receiving cuts. However, the data do not separately identify whether the cuts were due to a bottle or glass. Another 11,000 of these incidents resulted in injury of some other type, for example, bruises and scratches. Incidents against staff cannot be separately identified.

Missing Persons

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Access to Health Records Act 1990 to provide for missing persons. [36031]

Mr. Maclean: None.

Detoxification Units

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have access to detoxification units for use by people immediately after arrest. [36140]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking in respect of the level of fees charged by private wheel clamping firms; what proposals he has to license such firms; if he will ensure that the clamping of vehicles on private land is governed by contracts; if he will introduce a code of conduct and a standardised complaints procedure; and if he will make a statement. [36026]

Mr. Maclean: The Government are considering what action, if any, should be taken in respect of wheel clamping on private land. Matters such as levels of fees, the idea of licensing clamping firms, codes of conduct, and so on, all form part of that consideration. It is important, in the Government's view, that any measures which might be taken in this field should not hinder the proper control of genuine parking problems.

Crime (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the crime rate in Cheshire relative to the national average for each of the last five years. [36534]

Mr. Maclean: The crime rates, in terms of recorded offences per 100,000 population, are given in the following table:

Notifiable offences recorded by the police per 100,000 population

| Year | Cheshire | England and Wales |
|---|---|---|
| 1991 | 6,913 | 10,403 |
| 1992 | 8,228 | 10,943 |
| 1993 | 8,290 | 10,777 |
| 1994 | 7,709 | 10,222 |
| 1995 | 7,503 | 9,926 |

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of reported incidents of (a) burglaries, (b) car theft, (c) assault, (d) rape, (e) grievous bodily harm, (f) manslaughter and (g) murder in Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36533]

Mr. Maclean: The available information relates to notifiable offences recorded by the police and is given in the following table:

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in Cheshire 1991–95

| Year | Burglary | Theft of a vehicle | Less serious wounding | Rape | More serious wounding | Homicide |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1991 | 16,537 | 8,289 | 2,407 | 37 | 128 | 10 |
| 1992 | 21,766 | 9,019 | 2,547 | 53 | 173 | 11 |
| 1993 | 22,034 | 9,005 | 2,764 | 75 | 135 | 13 |
| 1994 | 19,248 | 7,451 | 2,974 | 80 | 189 | 8 |
| 1995 | 18,155 | 6,739 | 3,191 | 63 | 185 | 12 |

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the board of visitors' first annual report for Doncaster prison; if he will permit the board to publish it; and if he will supply a copy to the hon. Member for Don Valley. [36394]

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to him and to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) on 20 November 1995, Official Report, column 15.

Cheshire Police

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of incidents attended by Cheshire police in each of the last five years. [36474]

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available centrally.

Sex Offenders

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list in respect of the list of suspected sex offenders held by the North Wales police authority (a) the number of names on the list currently (b) those who have access to the list, (c) what the list is used for and (d) under what circumstances people are placed on the list; [36517]

(2) if he will list in respect of the list of convicted sex offenders held by the North Wales police authority the number of names on the list currently, those who have access to the list, what the list is used for, how long it takes on average to check a reference with the list and under what circumstances people are placed on the list. [36516]

Mr. Maclean: The North Wales police authority does not hold lists of convicted or suspected sex offenders. Like all police forces in England and Wales, North Wales police have access to the national collection of criminal records which holds information about every person convicted of a serious sexual offence, the paedophile index held by the National Criminal Intelligence Service and its own criminal intelligence information. Arrangements for supplying employers in the statutory sector and parts of the voluntary sector with information about those seeking to work with children on a regular, unsupervised basis are set out in Home Office circulars 47/93, 42/94 and 46/94. In the year to 31 March, criminal record checks by the North Wales police took between seven and 28 days depending on whether it was necessary for them to contact other police forces.

Prison Security

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much he intends to spend on bringing security up to the minimum standards required by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [36240]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 11 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how much he intends to spend on prison security to bring security up to minimum standards.

A decision has not been reached on the minimum security standards which should apply to all prison establishments in England and Wales. The cost of any minimum standards will be considered as the standards are developed.

Prison Officers

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the ratio of prison officers to prison inmates in (a) each privately operated prisons and (b) prisons operated by the Prison Service. [36255]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. John Hutton, dated 11 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the ratio of prison officers to prisoners in the privately operated prisons and those operated by the Prison Service.

The information requested is shown in the attached table. The most recent data available concerning the private prisons was produced in January 1996. The information relating to Prison Service establishments is as at 1 April 1996. Due to the differences between the private and public prisons grading of officers, two ratios have been provided. The first ratio includes all officer grades and the second ratio is calculated from discipline officers. Both ratios for the publicly managed prisons include prison officers, senior officers and principal officers.

Prison establishment staffing: officer:inmate ratio

| | Officer: inmate ratio |
|---|---|
| Private prisons ratio | 1:2.9 |
| Public prisons ratio (all grades) | 1:2.1 |
| Public prisons ratio (discipline) | 1:2.5 |

Prison Statistics

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men aged between 55 and 64 years and women aged between 55 and 59 years are currently being held in prison on (a) remand and (b) after sentence. [36259]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Sir Andrew Bowden, dated 11 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many men aged between 55 and 64 years and women aged between 55 and 59 years are currently being held in prison on (a) remand and (b) after sentence.

The latest available provisional information is for 31 May 1996 and is given in the attached table.

Population of males aged 55–64 and females aged 55—59 on remand and under sentence in prison in England and Wales on 31 May 1996[1]

| | Remand | Sentenced |
|---|---|---|
| Males | 140 | 1,130 |
| Females | 4 | 30 |

[1] Provisional figures.

Prisoners (Taxis)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions during the last 12 months private taxis have been used to transport prisoners (a) to and (b) from the Wolds prison; what category were the prisoners on each occasion; and if he will make a statement. [36296]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 11 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the use of taxis to escort prisoners at Wolds prison.

Between June 1995 and May 1996 taxis were used by Wolds prison on 200 occasions to transport prisoners. Information on the breakdown of prisoner category is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. After May 1996 Group 4 court services took over responsibility for transporting prisoners as and when required.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the board of visitors' latest annual report for the Wolds prison; and if he will permit the board to publish it. [36393]

Miss Widdecombe: The board of visitors' annual report for Wolds for 1995 was received by my right hon. and learned Friend on 27 February.

The board published its annual report and press release on 26 March. The hon. Member can obtain a copy of the report from the board's chairman, Mr. F. Henry.

Kwik-Kuffs

Sir Julian Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the use by the Metropolitan police of American Kwik-Kuffs and of the level of pain which they inflict. [36308]

Mr. Maclean: A review of the use of rigid handcuffs and other self-defence, arrest and restraint techniques has recently been completed by the Association of Chief Police Officers. A training manual on rigid handcuffs has been produced which advises on the technique for applying the handcuffs, points out the injury potential of incorrect application and stresses that the handcuffs should never be twisted. I am satisfied that this manual provides useful guidance for all police forces including the Metropolitan police.

Sex Tourism

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the Home Office review of extra-territorial legislation in its applicability to sex tourism. [36669]

Mr. Maclean: The Government will announce the conclusions of the review as soon as possible.

Firearms

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament the seventh annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee. [37248]

Mr. Maclean: I have today placed a copy of the annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee in the Library.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent report by Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary on No. 2 area of the Metropolitan police. [37311]

Mr. Maclean: Yes. I have today placed in the Library a note of the recommendations from the report, together with the commissioner's responses and the police authority responses, which take into account the advice my right hon. and learned Friend and I have received from the Metropolitan police committee.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many doses of medicinal drugs have been issued to prisoners in British gaols in each of the past five years; and how many were (a) analgesics, (b) anti-depressants and (c) other drugs; [36311]

(2) how many prisoners have (a) died and (b) become seriously ill following the use of (i) illegal drugs, (ii) legal drugs and (iii) medicinal drugs in each British gaol in each of the last five years. [36328]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 10 July 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 11 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about medicinal drugs issued to prisoners in British jails and deaths in British jails following the use of illegal and legal drugs.

Information on doses of medicinal drugs issued to prisoners is not available could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information on the number of prisoners who have died or became seriously ill following the use of drugs is not available in the form requested, however the number of self-inflicted deaths in prisons in England and Wales where drugs were involved during the last five years are as follows:

1991–92: 4

1992–93: 2

1993–94: 1

1994–95: 3

1995–96: 2

Information for Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the Secretaries of State for those Departments.

DEFENCE

Service Personnel (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of service personnel in the Cheshire region for each of the last five years. [36455]

Mr. Soames: The number of UK regular service personnel deployed in the Cheshire region on 1 July for each of the last five years are as follows:

1991: 861

1992: 271

1993: 936

1994: 909

1995: 824

Figures for 1 July 1996 are not yet available.

ISC–Ferranti

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date officials from his Department were made aware of the contents of the Ferranti Cooper report into the merger with ISC; and what action was taken as a result of the conclusions of that report. [36818]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to a document which appears to be a report to the board of Ferranti Ltd. dated 8 September 1987 and entitled "Ferranti/International Signal and Control". There is no evidence that my Department was aware of the existence of this document until an extract from it was sent to the Department by the secretary of the Scott inquiry on 7 September 1994. My Department has taken no action based on the report other than to tell the Scott inquiry that there is no evidence of any previous knowledge of it.

Royal Naval Armaments Depot Trecwn

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken by his Department to initiate the Critchel Down procedures in respect of the sale of RNAD Trecwn; and when these procedures were begun. [36736]

Mr. Soames: The assessment that the Critchel Down rules apply to part of this site was made in June this year. Legal advice on the applicability of the rules has been sought and as the next stage we will be seeking to identify former owners or their successors.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when negotiations began between his Department and PAS-Otto over the sale of RNAD Trecwn; and what agreement was reached in December 1995. [36733]

Mr. Soames: Detailed negotiations with PAS-Otto over the sale of RNAD Trecwn commenced in March 1995, when the company was selected as the preferred bidder. In December 1995, agreement was reached with PAS-Otto on the heads of terms for the sale, subject to contract.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the application of the Critchel Down procedures to the sale of RNAD Trecwn. [36734]

Mr. Soames: The Critchel Down—former owner—rules apply to the agricultural land at RNAD Trecwn which is situated outside the perimeter fence of the former establishment. My officials will seek to identify the former owners and offer them the opportunity to re-purchase the land at current market value. Generally the rules apply only where land has not materially changed since the time of original acquisition. The land inside the perimeter fence has changed, and it is our judgment, therefore, that Critchel Down rules do not apply.

Merchant Vessels

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the name of each merchant vessel, and its country of registration chartered by his Department for (a) exercises and (b) military support and re-supply operations in the first six months of 1996. [36729]

Mr. Soames: The names of merchant vessels and their country of registration chartered for (a) exercises and (b) military support and re-supply operations for the first six months of 1996 are as follows:

| Name | Flag |
|---|---|
| Vessels chartered for exercises | |

International Court of Justice

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the International Court of Justice decision announced on 8 July in respect of the use of nuclear weapons. [36497]

Mr. David Davis: I have been asked to reply.

The court's advisory opinion is long and complex and we are studying it. We note, however, that among other things the court concluded by a large majority that there is in international law no comprehensive and universal prohibition of the threat or use of nuclear weapons as such.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Robert Hussein

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the case of Robert Hussein at the United Nations General Assembly. [36703]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have no plans to raise this case at the United Nations.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations to the Kuwait Government are being made by Her Majesty's Government over the case of Robert Hussein. [36675]

(2) what measures the Government propose to take in the case of Robert Hussein; [36702]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have raised our concerns about the safety of Mr. Robert Hussein at a senior level with the Kuwaiti authorities on a number of occasions. We will continue to do so, when appropriate.

HEALTH

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, column 506, if he will provide a regional breakdown of extra-contractual referrals. [29467]

Mr. Malone: Expenditure on extra-contactual referrals is shown in the table. The 1995–96 data will be available in August.

Figures in £ million (Percentage of total expenditure)

| | 1992–93 | | 1993–94 | |

NHS Executive

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the number of people currently employed by and (b) the current annual budget of the NHS executive; and what were the figures for each year since it was established. [35350]

Mr. Horam: The information is given in the table. The figures are not comparable from year to year because of the transfer of responsibilities to the national health service executive from other parts of the Department of Health. The increase in staff numbers in 1996–97 followed the abolition of the regional health authorities, who on 31 March 1993 employed 3,905 core staff.

| | Annual budget (£ million) | Staff in post on 1 April |
|---|---|---|
| NHS Management Executive | | |
| 1989–90 | Not available | 666 |
| 1990–91 | 31.6 | 797 |
| 1991–92 | 27.1 | 677 |
| 1992–93 | 43.1 | 776 |
| 1993–94 | 34.8 | 931 |
| NHS Executive | | |
| 1994–95 | 43.3 | 848 |
| 1995–96 | 53.0 | 1,072[2] |
| 1996–97 | 117.0 | 1,914[3] |

[1] The budget for 1992–93 reflects the initial set up costs of the NHS executive during its relocation to Leeds in 1992.

[2] The increase in staff numbers, the largest in 1995–96, followed the transfer of staff and additional responsibilities in to the NHS executive from other parts of the Department of Health.

[3] The increase in staff numbers in 1996–97 followed the abolition of the regional health authorities on 31 March 1996 and the creation of a single structure for central management of the NHS—the NHS executive comprising a headquarters and for the first time eight regional offices.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount spent on home care by each local authority as a percentage of its special transitional grant for (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [36704]

Mr. Bowis: Information on home care expenditure by local authority has been published in "Personal Social Services: A historical profile of reported current and capital expenditure 1983–84 to 1993–94 England" for 1993–94, copies available in the Library, and it is planned to publish the 1994–95 information in a statistical bulletin later this month.

The amounts of local authorities' special transitional grants for 1993–94 and 1994–95 have been published in "Local Government Finance (England) Special Grant Reports" No. 13 and No. 17 respectively.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 669, if he will list the 56 inter-departmental agencies referred to in his answer, indicating how many questions were referred to each agency listed in the 1994–95 parliamentary Session. [36846]

Mr. Horam: There were 32 non-departmental agencies which had 56 questions referred to them during the 1994–95 parliamentary session. These agencies are listed. Information on the number of referrals each agency received is available in the Library.

NHS Properties

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 321, on NHS properties what use is made of the proceeds of sales of surplus properties. [36741]

Mr. Horam: Proceeds from the sale of surplus properties are used to fund capital expenditure within the overall public expenditure provision for the national health service.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 106, how many of the NHS surplus properties are currently occupied and utilised by NHS trusts; and what is their value. [36740]

Mr. Horam: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Computers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 371, what action the NHS executive has taken about the year 2000 problem. [36738]

Mr. Horam: The national health service executive has established a project team which is responsible for providing technical guidance and advice on site audits. including briefing notes and a telephone help line. NHS organisations are being alerted to the problems and will shortly be required to draw up action plans. Progress against these plans will be monitored by the NHS executive.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has carried out into the compatibility of the Read Codes 3 medical terms language with ICD-10; what assessment he has made of the importance to the NHS of compatibility between ICD-10 and medical terms computer languages used in the NHS; if he will place a copy in the Library of his Department's research into compatibility issues; and if he will make a statement. [36671]

Mr. Horam: Read codes to international classification of disease maps are national standard cross references from Read codes to the ICD classification. The cross mappings in Read version 3 have been the subject of a large validation project that involved clinicians, academics and expert coders. The underlying philosophy was the product of extensive consultation. This is documented in "Cross-Mapping in Version 3 of the Read Codes" (F60 15), copies of which will be placed with the Library.

Validation of the Read version 3 maps was undertaken using expert clinical coders. Both the methodology and its findings were signed off as acceptable by the NHS centre for coding and classification classifications projects board.

"Medical terms computer languages used in the NHS" can be regarded as: (i) Read terms which provide the detail necessary for clinicians to capture clinical information in computers; (ii) ICD-10 which provides the analytical classification for central returns; and (iii) healthcare resource groups which provide information necessary for costing and resource management. For those seeking to derive ICD-10 central returns from data captured in Read codes, a cross map is essential. Healthcare resource groups are now expressed in ICD-10 terms but, through the cross map, can be derived from Read data.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 371, on the NHS executive and the year 2000 problem, what initial assessment he has made of the likely impact of the millennium; what have been the costs of the initial assessment; what is the budget for future work; and who is undertaking this research. [36739]

Mr. Horam: An initial analysis of typical applications which could be affected has already shown that for many systems there are no problems. These systems are capable of handling the change of millennium or the suppliers are in the process of making them so. A number of other systems will have reached the end of their lifetimes before 2000 and will be replaced by systems with the correct software. The remaining systems must be considered on a case-by-case basis.

A project team has recently been set up and its costs so far are minimal. The projected costs of this project team are £50,000. Costs for the audit of systems within each national health service organisation are the responsibility of that organisation. When such audits have been completed, it will be possible to determine the full costs of rectifying the systems.

The work is being undertaken by the information management group of the NHS executive with the assistance of external consultants.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each evaluation (a) conducted and (b) commissioned by his Department into the efficacy of the Read 3 coding system; indicating for each the date and category of author; and if he will place these in the Library. [36674]

Mr. Horam: The first release of version 3 of the Read codes deemed suitable for evaluation and testing in live use in a clinical setting was in October 1995 followed by an update in April 1996.

Evaluation in use of the efficacy of these releases has commenced at several sites and I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 2 May, Official Report, column 608.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has issued concerning the mandatory use of ICD-10 in hospital returns; and what proposals he has to amend these guidelines. [36670]

Mr. Horam: The use of ICD-10—International Classification of Diseases version 10—for defining diagnostic information in central returns and contract minimum data sets was made mandatory for England and Wales from 1 April 1995. Key guidance supplied to the national health service was provided by executive letter (EL(93)63) "The introduction of ICD-10 into the NHS", data set change notice (DSCN 20/93) which mandated the use of ICD-10 in the NHS for statistical returns and DSCN 41/94/P28 which detailed relevant clinical coding standards for the use of ICD-10. Copies of these reports have been placed in the Library.

The executive letter allows the capture of data using Read codes and cross mapping to ICD-10 for central returns. There are no plans to alter this arrangement in the immediate future.

Wiltshire Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Wiltshire health authority concerning the filling of the vacancy for chief executive. [36854]

Mr. Bowis: None.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expenditure is planned by each health authority on (a) non-NHS purchases, (b) extra-contractual referrals and (c) medical negligence claims. [36713]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount as a percentage of its special transitional grant for 1994–95 spent by each local authority in the independent sector. [36720]

Mr. Bowis: The percentage of the 1994–95 special transitional grant which was spent in the independent sector is not yet available for every local authority.

Newbury Hospital

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the plans for the new Newbury hospital; when he expects it to open; and how it will be funded. [36631]

Mr. Horam: The West Berkshire Priority Care national health service trust has plans for a new hospital. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Jim Kerevon, chairman of the trust for further information.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department has collated in respect of individual trusts' plans to increase hospital waiting times. [36709]

Mr. Horam: There are no such plans.

Hospital Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department collates on costs per hospital procedure in each trust. [36716]

Mr. Horam: The Department does not collate information on costs per hospital procedure in each trust.

Property Sales

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, columns 536-37, how many of the properties scheduled for sale are in operational use; and what is their value. [36726]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, columns 36–37, on sales of NHS property what has been the (a) estimated (b) actual value of NHS property sales in each of the last five years. [36727]

Mr. Horam: The information is given in the table

(Figures in £ millions)

| | Actual | Estimate |
|---|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 178 | 292 |
| 1991–92 | 169 | 242 |
| 1992–93 | 115 | 200 |
| 1993–94 | 213 | 200 |
| 1994–95 | 208 | 234 |

Source:
Public Expenditure White Paper and Department of Health departmental reports.

Health Authorities (Chief Executives)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has issued to health authorities concerning the appointment of chief executives subject to recommended disciplinary proceedings in similarly responsible posts with another health authority. [36855]

Mr. Malone: It is for health authorities to ensure the suitability of staff appointed. They are expected to have in place systems of recruitment and selection, which would include the taking up of references from former employers.

Health Care (Berkshire)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS dentists there are in west Berkshire. [36628]

Mr. Malone: The number of dentists whose major practice was in Berkshire on 31 March 1996 was 263.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) eye tests and (b) dental check-ups were undertaken last year in Berkshire; and how many in the last year when they were free. [36629]

Mr. Malone: The comparative information requested is not available.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) acute psychiatric and (b) hospital beds there are in west Berkshire now; and how many there were in 1979. [36630]

Mr. Bowis: The information relating to the number of beds in west Berkshire is contained in "Bed Availability, England". A copy of this document is in the Library, however information for 1979 is not available centrally.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the community health budget has been spent on mental health services in each year since 1979. [36680]

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is not available prior to 1988–89. Information from 1988–89 to 1994–95 is shown in the table.

| Year | Percentage of community health expenditure spent on mental health nursing services |
|---|---|
| 1988–89 | 7.5 |
| 1989–90 | 8.6 |

| Year | Percentage of community health expenditure spent on mental health nursing services |
|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 9.2 |
| 1991–92 | 7.4 |
| 1992–93 | 8.7 |
| 1993–94 | 8.4 |
| 1994–95 | 9.5 |

1. The community mental health expenditure included in the table is community mental health nursing expenditure only.
2. Prior to 1988–89, expenditure on community mental health nursing was not collected separately from other categories of community nursing.
3. The share of community mental health expenditure in 1991-92 may be affected by changes to accounting practices in that year.

Children (Exclusion from School)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation his Department has undertaken of (a) individual social services departments' policy and (b) individual psychiatric services in relation to children excluded from school. [36715]

Mr. Bowis: The Department has not undertaken any evaluation directly relating to these issues.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which consortiums are involved in private finance initiative bids for the proposed Norfolk and Norwich hospitals; and if he will list the individual companies concerned. [36723]

Mr. Horam: Norfolk and Norwich national health service trust has chosen the Octagon Healthcare consortium as its preferred bidder, and is currently in the final stages of negotiations with the consortium. Octagon Healthcare consists of John Laing Construction and General Health Care Group, advised by the merchant bank BZW.

Community Care

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community care assessments were undertaken; and how many services were provided by each local authority in each year since 1993–94. [36737]

Mr. Bowis: Centrally available information on community care assessments was published in "Community Care Monitoring Report 1994—findings from local authority self monitoring and NHS surveys". Information on services provided by local authorities is published in a number of statistical sources, the latest being statistical bulletin 1996/5: "Community Care Statistics 1995". Copies of both these publications are available in the Library.

Nurses

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 24, if the performance tables of the five-minute standard for a nurse to contact incoming accident and emergency patients differentiates non-clinically qualified nurses from clinically qualified nurses undertaking initial triage. [36865]

Mr. Horam: Immediate assessment should be undertaken only by clinically qualified staff.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department collates on trusts establishing their own limited companies. [36706]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 10 May, Official Report, column 286.

Fraud Liaison Officers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities have appointed a fraud liaison officer. [36712]

Mr. Horam: Sixty health authorities had designated officers as prescription fraud liaison points by 10 July. All health authorities are expected to designate a prescription fraud liaison point.

NHS Estates

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the annual report and accounts of the NHS Estates agency. [37307]

Mr. Horam: I have received the report and accounts, which has today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of sections 5(2) and 5(3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921.

Copies have also been placed in the Library.

Hypothermia

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificates as the main contributory cause of death took place in England and Wales in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 (c) 1995 for (i) all age groups, (ii) people aged 65 years and over and (iii) people aged 80 years and over. [36261]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is in the following table.

| | All ages | 65 years+ | 80 years+ |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1993 | 480 | 402 | 255 |
| 1994 | 386 | 309 | 198 |
| 1995 | 431 | 265 | 251 |

Death Statistics

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths were registered in England and Wales between (a) 1 April 1994 and 30 September 1994, (b) 1 October 1994 and 31 March 1995, (c) 1 April 1995 and 30 September 1995 and (d) 1 October 1995 and 31 March 1996 of people aged (i) 60 to 69 years, (ii) 70 to 79 years, (iii) over 80 years and (iv) in total. [36260]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is in the following table.

| Age groups | April 1994 to September 1994 | October 1994 to March 1995 | April 1995 to September 1995 | October 1995 to March 1996 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 60 to 69 | 39,522 | 42,052 | 38,160 | 41,890 |
| 70 to 79 | 76,102 | 84,212 | 74,782 | 88,204 |
| 80+ | 112,917 | 134,708 | 116,598 | 145,496 |
| All | 260,163 | 294,640 | 261,420 | 309,908 |

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Links

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have contacted business links since its inception in Sheffield. [35847]

Mr. Page: Business links are private sector partnerships, not Government bodies. National statistics on businesses using business links are available in the quarterly "Report on Business Link and Business Link Regional Supply Network Management Information" and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Local statistics are a matter for local business links partnerships and I will ensure that the chief executive of the Sheffield business link is aware of the hon. Member's question.

Receiverships

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of companies entering receivership in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire, for each of the last five years. [36454]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Uranium

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 10, if the discussions with German officials included the supply of highly enriched uranium to research reactors; and what steps are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to ensure compliance with the reduced enrichment for research and test reactors agreement of 1978. [36466]

Mr. Page: Discussions with German officials did include the possible supply of HEU to research reactors.

As the United Kingdom Government did not participate in the reduced enrichment for research and test reactors programme, we have no obligations under the agreement referred to.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 10, if the discussions with German officials included the supply of highly enriched uranium from resources at Dounreay. [36467]

Mr. Page: Discussions with German officials included the possible supply of HEU from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's own resources. For security reasons, I am not able to comment on the location of the HEU.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the results of the evaluation of the clean coal technology research and development programme; and if he will make a statement. [37306]

Mr. Lang: Copies of the evaluation report by an international panel of experts have been placed in the Library of the House.

The independent experts from the United States, Japan and Denmark have conducted a thorough mid-term evaluation and made a number of recommendations with respect to the future direction of the programme. This is a useful report which the Government will have to study very carefully.

Simpler Trade Procedures Board

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has completed the actions arising from the review of the Simpler Trade Procedures Board; and if he will make a statement. [37305]

Mr. Nelson: I am pleased to report that, since my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) on 19 July 1995, Official Report, column 1545, the United Kingdom Confederation for Electronic Data Interchange Standards—UKCEDIS—assumed responsibility for the United Kingdom input to international electronic data interchange standards with effect from 1 January 1996. On the same date, SITPRO's EDI standards development functions were transferred to the Electronic Commerce Association—ECA—formerly called the Electronic Data Interchange Association. The former SITPRO staff concerned joined the ECA and are undertaking EDI standards development agreed in the UKCEDIS workplan. The transfer is being supported by the Department with funding on a tapering basis.

An advertisement for the sale of the SITPRO software business was issued on 26 September 1995. Kewill Systems plc was selected as preferred bidder on 19 February 1996 following an evaluation of shortlisted bidders. This demonstrated that its bid met my Department's objectives of the sale to secure best value for money while minimising any adverse impact on existing customers and the distributor network. The Government completed the sale of SITPRO's software business to Kewill Systems plc on 28 June for a consideration of £359,000 including net assets. The 11 staff in the software business project transferred to the purchaser.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when financial statements for the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be published. [37310]

Mr. Lang: Today I have placed in the Libraries of both Houses sets of the MMC's financial statements for the last financial year. The accounts which have been reviewed by the National Audit Office are the first to have been published since the basis for funding the commission was changed from grant to grant-in-aid. It is expected that the first set of audited accounts will be for 1996–97.

Orimulsion

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what (a) correspondence or (b) telephone conversations he has had with Mr. O. J. Williams concerning the importation of orimulsion for burning at Pembroke power station. [36732]

Mr. Page: Neither I, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade nor any of my officials has been in correspondence or has had any conversation with Mr. Williams about the use of orimulsion at the Pembroke power station.

Annual Report

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he has taken to ensure that the non-ministerial departments listed in his annual report to Parliament take account of (a) "Policy Appraisal and the Environment", (b) the White Paper on sustainable development and (c) the competitiveness White Paper. [36621]

Mr. Page: It is for the respective Directors General of the Office of Fair Trading, the Office of Telecommunications, the Office of Gas Supply and the Office of Electricity Regulation to take appropriate account of all relevant developments in fulfilling their duties.

Public Interest Disclosure Bill

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what public consultations his Department proposes to make in respect of the Public Interest Disclosure Bill. [36624]

Mr. John M. Taylor: We have no current plans for public consultations.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations his Department undertook on the Public Interest Disclosure Bill between April and June. [36623]

Mr. Taylor: My Department has had informal discussions with industry on the Bill.

Weapons Exports

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the British Government's policy on the export of non-lethal weaponry; and on what basis export licences are granted. [36482]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 10 July 1996]: The Export of Goods (Control) Order lists the goods on which the Government maintain export controls. Group 1 of part III to schedule 1 of the order lists military, security and paramilitary goods and arms, ammunition and related material. It does not define or categorise "non-lethal weapons". The Government maintain strict control over all arms exports, primarily by means of considering applications for export licences against strict established criteria; these have been agreed within the European Union, in the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe and by the permanent five members of the UN Security Council. I am arranging for copies of the three sets of criteria to be placed in the Library of the House. The Government do not allow the export of controlled equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

Electric Shock Weaponry

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the current level of international trade in electric shock weaponry. [36484]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 10 July 1996]: None.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what regulations govern the labelling and selling of Scotch whisky. [35972]

Mrs. Browning: I have been asked to reply.

The Food Safety Act 1990, and regulations made under it, govern the sale of all food in Great Britain. Detailed labelling rules applicable to foods generally, including drink, are contained in the Food Labelling Regulations 1996 and the Food (Lot Marking) Regulations 1996, which implement EC requirements. In addition, EC regulation 1576/89 and the Scotch Whisky Act 1988 contain specific controls on the composition and marketing of Scotch whisky.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Occupational Health and Safety Agency

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what performance targets he has set for the Occupational Health and Safety Agency for the current financial year. [37416]

Mr. Freeman: My primary objective for the Occupational Health and Safety Agency is to secure its privatisation this summer. Until then it will be managed within the public sector on the basis of achieving the following annual key performance targets:

Financial:

to break even in accrual accounting terms;

Quality of Service:

(a) to turn round within 11 working days of receipt, 85 per cent. of case referrals on which no additional medical reports are required;

(b) to turn round within 40 working days of receipt, 70 per cent. of case referrals on which additional medical information is required;

(c) to earn client satisfaction ratings on training courses, comprehensive medical examinations and health screening programmes of 95 per cent. in the top two categories on a six point post-service questionnaire;

(d) to issue at lease 97 per cent. of invoices error free.

In addition, the agency has efficiency targets on cost containment, details of which are commercially sensitive.

Recruitment and Assessment Services

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what performance targets he has set for the Recruitment and Assessment Services executive agency for the current financial year. [37417]

Mr. Freeman: My primary objective for the Recruitment and Assessment Services for the current year is to achieve its privatisation this summer. Until then it will be managed within the public sector on the basis of achieving the following targets in 1996–97:

1. a financial surplus of £200,000 in accrual accounting terms;
2. at least a 4 per cent. increase in efficiency over 1996–97 performance;
3. customer evaluation ratings for overall service of 97 per cent. satisfied or better with the service they have received and 81 per cent. more than satisfied or better.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make an announcement on the progress of the sale of Recruitment and Assessment Services. [37418]

Mr. Freeman: The House was informed on 23 November last year that it was the Government's intention to sell Recruitment and Assessment Services as a single viable business in a way which would ensure that it retained its reputation for the provision of high-quality recruitment services to Government Departments and the wider public sector while allowing it to benefit from the freedom and opportunities for attracting new customers to be gained outside the constraints of operating within government.

A large number of expressions of interest were received following the advertisement of the sale in January this year. A final short-list of three has now been selected. Those being invited to submit final bids are:

The Capita Group plc

NFER–NELSON Publishing Company Ltd.

Saville and Holdsworth Ltd.

I believe that this short-list will lead to final bids which maximise the prospects of securing good long-term value for money for the Government, the taxpayer and customers while meeting the objectives set for the sale of the business.

SCOTLAND

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36013]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office spent £40,940.81 on taxi fares in Edinburgh in 1995–96 under a central contract which provides significant discounts on normal fares. Expenditure on taxi costs incurred outside Edinburgh is not maintained centrally and could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Social Services Inspectors

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many social services inspectors were employed in each year since 1991 in Scotland. [36509]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland social work services inspectors are employed by local authorities and by the Scottish Office. The number of social work services inspectors in local authorities is not routinely collected. The information on social work services inspectors employed by the Scottish Office is set out in the table.

| Year | Social Work Services Inspectors Inspecting Social Work Services in the Criminal Justice System[1] | Total Social Work Services Inspectors Employed by The Scottish Office |
|---|---|---|
| 1992 | 4 | 18 |
| 1993 | 4 | 18 |
| 1994 | 4 | 19 |
| 1995 | 4 | 17 |
| 1996 | 3 | 16 |

[1] The function of the Social Work Services Inspectorate in Scotland is wider than that of the Social Services Inspectorate in Wales and includes the inspection of social work services in the criminal justice system. This function is performed by the Home Office Probation Inspectorate in Wales. Consequently the figures are shown separately.

Common Services Agency

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the salary and benefit package payable to the chief executive of the Common Services Agency in (a) 1992 and (b) 1996. [36614]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The salary payable to the Common Services Agency board general manager in 1992 was in the range of £48,300 to £62,790 and in 1996 the range £60,855 to £76,068. The benefits package for both years includes NHS terms and conditions, Crown car and eligibility of entry to the NHS pension scheme.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff were employed by the Common Services Agency on a (a) permanent and (b) a temporary basis for (i) 1992 and (ii) 1996; and how many vacancies there were in the Common Services Agency in (i) and (ii). [36618]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of whole-time equivalent staff employed by the Common Services Agency in 1992 was 5,262; in 1995, the latest year for which figures are available, it was 2,360. The 1995 data exclude the Scottish Ambulance Service, which is now a trust containing 2,722 staff. Identification of permanent and temporary staff is not possible from data held centrally. Vacancy information is available only for medical, dental and nursing staff.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent on running the board of the Common Services Agency; how much was spent on the remuneration of the members of the board of the CSA including the remuneration of expenses; and what was the overall budget administered by the Common Services Agency in (a) 1992 and (b) 1996. [36619]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The board is an integral part of the administrative structure of the Common Services Agency and its running costs are not identified separately.

The remuneration of board members, including the general manager and director of finance, and the overall budget administered by the agency are as follows:

| | 1991–92 | 1995–96 |
|---|---|---|
| Remuneration of Board Members | £141.753 | [1]£164.164 |
| Overall budget | £126 million | £143 million |

[1] Figures for 1995–96 still to be audited.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members there were on the board of the Common Services Agency; and if he will list the members of the board in (a) 1992 and (b) 1996. [36620]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The board of the Common Services Agency had 11 board members in 1992 and nine board members in 1996. The board members for these years are listed as follows:

1992

Chairman

Mr. Don Cruikshank

Non-executive Board Members

Mr. Ian Mullen

Dr. Rowland Mitchell

Mr. George Mackie

Mr. John Blanche

Mr. Victor Wood

Mrs. Fiona Stephenson

Executive Board Members

Mr. Jim Donald (General Manager)

Mr. Gavin Anderson (NHS in Scotland Management Executive)

Mr. George Tucker (NHS in Scotland Management Executive)

Mr. Trevor Callaway (Director of Finance)

1996

Chairman

Mr. Geoff Scaife

Non-executive Board Members

Mrs. Fiona Stephenson

Mrs. Jane Jolly

Mrs. Christine Lenihan

Mr. Sandy Barrie

Mrs. Linda McPherson

Mr. Gordon Lounsbach

Executive Members

Mr. Francis Gibb (General Manager)

Mr. Eric Harper Gow (Director of Finance)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which areas of responsibility administered by the Common Services Agency have left the responsibility of his Department since 1992; if he will list the functions which have been lost by the CSA; and to which departments they have been transferred. [36637]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has powers under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1972 to delegate to the Common Services Agency a range of statutory and other functions.

Responsibility for the national services division passed from the NHS management executive to the Common Services Agency in 1993. The national services division purchases a range of clinical and other services on behalf of the NHS in Scotland as a whole. The Common Services Agency also now performs a small number of administrative functions formerly carried out by the Scottish Office Department of Health. These include the provision of oxygen concentrators for domiciliary oxygen therapy and the processing of advertisements placed in the EC Journal by NHS bodies in Scotland. These activities are regulated and funded by service level contracts between the Common Services Agency and the NHS management executive.

The Common Services Agency is no longer responsible for the Scottish Ambulance Service, which became an NHS trust on 1 April 1995. Following a tendering exercise, the agency's building division was sold to a private sector buyer on 1 November 1995. The services formerly provided by the agency's data centre are now supplied by a private sector company, the Computer Sciences Corporation.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reviews his Department has undertaken of the role and responsibilities of the Common Services Agency during the last five years. [36639]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The role and responsibilities of the Common Services Agency are kept under review by the Scottish Office Department of Health. As part of this process, accountability reviews took place in June 1992 and November 1993.

In addition, since 1994, the following divisions of the agency have been subjected to specific internal reviews:

Building Division

Central Services

Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service

Supplies Division

Pharmacy Practice Division

Dental Practice Division

Central Legal Office

Scottish Antibody Production Unit

As a result of these reviews, the building division was sold to the private sector and the central legal office and the supplies division became fee earning.

The overall effect of these changes has been to reduce the running costs of the agency and to provide more effective and efficient support for the national health service in Scotland.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes have occurred in the areas of responsibility of the Common Services Agency between 1992 and 1996 with particular reference to changes in the status of (a) the ambulance service, (b) the building division and (c) dental service payments; and what assessment he has made of the impact of these changes. [36640]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: During the past few years the CSA has undergone a period of significant change in its structure and activities.

The Scottish Ambulance Service became an NHS trust in April 1995 and the agency's building division was sold to the private sector in November 1994. There has been no change in the agency's responsibility for dental service payments

The agency's services have been realigned to meet the needs of its customers and to improve its efficiency and effectiveness. The agency is now a more streamlined organisation supporting the NHS in Scotland for the overall benefit of patient care.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to which individual within the NHS in Scotland the chief executive of the blood transfusion service is directly answerable. [36615]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The national director of the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service reports to the general manager of the Common Services Agency.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the appointment of a new chief executive of the blood transfusion service indicating the terms that will be offered in respect of the post. [36616]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The post of national director of the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service is currently advertised. The salary is in the range of £55,000 to £60,000 with NHS terms and conditions, Crown car, and eligibility for entry to the NHS pension scheme.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the severance terms offered to the former chief executive of the blood transfusion service following his departure from his post indicating the terms of the financial agreement. [36617]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The terms agreed with the former national director of the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service were in line with the normal guidance on termination settlements and his contractual arrangement with the Common Services Agency.

Health Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number (a) employed and (b) in training as (i) health visitors, (ii) school nurses, (iii) district nurses and (iv) community psychiatric nurses. [36728]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Estimates for the information requested are not available. The table provides the latest "actual" information available.

Selected qualified nurses employed in the NHSiS at 30 September 1995; and nurses in training at 31 March 1996

| | Headcount | Whole-time equivalent |
|---|---|---|
| (a) Employed | | |
| (i) Health visitor (HV)[1] | 1,604 | 1,429.6 |
| Grade G and above | 1,460 | 1,316.8 |
| Below grade G | 144 | 112.8 |
| (ii) School nurse | 371 | 278.8 |
| (iii) District nurse (DN)[1] | 2,174 | 1,733.1 |
| Grade G and above | 1,190 | 1,027.7 |
| Below grade G | 984 | 705.4 |
| (iv) Community psychiatric nurse | 445 | 432.4 |
| (v) Combined duty nurse | 519 | 462.6 |
| HV/DN | 24 | 23.5 |
| HV/DN/Midwife | 93 | 91.0 |
| DN/Midwife | 365 | 313.1 |
| HV/Midwife | 37 | 35.0 |
| (b) In training[2] | | |
| (i) Health visitor | 124 | — |
| (ii) School nurse | 37 | — |
| (iii) District nurse | 130 | — |
| (iv) Community psychiatric nurse | 69 | — |

Notes:

[1] Includes health visiting and district nursing teaching staff, and staff working in the field without a HV/DN qualification. The category 'grade G and above' gives a broad indication of those staff with a HV/DN qualification.

[2] Includes nurses in training who are not sponsored by the NHS. Some nurses in training may also be included in nurse figures elsewhere in the table.

M80

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors will inform his decision as to calling a local public inquiry into the line of route determined for the proposed M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs; and if he will make a statement. [36638]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The route for the new motorway will be selected on the grounds of economic performance, engineering feasibility, cost and environmental impact and will reflect the wide-ranging views emerging from the current consultation process.

Statutory procedures will be published after a choice of preferred line has been made. The need for a public local inquiry will depend on the reaction to the publication of draft procedures.

Acute Services Review

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made on the review of the acute services planning assumptions used by the national health service in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [37415]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The review is now complete and my right hon. Friend and I have considered the internal report which was prepared by the management executive following consultation with clinicians and others in the NHS in Scotland. The formal terms of reference of the review were to review the planning assumptions used by the NHS in Scotland in developing acute hospital services by considering:

(i). trends (in activity and changing patterns of care, resource utilisation, staffing etc);

(ii). factors which may affect those trends and the response to them (including the need to take account of peaks in demand); and

(iii). models which may be appropriate for acute services in future.

A copy of the report's summary of findings has been placed in the Library of the House. The main findings include:

Between 1979–80 and 1994–95 the number of in-patient and day cases has increased on average by 3.1 per cent. a year. For most of this period, up to 1991–92, the annual rate of increase was 2.5 per cent., but since then has risen to 5.5 per cent. a year.

The rapid growth in the number of day cases explains much of the recent increase, and the proportion of elective patients treated as day cases has risen from 38.1 per cent. in 1991–92 to 52.2 per cent. in 1994–95.

The number of emergency in-patient admissions increased by almost 4 per cent. a year on average between 1991–92 and 1994–95, while the number of elective in-patient cases remained largely unchanged. Emergency cases as a proportion of all in-patient cases has expanded steadily and now account for 60 per cent. of all in-patient admissions. This means that the scope for accommodating peaks of demand in beds normally used for non-emergency work has diminished, and when peaks in emergency workload occur the disruption to the non-emergency work of the hospital is correspondingly greater.

The reasons for the growth in the number of emergency admissions is not well understood; a multiplicity of factors is involved. Aging of the population is not the principal reason and increases in admission are observed across most diagnostic categories. A significant part of the growth is explained by a relatively small number of patients who have numerous admissions within a five-year period. These are not readmissions due to treatment failure or to early discharge; the patients concerned are commonly over 75 and have appropriate need for admission arising from their chronic and multiple morbidity.

Emergency admissions show a predictable seasonal fluctuation, with peaks in the winter months. The size of the seasonal variation has remained relatively stable; between 1982 and 1994 the difference between the peak average occupancy and its low point averages 12 per cent. of occupied beds. The timing of the winter peak is most likely to be determined by cold weather and fluctuations in respiratory disease. During peak admission periods, length of hospital stay tends to increase despite the pressure on hospitals which, other things being equal, might be expected to reduce lengths of stay. This is because during winter peaks the increase in admissions is age related.

During the winter crisis of early 1996, Scottish hospitals managed to cope with difficult circumstances because staff worked flexibly and beyond their contracts. The situation in Edinburgh royal infirmary was exceptional in part because of failure of water supply, ward closures due to multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus, MRSA, infections and the increased number of accidents among the tens of thousands of Hogmanay revellers. The problems faced by hospitals were compounded by staff sickness. Many hospitals had contingency plans which worked well. Nevertheless, it is clear that staff were under considerable strain during this period.

There is a need to plan the management response to sudden rises in demand in terms of the overall "system of care". Health boards have a central role in ensuring the adequacy of plans and, through their service contracts, for ensuring that the needs of acutely ill emergency patients receive the appropriate priority in their requirements of providers.

The emphasis given to "beds" and "occupancy" as measures of resource and efficiency fails to acknowledge the importance of case mix, staffing levels, and patient throughput per bed as determinants of workload intensity.

The suggestion that there should be a moratorium on bed reductions is unrealistic. Health services must change in response to new patterns of need, and in response to developing medical technologies. It would have implications for existing NHS and NHS private finance initiative schemes. Fixing for some indeterminate period of time one aspect of supply ignores the interplay between these changes, and could prevent the appropriate transfer of resources within hospitals and between hospitals and alternative forms of provision. On the other hand, the legitimate pursuit of greater efficiency and changes to accommodate changes in working practices need to be managed with proper regard to the quality of care, and the workload intensity which higher rates of throughput bring to hospital staff. Occupancy of hospital beds is only a partial measure of efficiency of these factors, and ought to be supplemented by other local measures of workload intensity in determining the scope for changes in bed complements.

The findings of the report and the way forward will now be discussed further with those who contributed to the review.

As a first step, guidance will now be prepared in consultation with the NHS. This will incorporate examples of good practice and will be issued to the NHS in Scotland later this year.

I will also ask health boards and NHS trusts to look again at their plans for peaks of emergency admissions in the light of the review's findings in order to satisfy themselves that these will enable boards and trusts to respond appropriately and effectively.

For the longer term, I wish to establish a much wider-ranging review of acute hospital services in Scotland. I will be seeking the views of senior clinicians and others on the scope, remit and timing of such a review in the coming months.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Mark Thatcher

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the dates of communications received by Her Majesty's Government from missions abroad since 1980 in relation to the activities of Mr. Mark Thatcher in Oman. [36580]

The Prime Minister: It is not possible to establish whether there are any communications except at disproportionate cost.

Wales and Scotland (Constitution)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to hold a multi-optional referendum on the constitutional future of Wales and Scotland prior to a general election. [36598]

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 July. [35744]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 July. [35745]

Ms Lynne: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 July. [35414]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is representing Her Majesty's Government at an official function with President Mandela.

Civil Servants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the role of senior civil servants in relation to (a) the answering of parliamentary questions, (b) the presentation of information to Parliament and (c) informing Parliament of Ministers' policies. [36487]

The Prime Minister: As set out in the civil service code, it is the role of civil servants to assist Ministers in their duty to give Parliament and the public as full information as possible about the policies, decisions and actions of the Government.

Robert Hussein

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make representations to the head of the Kuwait Government over the case of Robert Hussein; and if he will make a statement. [36678]

The Prime Minister: We have raised our concerns about the safety of Mr. Robert Hussein with the Kuwaiti authorities on a number of occasions and will continue to do so, when appropriate.

WALES

Welsh Language

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for transferring responsibilities for support for specific grants to local authorities for bilingual education projects to the Welsh Language Board. [37419]

Mr. Hague: At present, my Department makes specific grants for this purpose to local education authorities under section 21 of the Education Act 1980; these resources are largely used to support teams of area teachers—athrawon bro—which assist schools to deliver Welsh in the national curriculum.

In accordance with a commitment in the White Paper "A Working Countryside for Wales", I have consulted local government in Wales about transferring this responsibility to the Welsh Language Board. I have now decided that this responsibility, together with appropriate resources, should be transferred to the board with effect from 1 April 1997; it will therefore be for the board later this year to invite bids from local education authorities for support for bilingual education projects from 1997–98. The board will be able to make grants for this purpose under its existing statutory powers. Grants from the board to local authorities in support of bilingual education will remain specific grants within aggregate external finance and cannot be transferred to other expenditure categories.

I am asking the board to convene an early meeting with officials of the Welsh Local Government Association and with the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector to take this matter forward.

Cattle Remains

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what quantity of rendered remains of cattle rendered aged 30 months or more are currently stored in (a) Exeter, (b) Belfast, (c) Liverpool and (d) Gloucestershire. [36291]

Mrs. Browning: I have been asked to reply.

Quantities of rendered meat and bone meal in store at these locations on 8 July 1996 were:

| | Tonnes |
|---|---|
| Exeter | 6,649 |
| Belfast | 2,066 |
| Liverpool | 11,134 |
| Gloucestershire | 2,001 |

Child Care

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the capacity of the social services inspectorate to carry out adequate and frequent inspections of children's services in Wales; [35098]

(2) what plans he has to review the recruitment, selection and support of foster carers by social services departments in Wales; [35097]

(3) what plans he has to increase the resources available for the external inspection and monitoring of child care provision by social services departments in Wales. [35099]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Conwy (Sir W. Roberts) on 4 July, Official Report, column 507.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36014]

Mr. Hague: Such costs form part of the total expenditure for travel by road and could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Nurse Training

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many whole-time equivalent (a) health visitors, (b) school nurses, (c) district nurses and (d) community psychiatric nurses were in training in each region in September of each year since 1990 broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnic origin. [36724]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Reliable information is not available prior to 1993 and information on the number of school nurses in training is not collected centrally. Nor is information on the ethnic origin of students. The available information, which relates to the number whose courses are commissioned centrally, is given in the following table.

Numbers commencing training in September of each year

| | 1993 | | 1994 | | 1995 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Male | Female | Male | Female | Male | Female |
| Health visitors | — | 33 | 1 | 25 | 1 | 26 |
| District nurses | 1 | 31 | 1 | 29 | — | 35 |
| Community Psychiatric nurses | — | 16 | 7 | 11 | 10 | 12 |

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Gwent health authority concerning the appointment of a chief executive. [36673]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of (a) Gwent health authority and (b) Gwent Community Healthcare Trust concerning the refunding of the severance pay awarded to a previous senior manager of the trust currently employed by the health authority; and if he will make a statement. [36672]

Mr. Hague: None. Gwent health authority is considering the report on the procedure adopted for this appointment at its meeting on 12 July. The authority will let me know what action it intends to take on it.

Orimulsion

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) correspondence or (b) telephone conversations he has had with Mr. O. J. Williams concerning the construction of a jetty to import orimulsion for burning at Pembroke power station. [36731]

Mr. Hague: I have had a private meeting with Mr. Williams, during which a number of issues were discussed. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary was unaware of this meeting when he answered a question on this issue on 4 July, Official Report, column 507.

International Projects

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency in relation to the role of the Invest in Britain Bureau in attracting large international projects to Wales. [36701]

Mr. Hague: I regularly meet the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss a range of issues affecting Wales. The capture of the project by LG is a good example of how well the arrangements for major projects work.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions senior officers and the chief executive of the Child Support Agency are engaged in, or planning to hold, about replacing the current child support computer system. [36172]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the chief executive of the Child Support Agency to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne) on 20 June, Official Report, column 603.

State Retirement Pensions

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the value of the basic state retirement pension for (a) single pensioner and (b) pensioner couples for each year between November 1979 and April 1996; and what it would have been if it had been uprated in line with whichever was the higher of average earnings or prices. [36382]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table:

| | Basic Rates of retirement pension (RP) | | Rate of RP if uprated by higher of average earnings or prices since November 1979 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Single | Couple | Single | Couple |
| November 1979 | 23.30 | 37.30 | 23.30 | 37.30 |
| November 1980 | 27.15 | 43.45 | 27.60 | 44.20 |
| November 1981 | 29.60 | 47.35 | 30.90 | 49.50 |
| November 1982 | 32.85 | 52.55 | 33.50 | 53.65 |
| November 1983 | 34.05 | 54.50 | 36.40 | 58.30 |
| November 1984 | 35.80 | 57.30 | 38.25 | 61.25 |
| November 1985 | 38.30 | 61.30 | 41.60 | 66.60 |
| July 1986 | 38.70 | 61.95 | 43.45 | 69.55 |
| April 1987 | 39.50 | 63.25 | 45.90 | 73.45 |
| April 1988 | 41.15 | 65.90 | 49.50 | 79.20 |
| April 1989 | 43.60 | 69.80 | 53.90 | 86.25 |
| April 1990 | 46.90 | 75.10 | 59.15 | 94.65 |
| April 1991 | 52.00 | 83.25 | 65.60 | 104.95 |
| April 1992 | 54.15 | 86.70 | 70.80 | 113.25 |
| April 1993 | 56.10 | 89.80 | 74.25 | 118.80 |
| April 1994 | 57.60 | 92.10 | 76.40 | 122.25 |
| April 1995 | 58.85 | 94.10 | 79.45 | 127.15 |
| April 1996 | 61.15 | 97.75 | 82.55 | 132.10 |

The Retail Prices Index (all items) and the Average Earnings Index (Whole economy unadjusted) as published by the Office for National Statistics, have been used in this table.

Pensioners

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioner households are dependent on state benefits for at least (a) 50 per cent.,

(b) 75 per cent. and (c) 100 per cent. of their income in the latest year for which figures are available. [36256]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

| State benefits as a percentage of income | Proportion of pensioner units (per cent.) |
|---|---|
| At least 50 per cent. | 72 |
| At least 75 per cent. | 51 |
| 100 per cent. | 15 |

Notes

1. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.
2. Percentages are rounded to the nearest whole percentage point.
3. The proportion of state benefits is shown as a percentage of weekly gross income, before housing costs.

Source

Estimates derived from the 1993 Family Expenditure Survey, the latest date for which the information is available.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those in receipt of a state pension are (a) women aged 60 to 64, (b) men and women aged 65 to 69, (c) men and women aged 70 to 74, (d) men and women aged 75 to 79 and (e) men and women aged 80 years and over. [36359]

Mr. Heald: The information is set out in the table:

| Age | Men | Women | Both |
|---|---|---|---|
| 60–64 | — | 1,060,320 | 1,060,320 |
| 65–69 | 968,400 | 1,314,620 | 2,283,020 |
| 70–74 | 1,041,620 | 1,315,140 | 2,356,760 |
| 75–79 | 681,480 | 1,019,060 | 1,700,540 |
| 80 and over | 695,900 | 1,602,980 | 2,298,880 |
| Total | 3,387,400 | 6,312,120 | 9,699,520 |

Social Fund

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make changes to the discretionary social fund in the light of the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance; and if he will make a statement. [37247]

Mr. Roger Evans: We are introducing amendments to the Secretary of State's directions and guidance on the help available form the discretionary social fund to take effect from 7 October 1996. These changes include amendments in consequence of the introduction of jobseeker's allowance and a range of other minor improvements the need for which we have identified in the course of our routine monitoring of the social fund.

Details of these changes have been placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Retail Banks

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will require all retail banks to display the word bank on the fascia of their premises. [36464]

Mrs. Angela Knight: No.

Wealth and Poverty

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to reduce the discrepancy between the wealth of the richest and the poorest groups. [36267]

Mr. Jack: The Government believe that the prosperity of all groups depends on a healthy and growing economy. Our economic policies are delivering sustainable growth and low inflation.

Unemployment Benefit Claims (York)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new claims for unemployment benefit have been made by people living in the York parliamentary constituency since April 1992; and how many people living in the York parliamentary constituency have made one or more new claims for unemployment benefit in the same period. [36554]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Figures for those living in the York parliamentary constituency are not available. However, since April 1992 there have been approximately 58,000 claims for unemployment-related benefits from claimants signing-on at York Clifford street Employment Service jobcentre and York Stonebow Employment Service jobcentre. The number of claimants at these jobcentres who experienced at least one spell of unemployment in the same period was approximately 33,000.

Private Sector Borrowing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provisions of treaties or draft proposals of the European Union limit the percentage of private sector borrowing as a proportion of gross product or similar figures. [36822]

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no treaty provisions or European Union proposals to limit private sector borrowing.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he has made to his estimate of annual revenue from the landfill tax since his Budget statement. [35345]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In the 1995 Budget the net revenue from the landfill tax was estimated to be £110 million in 1996–97 and £450 million in a full year. In the "Summer Economic Forecast", published on 9 July, the estimates are unchanged.

Taxation Policies

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the report of the EU monetary committee on United Kingdom policies in relation to the qualification of economic and monetary union membership. [36633]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The EU monetary committee has participated in discussions on excessive deficits as required by article 104c of the treaty establishing the European Community. It has produced no reports on UK taxation policies which are entirely the responsibility of the British Government and do not fall within Community competence. The ECOFIN Council of 8 July agreed recommendations for member states with excessive deficits, including on the United Kingdom. These recommendations are not binding on the Government and are merely advisory. Once they are adopted, the recommendation on the UK will be made available to Parliament as usual through the normal scrutiny channels.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the extent to which the United Kingdom is obliged to (a) consider and (b) respond to the recommendations of the EU monetary committee on United Kingdom tax policy. [36635]

Mr. Clarke: The EU monetary committee has produced no reports and made no recommendations on UK taxation policies.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the origin, responsibilities and role of the EU monetary committee. [36632]

Mr. Clarke: Article 109c(1) of the EC treaty provides for the establishment of a monetary committee with advisory status in order to promote co-ordination of the policies of member states to the full extent needed for the functioning of the internal market. It states that the committee's tasks include: to keep under review the monetary and financial situation of the member states and of the Community and the general payments system of the member states and to report regularly to the Council and the Commission, to deliver opinions at the request of the Council or of the Commission or on its own initiative and to contribute to the preparation of the work of the Council in areas such as economic and financial policy.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of each recommendation contained in the report of the EU monetary committee on tax policy. [36634]

Mr. Clarke: The Government agree with the committee's recommendation that the United Kingdom adhere to its existing policy of continued fiscal consolidation and that tight control of expenditure will continue to be necessary.

Single Currency

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the procedure for assessing eligibility of member states for participation in the single currency; and what is the role in such consideration of the EU monetary committee. [36636]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Article 109j of the EC treaty sets out the procedure for participation in the single currency. The Commission and the European Monetary Institute shall report on the convergence achieved by the member states. On the basis of these reports, the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers—ECOFIN—shall assess, by qualified majority, member states' fulfilment of the necessary conditions for the adoption of a single currency and recommend its findings to the Council in the form of the Heads of State or Government. The European Parliament will also be consulted. Taking account of the reports of the EMI and the Commission and the opinion of the European Parliament, Heads of State or Government shall, acting by a qualified majority, and on the basis of the ECOFIN recommendations, decide which member states fulfil the necessary conditions for the adoption of a single currency.

The EU monetary committee will, according to the article 109c (1) of the EC treaty, contribute to the preparation of the work of ECOFIN in this procedure.

Excise Verification Officers

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the number of excise verification officers in the United Kingdom. [36559]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 10 July 1996]: Customs keep the number of staff required for this work under close review. At 31 March 1996 there were some 252 staff engaged on single market excise work, most of whom were excise verification officers. For the current financial year an increase of 20 EVO posts has been made.

Tobacco Smuggling

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is HM Customs and Excise's (a) current and (b) target detection rate for tobacco smuggling. [36560]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 10 July 1996]: In the year to 31 May excise verification officers detected single market excise offences with a revenue value of some £13 million, of which £6.1 million related to tobacco goods. The EVOs, target for the financial year to 31 March 1997 is £14 million for all types of excise goods; there is no separates target for tobacco goods.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many calls have been received on HM Customs and Excise's "Bootleggers" hotline for reporting tobacco smuggling; and how many prosecutions have been effected as a result of that hotline. [36561]

Mr. Heatcoat-Amory [holding answer 10 July 1996]: The Excise anti-smuggling hotline—0800 901 901—is a freephone, 24-hour, confidential service which has received 4,206 calls in the two years of its operation to 31 May 1996. The great majority of cases are dealt with by imposing a civil penalty rather than by prosecution and Customs' records are not held in a manner which indicates the number of hotline calls that result in prosecution.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Dyslexia

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the provision of support in schools for children with dyslexia; and if she will ensure that providers of teacher training take account of the code of practice on special educational needs. [36001]

Mrs. Gillan: The code of practice gives practical guidance to LEAs and the governing bodies of maintained schools on their responsibilities towards children with special educational needs, including those with dyslexia. The specific forms of support provided are a matter for individual schools and—in the case of children with statements—LEAs to determine, in consultation with parents. The Teacher Training Agency is developing national standards for newly qualified teachers, which will clarify the existing criteria, used in DfEE circulars, in the light of the code of practice.

Pupil Testing

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the results of the International Association for Educational Progress tests with special reference to the capabilities of 13-year-olds to multiply 9.2 by 2.5; and if she will make a statement. [36230]

Mr. Paice: The tests to which my hon. Friend refers were conducted in 1988. The results showed that English 13-year-olds were comparatively strong in geometry and problem solving and weaker in arithmetic.

Since 1988, we have introduced a number of major reforms. Among these, the recent revisions to the mathematics national curriculum have increased the emphasis on numeracy skills, particularly in the primary phase; our network of numeracy centres will continue to focus on this key skill, helping teachers to use methods that work.

Examination Results (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the number of school students achieving grades C and above in A-level examinations in Cheshire for each of the last five years and how that number relates to the national average. [36371]

Mr. Paice: The following tables give (i) the number and (ii) the percentage of 17-year-old pupils attaining grades C and above in GCE A-level examinations in Cheshire and England for the years 1995, 1994, 1993 and 1992. The data for 1991 are not available on a consistent basis.

GCE A-level achievements of 17-year-old pupils[1] in all maintained schools[2]

[2] Including grant-maintained schools, city technology colleges and maintained special schools.
[3] Prior to 1992–93, sixth-form colleges were part of the schools sector. Figures for 1991–92 therefore include sixth-form colleges.

Education Expenditure (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the standard spending assessment for Cheshire education authority in respect of (a) school capital building projects and (b) school transport in each of the last five years. [36372]

Mrs. Gillan: Provision for school capital is contained within the capital financing standard spending assessment and that for school transport within the education standard spending assessment. However, amounts for school capital or transport are not identified separately.

Capital and Grant Funding (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list each (a) capital allocation and (b) grant awarded to each (i) grant-maintained and (ii) city technology college in Northamptonshire in each year since 1989 which has been in excess of £10,000. [36694]

Mr. Robin Squire: Funding for grant-maintained schools is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the Funding Agency to write to my hon. Friend with the information.

The Department maintains one city technology college in Northamptonshire: Brooke Weston college in Corby. Capital allocations are not made down to individual CTCs. Information on capital grant awarded to Brooke Weston college is set out as follows:

| Financial year | Capital grant awarded (£ million)[1] |
|---|---|
| 1989–90 | nil |
| 1990–91 | 5.024 |
| 1991–92 | 2.648 |
| 1992–93 | 0.424 |
| 1993–94 | 0.143 |
| 1994–95 | 0.120 |
| 1995–96 | 0.615 |

Employment Service

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 224, (1) what considerations led the chief executive of the Employment Service not to provide the information requested on the cost of the refurbishment of offices in Swansea; [36864]

(2) on what terms the Employment Service, in June, disposed of its lease on its Swansea office; what dilapidation claim has been made; who owns the office; how much of the lease was outstanding; and what rent, rates and running costs will be incurred at the new office. [36816]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Alan Williams, dated 11 July 1996:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your additional questions about the refurbishment and lease disposal of my office at Grove House, Swansea. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I am sorry that part of your original question about the cost of refurbishing these premises was not answered. The refurbishment cost £208,000. The greater part of these costs was the replacement of electrical fittings as required under the Health & Safety (Design Screen Equipment) Regulations 1992.

The building is owned by Estateways PLC and we held the building on a twenty-year lease from 20 June 1986. The lease included a break clause at the end of the tenth year which we served this year. To date, no dilapidation claim has been received.

There were no additional costs incurred in moving from the building in Grove House to the integrated Jobcentre in High Street, Swansea. We had been occupying this building since June 1994 when the two separate Unemployment Benefit Offices in Swansea were integrated into the one site. The enclosed table shows the costs of the three buildings in Swansea which we used to occupy and the cost of the single integrated office. Substantial savings have been made to the cost of running the Employment Service in Swansea as a result of these moves.

I hope this is helpful.

Annual charges

| | Rent | Rates | Service charge | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Swansea High Street Jobcentre | 17,500 | 43,095 | Nil | 60,595 |

Youth Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many youths started youth training in each year since 1990–91. [36584]

Mr. Paice: The number of people starting youth training in Great Britain in each year since 1990–91 is as follows:

1990–91: 347,800
1991–92: 290,400
1992–93: 286,700
1993–94: 290,300
1994–95: 303,600
1995–96: 304,400

List 99

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many inquiries have been made by voluntary-aided and grant-maintained schools to DfEE list 99 for each year since 1979. [36718]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available. Voluntary-aided schools are maintained by local education authorities, which make List 99 checks on their behalf, and the Department does not have a record of the number of checks requested by grant-maintained schools.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make samples from carcases in beef intervention stock held in the United Kingdom available to researchers investigating BSE. [24419]

Mrs. Browning: Community rules currently require that beef purchased into intervention must be derived from steers aged less than 30 months at slaughter, or 24 months in the case of bull beef. Beef stored in intervention is subject to regular and comprehensive controls, including analyses, to ensure that it remains safe to eat.

No BSE infectivity has ever been detected in the muscle of cattle. Moreover, all specified bovine materials must be removed from all cattle at slaughter and destroyed, this includes from those animals going for intervention. It is, therefore, not clear what use researchers investigating BSE would derive from working on samples of intervention beef.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish all the scientific evidence he has evaluated since 1992 on bovine spongiform encephalopathy. [24525]

Mrs. Browning: It is not possible for the Government to re-publish all the hundreds of scientific reports worldwide on BSE which are considered by experts and the members of the independent Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, SEAC, many of which are published by scientific journals which hold the copyright. In other cases, interim results have been reported to the committee on a confidential basis by the scientists involved and it would be wrong for the Government to pre-empt the rights of those scientists to publish their results in the scientific literature in the normal way. In 1995 SEAC published a major report summarising present knowledge and research on BSE and similar diseases. A copy is available in the Library of the House (ISBN 0 11 242 9874).

A list of recent projects financed by the Government is given at appendix B of the "Programme to eradicate BSE in the United Kingdom" produced in May 1996 which is also available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of (a) head boning firms, (b) food processing companies, (c) abattoirs and (d) other companies or organisations connected with the beef trade that have ceased trading as a result of the BSE crisis. [31106]

Mrs. Browning: Precise figures are not available. However we estimate that 30 head boning plants, 200 retail butchers, two livestock markets, and a total of 15 wholesalers, meat processors and exporters, may have ceased trading since 20 March. There are no figures available for food processing companies. We believe that only one abattoir has ceased trading as a direct result of the crisis.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle (a) assessed to be incubating and (b) suspected to be incubating BSE have been imported into the United Kingdom from each EU member state in each year since 1990. [36677]

Mrs. Browning: No cattle imported into Great Britain have at the time of import been suspected of having BSE. However one animal which was reported to the Ministry as a BSE suspect in June 1994 and subsequently confirmed as a BSE case had been imported from France in April 1993. BSE has been confirmed in nine other imported cattle, originating from five member states. All had been resident in Britain for long enough to have become infected after arrival, and therefore no inquiries have been made in the exporting countries.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minsiter of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle, born after the ban on ruminant remains in cattle food, have been confirmed as BSE cases in each of Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and England; what action his Department has systematically undertaken to determine the cause of such cases of BSE; and how many prosecutions or formal warnings have arisen from such cases. [31577]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 June 1996]: The number of confirmed number of BSE cases born after the ruminant feed ban as at 10 July 1996 is:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| England | 24,944 |
| Scotland | 1,093 |
| Wales | 2,163 |
| Northern Ireland | 168 |

Detailed investigations of a significant proportion of all born after the ban cases—BABS—have been undertaken. In particular details on consumption of feed, particularly in the first year of life, risk of carryover on the farm of feed produced before the ban and the type and source of feed have been obtained. No farmers have been prosecuted for failure to comply with the feed ban because the incubation period of the disease makes it impossible to travel back to a particular feed source.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the date of birth by month and year of the 10 youngest cattle confirmed as BSE cases during 1996 in each of Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and England. [31578]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 June 1996]: The date of birth by month and year of the 10 youngest cattle in each of Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and England for 1996 is:

| Scotland | Wales | England | Northern Ireland |
|---|---|---|---|
| March 1991 | November 1991 | July 1992 | February 1991 |
| May 1991 | February 1992 | Jul;y 1992 | August 1991 |
| June 1991 | February 1992 | July 1992 | September 1991 |
| July 1991 | March 1992 | August 1992 | September 1991 |
| October 1991 | March 1992 | September 1992 | October 1991 |
| December 1991 | April 1992 | October 1992 | October 1991 |
| January 1992 | June 1992 | November 1992 | December 1991 |
| April 1992 | June 1992 | December 1992 | January 1992 |
| August 1992 | September 1992 | December 1992 | January 1992 |
| October 1992 | September 1992 | December 1992 | January 1992 |

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the confirmed percentage of the incidence of BSE in cattle for each year since 1989. [32268]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: The percentage of confirmed BSE cases in adult animals, as recorded on agricultural census data, since 1989 by year of clinical onset is:

| Year of onset | Percent of adult animals affected |
|---|---|
| 1989 | 0.20 |
| 1990 | 0.37 |
| 1991 | 0.66 |
| 1992 | 0.97 |
| 1993 | 0.88 |
| 1994 | 0.56 |
| 1995 | 0.33 |

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he proposes to use to establish whether a herd is BSE-free for the purposes of the exemptions from the 30-month cattle disposal scheme; and if he will make a statement. [33180]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: Proposals for a beef assurance scheme for those herds which are considered a low risk to contracting BSE were issued for consultation on 3 May. The consultation demonstrated broad support for the introduction of such a scheme. The detailed rules are now being developed in conjunction with the advice of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee. I hope to announce full details of the scheme shortly.

Beef Disposal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the cost of disposal of (a) beef, and (b) dairy cattle sent for slaughter in the United Kingdom (i) per head and (ii) in total; and if he will make a statement. [24494]

Mrs. Browning: On the question of costs, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 27 June 1996, Official Report column 234.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the period of time over which all (a) beef and (b) dairy cattle aged over 30 months in the United Kingdom could be slaughtered; and if he will make a statement. [24495]

Mrs. Browning: No estimate has been made of the timescale in which all such animals could be slaughtered. The objective in the short term is to eliminate the backlog of cattle eligible for slaughter under the over 30 month slaughter scheme as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear in his statement to the House on 24 June, Official Report column 21.

Abattoir Waste Spreading (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he took upon receipt of a letter, dated March 29 from the chair of the public health and protection sub-committee of Bradford council, concerning abattoir waste spreading to land; if he will place a copy of the letter and his reply in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [26236]

Mrs. Browning: I must apologise for the delay in replying to the hon. Member. A reply to the letter has been sent explaining the position and offering a meeting with MAFF's divisional veterinary manager at Leeds. A copy of the letter and the reply have been placed in the Library.

Shingle Dredging (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the hon. Member may expect a substantive answer to his question of 2 July on the difference in millimetres in the size of shingle available commercially from Hurst Spit and the shingle to be taken from the Shingles bank. [36856]

Mr. Boswell: I replied to my hon. Friends's question on 9 July 1996, Official Report, column 165.

Mr. Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has made of the effect of dredging shingle from Shingles bank on the southern west coast of the Isle of Wight. [36028]

Mr. Boswell: In contributing to the Government view on applications for dredging licences, the Ministry does not commission separate studies on the potential impact of dredging on the neighbouring coastline but does take account of independent studies. In the case of Shingles bank the study was undertaken by Wimpey Environmental Ltd. and it was re-appraised by HR Wallingford Ltd. A copy of the report can be viewed by arrangement at the New Forest district council's town hall in Avenue road, Lymington, Hampshire.

Fat Consumption

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average percentage, for each nation of the United Kingdom, of food energy derived from (a) fat and (b) saturated fatty acids for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [36047]

Mrs. Browning: Data on the food energy derived from fat and saturated fatty acids in England, Scotland and Wales for the years 1979 to 1994 is given in the table. Equivalent data for 1995 will be published in November this year.

The data are derived from the "National Food Survey" which during this period covered only household consumption. They therefore take no account of food energy and fat intake derived from food consumed outside of the home.

Comparable data on the intake of fat and saturated fatty acids in Northern Ireland are not available.

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been received by farmers in the form of organic aid since August 1994; and if he will make a statement. [36227]

Mr. Boswell: A total of £363,976 has been paid under the organic aid scheme in England for the period August 1994 to May 1996. Separate schemes operate in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. Efforts to encourage greater uptake for the scheme continue. For example, we launched the new organic conversion information service on 27 June which provides free technical and other advice to prospective organic farmers.

Tamper-proof Seals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require tamper-proof seals to be used on processed foods, drinks and other items intended for human consumption [36238]

Mrs. Browning: I have no plans to introduce additional legislation on tamper-proof seals. Existing food safety law requires manufactures and suppliers of processed food products to take all reasonable precautions to ensure food safety and to protect the interests of the consumer. Additional legislation would do no more than gold-plate the existing provisions. Furthermore, I believe that food manufacturers are best placed to take appropriate measures to protect the integrity of their products, and applaud the steps already taken by many manufacturers to supply their products in tamper-proof containers.

Beef Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his calculation of the amount of moneys required by the beef industry from his Department in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement. [24323]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 April 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 27 June 1996, Official Report, column 234.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those areas where the Government are entitled to pay compensation within the beef and ancillary industries compatible with EU law. [23999]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 2 April 1996]: National compensation measures must conform with the requirements of articles 92 and 93 of the treaty of Rome, which prohibits aids which distort or threaten to distort competition. All national measures must be notified to the Commission which has the power to decide on the compatibility of the aid with the treaty. The Commission has approved the following emergency market support measures necessitated by the present circumstances of the UK beef market: financial assistance to the rendering and slaughtering industries, supplementary compensation on steers and heifers; and compensation for bulls aged between 24 and 30 months in Northern Ireland.

Other measures to support the market in beef include:

premiums payable on beef cows and other male animals under the suckler cow and beef special premium schemes;

beef offered for sale into intervention when average market prices in the EU fall below 84 per cent. of the intervention price and where, in an individual member state, the average market price falls below 80 per cent. of the intervention price;

premiums payable on male dairy calves taken out of production by the age of 10 days; and subject to upper limits, compensation paid in respect of UK animals aged over 30 months which are currently unable to be sold into the human food chain.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Noise Prosecutions

10. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many successful prosecutions for noise have been brought in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [35390]

Mr. Moss: The total number of successful prosecutions for noise pollution in Northern Ireland for each of the years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 was three, eight and two respectively.

Irish Republic (Security and Co-operation)

11. Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the relationship of his Department with Irish Ministers on security and co-operation. [35393]

15. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his relations with the Irish Government in respect of security and co-operation. [35397]

Sir John Wheeler: I and my colleagues regularly discuss security issues and security co-operation with Irish Ministers. Both Governments are committed to ensuring the effectiveness of security co-operation between our two Governments and between our respective security forces, and will vigorously pursue improvements to those arrangements.

Extradition Arrangements

12. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the current extradition arrangements between the Republic and the north of Ireland. [35394]

Sir John Wheeler: I am pleased to say that the current extradition agreements between the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland work well. In the past 12 months we have co-operated to ensure the successful extradition of four individuals to Northern Ireland from the Republic of Ireland and another four in the opposite direction. I believe this is a good record.

Peace Process

13. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the conditions which Sinn Fein must now meet before being allowed to enter the peace talks. [35395]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Sinn Fein may participate in negotiations only after the unequivocal restoration of the IRA ceasefire.

21. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has to report on the peace process. [35405]

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the Stormont talks. [35387]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) and my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes).

Terrorist Arms

14. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the decommissioning of terrorist arms. [35396]

Sir John Wheeler: We remain committed to the decommissioning of illegal arms, the need for which has been underlined by the Provisional IRA's continuing pursuit of violence, and which remains vital if there is to be sufficient confidence to ensure a successful outcome to political talks.

Bill of Rights

16. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will bring forward a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland. [35398]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The framework documents published in February last year identified common ground on which agreement on the future protection of rights can be founded. The question of what specific rights require added protection, and the means of protection, is a matter for discussion within the multi-party talks which are currently under way.

Higher Education

17. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the number of applicants for higher education courses in 1996–97. [35400]

Mr. Ancram: There have been 21,200 applicants to Northern Ireland universities and 3,600 applicants to Northern Ireland colleges of education for entry in 1996–97. Information is not available on applicants to higher education courses at further education colleges.

Social Services Charges

18. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the charges made for (a) home help, (b) wardens, and (c) meals on wheels; and if he will make a statement. [35401]

Mr. Moss: The home help service is provided free to persons aged 75 and over. For others, the amount payable is determined in accordance with my Department's model scheme, introduced in 1980. Boards and trusts have some local discretion, and are required only to ensure that the charge does not exceed the actual cost of providing the service. Depending on locality, the range of charges runs from £4.32 to £6 per hour. However most clients pay only a proportion of this, or nothing at all, following assessment of their financial circumstances.

There is no charge for wardens. The standard charge for meals on wheels is 85p per meal.

Radiation

19. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent (a) representations he has received and (b) consultations he has held about the extent, impact and source of radiation pollution in Northern Ireland and in the Irish sea. [35402]

Mr. Moss: I have received no representations and held no consultations about the extent, impact and source of radiation pollution in Northern Ireland and the Irish sea.

Terrorists (Remission of Sentences)

22. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review remission arrangements for prisoners convicted of terrorist activities. [35406]

Sir John Wheeler: The arrangements for the release of those persons convicted of serious scheduled offences will remain under review.

Employment Programmes

23. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to ensure that the Northern Ireland Forum discusses positive action in employment programmes in Northern Ireland. [35407]

Mr. Ancram: The remit of the forum as provided by section 3(1) of the Northern Ireland (Entry to Negotiations, etc) Act 1996 is to discuss any issue which is relevant to promoting dialogue and understanding within Northern Ireland. It is a matter for the forum delegates to determine within that remit which issues they may wish to discuss.

Health Budget

24. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the impact of changes in the level of expenditure in respect of the Northern Ireland health budget in the current financial year. [35408]

Mr. Moss: The Government's expenditure on health and personal social services in Northern Ireland in 1996–97 will increase by £54 million. This is a real-terms increase of 0.2 per cent. on estimated expenditure for 1995–96. In order to meet a range of pressures facing services, including a rising drugs bill and increases in emergency admissions to hospital, and to finance a small number of high priority service developments, spending on existing services has been reduced by 3 per cent. Half of this is being met by securing greater efficiency, including reductions in management costs, and half by selected reductions in services, principally non-urgent admissions to hospital and some elements of community services.

Home Help Provision

25. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many recent representations he has received concerning home help provision. [35409]

Mr. Moss: Since 1 January 1996 I have received 11 general inquiries about home help provision, and one concerning the circumstances of an individual case.

Elected Bodies (Women)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he will take to promote the role of women in elected bodies in Northern Ireland. [35403]

Mr. Ancram: Women have an important role to play in the political arena in Northern Ireland. Promoting the role of women in elected bodies in Northern Ireland is however a matter for the political parties involved in those bodies.

All-party Talks

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the salaries and terms and conditions relating to appointment as a chairman of each strand of the all-party talks. [35322]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The three independent chairmen are not being paid a salary. They have been offered a per diem rate up to a maximum of £500 while they are engaged on talks-related business. The terms and conditions attached to their appointment are determined by precedent and analogy to the arrangements for the chairmen of the 1992 talks, Sir Ninian Stephen.

Agriculture

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research has been (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on comparative costing of (i) organic, (ii) bio-dynamic, (iii) permaculture and (iv) conventional intensive agricultural systems where the external costs have been internalised; and if he will make a statement. [36057]

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland funds research into the environmental aspects of conventional farming to support its aim of protecting and improving the environment through environmentally sensitive farming. This research includes a number of projects which take into account external costs and benefits for example, research on low input systems and their effect on the environment, and containment of silage effluent. No research has been commissioned so far on the non-conventional types of farming listed in the question.

Cattle Remains

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what quantity of rendered remains of cattle aged 30 months or more are currently stored in (a) Belfast and (b) Liverpool. [36292]

Mr. Ancram: As of 7 July 1996 the quantities stored were:

(a) 4,720 tonnes—Belfast (meat and bonemeal);

(b) 1,920 tonnes—Liverpool (tallow).

Health Service Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many whole-time equivalent (a) health visitors, (b) school nurses, (c) district nurses and (d) community psychiatric nurses were employed in each region in September of each year since 1990 broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnic origin. [36725]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is as follows:

Nursing staff Northern Ireland

| | Health visitors | | School nurses | | District nurses | | Community psychiatric nurses | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Male | Female | Male | Female | Male | Female | Male | Female |
| 1990 | 3.00 | 492.52 | 0 | 75.40 | 2.0 | 496.59 | 35.0 | 51.0 |
| 1991 | 3.00 | 495.80 | 0 | 79.95 | 2.0 | 487.76 | 51.0 | 62.0 |
| 1992 | 4.00 | 504.36 | 0 | 81.97 | 2.0 | 445.75 | 56.0 | 68.0 |
| 1993 | 4.00 | 482.16 | 0 | 73.76 | 2.0 | 399.48 | 60.0 | 83.0 |
| 1994 | 4.50 | 456.27 | 0 | 81.61 | 2.0 | 369.95 | 62.0 | 84.0 |
| 1995 | 5.50 | 442.46 | 0 | 89.83 | 2.0 | 335.88 | 62.0 | 89.5 |

Information on ethnic origin is not held centrally.

Terrorist Incidents

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many IRA-related terrorist incidents there have been in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) the rest of the United Kingdom and (c) the Irish Republic in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [35399]

Sir John Wheeler: It is difficult sometimes to be certain whether any particular incident is terrorist-related and therefore it is not possible to give precise figures. However, the seven bombs in London and Manchester, the mortar attack on the British Army base in Osnabruck, the murder of Garda McCabe in the Republic of Ireland and the increasingly horrific nature and number of beatings and robberies in Northern Ireland are profoundly evil, wicked and incompatible with democracy. They will not deflect us from the search for a democratically agreed political settlement in which we are engaged with other participants in the current negotiations.

Inward Investment

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much inward investment has been attracted to Northern Ireland in the most recent year for which figures are available. [35391]

Mr. Ancram: The year ended 31 March 1996 was the best ever year for inward investment in Northern Ireland with 35 projects secured, offering 4,869 jobs and representing a total investment of £432 million.

Training and Employment Agency

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Training and Employment Agency for the financial year 1996–97. [37481]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The following key targets have been set for the agency for 1996–97.

To place 38,000 people, of whom 85 per cent. are unemployed, into jobs.

To ensure that 35 per cent. of mainstream participants in Jobskills achieve NVQ level 2 or above.

To increase the number of action for community employment leavers who move into jobs, training or further education within three months of leaving from 41 per cent. to 45 per cent.

To encourage the commitment of Northern Ireland industry and commerce to the investors in people standard with the aim of increasing the number of recognitions from 32 at 31 March 1996 to 80 recognitions by 31 March 1997.

To increase the percentage of employees of company development programme clients to have achieved NVQ level 2 or above, or to be working towards units of NVQ level 2 or above, from a total of 10 per cent. in March 1996 to 15 per cent. in March 1997.

To achieve an annual efficiency saving of 4 per cent.

Copies of the agency operational plan 1996–97 will be placed in the parliamentary Libraries.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which next steps agencies have attained trading fund status in the last six months. [37482]

Mr. Moss: The Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency attained trading fund status on 1 April 1996. It is the first of the Northern Ireland agencies to do so.

Human Rights Report

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he received the annual report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement. [37483]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The report for the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 has been published today and copies have been laid before Parliament.

The Commission has undertaken a heavy programme of work in the past year, playing an active role in the shaping of legislation and policy, and commenting on the Government's record in meeting their international human rights obligations. In addition, it is carrying out an exceptionally demanding research commitment in connection with the employment equality review. The thorough, challenging and independent advice it offers plays a significant part in the protection of human rights in Northern Ireland.

Copies of my response to the report will also be placed in the Library in due course.

Emigrants

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland emigrants have returned to Northern Ireland with the aid of the making it back home initiative since its launch. [36150]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 8 July 1996]: Since the launch of the making it back home campaign in January 1992, 40 individuals have returned to set up businesses in Northern Ireland.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each local government district the number of children registered as working in (a) the current year and (b) 1986. [36315]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 10 July 1996]: In Northern Ireland information is not available at district council level, but the number of children registered as working in each education and library board in 1996 is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Belfast education and library board | 61 |
| South Eastern education and library board | 16 |
| North Eastern education and library board | 10 |
| Southern education and library board | 9 |
| Western education and library board | 6 |

Information is not available for 1986.

TRANSPORT

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the west coast main line will qualify for inclusion in the trans-European network high speed rail links. [36827]

Mr. Watts: The west coast main line is included on the current trans European network high speed rail map. The United Kingdom secured nearly £7 million of EU funding in support of the WCML modernisation in 1995 and we are confident of further sums during 1996 and beyond.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total cost of the Scott inquiry. [36042]

Mr. Freeman: The total cost so far to public funds of Sir Richard Scott's inquiry is assessed as £6,945,000.

This figure includes the direct salary, legal and other estimated costs of the inquiry itself; the direct salary cost of officials wholly employed on matters relating to the inquiry—but not the cost of officials who have worked on inquiry-related matters from time to time as part of their normal duties, which is unquantifiable; the cost of providing external legal services for witnesses to the inquiry, and the value of legal services charged by the Treasury Solicitor's Department. Some legal advice has been provided by Government lawyers as part of their normal duties, which is also unquantifiable and therefore not included.

Some officials continue to work on inquiry-related matters, for example in taking forward the Government's response to Sir Richard Scott's recommendations. However, since this work is generally carried out as part of officials' other duties it is unlikely that there will be a significant increase in the costs set out.

Civil Servants (Improper Conduct)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many allegations made by civil servants of improper conduct by Ministers are currently under investigation by the first civil service commissioner; and if he will make a statement on the nature of the allegations. [37132]

Mr. Freeman: The civil service commissioners' annual report for 1995–96 published on 4 June, stated that one appeal to them under the civil service code was currently under investigation; one case had been the subject of internal departmental investigation and the commissioners had not yet received an appeal; and one further case was still the subject of internal departmental procedures. I understand from the first commissioner that none of these cases involved allegations of improper conduct by Ministers and that no further approaches have been made to the commissioners since their report was published. The commissioners will report in general terms on the number, nature and outcome of all appeals made to them in their next report.

Occupational Health and Safety Agency

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make an announcement on the progress of the sale of the Occupational Health and Safety Agency. [37549]

Mr. Freeman: The House was informed on 23 November 1995 that it was the Government's intention to sell the Occupational Health and Safety Agency. I announced the shortlist of four companies to the House on 26 June. It is the Government's intention to identify a preferred bidder by the end of July and to complete the sale as soon as possible thereafter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Electricity and Gas Prices

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in real terms since privatisation in industrial electricity and industrial gas prices; and what estimate the DTI energy model has provided about the effect of these changes on consumption levels. [36815]

Mr. Eggar: Between privatisation—in the second quarter of 1990—and the first quarter of 1996 industrial electricity prices have fallen by 10.5 per cent. in real terms. Industrial gas prices fell by 55 per cent. in real terms between privatisation—in the fourth quarter of 1986—and the first quarter of 1996.

The DTI energy model estimates that in the short run, industrial energy demand is relatively unresponsive to changes in energy prices. In the longer term, for every 10 per cent. fall in energy prices, total energy demand is estimated to rise by around 4 per cent.

However, the price responsiveness of energy demand varies significantly across industrial sectors and types of fuel. For example, industrial electricity demand is estimated to be more price responsive than industrial gas demand.

Energy prices are just one of the many influences on energy demand and recent changes in demand for electricity and, particularly, gas will be affected by developments in technology and availability of supplies as well as prices.

Transhipment Licences

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the British Government's policy on the issuing of transhipment licences relating to trade between two other countries for products supplied by British companies. [36485]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 10 July 1996]: A transhipment licence is used where controlled products enter the United Kingdom solely for transit to another country. Individual transhipment licences are no longer required for many such goods except to the most sensitive destinations and for certain military, security and paramilitary police equipment. Most transhipments, for both industrial and other military goods, are allowed under the terms of the open general transhipment licence.

Where applications for individual transhipment licences are required, they are considered against the same strict criteria as applications for other export licences.

In accordance with arrangements introduced on 10 November 1994, goods that remain on board a plane or ship or those on "through airway bills" or "through bills of lading" are not controlled provided that they leave the UK within 30 days of arrival, that the final destination has been decided before the goods left the country of original export and are not re-directed on their way through the UK. Additionally, the goods must have been exported in accordance with the original country's export laws.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with (a) the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency and (b) other bodies regarding amending his Department's guidelines for the work of the Welsh Development Agency in respect of inward investment; and if he will make a statement. [36597]

Mr. Hague: With the approval of the Treasury, my Department issued guidelines to the Welsh Development Agency for its inward investment activities in March 1995. An amendment to those guidelines, covering United Kingdom relocations, was agreed and issued in June 1995 and a copy placed in the Library of the House.

The guidelines are currently being reviewed with the agency. Should it be necessary to make further amendments, or issue revised guidelines, a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Planning Policy

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a timetable for the production of all technical advice notes to accompany "Planning Guidance (Wales) Planning Policy", published in May. [36550]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The first group of technical advice notes was issued for public consultation on 25 June. The intention is that final versions of these will be published before the end of the year. The remaining notes are scheduled for public consultation in October with the intention of publishing them in final form by March 1997.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for mineral planning guidance in Wales. [36551]

Mr. Jones: My right hon. Friend is reviewing minerals planning guidance in Wales. Consultation on the draft guidance which results will take place later this year.

Epilepsy Association

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial support he currently provides to the Epilepsy Association in Wales. [36859]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

South and East Wales Ambulance Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South and East Wales ambulance trust concerning (a) the maximum expenditure allowed on capital projects without specific authorisations from his Department, (b) the cost of the new headquarters of the trust at Mamhilad, Pontypool and (c) the efficacy of the radio control system ordered for the trust. [37149]

Mr. Hague: None. All capital projects are subject to established planning and approval processes.

NHS Trusts (Car Leasing)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the minimum term of car leasing contracts in NHS trusts and health authorities under executive car leasing schemes approved by his Department; what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Gwent health authority concerning the annual renewal of the chief executive's car leasing contract; and if he will make a statement. [37133]

Mr. Hague: The provision of leased cars is governed by section 24 of the NHS General Whitely Council agreement for staff employed by health authorities and NHS trusts on national terms and conditions of service. I am placing a copy of section 24 in the Library. NHS trusts can determine their own leasing arrangements for staff employed on trust terms and conditions of service and they need to be satisfied about the propriety of expenditure on them. My Department does not approve individual schemes and I have had no consultations with the chairman of Gwent health authority.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Qualification Levels (Don Valley)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people with an educational qualification below national vocational qualification level 2 in the Don Valley parliamentary constituency (a) have been and (b) are being trained by the Barnsley-Doncaster training and enterprise council. [36161]

Mr. Paice: The information is not available in the form requested. The national follow-up survey of all 1994–95 youth training leavers indicates that 30 per cent. of participants in the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council's youth programmes had no qualifications when they joined.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of those in the age range 18 to 25 years (a) resident in the Don Valley parliamentary constituency and (b) resident in related travel-to-work areas have obtained national vocational qualification level 2. [36160]

Mr. Paice: The information is not available in the form requested. I understand that in the Doncaster district 1,025 participants on the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council's youth programmes obtained a qualification at NVQ level 2 or higher during 1995–96. Other young people will have achieved NVQ level 2 or above as a result of other education and training programmes, including those not organised by the TEC. Figures for this are not available at constituency level.

Examination Results (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the number of school students achieving grades C and above in GCSE examinations in Cheshire for each of the last five years and how that number relates to the national average. [36370]

Mr. Paice: The table gives the (i) number of and (ii) percentage of 15-year-old pupils attaining grades C and above in GCSE examinations in Cheshire and England for the years 1995, 1994, 1993 and 1992. The data for 1991 are not available on a consistent basis.

GCSE achievements of 15-year-old pupils[1] in all maintained schools[2]

| | Number of 15-year-old pupils achieving 1+ grades A-C[3]* | | Percentage of 15-year-old pupils achieving 1+ grades A-C[3]* | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Cheshire | England | Cheshire | England |
| 1991–92 | 7,454 | 316,689 | 68 | 64 |
| 1992–93 | 7,356 | 314,835 | 71 | 66 |
| 1993–94 | 7,549 | 328,635 | 72 | 68 |
| 1994–95 | 8,360 | 356,843 | 72 | 68 |

[1] Those pupils aged 15 at 31 August.

[2] Including grant-maintained schools, city technology colleges and maintained special schools.

[3] Grade A* was introduced in 1993-94.

City College, Manchester

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received from City college, Manchester in respect of redundancies consequent on funding reduction. [36940]

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend has received one letter.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she is taking to ensure a local provision of post-16 education in Manchester. [36922]

Mr. Paice: It is the statutory duty of the Further Education Funding Council to secure the provision of sufficient facilities for full-time education for those aged 16 to 18, and adequate facilities for part-time education for those aged over 16 and for full-time education for those aged 19 and over. I understand that there is no shortage of provision in Manchester.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Slave Trade

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce further legislation in respect of trafficking in human beings. [36562]

Mr. Kirkhope: Under section 25(1) of the Immigration Act 1971, it is an offence for a person to be knowingly concerned in making or carrying out arrangements for securing or facilitating the entry into the United Kingdom of anyone who he knows or has reason to believe is an illegal entrant. Clause 5 of the Asylum and Immigration Bill extends this provision to include facilitating for reward the entry of an asylum claimant, and facilitating the acquisition of leave to remain by deception. No further legislative changes are planned.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to guarantee foreign prostitutes illegally present in the United Kingdom immunity from expulsion if they come forward. [36563]

Mr. Kirkhope: No.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures to prevent trafficking in women were discussed by officials from his Department and from the immigration service at the recent European Commission conference in Vienna. [36565]

Mr. Kirkhope: The conference discussed a wide range of issues in the areas of migration policy, social policy and protection, law enforcement and police co-operation, and judicial co-operation. The European Commission is considering the conclusions of the conference with a view to presenting a communication to the Council and the European Parliament.

Cheshire Fire Service

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of incidents attended by the Cheshire fire service in each of the last five years. [36470]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is in the following table:

Incidents attended by local authority fire brigades in Cheshire 1990 to 1994

| Year | Cheshire |
|---|---|
| 1990 | 15,588 |
| 1991 | 14,956 |

[1] From 1993, the figures for special service incidents attended are included on a financial year basis rather than a calendar year basis.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many private finance initiative applications have been received from (a) police authorities and (b) fire brigades; and what is the total value of these projects. [36246]

Mr. Sackville: It is for police and fire authorities to take forward private finance schemes. My hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration announced on 21 May measures to help local authorities to engage in private finance initiative projects.

The Home Office is supporting 13 police forces in the development of 14 "pathfinder" PFI projects, with an estimated total capital value of around £130 million. A number of fire brigades are also being encouraged to explore potential private finance options.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what mechanism compensation may be claimed for health damage to a child or adult caused by low flying aircraft; and how many such claims there have been since 1990. [36813]

Mr. Soames: My Department will pay reasonable compensation providing it can be demonstrated that military aircraft activity is responsible for any injury sustained. Individuals should submit their claim in writing to:

The Ministry of Defence
PL(LS) Claims 3
Room 459
Lacon House
Theobalds Road
London WC1X 8RY

Statistics are not available in the form requested. Since 1990–91, however, my Department has received 124 claims for personal injuries as a result of military aircraft activity.

Mr. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much is the Department's annual expenditure on research into possible health damage to people caused by low flying aircraft. [36814]

Mr. Soames: My Department is involved in research, both intramurally and extramurally, into a wide range of issues which have a bearing on the relationship between military aircraft activity and health. The annual expenditure specific to the possible effect of military low flying on health, however, cannot be separately identified.

Service Accommodation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the recommendations of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body 1996 report concerning the use of the assured shorthold tenancy as a basis for fixing service accommodation rents. [37069]

Mr. Soames: The Armed Forces Pay Review Body stated in its 1996 report that it has adopted as the basis for its recommendations on accommodation charges a weighted average derived from all relevant housing sectors. This includes assured shorthold tenancies, but these are not the sole comparator. The Government have accepted the review body's recommendation.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if armed forces accommodation newly constructed by his Department is included in his plans for the sale of the married quarters housing stock. [37068]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The estate intended for sale ranges widely in age, from properties constructed recently to housing built before 1945.

TREASURY

EC Budget

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the next edition of "Europe Finances". [36354]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to publish the statement on the 1996 EC budget; and what factors underlie the delay in publication. [36690]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I hope to publish this document before the recess. I regret that publication has been delayed by pressures of other work in the Treasury.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the principal differences in the treatment of PFI projects between the present system of cash accounting and the system of resource accounting which is planned to be introduced. [36571]

Mr. Jack: PFI contracts seek to procure public services which flow from capital invested by the private sector. Proposals to achieve an appropriate accounting treatment for PFI projects under resource accounting will be examined by the independent financial reporting advisory board to the Treasury which has been set up in response to the wishes of Parliament.

Public Sector Finance

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the entitlements for 1996–97 resulting from the carry forward of underspends allowed under the endyear flexibility schemes for capital, running costs, health, Ministry of Defence operating costs, EU structural funds and Jubilee line extension expenditure. [37693]

Mr. Waldegrave: A list of entitlements totalling £369 million for capital expenditure; £498 million for running costs; £268 million for health expenditure; £285 million for MOD operating costs expenditure; £359 million for EU structural funds and £30 million for expenditure on the Jubilee line extension is shown in the table.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, individual cash limits and running costs limits will be increased when entitlement is taken up.

The total increase in cash limits resulting from the take-up of end-year flexibility will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mutual Status

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the benefits of mutual status; and if he will make a statement. [36463]

Mrs. Angela Knight: During the recently concluded consultation on the draft Building Societies Bill, a number of societies, and others, mentioned the benefits of mutual status. We are currently considering these responses along with all the others we have received.

State Pensioners

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in receipt of a state pension pay (a) higher rate income tax, (b) basic and lower rate income tax only and (c) the lower rate of tax only. [36358]

Mr. Jack: The estimated numbers of taxpayers by marginal rate in receipt of state retirement pension—men aged 65 or over and women aged 60 or over—at 1996–97 income levels are given in the table.

| | Number of taxpayers (millions) |

HEALTH

Care for the Elderly

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a 'statement on action by the European Commission to incur expenditure on projects to assist the elderly without legal authority. [37690]

Mr. Dorrell: My Department has become aware that the European Commission has invited applications for funding for measures to assist the elderly. Such action has not been agreed by the Council of Ministers. The Government firmly believe that the Commission does not have the legal authority to commit expenditure of this kind without the endorsement of all member states in the Council. The Government have, therefore, lodged an application in the European Court of Justice challenging this planned expenditure. This challenge is necessary to ensure legality, financial propriety and democratic accountability in Commission spending.

Epilepsy

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support he currently provides to the British Epilepsy Association in England. [36858]

Mr. Bowis: In the current financial year the main national epilepsy organisations, the British Epilepsy Association and the National Society for Epilepsy have been awarded section 64 project grants from the Department of Health amounting to £52,500 and £29,500 respectively. The British Epilepsy Association is currently receiving a section 64 project grant of £22,500 a year for three years towards its database project, and a grant towards its helpline of £90,000 over three years.

The National Society for Epilepsy is currently receiving a project grant for its joint educational fellowship for epilepsy project with the Royal College of General Practitioners of £40,000 over two years and a grant of £12,500 a year due to end in 1997–98 for its information needs project.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases the regional executive for the North and Yorkshire has agreed that hospital trust budgets for 1996–97 can plan outturn deficits; and for which trusts deficit budgets have been agreed. [37019]

Mr. Horam: This information is based on estimates subject to revision. It is not therefore suitable for publication.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy guidance he has given to hospital trusts about the planned setting of deficit budgets in the present financial year. [37020]

Mr. Horam: Trusts' annual plans are based on contracts negotiated with local purchasers. The primary financial duty of national health service trusts is to break even on an income and expenditure basis, taking one year with another. This is a statutory obligation and is set out in the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. We have not issued any further policy guidance on this matter.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospital trusts had deficits in 1995–96; and what the size of the deficit was in each case. [37021]

Mr. Horam: Financial information for all trusts is placed in the Library when audit has been completed. The latest year for which audited records are available is currently 1994–95. The audited information for 1995–96 will not be available until later this year and as before will be placed in the Library as soon as practicable.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the research which he has conducted into medical conditions that particularly affect members of ethnic minorities. [37023]

Mr. Malone: The Department attaches great importance to ensuring that the health needs of ethnic minority populations are recognised and met.

The Department's policy research programme is open and research findings are normally published. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The MRC is an independent body receiving its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on how the "The Health of the Nation" targets relate to members of ethnic minorities. [37036]

Mr. Horam: The targets for improvement in health within "The Health of the Nation" White Paper relate to the whole of the population. The White Paper recognises that there will be a need for local decisions about developing local strategies and action to take account of the particular needs of different population groups such as those from black and ethnic minority groups.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the rates of incidence of (a) sickle cell anaemia, (b) thalassaemia, (c) glaucoma, (d) diabetes and (e) hypertension in each of the last five years in (i) ethnic minority and (ii) other patients. [37097]

Mr. Horam: Information is not available centrally on rates of incidence of these conditions which differentiates between members of ethnic minorities and others.

Information is available centrally in the hospital episode system both of operations and diagnosis using specific codes. The available information is contained in "Hospital episode statistics", volume 1, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of the membership of the NHS executive board are from ethnic minorities. [37136]

Mr. Horam: None of the current members of the national health service executive board are from ethnic minorities. Members of the board are senior civil servants and are appointed in line with civil service commissioners' guidelines for ensuring fair and open competition regardless of race or ethnic origin.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current percentage of ethnic minority consultants with (a) A+, (b) A, (c) B and (d) C merit awards; and what is the total percentage of consultants with a merit award. [37145]

Mr. Malone: Information on the ethnic origin of distinction award holders is not currently held centrally. As at 30 September 1995, the proportion of consultants in Great Britain holding an A+, A, or B distinction award was 13 per cent. With effect from 1 April 1996 the C award element of the distinction award scheme was replaced by a system of discretionary points, decided locally.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a breakdown of ethnic minority representation on the boards of (a) health authorities and (b) NHS trusts for the past five years. [37031]

Mr. Malone: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a breakdown of ethnic minority membership of community health councils. [37029]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current percentage of consultants who are from an ethnic minority, by speciality and in total. [37144]

Mr. Malone: The proportion of consultants in post from an ethnic minority is 16 per cent. However, this figure is based on information which is voluntarily provided to trusts by the doctors concerned. As not all doctors provide it, this data must therefore be subject to some uncertainty.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish a breakdown of general practitioners by ethnic minority for each of the past five years (a) nationally and (b) by region; [37035]

(2) if he will list the total number of (a) general practitioners and (b) ethnic minority general practitioners by region. [37146]

Mr. Malone: Information on the number of general practitioners was published in "Statistics for General Medical Practitioners in England: 1985–1995", copies of which are available in the Library. Information on the total number of ethnic minority general practitioners by region is not available centrally.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the current percentage of black and ethnic minority chairs and non-executive members of NHS authorities, trusts and community health councils, (a) nationally and (b) individually by (i) community health council, (ii) trust and (iii) district health authority; [37039]

(2) how many and what percentage of regional health authority chairmen are from ethnic minorities. [37137]

Mr. Malone: The current breakdown of ethnic minority chairmen and non-executive members is 4.8 per cent. of people appointed to national health service trusts and 5.9 per cent. of those appointed to health authorities. The figure for community health councils is not available centrally.

Specific details relating to each NHS trust and health authority will be in the annual report which is to be published later this summer.

None of the eight regional chairmen is from a minority ethnic background.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) ethnic minority and (b) other patients have been sectioned under the provisions of Mental Health Acts in each of the last five years. [37098]

Mr. Bowis: The number of total formal admissions of patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 is shown in the table. Information on ethnic minority patients admitted under the Act is not available centrally.

Total formal admissions to national health service facilities, private mental nursing homes registered to detain patients and special hospitals under the Mental Health Act 1983, 1990–91 to 1994–95, England

Numbers

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have received ECT in each of the last five years broken down into (a) men, (b) women and (c) ethnic minorities. [37099]

Mr. Bowis: Reliable information on the number of administrations of electro-convulsive therapy treatment is not available centrally.

Care Eligibility Criteria

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's discussions with the Cornwall health authority and Cornwall county council on continuing care eligibility criteria. [37042]

Mr. Bowis: The regional offices of the national health service executive and social services inspectorate are currently working with Cornwall health authority and Cornwall county council, at their request, on the implementation of eligibility criteria.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities have not finalised continuing care eligibility criteria. [37041]

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities implemented local policies and eligibility criteria for continuing health care from April 1996. They are required to keep their policies under review and formally to revise their eligibility criteria for April 1997.

Out-patients

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department collates on cancelled out-patient appointments. [37044]

Mr. Horam: None.

Bradford NHS Hospital Trust

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he will make an announcement on the appointment of a new chair for the Bradford Hospital trust; [37046]

(2) what assessment he has made of the procedures used in selecting a new chair of Bradford Hospital NHS trust. [37047]

Mr. Horam: The procedures for the appointment of the chairman of Bradford Hospital national health service trust have followed the published guidance from the Commissioner for Public Appointments. Details of the new chairman will be announced shortly.

Bandages

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which bandages listed in the drug tariff are direct substitutes for Biflex Thuasne and Velband bandages. [37048]

Mr. Malone: Clinical equivalence is one of a number of factors taken into account when a product is considered for inclusion in the drug tariff. However, information on the clinical equivalence of products is not routinely kept by the Department.

Bad Debts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 25, on bad debts, what is included in the "Other" category. [37101]

Mr. Horam: Other bad debts relate to all debts which are not overseas visitors, private patients, or road traffic accidents. No separate analysis of such debts is available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 93, when figures for 1995–96 on debtors and bad debts will be available. [37070]

Mr. Horam: Figures for 1995–96 on debtors and bad debts will be available from 30 November 1996.

Specialist Training

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time spent in higher specialist training by (a) white doctors and (b) doctors from ethnic minority groups with right of residence. [37154]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Screening

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the strategy for screening for sickle cell anaemia, glaucoma, diabetes and hypertension; and how this strategy relates to members of ethnic minorities. [37024]

Mr. Horam: Individual health authorities are responsible for assessing the needs of their resident populations, including the needs of ethnic minorities, and for purchasing services, including screening, to provide for those needs.

The new National Screening Committee, which will meet for the first time later this year, will advise on national policy for implementation of screening programmes. Decisions are yet to be made on which conditions it will consider.

NHS Leaflets

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are in place for translation of NHS leaflets into languages other than English. [37025]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health produces a substantial quantity of health information translated into languages other than English. Material is targeted at ethnic minority groups either if it is specific to them or where it is every citizen's right to have access to the information. The patients charter and "The Health of the Nation and You" are examples of publications translated into ethnic minority languages.

Health Advocates

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health advocates have been employed in primary care in each of the last five years. [37135]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Immunisation

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the immunisation rates for children (a) nationally and (b) from ethnic minorities for each of the past five years. [37037]

Mr. Horam: Information can be found in the summary information booklet titled "Vaccination and Immunisation Summary Information for 1994–95 England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Information for immunisation rates for ethnic minorities is not available centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the level of spending on AIDS research in each of the last five years. [37043]

Mr. Horam: The amount spent on HIV/AIDS research are as follows:

1991–92: £20.4 million
1992–93: £20.0 million
1993–94: £21.8 million
1994–95: £20.4 million
1995–96: £19.9 million

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the companies which have guaranteed a donation to the millennium exhibition, together with the sum guaranteed. [34435]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 25 June 1996]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Contributions Agency

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the results of the feasibility study for market testing personal details and customer services work for the Contributions Agency. [35684]

Mr. Heald: Operational responsibility for the Contributions Agency lies with Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from George Bertram to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 12 July 1996:

As the Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency is away from the office, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency in her absence.

I have been asked to reply to your question about the results of the feasibility study for market testing personal details and customer services work for the Contributions Agency.

The personal details and customer services feasibility studies have been taken forward under the new titles of Account Alteration Unit and Archive/Tracing Unit and resulted in a number of recommendations. The main thrust of the recommendations is that business units should investigate methods of producing savings, including enhanced IT systems and benchmarking with the private sector.

War Pensions Agency

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to review the procedures of the War Pensions Agency; [35704]

(2) how many compensation appeals were dealt with by the War Pensions Agency in 1995; and what percentage of those appeals resulted in the appeal being upheld; [35705]

(3) what factors the War Pensions Agency takes into account when making its statement of case on compensation appeals; [35706]

(4) how many letters he has received concerning the operations of the War Pensions Agency and its operational procedures in the last three years. [35707]

Mr. Heald: These are matters for Mr. Kevin Caldwell, chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 11 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about compensation appeals, review of procedures and correspondence concerning the operations of the War Pensions Agency (WPA).

You ask about "compensation appeals." Compensation payments are made by the Department when, for example, a person's pension payments have been delayed due to a clear and unambiguous error by ourselves. There is no right of appeal against non-payment of compensation under the scheme. I have therefore, taken your question as referring to appeals made against entitlement and assessment decisions made on War Pension claims.

The Pensions Appeal Tribunal (PAT) Acts 1943 and 1949, with subsequent rules and amendments, provide for the hearing by independent Tribunals of appeals against the WPA's decisions. These Tribunals are set up by the Lord Chancellor's department in England and Wales and analogous legal departments in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Various sections of the PAT Acts provide for appeals by members of the Armed Forces, the Home Guard, Mercantile Marines, Naval Auxiliary Personnel, Ulster Defence Regiment (now part of the Royal Irish Regiment), Coastguards and Civilians. From October 1995 there are also appeal rights under the Polish Forces Scheme.

When a decision on entitlement to a War Pension is notified, the claimant is informed of his/her appeal rights. Appeals may be made against complete rejection of an entitlement claim, against the rejection of attributability, against the decision that service aggravation no longer remains or against the date on which service aggravation passed away. In Widows' claims, there are appeal rights against rejection of entitlement to a War Widow's Pension.

Assessment appeals may be made against the composite assessment of disablement, the period of award and the decision to make an assessment final. There is also provision for appeals against awards being withheld or reduced on the grounds of negligence or misconduct.

Rule 5 of the PAT Act requires the Secretary of State to prepare a statement of case containing the relevant facts relating to the appellant's case as known to the Secretary of State. This statement of case consists of a chronological compendium of the appellant's relevant medical history. The relevant medical history may include service medical records, reports from General Practitioners and Specialists, hospital case notes, audiograms and War Pension medical examinations. The appellant's claims and submissions, previous Tribunal and Secretary of State decisions are also included, along with the Secretary of Sstate's reasons for decision in entitlement appeals and terms of reference to the Tribunal.

There is no reference in the PAT rules to the need for a medical submission. However, an "Opinion of Medical Division" is included in the statement of case in all entitlement appeals where medical questions are involved and is referred to by the Secretary of State in the reasons for decision. For assessment appeals, our Medical Advisors include an Opinion of Medical Division in the Statemént of Case if it is relevant.

If the appellant's medical history contains relevant information which in the opinion of the Secretary of State would be harmful to the appellant, it is handled under Rule 22 of the PAT Acts and excluded from the appellant's copy of the statement of case. The appellant's representative, the Tribunal and ourselves have copies of the full statement of case with the evidence excluded from the appellant's copy under Rule 22 underlined. Our Medical Advisers provide guidance in this matter to the Secretary of State. Ultimately it is for the Tribunal to decide whether, in the interests of the appellant, the evidence excluded from his/her statement of case should or should not be disclosed. In addition, the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 makes it an offence to disclose details of convictions for certain offences and the conduct constituting the offence which led to the conviction. Evidence to which the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act applies would normally be excluded from the statement of case. However, if our Medical Advisers consider that this evidence forms a necessary part of the total evidence, the agreement of the President of the PAT can be sought for inclusion of this in the statement of case.

You ask about the number of appeals dealt with by WPA in 1995. You will appreciate that appeals processed by WPA during 1995 would not have been heard and decided by the PAT within the same 12 months due to the time involved in preparing and hearing an appeal. During 1995 we prepared and cleared 3,650 entitlement and 4,800 assessment appeals to the PAT. In 1995 the PAT heard 2,762 appeals against entitlement decisions involving 5,326 medical conditions. Of these our decision was upheld on 1,581 appeals (57 per cent.), involving 3,920 medical conditions (74 per cent.) and overturned on 1,181 appeals (43 per cent.), involving 1,406 medical conditions (26 per cent.). The PAT also heard 2,504 assessment appeals and our assessment was upheld on 1,826 (73 per cent.) and overturned on 678 (27 per cent.).

Information about the number of letters received by the Secretary of State on War Pensions Agency operations is not available. However, the table below shows the number of letters to which Ministers and myself (and my predecessors) replied from April 1994, the date WPA took on Agency status.

| | Number |
|---|---|
| April 1994 to March 1995 | 909 |
| April 1995 to March 1996 | 1,015 |
| April 1996 to June 1996 | 272 |

Finally, you also ask about plans we have to review our procedures. We are continually reviewing our processes and procedures in order to meet the high standard of service expected by War Pensioners and War Widows. The operating organisation and procedures in the War Pensions Agency were changed fundamentally during 1995 and for 1996/97 we have set ourselves some major priorities which include continuing the processes of restructuring our business and delivering the benefits of the Departmental Change Programme.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of claimants for (a) child benefit and (b) one parent benefit in (i) Crewe and Nantwich and (ii) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36347]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Commission (Expenditure)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 3 April, Official Report, column 360, if he will make a statement on the further action by the European Commission to incur expenditure without legal authority. [37689]

Mr. Lilley: My Department has become aware that the European Commission has invited further applications for funding for projects seeking to combat social exclusion. The substantive issue—of expenditure without the necessary legal authority is identical to the case that the Government took to the European Court of Justice in April. We have therefore this week lodged an application in the European Court of Justice challenging the legal basis of the Commission's proposed further expenditure.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Staff

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was, at the latest available date, the number of Scottish Office and related agencies staff in 1995 by department or agency, the number of administrative and professional staff in each grade above clerical, by grade, their annual salary costs in each department or agency, the totals in each category, and the population of Scotland. [35993]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The estimated population of Scotland at mid-1995 was 5,136,600. The numbers of staff at 1 April 1995 employed in the Scottish Office and its executive agencies, detailing administrative and professional staff in each grade above clerical and annual salary costs, are set out in the tables.

Due to a pay and grading review, Scottish Prison Service staff are no longer classified by the standard civil service grades and are not split into pay bands.

Consequently, no breakdown along the lines requested is possible for SPS.

Legislation

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish laws, statutory instruments or rules in the field of (a) state and private pensions and (b) commercial law enacted since May 1992. [35994]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Matters relating to state and private pensions are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. Matters relating to commercial law are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the need for Scotland to maintain separate social security legislation in the form of Acts, statutory instruments and rules, or for similar separate laws on pensions and road traffic regulations. [35995]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Most road traffic regulation applicable to Scotland is embodied in legislation which applies to the whole of Great Britain. As a matter of administrative responsibility, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State may promote subordinate legislation where this exclusively relates to traffic regulation in Scotland.

Matters relating to pensions and social security are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Land Title Registration

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in extending registration of title under the Land Register (Scotland) Act 1979 to further areas of Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [37691]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The programme to extend the land register was announced in 1992. At that time the counties of Renfrew, Dunbarton, Lanark and the Barony and Regality of Glasgow were already on the land register.

Since 1992, the counties of Clackmannan, Stirling, West Lothian, Fife, Aberdeen and Kincardine have been taken on and the land register now covers 57 per cent. of total housing stock.

Following the 1994 report of the Committee of Public Accounts, "Registers of Scotland: Service to the Public" Cmd 2739, the Keeper of the Registers has been considering whether the programme should be amended. I have now approved a revised programme for the remaining counties as shown in the table.

The main changes are that Wigtown and Kirkcudbright are to be covered in 1997 and the borders counties and East Lothian in 1999, instead of in all cases in 2002.

| Operational date | County |
|---|---|
| 1 April 1997 | Ayr |
| | Dumfries |
| | Wigtown |

Scottish Environment Protection Agency

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to lay before Parliament a draft of the guidance he is required to give to the Scottish Environment Protection Agency under section 31 of the Environment Act 1995. [37692]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am today laying before the House a draft of the guidance I am required under section 31 of the Environment Act 1995 to give to the Scottish Environment Protection Agency on its objectives, including the contribution it is to make towards the achievement of sustainable development.

I will also be providing to the agency an explanatory document which provides background information to set the statutory guidance into context and offers a commentary on SEPA's duty to take account of likely costs and benefits. Copies of this document will be placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Tied Aid

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the three reports prepared in 1995 by the Overseas Development Administration, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Treasury on tied aid. [36652]

Mr. Hanley: The ODA will publish in the next few weeks a version of the reports containing a full account of the studies, their findings and ODA conclusions, but excluding commercially sensitive information.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on reducing the proportion of tied aid; and if he will make a statement. [36592]

Mr. Hanley: In the interests of both the British taxpayer and aid recipients, we have to obtain value for money when buying goods and services with public funds. Subject to this criterion, it is also established policy that, as far as possible, the goods and services financed under the aid programme should be British. In practice the proportion of the aid programme that is tied is falling because of the increase in multilateral aid, the increased use of local goods and services, and reciprocal untying of programme aid under the Special Programme for Africa.

Three recent studies examined the effects and impact of ODA's tying policies. The findings, which will be published shortly in a summary report by ODA, show that: there would be marginal benefits to the UK economy from unilateral untying and somewhat larger benefits from multilateral untying, but that the costs of tying are relatively low because UK goods and services are for the most part internationally competitive and because a significant part even of the bilateral aid programme is effectively untied. The studies point to a few areas where there is scope for ODA to seek cost-effective procurement more rigorously, but indicate that unilateral untying would yield few efficiency gains for the aid programme, would bring little commercial benefit, and would be unpopular with individual firms and businesses competing for aid-funded contracts.

The Government remain convinced that multilateral untying would be in the best interests of donors and developing countries. They will continue their efforts to encourage other donors to agree jointly to untie aid.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 751, what factors underlie the percentage fall in bilateral tied aid between 1993 and 1994. [36649]

Mr. Hanley: The downward trend reflects recent changes in ODA's procurement system, driven by value for money and efficiency incentives, and continuing efforts to untie aid where this is appropriate for example, jointly with other donors under the special programme of assistance for Africa.

Kalahari Game Reserve

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the future for the (a) Kalahari game reserve and (b) Kalahari bushmen living in the reserve. [36641]

Mr. Hanley: The future of the central Kalahari game reserve is secure. The Botswana Government have made it clear that the bushmen who live in the reserve may continue to do so if they wish and that there is no intention of forcing any of them to move from the reserve.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of (a) dairy and (b) beef herds in the United Kingdom have had no cases of BSE. [27861]

Mrs. Browning: Up to 1 July, 40.5 per cent. of dairy herds and 84.6 per cent. of beef herds had never had a case of BSE.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria were used for the selection of abattoirs to carry out the cattle slaughter policy. [35773]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 July 1996]: Following consultation between the Intervention Board and representatives of the abattoirs and renderers a list of approved abattoirs for the purposes of the over 30-month slaughter scheme was drawn up on the basis of a number of clearly specified criteria. These were a traditional large scale trade in cows and heavy steers; logistical considerations such as geographical spread; proximity to renderers; a commitment to accepting casualty animals; a commitment to be able to process at least 100 animals a day on days specified for participation; and that they were currently operating and with EC approved status.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from abattoirs prepared to undertake the slaughter of beasts for less than £107.50 per head. [35775]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 July 1996]: We have received a number of representations from abattoirs seeking to participate in the over 30-month slaughter scheme on the basis of a lower fee than the £87.50 provisional rate per animal currently being paid to approved abattoirs up to 16 June.

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food with reference to paragraph 8 of S.I. 1242 concerning decommissioning of fishing vessels, if he had the option, under article 8 of European Council Regulation 3699/93, of including permanent transfer of a fishing vessel to a third country or permanent re-assignment for purposes other than fishing in waters of the European Community. [37045]

Mr. Baldry: In the light of experience of decommissioning schemes implemented before 1993 and of the need to protect public funds, United Kingdom Fisheries Ministers decided not to pursue the option available under article 8 of Council regulation EC No. 3699/93 of allowing vessels to be permanently transferred to a third country or permanently reassigned for uses other than fishing in Community waters.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Meat Hygiene Service in 1996–97. [37729]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have set the following targets for the Meat Hygiene Service in 1996–97. These take account of the recent expansion of the duties of the Meat Hygiene Service in relation to BSE.

Financial Performance

To charge plant operators the full economic cost—calculated in accordance with the relevant charging legislation and accruals accounting—of providing the statutory health inspection and controls at fresh meat premises, taking account of any interim support.

To recover from Government Departments and agencies the full economic costs of providing agreed services or other work undertaken on their behalf.

To comply with budgetary controls resulting from PES and the Supply Estimates as revised in the light of the BSE situation.

Operational

To take all necessary measures to ensure that the slaughterhouse industry fully complies with the legislation applying to specified bovine material.

To achieve an overall 3 per cent. improvement in the ratios of overhead to total costs, compared with 1995–96.

To ensure the animal welfare and slaughter/processing provisions are enforced fully in all slaughterhouses including when operating under the calf processing scheme and the over 30 months cattle slaughter scheme.

Quality and Delivery of Service

To apply hygiene requirements in such a way as to raise the levels of compliance in both fresh meat and poultry meat slaughterhouses so that two thirds of all slaughterhouses in each category attain a HAS score of at least 65 by the end of 1996–97.

To provide a formal training programme for all MHS meat inspectors, meat technicians and OVSs in animal welfare by the end of 1996–97.

To carry out a customer satisfaction survey to assess service delivery by the end of 1996–97.

I should also like to draw attention to the fact that the MHS has been instructed on my behalf to carry out new tasks in connection with BSE-related matters. These are administration of emergency aid payments to eligible slaughterhouses and enforcement of SBM controls. On behalf of the IBEA the MHS is also supervising and controlling the slaughter and processing of animals under the calf processing and 30 months plus schemes.

Cattle

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle (a) dairy and (b) non-dairy there are in the United Kingdom; and what is their estimated market value. [23213]

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to the reply 4 July 1996, column 522]: According to the census carried out in June 1995, there were 4.7 million cattle in the dairy herd and nearly 7 million cattle in the beef herd. The farm gate value of the total United Kingdom beef production for 1995 was £2.8 billion. It is difficult to estimate the market value of a cow in milk production, which ranges between £500 and £800 for a non-pedigree animal. At a rough estimate, the UK dairy herd is worth around £4 billion.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of asylum seekers claimed asylum (a) at port of entry, (b) within three working days of arrival in the United Kingdom and (c) within 14 working days of arrival in the United Kingdom. [36655]

Mr. Kirkhope: During 1995, there were 43,965 applications for asylum submitted in the United Kingdom, of which 14,410—33 per cent.—were made at the port of arrival and 29,555—67 per cent.—were made after entry. During the first six months of 1996, 14,860 applications for asylum have been submitted with 36 per cent. being made at ports and 64 per cent. made in country.

Information regarding the length of time between arrival date and application date, for those who applied for asylum in the United Kingdom after having been previously granted leave to enter or remain under another section of the immigration rules, is given in the table.

Average time taken[1] to apply for asylum by persons[2] previously granted leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom under another section of the Immigration Rules, 1995 and January to June 1996

Percentage

| Period of time between arrival and application | 1995 | 1996 (January–June) |
|---|---|---|
| Within 3 days | 10 | 5 |
| Between 4 and 14 days | 15 | 15 |
| Over 14 days | 75 | 80 |
| Total | 100 | 100 |

[1] Estimated and rounded to the nearest 5 per cent.
[2] Excludes those in-country cases for which arrival dates are not known.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual expenditure of his Department, including administrative expenditure, on the Isle of Wight; and what was the cost of the 1992 general election in respect of the Isle of Wight. [36916]

Mr. Howard: Expenditure from the Home Office votes in respect of the Isle of Wight in 1994–95—the latest year for which final outturn figures are available—was £51,619,183.

The overall cost of the parliamentary election for the Isle of Wight constituency at the 1992 general election was £83,260.78. That total includes a sum of £27,942.44 for the cost of delivery of candidates' election material.

Gaming Equipment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) firms and (b) people were employed in the manufacture of (i) bingo and lottery tickets and (ii) other gaming materials and equipment in 1992 and at the last available date. [36888]

Mr. Kirkhope: We do not collect such figures but we have been able to obtain gaming machine and bingo ticket estimates from relevant trade associations.

The British Amusement Catering Trades Association estimates that there were 97 amusement and gaming machine manufacturers and distributors in 1992 and there are 112 now.

The Bingo Association for Great Britain is aware of six manufacturers of bingo equipment and three printers of bingo tickets, the same totals as in 1992.

Asif Das

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the application of Asif Das for exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom. [37103]

Mr. Kirkhope: It was decided when refusing Mr. Das's applications for asylum and for student status in the United Kingdom that there were no grounds for allowing him to remain exceptionally. An appeal against the refusal of asylum was dismissed by the independent appellate authorities on 4 March.

Run Away Children

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued in respect of the procedure for dealing with children who run away from (a) children's homes, (b) foster care, (c) educational residential establishments, (d) secure units, (e) boarding schools, (f) children's homes with education and (g) private fostering arrangements. [36515]

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

Legislation gives local authorities a duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of all children in need within their area, wherever they are living.

Guidance issued on children's services planning (LAC(96)10) identifies young runaways as a specific group requiring strategic planning by local authorities with other agencies.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the last five years the total receipts received by Cheshire county council for the sale of council houses. [36450]

Mr. Clappison: Cheshire county council does not have responsibility for the sale of local authority homes but the available information on the value, after discount, of such sales reported by each of the district authorities in Cheshire is presented in the following table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which sales were financed by mortgage advances from the authorities.

Total capital receipts from the sale of council dwellings in Cheshire (net of discount)

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much local authorities have written off in uncollected council tax in each year since its introduction; and if he will list the authorities and amounts in each case; [36835]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 266, if he will list by authority the (a) estimated community charge arrears on 31 March 1995 and (b) the amounts written off. [36863]

Sir Paul Beresford: Estimates of uncollected community charge and write-offs of community charge and council tax are published regularly by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy: figures for 31 March 1995 are available in its "Revenue Collection Statistics 1994–95" publication, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports have been (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated by the London Docklands development corporation concerning proposals for an east London river crossing; and what alternative proposals he is assessing for improvements to cross-river public transport. [36668]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government published "A Transport Strategy For London" on 30 April this year. It includes proposals for a package of new crossings to improve cross-river road and public transport links in east London. One potential component of that package is a local multi-modal crossing, incorporating a dedicated public transport corridor, linking the Royal Docks and Thamesmead. The London Docklands development corporation and Thamesmead Town Ltd. have recently completed a range of studies exploring the feasibility of such a crossing at Gallions Reach. The results of these studies will make an important contribution to the further development of the crossings package.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37232]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department currently publishes the vast majority of its priced publications through HMSO. HMSO provides information on the Internet about these and other Government publications.

Where appropriate, it carries a summary of the priced publication: it has, for example, summarised the housing White Paper, the Thames gateway planning framework and the Drinking Water Inspectorate's annual report, and will soon carry an executive summary of the environmental health action plan.

Additionally, all departmental press notices are made available on the Internet.

European Regional Development Fund (Kingsbridge)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a substantial financial commitment will be forthcoming from the European regional development fund for economic regeneration in Kingsbridge, including the building of a swimming pool, bowling alley and associated facilities; and if he will make a statement as to what progress has been made with the European Commission to provide funding under objective 5b. [36954]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration wrote to the hon. Member on 3 July. There are on-going discussions, including with the European Commission. A decision will be reached as quickly as possible.

Area Cost Adjustment Review Team

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place a copy of the area cost adjustment review team's final report in the Library; what consultation will take place on this report; what timetable he proposes for its implementation; and if he will make a statement. [37402]

Sir Paul Beresford: The report of the review of the area cost adjustment was placed in the Library upon publication. The report will be discussed with the local authority associations. We shall also examine with them whether any consequential changes to other parts of the standard spending assessments would be required, if the recommendations of the review were adopted. We shall wish to consider the responses to the report in deciding what changes in the standard spending assessments should be made for 1997–98.

EU Funding

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount paid to United Kingdom local government from European Union sources in each of the past five years. [34867]

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

The figures show the total amounts paid to local authorities from European Union sources through supply estimates:

1991–92: £172 million

1992–93: £198 million

1993–94: £301 million

1994–95: £112 million

1995–96: £156 million

Information on European Union payments to local authorities outside supply estimates is not held centrally by Treasury, and could be collected from individual Government Departments only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Stagecoach

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received relating to the operations of Stagecoach in each of the last 12 months. [36852]

Mr. Norris: No central record is kept of the monthly total of representations received by my Department relating to specific transport operators, but about 20 letters have been received in the past year about the operations of Stagecoach or one of its subsidiaries.

East and West Coast Main Lines

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average age of (a) the locomotives and (b) the passenger rolling stock on the east coast and west coast main lines. [36832]

Mr. Watts: Precise figures would be available only at disproportionate cost. I have set out in the table details of the build dates of locomotives and passenger rolling stock on the east coast and west coast main lines.

EAST COAST MAIN LINE

Locomotives

31 Class 91s built between 1988 and 1991

22 Class 43 HST Power Cars built 1976–82

Coaches

283 Mark IV coaches for electric services built 1989–1992

76 Mark III HST trailer cars built 1976–82

WEST COAST MAIN LINE

Locomotives

18 Class 86s built 1965–66

35 Class 87s built 1973–75

15 Class 90s built 1987–90

7 Class HST Power Cars built 1976–1982

Coaches

138 Mark II built 1973–75

249 Mark III built 1975–79

38 Mark III built 1985

20 Mark III HST Trailer Cars built 1976–82

As at January 1996

Airline Pilots (Lariam)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Civil Aviation Authority advised that Lariam should not be administered to airline pilots; and what factors underlay this decision. [36874]

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority's medical division has been advising against the use of Larium in response to specific inquiries for some years. The first general advice against the use of Lariam by aircrews was contained in an aeronautical information circular on malaria—reference AIC 2/1995 (Pink 107)—published on 12 January 1995. The circular explains the reasons for that advice. I have arranged for copies of the circular to be placed in the Library.

Transport and Works Act 1992

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff in his Department are employed in the Transport and Works Act 1992 processing unit. [37002]

Mr. Norris: Six—one grade 7, two HEOS, two EOs and one AO.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the applications made under the Transport and Works Act 1992 which have been subject to public local inquiry with in each case the date he received the inspector's report and the date of the Secretary of State's decision. [37004]

Mr. Norris: The applications listed in the table have been subject to a public local inquiry and reports have been made to the relevant Secretary of State by the inspector. Unless otherwise indicated, the decision whether to make the orders rests with the Secretary of State for Transport.

| Application | Date of receipt of inspector's report | Date of Secretary of State's decision |
|---|---|---|
| Usk Barrage | 1 March 1995 (Secretary of State for Wales) | 13 September 1995 |
| East London Line Extension | 17 February 1995 | "Minded" letters issued on 27 September 1995 and 13 June 1996 |
| Greater Manchester (LRTS) (Eccles) Extension | 15 January 1996 | Not yet determined |
| Greater Manchester (LRTS) (Airport Extension) | 29 February 1996 | Not determined |

Highways Agency

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the terms of the redundancy settlement for former (a) directors and (b) other staff of the Highways Agency who (i) have left the service in the last 12 months and (ii) will be leaving in the next 12 months. [36897]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the terms of the redundancy settlement for former (a) directors and (b) other staff in the Highways Agency who (i) have left in the last 12 months and (ii) will be leaving in the next 12 months.

All staff, including those at Director level, who have left the Highways Agency in the previous 12 months on redundancy, or who will be doing so in the next 12 months, have been or will retire on compulsory early retirement (CER) or compulsory early severance (CES) terms in accordance with the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme (PCSPS) and the Civil Service Compensation Scheme (CSCS).

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent the Highways Agency overspent its budget in the last financial year; and what action was taken against those responsible for the overspend. [36896]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to rely to your recent question about expenditure against the Highways Agency's budget for 1995/96.

The Agency did not exceed its vote in 1995/96. Details of last year's expenditure will be published in the Agency's Annual Report later this month.

Rail Ticket Sales

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what enforcement measures are available in respect of train operating companies that do not comply with their licence obligation to give impartial sales advice on competitive routes. [37084]

Mr. Watts: The regulator's powers of enforcement are set out in sections 55 to 58 of the Railways Act 1993. Section 55 states that, where he is satisfied that an operator is contravening, or is likely to contravene, any relevant condition of his licence, the regulator shall make an order to secure compliance. Section 55(5) states that no order need be made if, for instance, the regulator is satisfied that the relevant operator has agreed to take, and is taking all such steps as are appropriate for the purpose of securing or facilitating compliance with the condition in question.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will halt further sales of train operating company franchises until a review is made of impartial ticket sales. [37055]

Mr. Watts: No.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the temporary moratorium on the enforcement of the licence conditions for train operating companies to give impartial ticket sales advice on competitive routes was introduced; and when it ended. [37085]

Mr. Watts: No such moratorium has ever existed.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action has been taken against train operating companies that have not complied with their licence obligation to give impartial sales advice on competitive routes in each month since January. [37116]

Mr. Watts: The enforcement of licence obligations is a matter for the independent Rail Regulator. He has said that he will consider carefully any evidence which suggests that train operators are failing to fulfil their licence obligations.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish an independent national rail ticket sales organisation which can ensure that all rail passengers are given unbiased sales advice. [37054]

Mr. Watts: No. The sales of rail tickets is a matter for train operators, subject to the requirements on impartiality contained in their licences and policed by the independent Rail Regulator. The regulator has all the powers he needs to ensure that train operators comply with their licence obligations.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct the Rail Regulator to conduct an urgent review of rail ticket sales. [37053]

Mr. Watts: The independent Rail Regulator has already said that he intends shortly to launch a wide-ranging consultation exercise on the practical application of train operators' obligations on impartial ticket retailing.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current actual levels of expenditure on maintenance of the trunk road network; to what extent these accord with present public expenditure plans; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current levels of maintenance to prevent longer-term deterioration of the network. [36742]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Nicholas Winterton, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking what are the current actual levels of expenditure on maintenance of the trunk road network; to what extent these accord with present public expenditure plans; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current levels of maintenance to prevent longer term deterioration of the network.

The Agency is planning to spend the following sums on trunk road maintenance in the current financial year:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Capital road maintenance | 250.0 |
| Capital bridge maintenance | 130.0 |
| Current maintenance (roads and bridges) | 146.4 |

These figures are wholly consistent with the Government's expenditure plans set out in Transport Report 1996 (Cm 3206—March 1996).

This level of funding will not be sufficient to avoid some deterioration of the network. Some works are having to be postponed until 1997–98. However, by working hard and innovatively, the Agency expects to be able to maintain safety and to minimise the effect on serviceability and value for money.

Congleton Station

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reasons have been given to him by British Rail west coast for the recent withdrawal of stops at the Congleton station; what consultation was undertaken with the local business and residential community prior to implementing that decision; and what assessment he has made as to the extent to which withdrawal is consistent with his policy of improvements in passenger services. [35882]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 8 July 1996]: I understand that InterCity West Coast withdrew the 08.30 service from Manchester to Euston and the 19.00 Euston to Manchester service, which both called at Congleton, from the summer 1996 timetable due to low passenger usage. Rail users consultative committees, Cheshire county council, Congleton borough council and Crewe and Nantwich borough council were consulted about the proposal to withdraw the services.

The Government intend to improve passenger services by franchising them to the private sector. Franchise operators are contractually bound by the passenger service requirement—PSR—and the obligations set out in the franchise agreement. The PSR may not be changed without the franchising director's consent, and significant proposed changes are subject to consultation with rail users consultative committees and local authorities. The franchise agreement required franchise operators to consult RUCCs and local authorities about proposed significant timetable changes.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will place in the Library copies of the terms of reference given to the admiralty salvage office of the Ministry of Defence in respect of its forthcoming investigation on site into the loss of the MV Derbyshire, together with the names of the independent technical assessors already appointed, stating which of the latter will be present on site; [37148]

(2) pursuant to the oral statement by the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) of 3 July, Official Report, columns 900-04, if he will list (a) the names of the bodies, persons, or organisations which will be on site for the projected investigation into the wreck of the MV Derbyshire, together with the details of those to whom they are responsible and their sources of finance and (b) the names of the bodies or organisations which have expressed a wish to send or nominate observers to be present on site during those investigations; and what are his reasons for treating the presence of any person representing a body named in (b) as prejudicial to the objectivity of the investigation, or the credibility of conclusions drawn by bodies concerned with that investigation. [37163]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The terms of reference given to the officers of the admiralty salvage office appointed as project managers for the return expedition are as follows:

> "to be responsible to this Department and the European Commission, taking account of advice from the technical assessors, Professor Douglas Faulkner and Robin Williams, and of the European Commission's assessor, Remo Torchio, for the co-ordination and operational management of the project, which we envisage will include:
> drafting the specification for the expedition;
> inviting and evaluating the bids received from contractors, and recommending who should carry out the work;
> any post-tender negotiations with the successful bidder;
> placing the contract;
> management and control of the contract on-site"

Those on board the survey vessel carrying out phase 1 are expected to include: Dr. Remo Torchio, European Commission technical assessor; Professor Douglas Faulkner and Robin Williams, UK technical assessors; David Keogh and James Ward, Ministry of Defence, salvage officers and project managers; and the staff of Oceaneering Technologies, the contractors.

The UK assessors are paid for by my Department and Dr. Torchio by the European Commission. My Department and the European Commission are sharing the other costs of the project.

No specific request to have representatives on board has been made by an interested party, other than the Derbyshire Families Association. However, solicitors representing British Shipbuilders have said that, if the DFA were represented, they would also wish to be.

It is essential that the results of the evidence gathered is, impartial, objective and thorough. To have any party represented could lead to challenges that the return was partial, lacked objectivity and was undertaken with a specific purpose in mind. To have all interested parties represented would be impractical.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH OFFICE AFFAIRS

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's current policy in respect of entry into force arrangements for the comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty. [37130]

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the right hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 June 1996, Official Report, columns 197-98.

Robert Hussein

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kuwait in respect of Robert Hussein; and if he will urge the Government to issue him with a new passport and to guarantee his safe passage out of the country. [36867]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We continue to keep in close touch at a senior level with the Kuwaiti authorities about this case. They have assured us that there are no restrictions on Mr. Hussein's freedom of movement.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a Kuwaiti citizen has formally taken the Ja'aferi judgment in respect of the apostasy of Mr. Robert Hussein to an imam for that judgment to be confirmed. [36868]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We are not aware of any such action.

China (Nuclear Tests)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the radioactive discharges into the atmosphere as a result of recent Chinese nuclear tests; and what measures he is taking to prevent the provision of technological assistance to China's nuclear weapons programme by firms in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) its allies. [37009]

Mr. David Davis: No such estimate has been made. The UK and our allies maintain export controls on nuclear and nuclear-related dual use equipment, material and technology in order to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons. The UK considers all exports to China on a case-by-case basis.

Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has received from the leader of the Isle of Wight council to represent the Isle of Wight internationally. [36915]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None.

Lake Kojanovskoe

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to this letter of 30 April, to the hon. Member of Linlithgow, what progress has been made on assistance to counter the contamination of Lake Kojanovskoe. [36643]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: It is still too early to consider what concrete assistance might be made available to counteract contamination of Lake Kojanovskoe. Information on progress will be given to the hon. Member for Linlithgow as soon as consideration of the conclusions of the EU-financed study has been completed by the Government Departments concerned and considered with our EU partners prior to discussion with the European Commission.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects guidelines for editing the "St. Helena News" and for access to broadcasting in St. Helena to be made public. [37249]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Government of St. Helena plan to publish the guidelines during August 1996.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on licensing arms exports to the states of the former Yugoslavia following the lifting of the United Nations arms embargo. [37694]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: On 18 June, the UN Security Council confirmed that the UN arms embargo on former Yugoslavia was terminated in accordance with UN Security Council resolution 1021. The Government have decided that, taking into account the overall situation in the states of the former Yugoslavia and the paramount importance of ensuring the safety of British and other troops deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, applications for arms export licenses will be dealt with on the following basis:

(a) for Slovenia and the Former Yugoslavia Republic of Macedonia, applications for licences to export military equipment listed in group 1 of part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 and dual use equipment will be considered on a case-by-case basis;

(b) for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, our policy is not to allow the export of military equipment listed in group 1 of part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order of 1994 during the period of the NATO-led implementation force's deployment. Within this context, applications for export licences will continue to be considered on a case-by-case basis, as will applications for export of dual use goods.

The EU as a whole has adopted a common position along these lines. We will keep this policy under review, particularly in light of progress in implementing the peace agreement for Bosnia and Herzegovina.

DEFENCE

U-Boats (Salvage)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department expects to receive from the salvage of the U-boats sunk to the north of Ireland in Operation Deadlight in 1945; if the proceeds will benefit wartime Royal Navy and Merchant Navy crews and their families who survived; and if he will make a statement. [37123]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Disposal Sales Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Keith Ellender to Mr. David Atkinson, dated 15 July 1996:

I am responding to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about receipts from the salvage of the World War II U-boats scuppered in Operation Deadlight in 1945, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency.

With the agreement of the Russian and US authorities, joint signatories with the UK to the 1945 Tripartite Agreement on the disposal of all ex-German shipping, my Agency let a licence for the scrapping of a number of surrendered U-boats sunk to the north of Ireland. In addition to a licence fee, the contract allows for a proportion of the proceeds from the scrapping operation to be paid to the Ministry of Defence by the Contractor. Both amounts, the latter being necessarily estimates at this stage, are commercially confidential and, in line with the Department's policy, are not disclosed publicly.

It has been the policy of successive Governments that any compensation paid to the victims of hostilities should be broadly similar for all. It follows that it would not be fair to the majority if money from an unexpected small windfall was to be used by a Government department to pay additional compensation, whether directly or through related charities, to particular groups of survivors or their families.

Low Flying (Compensation)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid in compensation in each financial year since 1990–91 (a) to farmers whose cattle have aborted or been damaged and (b) to people who have been injured or whose health has been damaged by low flying aircraft. [36840]

Mr. Soames: It is not possible to provide details of compensation for cattle in the form requested without incurring disproportionate cost. My Department has paid the following amounts of compensation in respect of (a) livestock losses and (b) personal injury claims as a result of military aircraft activity since financial year 1990-91:

|---|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 270,000 | 66,000 |
| 1991–92 | 320,000 | 33,000 |
| 1992–93 | 182,000 | 63,000 |
| 1993–94 | 379,000 | 51,000 |
| 1994–95 | 327,000 | 121,000 |
| 1995–96 | 196,000 | 35,000 |

Bett Review

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 64, if he expects his Department's consideration of the recommendations contained in the report of Sir Michael Bett to be completed by 21 September. [36860]

Mr. Soames: We have been studying all of the recommendations contained in Sir Michael Bett's report carefully, and hope to make a further announcement shortly on progress and our proposed way forward.

Scottish Bases

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's jobs there were at each Navy, Army, Air Force and reserves defence installation in Scotland for the year ended 1 April 1996. [37543]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

Accommodation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new armed forces married quarters and single quarters accommodation are currently being built by his Department. [37066]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 12 July 1996]: Sixty-one married quarters and 14 single accommodation projects are currently under construction.

Procurement Projects

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's 25 most expensive current procurement projects; what was the original estimated cost of each of these projects at today's prices; what is the current estimated final cost of each of the projects; and if he will list the delays in the in-service dates of these projects. [33999]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Pursuant to my answer of 27 June 1996, Official Report, columns 247–48, I regret to say that the most recent major project report—MPR95—has not been placed in the Library of the House owing to the confidential classification of the document. An unclassified version is being prepared and will be placed in the Library of the House. The projects covered by the report are:

1. Advanced Medium Range Air-to-Air Missile AMRAAM
2. Advanced Short Range Air-to-Air Missile ASRAAM
3. Bowman radio system
4. Bridging for the 90s—BR90
5. Challenger 2
6. Common New Generation Frigate—GNGF
7. COBRA
8. EH101 Merlin
9. Eurofighter
10. Hercules C-130J
11. Infra Red Counter Measures —IRCM
12. Landing Platform Dock (Replacement)—LPD (R)
13. Landing Platform (Helicopter)—LP(H)
14. Rapier—Field Standard C
15. Sea Harrier attrition buy
16. SKYNET 4 Phase 2
17. SKYNET 5
18. Spearfish Torpedoes
19. Swiftsure and Trafalgar class submarines—update
20. Tornado GR1 Mid Life Update
21. Trafalgar Class Submarines—Batch 2
22. Trident
23. Tracked utility vehicles—TUL/TUM/TUM(HD)
24. Medium range TRIGAT
25. Vertical Launch Seawolf.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Oil Installations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 62, if he will (a) place in the Library a copy of the International Maritime Organisation guidelines to which he refers and (b) set out the considerations as a result of which the United Kingdom has not yet ratified the UN law of the sea convention of 1982; and when United Kingdom ratification is expected to take place. [35928]

Mr. Page: I have placed in the Library of the House copies of the International Maritime Organisation guidelines and standards for the removal of offshore installations and structures on the continental shelf.

Ratification of the UN law of the sea convention of 1982 is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Composite Insurance Companies

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the regulatory organisations within his Department which have a responsibility in relation to composite insurance companies; and if he will indicate their responsibilities. [36035]

Mr. Nelson: The regulatory responsibilities of the Department in relation to composite insurance companies as such fall to the insurance directorate of the DTI, which carries out prudential regulation including, in the case of long-term business, safeguarding the reasonable expectations of policyholders under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 and related legislation.

Aerospace Sales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives he has taken to facilitate aerospace sales abroad. [36060]

Mr. Nelson: The Department of Trade and Industry actively pursues its responsibilities to promote the United Kingdom's civil aerospace industry overseas. We support and fund missions by sector trade associations to important overseas markets, particularly in the US and the fast-growing Asia-Pacific region. Ministers also take opportunities to promote aerospace initiatives during their visits overseas. Aerospace companies use the market information and help available through the DTI's geographical market desks and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's overseas posts. The DTI's aerospace and defence industries directorate also supports the industry and its trade associations in their overseas efforts. For some key markets, there are export promoters, seconded from industry, who focus on helping aerospace companies to develop their overseas business.

North-west Industrial Development Board

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many directors of the north-west industrial development board have declared business interests; and to what value. [36249]

Mr. John M. Taylor: All members must notify the Department of their business interests, including directorships and significant shareholdings, on appointment to regional industrial development boards. Changes are also notified during membership. Values are not placed on business interests.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the directors of the north-west industrial development board in the last five years. [36247]

Mr. Taylor: The information requested can be found in the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many grants, and of what value, have been given by the north-west industrial development board in the last five years. [36248]

Mr. Taylor: Grants are not given by the north-west industrial development board.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors underlay his Department's decision to send trade missions to Indonesia on 26 August, 23 September, 7 October and 11 November in 1996; and what is the projected cost of each mission to public funds. [36829]

Mr. Nelson: The missions have been planned to concentrate on sectors that have been identified as having the most potential for UK industry. The sectors are aerospace and airports; health care; oil and gas; power generation; and transport. The plan also recognises that opportunities exist in agribusiness; automotive components; environment and ports and harbours. The missions aim to take a group to the market focusing on one or more of these sectors.

The projected costs to public funds of these missions is as follows;

26 August : none, the mission has been cancelled.

23 September : £6,000

7 October : £6,000

11 November : £9,000

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which members of the Indonesian military met members of the trade missions carried out in 1996; for what purpose; and what representations were made to them concerning Indonesia's human rights record. [36767]

Mr. Nelson: Meetings with the Indonesian military do not form part of the formal programme for Department of Trade and Industry sponsored trade missions to Indonesia. I am not aware that any members of these mission met the military.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost to public funds of trade missions to Indonesia on 19 February, 15 April and 24 June. [36765]

Mr. Nelson: All of these missions visited two markets—Indonesia and Thailand. An eligible British company visiting only one of these markets receives a subvention of £600. For companies visiting both markets with the mission, grant is increased to £660. The costs to public funds of grants to British companies to travel with missions to Indonesia and Thailand was, therefore, as follows;

The mission on 19 February, sponsored by the Leeds and Bradford chamber of commerce and industry—£13,080.

The mission of 15 April sponsored by the Northern Development Company and the Railways Industries Association—£10,920.

The mission on 24 June sponsored by the London chamber of commerce and industry—£9,060.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which public relations companies assisted the trade missions to Indonesia on 19 February, 15 April and 24 June; and when he last met personnel from each company. [36766]

Mr. Nelson: None. However, the missions were sponsored and administered by the Leeds and Bradford chamber of commerce and industry, the Northern Development Company in co-operation with the Railways Industries Association and the London chamber of commerce and industry respectively. I would not expect to meet individual members of DTI–supported trade missions as a matter of course.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department last conducted an appraisal of human rights conditions in Indonesia; and in what circumstances companies which participate in trade missions to that country are made aware of the human rights record of the Indonesian military. [36768]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

We continually monitor the human rights situation in Indonesia. The British embassy in Jakarta briefs visiting missions on the general political and economic situation in Indonesia, including, where relevant or specifically requested, its human rights record.

Trade Missions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy, when appraising British companies intending to participate in trade missions, to notify them of the human rights record of the country involved. [36830]

Mr. Nelson: British diplomatic posts brief visiting missions on the general political and economic situations in the country concerned including, where relevant or specifically requested, its human rights record.

Iraq (Arms Sales)

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost to the Export Credits Guarantee Department of underwriting the sales of arms to Iraq in (a) 1987–88, (b) 1988–89 and (c) 1989–90. [36613]

Mr. Nelson: The ECGD did not underwrite any arms exports to Iraq in these years.

However, a relatively small amount of equipment with possible defence application—in particular communications equipment—was underwritten under the so-called "Defence Allocation" under the Iraq protocols; there are currently claims outstanding of £26 million in this respect.

DTI Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the DTI investigations which have been completed in the last three years and for which the report will not be published; and if he will make a statement. [37383]

Mr. Lang: In investigations leading to a report in respect of which there is a statutory provision allowing for publication that no reports have been completed in the last three years remain unpublished.

My Department undertakes a number of confidential investigations for which there is no provision for the report to be published.

Design Initiative

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for a design initiative involving business links, universities and private sector companies. [36999]

Mr. Page: The Government are convinced that design is fundamental to winning in world markets and that goods design is a crucial part of competitiveness. At national level, Design Council activities include research at leading universities to develop knowledge and tools which will help business managers to make better use of design. At local level, design services are being made available to companies by business links. Business links have been invited to bid for Government funding to employ design counsellors. To date, 51 bids have been approved, and 28 design counsellors are in post.

Statutory Holidays

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many statutory holidays there are in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) England every year; and what are the equivalent figures in other European Union countries. [37088]

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are currently eight bank and public holidays in England, Wales and Scotland, and 10 in Northern Ireland. The following table, based on information in the Official Journal of the European Communities (No. C 45, 1996, item 7), lists the number of current public holidays in other European Union member states.

Number of public holidays in other EU member states

| Sweden | 11 |

[1] A range of numbers indicates local variations.

Holiday entitlement in the United Kingdom is not generally a statutory right but a matter covered by the contract of employment between the individual employer and employee.

British Energy

Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the British Energy share offer. [37788]

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to report that the Government's UK public offer and international offer of shares in British Energy plc were successfully completed this morning, when dealings in interim rights started on the London stock exchange.

As a result of bids received in the international offer, the prices of the second instalments for all investors in the UK public offer and the international offer were set at 98p per interim right.

Accordingly, the price for British Energy interim rights purchased in the United Kingdom public offer was 198p per share, comprising 100p paid on successful application and 98p to be paid by 16 September 1997.

The price for interim rights purchased in the international offer of British Energy shares was 203p per share, comprising 105p paid on successful application and 98p to be paid by 16 September 1997.

The Government offered for sale up to 610 million British Energy shares in the UK public offer and the international offer.

Some 600,000 applications were received in the United Kingdom public offer for a total of some 443 million shares. This represented about 2.4 times the shares initially expected to be sold in the UK public offer. In response to this demand, the Government increased the total number of shares allocated to the UK public offer to 260 million shares—some 43 per cent. of the shares offered. At this level, the number of shares applied for in the UK public offer represented some 1.7 times the shares available.

Almost 98 per cent. of applicants in the UK public offer received an allocation of shares; 41 per cent. of all applicants had their applications met in full.

Some 6,300 employees—about 94 per cent.—of the British Energy group applied for shares in their company. In addition 1,000 employees—about 24 per cent.—of Magnox Electric applied for shares. All employee and pensioner applications were met in full.

Excluding the retail tender, 295 million shares were allocated to bidders in the international offer. This number does not include any shares that BZW Securities Ltd. may have over-allocated in connection with the international offer. The extent of any such over-allotment will not be disclosed until later. As already announced, BZW Securities Ltd. may also effect stabilisation transactions. Excluding the retail tender, bids covered the minimum number of shares expected to be sold in the international offer about 2.4 times.

Individual investors bidding in the United Kingdom retail tender bid for some 72 million shares. Of this number, some 41 million shares were in respect of PEP applications. All PEP applications in the retail tender were met in full.

In addition to the shares sold in the UK public offer and the international offer, BZW Securities Ltd., as global co-ordinators for the sale, holds an option to acquire from the President of the Board of Trade up to a further 90 million British Energy shares for the purpose of meeting any over-allotment made by it in connection with the international offer. This option must be exercised by 14 August 1996.

Total gross proceeds from the privatisation, including debt and assuming the exercise in full of the option held by the global co-ordinators, amount to about £1,993 million, of which some £716 million of equity proceeds is expected to be received in this financial year.

Following the offers, and assuming the exercise in full of the option over British Energy shares granted by the President of the Board of Trade to BZW Securities Ltd., Her Majesty's Government expect to hold not more than 1 per cent. of the issued share capital of British Energy plc. This amount comprises principally shares that may be needed to meet share bonus entitlements under the UK public offer.

Research Councils (Quigley Review)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of the Quigley review into the joint working arrangements of the research councils. [37396]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Costs incurred by the working group on cross-council efficiency relate primarily to the time of group members from the office of science and technology and the research councils in respect of five meetings between August 1995 and January 1996, and widely distributed small proportions of staff time relating to data gathering and analysis. These costs could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the research councils will contribute to the funding of the procurement function resulting from the Quigley review; and what savings have been projected for each of the research councils as a result of the new procurement arrangements over the next five years. [37397]

Mr. Taylor: The intention is that improvements in the procurement function resulting from the Quigley review should be self-financing.

The Quigley review saw scope for potential savings in the region of £1.75 million from spending on payroll systems, travel and subsistence and computer support. A group of senior representatives of the research councils, chaired by the office of science and technology, has been set up to implement the recommendations of the Quigley review. The group has already begun the process of recruiting a procurement adviser. One of the tasks of the adviser will be to identify specific savings in all areas of procurement.

Small Firms

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with small businesses about the compliance costs of the Asylum and Immigration Bill. [36657]

Mr. Page: The Asylum and Immigration Bill is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary. This Department has had no discussion with small businesses or their representative organisations.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of his Department's current consultation with small firms regarding whether large companies should report payment practice in their annual report. [36656]

Mr. Page: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave her on 4 July 1996, Official Report, column 496.

Child Labour

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the World Trade Organisation concerning trade in goods produced by child labour; and if he will make a statement. [36321]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 July 1996]: The Government deplore any exploitation of children and are fully committed to international action to stop it, for example through the UN and the International Labour Organisation, but do not consider that action through the World Trade Organisation would be an appropriate means to achieve this.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions are placed on the importing of goods produced by child labour; and if he will make a statement. [36317]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 July 1996]: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 19 June 1996, Official Report, column 508.

Arabian Peninsula (Security Equipment)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what funding was provided by his Department's export market research scheme for the market report, "Police and Public Security Requirements for Equipment and Services in the countries of the Arabian Peninsula" published in June 1994, and what proportion this was of the total cost of the report. [36362]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 July 1996]: The report was partially funded through the export marketing research scheme—EMRS—under the terms and conditions applicable at the time for trade associations using the scheme for the first time—75 per cent. The total cost of the project was £63,920, the EMRS contribution was £47,940. The report covered six countries in the Arabian peninsula and was restricted to marketing research only.

Insurance Policies (Orphan Funds)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on the distribution of orphan funds between insurance policyholders; and what sums have so far been identified and apportioned. [37022]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 12 July 1996]: My policy remains as set out in the answer given by the then Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs on 24 February 1995, Official Report, columns 362-63.

The following companies have made announcements in the light of the policy:

| Company | Long-term business assets £ billion | Amounts reserved solely for benefit of shareholders £ billion |
|---|---|---|
| United Friendly Insurance | 2.4 | 0.3 |
| Legal and General Group | 21.8 | see below |
| Pearl Assurance | 12.1 | 1.0 |

The remaining amounts within the long-term funds are largely for the benefit of policyholders, save that shareholders are entitled to receive a defined share of any surplus in the funds declared in future. For the bulk of the funds, the defined share is 10 per cent.

In the case of Legal and General, policyholders have rights to receive at least 90 per cent. of any distributed surplus, except that directors have discretion over surplus arising from a sub-fund of some £200 million.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Arts Council Grants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the total grants provided by the Arts Council for organisations in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36386]

Mr. Sproat: Between 1991–92 and 1995–96, North West Arts made 25 awards totalling £63,735 to arts organisations in Crewe and Nantwich. In Cheshire as a whole, 324 awards, totalling £1,896,975, were made to arts organisations during the same period. I have today placed a full list of awards in the Library of the House.

Museums and Galleries

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the total grants provided by her Department for museums and galleries in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36387]

Mr. Sproat: My Department, through the museums and galleries improvement fund, and the Museums and Galleries Commission—MGC—which is funded by the Department, has awarded the following amounts to museums and galleries in Cheshire over the past five years. The north-west museum service, funded by the MGC, also made awards. They include one of £1,480 to the Nantwich museum in 1993–94.

Grants for museums in Cheshire 1991–92 to 1995–96

| | 1991–92 £ | 1992–93 £ | 1993–94 £ | 1994–95 £ | 1995–96 £ |

European Broadcasting Directive

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the European Commission will publish its second monitoring report on the implementation of articles 4 and 5 of the European broadcasting directive; and if she will make a statement. [36941]

Mr. Sproat: The European Commission has published its report today. The document will be deposited in Parliament and my Department will submit an explanatory memorandum in accordance with the usual arrangements for the scrutiny of European Community documents.

I welcome the Commission's work on this subject, which shows that many of the television channels licensed in this country which qualify for meeting the quota regime are exceeding the minimum requirements set out in the broadcasting directive for programming of European origin and for independent European production. The report also notes the good progress being made by those satellite services which have yet to achieve the quota targets.

TREASURY

Finance Ministers

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Finance Ministers of other EC countries; and what subjects were discussed. [36268]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the UK at the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 8 July.

The Council debated the incoming Irish presidency's work programme in open session. The programme will focus on European monetary union—EMU—employment, fraud, taxation issues, financial services and Community lending to third countries.

I emphasised the importance we attach to tackling unemployment in the Community, through sound public finances, low inflation and labour market reform. I also urged the need for budget discipline in the Community and rejected any increase in the financial perspectives of the EU budget. I said the UK would continue to play a full and constructive part in discussions of EMU. I strongly supported the presidency's emphasis on fighting fraud. Recalling the UK's long-standing support for EU enlargement, I urged early consideration of reforms to the common agriculture policy and the structural funds so that enlargement could go ahead on the right terms.

The Council welcomed the Austrian convergence programme. It also agreed recommendations to 12 member states—Austria, Belgium, Germany, Greece, Spain, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Sweden, Finland and the UK—with excessive budget deficits.

The Council heard Commission and European Investment Bank—EIB—proposals to modify guarantee arrangements for the bank's lending operations outside the EU.

The Council agreed the conclusions of the Commission's 1995 annual report on the fight against fraud and noted progress with the SEM 2000 initiative designed to improve the Commission's financial management.

There was a meeting with Ministers from the associated countries of central Europe, within the framework of the "Structured Dialogue", on the implications for the financial sector of eventual EU membership. The discussion focused on pension reform, EIB work in the region, and the implications of extending the transit regime.

Unfunded Pension Liabilities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to improve the accounting and financial reporting to Parliament of United Kingdom unfunded pension liabilities. [36351]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government are planning to improve the accounting and reporting of the main occupational public service pension schemes administered by central Government. This will take place in the context of the development of resource accounting and budgeting. For each scheme, there will be a scheme statement attached as a note to the departmental resource account. There is further work to be done on the details of these statements, and this will be taken forward in accordance with the timetable for resource accounting published in the White Paper "Better Account for the Taxpayer's money"—Cm 2929.

Medical Products (VAT)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if products designed for sufferers of ulcerative colitis are exempt from VAT; [36692]

(2) what revenue the Treasury received from VAT on products designed for the sufferers of ulcerative colitis in the last year for which figures are available; [36693]

(3) what medical products are currently exempt from value added tax. [36691]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Medical products, including those designed for sufferers of ulcerative colitis, are exempt from VAT when they are supplied in connection with the provision of care or medical or surgical treatment in any hospital or other institution which has been registered or exempted from registration pursuant to an Act of Parliament. Incontinence products which are supplied directly to disabled people are also zero rated. There are no official figures available for VAT receipts on medical products designed for sufferers of ulcerative colitis.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 355, when he will be in a position to give the cost of answering (a) oral and (b) written questions in April. [36566]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The average cost of answering questions in April this year will be calculated after data on movements in earnings become available in October. I expect the information requested to be available by the end of November.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 257, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37431]

Mrs. Knight: The examination of more than 20,000 files dating back to 1987.

Paymaster

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the future of the Paymaster agency. [37789]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The report of the prior options review of the Paymaster agency that I announced on 4 December 1995, Official Report, columns 15–16, has now been completed. I have accepted its recommendations and am placing copies of the report in the Library of the House.

Briefly, the report confirms that Paymaster has made itself much more cost-efficient and responsive to customer needs since it achieved agency status on 1 April 1993. It has won a number of market tests for its existing work against private sector rivals, but remains constrained by statute from taking on work for the private sector. If it transferred to the private sector, it would be free to seek new work in both private and public sectors, thereby strengthening its long-term viability.

The review showed that a small part of its banking business is concerned with work that must stay with the Government. The rest, including all its pensions business and IT support, could be contracted out to the private sector. Given that the agency has already proved its competitiveness against private sector rivals, the Government intend to privatise all but any non-divestible elements as a going concern.

The proposal is that both the pensions and the banking business should be offered, jointly or separately, for a trade sale, with the present management, staff, IT support and their building in Crawley. At least the pension business—which constitutes some 85 per cent. of the whole—should be privatised within the current financial year. The preparations for the banking business may be more complex, but every effort will be made to have it ready for privatisation in the same timeframe.

It is expected that the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 will apply to protect staff in the transfer, which will be achieved with initial contracts for existing work. To prepare itself for operating from the private sector in future, the agency will be allowed to seek new work in the pensions area in the private or public sectors at once.

I believe that this represents a good outcome for the agency's existing customers and its staff, by keeping their expertise intact and granting access to new markets, and for the taxpayer, through reducing the cost of providing these public services. The pension schemes will, of course, continue to be funded, and have their rules set, by sponsoring Government Departments. It is the administrative functions that are to be contracted out. Where necessary, Parliament's approval will be sought under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 before the privatisation is effected.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the Central Statistical Office performed against its key targets in 1995–96. [37790]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Central Statistical Office's performance for 1995–96 is described in the agency's annual report and accounts, which are being laid before the House and published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The CSO achieved 29 of the 34 published targets, including 18 of the 20 targets relating to the quality of key economic statistics.

Targets for the future will relate to the performance of the Office of National Statistics, which was formed on 1 April 1996 following the merger of the CSO with the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Targets for 1996–97 are set out in the ONS business plan 1996–97 to 1998—99, which was published in March.

PRIME MINISTER

Stone of Scone

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister at what time he first informed the Dean of Westminster of his intention to make a statement to the House about the Stone of Scone; and what consultations previously had taken place with the dean and chapter. [36913]

The Prime Minister: My discussions with the dean and others before the announcement were confidential.

Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the Isle of Wight council calling for independence. [36917]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, none.

Mr. Field: To ask the Prime Minister if he will undertake a study on the future status of the pound sterling as legal tender on the Isle of Wight following the council's call for independence. [36919]

The Prime Minister: No. The Isle of Wight is part of the United Kingdom and sterling continues to be the only legal tender on the island.

Beef Exports Ban

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister when he proposes to take action if the EU committee of experts fails to agree to lift the ban on British beef exports to third countries. [37488]

The Prime Minister: We expect the Commission and other member states to act fully in accordance with the framework for removing the ban agreed unanimously at Florence.

HEALTH

Dental Services (Duplicate Registrations)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many duplicate registrations were eliminated by the Dental Practice Board in each six-month period between January 1990 and January 1994 and in each month since January 1994; and what estimate he makes of the number of duplicate registrations in place in January of each year since 1990. [35088]

Mr. Malone: The table sets out the number of duplicate general dental service registrations that were eliminated by the Dental Practice Board in each six-monthly period between January 1990 and January 1994 and in each month since January 1994.

A reliable estimate cannot be made of the amount of duplication that remains within registrations. The Dental Practice Board is continually seeking to reduce the level of duplication.

Central formal registration was introduced in October 1990. From the outset the Dental Practice Board's systems ensured that the same patient (as defined by first initial, surname, sex and date of birth) could not be registered more than once with the same dentist. The "eliminated duplicates" shown in the table represent detected duplicates where the same person was registered with more than one dentist.

The numbers eliminated in 1992 contain estimates because recorded data is for England and Wales.

GP Lists (Removals)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include in the patients charter a requirement for each GP practice to include in its annual report the number of patients removed from its list at the general practitioner's request; and if he will make a statement. [35841]

Mr. Horam: General practitioners routinely supply this information to health authorities and there are no plans to make publication of it a patients charter requirement.

Primary Care Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will ensure that health authorities are able to commission primary care services from general practitioners according to locally expressed needs; and if he will make a statement. [36188]

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that primary care services are developed according to local community needs and priorities; and if he will make a statement. [36159]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities are responsible for developing strategies in consultation with local people for improving health and health services, including supporting and developing primary care. A major consultation exercise is also under way to identify how primary care services might be further developed in future.

Health Trusts (Consultation)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance is issued to health trusts on the necessity for consultation with the public; and if he will make a statement; [35980]

(2) what courses of action are open to members of the public in circumstances where a health trust declines to attend a public meeting to discuss changes in health care and its provision; and if he will make a statement; [35981]

(3) what courses of action are open to members of the public if a health trust refuses to meet them to discuss changes in the level and provision of local health care; and if he will make a statement; [35982]

(4) what guidelines are issued by his Department on the need for, and the extent of, consultation with patients about changes in availability or quality of health care and its delivery; and if he will make a statement. [35983]

Mr. Horam: It is for health authorities to assess the health needs of their population and purchase services to meet those needs. Where substantial changes in services are proposed, the health authority is required to consult with its local community health council. If the CHC objects to the resultant proposal, it is normally referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health for a final decision—regarding English HA proposals. Members of the public of course have the opportunity to put their views forward to the CHC. Copies of relevant guidance are in the Library.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated of health risks incurred by those who sleep rough, with particular reference to Victoria street, London SW1. [36003]

Mr. Bowis: The Government recognise the health problems associated with rough sleeping and have developed two key initiatives to help homeless people, including those who sleep rough, obtain the health and personal social services that they need.

The homeless mentally ill initiative provides accommodation and psychiatric care for rough sleepers with mental health problems in central London where the problem of rough sleeping is most acute.

The Department has also funded some 35 primary health care projects in England to help homeless people to access services they need. The projects provide a range of services in places where homeless people tend to congregate, such as hostels and day centres, and have been fully evaluated.

Both initiatives provide services to rough sleepers in Westminster, including Victoria street SW1, and have provided valuable information complementing the Government's rough sleepers initiative.

The Department also published, on 4 July, a report entitled "Tuberculosis and homeless people" which recommends strategies for the identification and treatment of tuberculosis in homeless people and contains measures to prevent tuberculosis in the homeless population.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36011]

Mr. Horam: The cost of taxi cab fares is not separately identified in the Department's accounts and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Contaminated Blood Products

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he has done to increase funding for (a) treatment and support services for haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C through NHS treatment with contaminated blood products, (b) research into this problem, (c) recombinant products and (d) core funding for the Haemophilia Society to provide services and support on a continuing basis. [36131]

Mr. Horam: The Department does not allocate money to support specific treatments for particular patient groups. National health service funds are allocated to purchasers of health care who are in the best position to decide what services (including treatments) they wish to purchase to meet local needs.

An additional £1 million has been made available by the Department's research and development division to fund research into improving our understanding of hepatitis C.

The Haemophilia Society receives grants totalling £155,000 from the Government in the current year. This compares with £126,900 in 1995–96.

Pharmaceutical Products (Supermarkets)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect of the sale of pharmaceutical products in supermarkets on the availability and opening hours of dispensing chemists. [35989]

Mr. Malone: None. Health authorities have a statutory responsibility to provide adequate and accessible pharmaceutical services to meet local requirements.

Dedicated Case Managers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the locations of dedicated case managers for (a) head injury patients, (b) cancer patients and (c) fertility patients. [35991]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the estimated percentage of (a) men drinking more than 21 units and (b) women drinking more than 14 units of alcohol per week for each year since 1979, for each nation of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [36049]

Mr. Bowis: The available information, derived from the general household survey and the continuous household survey, is shown in the tables.

Elderly People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated of pre and post-registration education for the care of older people; and if he will make a statement. [36117]

Mr. Malone: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Emergency Medical Service

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received since 1 January about the danger to patients arising from the operation of (a) inadequately trained private ambulance operators, paramedics, emergency medical technicians and ambulance technicians and (b) inadequate or poorly maintained vehicles and equipment used by such operators; and if he will make a statement on the incidence of accidents specifying complaints received by his Department arising from such operations. [36043]

Mr. Horam: My hon. Friend recently forwarded to me a letter from a constituent. There has been one other representation on the subject this year. Private ambulance operators must comply with the law on the administration of medicines and the conditions and use of vehicles. Any national health service trust considering using a private ambulance operator to transport patients should take account of the code of practice issued by the NHS executive in December 1993.

Detoxification Units

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many detoxification units existed in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and how many currently exist. [36132]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not held centrally.

Cancer Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons accreditation of specialist cancer centres will not be compulsory; and if he will make a statement. [36398]

Mr. Horam: It is the responsibility of individual health care providers to determine how they pursue and ensure quality services and systems within their own organisations. Once cancer centres have been designated, it will be a priority to ensure the maintenance of high quality standards through peer review.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list be region the courses currently being run solely for nursing staff on the care of cancer patients; and if he will make a statement. [36301]

Mr. Horam: Courses for nursing staff on the care of cancer patients currently approved by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting to be run in each region are as follows:

| Region | Course | Course name |
|---|---|---|
| Northern and Yorkshire | ENB 237 | Oncological Nursing for Nurses on Parts 1, 2, or 12 of the Professional Register |
| | ENB 285 | Specialist Course in the Continuing Care of the Dying Patient and the Family of Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors on all Parts of the Professional Register |

Cancer Services are identified as a priority in the Education and Training Planning Guidance (EL(96)46) issued in June 1996, a copy of which is held in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to provide additional resources for cancer services; and if he will make a statement. [36303]

Mr. Horam: Current spending on the national health service will grow by over £1 billion in 1996–97. This additional funding, together with efficiency gains, will enable the NHS to make further progress in developing services of proven effectiveness, including cancer services.

Cheshire Ambulance Service

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of paramedics employed by the Cheshire ambulance service for each of the last five years; and what was the average number per ambulance service; [36511]

(2) if he will list the number of incidents attended by the Cheshire ambulance service for each of the last five years; [36513]

(3) if he will list the number of emergency ambulances operated by the Cheshire ambulance service for each of the last five years; [36512]

(4) if he will list for each of the last five years the total budget allocated by his Department to the Cheshire ambulance service. [36510]

Mr. Horam: The former Cheshire county ambulance service merged with the former Mersey metropolitan ambulance service in September 1991 to form the Mersey Regional ambulance service. This new organisation commenced operating in "shadow form" as a national health service trust from that date until 1 April 1992, when it became fully operational.

Information on the number of paramedics employed by ambulance services and the average number of paramedics per ambulance service is not available centrally.

The number of emergency calls taken by Mersey Regional ambulance service which resulted in an ambulance arriving at the scene of an incident are as follows:

1992–93: 147,700

1993–94: 160,200

1994–95: 165,700

1995–96: 180,700

Information for the final year of operation of the former Cheshire County ambulance service is not available centrally.

Information of the number of emergency vehicles operated by ambulance services is not available centrally.

The annual turnover of Mersey Regional Ambulance Service NHS trust for each full year of its operation is as follows:

Financial year

1992–93: £21.8 million

1993–94: £22.6 million

1994–95: £23.8 million

1995–96: £25.3 million

Information on the budget allocation of the former Cheshire County ambulance service in its final year of operation is not available centrally.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Utting inquiry will investigate the responsibilities of the social services inspectorate and the social services inspectorate Wales, in dealing with concerns raised with them directly by children and concerned individuals regarding the abuse of children looked after and in care. [36530]

Mr. Bowis: Sir William Utting's review is concerned with the safeguards for children living away from home, introduced since 1991. It will be for him to decide whether to recommend any changes in the responsibilities of the Department of Health or the Welsh Office.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of young people looked after or in care since 1972 who have committed suicide (a) while looked after in care, and (b) subsequently. [36522]

Mr. Bowis: The information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what psychological and counselling assistance will be given to children giving evidence at the Utting inquiry. [36524]

Mr. Bowis: It is for Sir William Utting to determine how he proposes to conduct the review, including the manner in which any evidence is given.

Health Care (Efficiency Drives)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that quality standards in health care are not compromised by efficiency drives, and if he will make a statement. [36361]

Mr. Horam: The Government's aim is to spend as much of the available resources as possible on direct patient care. Efficiency savings which can be made within the health service produce additional resources for patient care. The quality of care provided by the national health service has risen since the introduction of the patients charter in 1991. At a local level, health authorities have a responsibility to ensure the provision of health services for the population in their area. Health authorities' and general practitioner fundholders' contracts with hospital and community trust providers should include provisions concerning quality. It is for individual provider trusts to determine how best to use their available resources to meet all the requirements of their contracts.

Osteoarthritis

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out to measure health outcomes in people with osteoarthritis; and if he will make a statement. [36374]

Mr. Bowis: The Department of Health's policy research programme has commissioned two research projects on osteoarthritis:

Primary care interventions in osteoarthritis

This is a four-year study designed to determine whether exercise can improve the burden of knee pain in the general population. Some 800 patients over the age of 50 will take part. Results will be available in 1999.

Effectiveness and cost-effectiveness of analgesics and NSAIDs—non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs—in the treatment of knee pain caused by osteoarthritis.

This is a three-year randomised controlled trial which is planned to compare the treatment of knee pain by NSAIDs and analgesics among 600 patients presenting to their general practitioners. Results will be available in 1998.

In addition, under the national health service research and development programme, Trent region is funding research on "measuring health outcome in people with osteoarthritis".

This will look at the evaluation and audit of the costs and health consequences of surgery and other interventions for varying severity of osteoarthritis. The lead researcher for this work in based at the university of Sheffield.

Health Care (Responsibility)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that the responsibility for meeting the health care needs of people with physical or learning difficulties who are profoundly dependent on the skills of health care staff falls on the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [36297]

Mr. Bowis: The national health service continues to be responsible for assessing and meeting the health care needs of the population is serves, including people with physical and learning disabilities.

Elderly People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department is giving to promoting autonomy and independence among older people, with particular reference to an evaluation of educational programmes in nursing; and if he will make a statement. [36305]

Mr. Bowis: Promoting continued independence and rehabilitation is a key principle of our policies on services for older people. To this end, we published recently a video on good practice in this area. We also work closely with, and provide substantial grant aid to, the voluntary sector in this field, much of whose work is also directed to this end.

The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has commissioned two research evaluations of pre and post-registration education. One of these will look specifically at the care of older people and care of the elderly is a central theme of the other.

Cheshire Health Authority

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of beds available for long-term elderly care in each of the hospitals in the Cheshire health authority for each of the last five years; and what is the national average figure; [36460]

(2) if he will list the number of beds available for cancer patients in each of the hospitals in the Cheshire health authority for each of the last five years; and what is the national average figure; [36459]

(3) if he will list the number of intensive care beds in each of the hospitals in the Cheshire health authority for each of the last five years; and what is the national average figure. [36461]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally in the form requested. Information on bed availability by ward classification may be found in "Bed Availability, England", copies of which are available in the Library.

GP Fundholding

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36493]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available below health authority level.

Surgical Patients

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken into pre-operative information requirements of surgical patients; and if he will make a statement. [36365]

Mr. Horam: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Infant Nutrition

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has carried out on the influence of childhood nutrition and nutritional status on health and adulthood; and if he will make a statement; [36376]

(2) what research his Department has undertaken into the responsibility of a relationship between infant feeding and schizophrenia; and if he will make a statement. [36366]

Mr. Horam: The Government have funded three studies, with long-term follow-up, of nationally representative groups of babies born in 1946, 1958, and 1970. These individuals, the oldest of whom are 50 years, continue to be followed up with support from the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. These three studies have provided a basis of much research on the influence of childhood nutrition and nutritional status on health in adulthood.

Two Medical Research Council-funded units have a particular interest in infant and child nutrition and on its effect on health in later childhood and during adult life.

The MRC Dunn clinical nutrition centre, in Cambridge, co-ordinates a multi-centre study of feeding and nutrition of pre-term infants. Follow-up of the study participants has continued since their birth in the mid-1980s. Contact will be maintained with these individuals as they enter adult life.

The MRC environmental epidemiology unit in Southampton has reported a range of retrospective studies which assess relationships between adult health and aspects of nutrition in infancy including method of feeding and infant weight.

We are unaware of any research into relationships between infant feeding and schizophrenia.

Pharmaceutical Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate a review of the NHS Pharmaceutical Regulations 1992 with the objective of ensuring greater (a) simplicity in the processes for considering applications under the regulations, (b) flexibility in responding to the needs of different types of communities for pharmaceutical services, (c) openness in consultation processes and (d) ability to accommodate the provision of pharmaceutical services to different types of retail outlet selling general pharmacy products; and if he will make a statement. [36299]

Mr. Malone: The NHS Pharmaceutical Regulations 1992 are kept under constant review, but there are no immediate plans to make amendments.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health care workers have been infected by the hepatitis B virus since 1988. [36342]

Mr. Horam: Confirmed cases of acute hepatitis B infection are reported by laboratories to the Public Health Laboratory Service under a voluntary and confidential surveillance system. Information on the number of laboratory confirmed cases of acute hepatitis B infection in health care workers reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service from 1988–95 in England and Wales, where occupation was stated, is given in the table.

Laboratory reports of acute hepatitis B infection in health care workers in England and Wales 1988–95 to the Public Health Laboratory Service

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1988 | 21 |
| 1989 | 16 |
| 1990 | 13 |
| 1991 | 5 |
| 1992 | 9 |
| 1993 | 5 |
| 1994 | 6 |
| 1995 | 5 |

1. Data for 1995 is provisional.
2. Data includes hepatitis B infections acquired both occupationally and non-occupationally in the United Kingdom and abroad.
3. Hepatitis B infection can occur asymptomatically and may not, therefore, be diagnosed.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to offer hepatitis B vaccination to persons outside the currently defined at risk groups. [36341]

Mr. Horam: The Department's current policy is to recommend immunisation for those groups at increased risk of infection because of their life style, occupation or other factors such as close contact with a case or carrier. This policy, including the risk groups for whom immunisation is recommended, is kept under review.

Intensive and High Dependency Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will conduct a comprehensive review of the intensive care and high dependency requirements in each health authority with a view to revising funding to meet service requirements; and if he will make a statement. [36399]

Mr. Horam: It is for health authorities to assess the level of provision of intensive care and high dependency facilities needed and to allocate resources accordingly. Following the recent publication of guidelines on admission to, and discharge from, intensive care and high dependency care, health authorities have been asked by the national health service executive to examine the level of local provision to ensure that best use is made of available resources.

Beta Blocking Drugs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost to the NHS per patient, per month for patients receiving treatment with beta blocking drugs. [36294]

Mr. Malone: Information in the form requested is not available.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish an independent commission of inquiry to review the current arrangements for collecting prescription charges; and if he will make a statement. [36302]

Mr. Malone: The scheme was last reviewed in 1993 as part of the fundamental review of health expenditure. There are no plans for a further review. Extensive charge exemption and remission arrangements, among the most generous in Europe, ensure that only those able to afford the prescription charge are asked to pay.

Acute Hospitals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department has committed to establishing the extent of skills and knowledge within acute hospital environments with particular reference to acute medical/haematological wards providing pain relief in patients with a malignant disease; and if he will make a statement. [36364]

Mr. Horam: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Hearing-impaired Children

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out on the impact of early detection on outcomes for hearing-impaired children; and if he will make a statement. [36375]

Mr. Bowis: In 1994, I asked the screening panel which supports the departmental standing group on health technologies to give priority to considering developments in the early identification of hearing impairment in children and to advise on whether the available evidence was sufficient to justify a review of policy and practice. To facilitate this, we commissioned the Medical Research Council Institute of Hearing Research to produce a review paper. We expect to receive this paper shortly.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the impact of the private finance initiative on capital development in the NHS; if he will ensure that there is no reduction in capital investment in the NHS from public funds; and if he will make a statement. [36397]

Mr. Horam: The private finance initiative benefits capital development in the national health service by giving the NHS access to private sources of finance where this offers best value for money and transfer of risk to the private sector. It also enables the NHS to make the best possible use of private sector skills and experience. Some 57 privately-financed schemes worth over £1 million each have been approved to date, with a total capital value of £524 million, and schemes worth about £1.5 billion are currently testing for private finance. We cannot guarantee what the level of capital spending will be in the future, but what matters is not the level of public funding alone, but the total funding available to the NHS from public and private sources.

Dentists (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of dentists accepting NHS patients in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36494]

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table.

General Dental Service: number of dentists who had additions to their register in Cheshire as a whole, and in Crewe and Nantwich; year ending 31 March 1992–1996

| | Number of dentists Cheshire | Number of dentists Crewe and Nantwich |
|---|---|---|
| 1992 | 352 | 36 |
| 1993 | 363 | 34 |
| 1994 | 357 | 31 |
| 1995 | 352 | 32 |
| 1996 | 354 | 29 |

Additions to the register include instances of patients registering with a dentist after a break in attendance and reinstatement of registrations that had been cancelled in error.

Some dentists have contracts in more than one area.

Counts relate to registrations for which payments were authorised during the year. Payments are made one month in arrears.

Social Services Inspectors

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what number of social services inspectors were employed in each year since 1991 (a) in England and (b) in Northern Ireland. [36525]

Mr. Bowis: From 1993, figures of directly employed regulation and inspection staff in social services departments in England are published in "Local Authority Social Services Statistics: Staff of Local Authority Social Services departments at September; England", copies of which are available in the Library. Corresponding data for 1992 and earlier years are not available centrally. Questions relating to Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Drug Abuse

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total Government funding to Trent region to counter drug abuse for each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [36242]

Mr. Bowis: Over the past three years, Trent regional health authority has been allocated the following amounts specifically to help develop drug misuse treatment services:

1993–94: £2,253,000
1994–95: £2,337,000
1995–96: £2,429,000

Health authorities may draw on general allocations for further funds.

Following the abolition of regional health authorities, £3,384,000 has been allocated to health authorities within Trent region for 1996–97.

Dementia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from occupational therapists on the interventions to be used with patients suffering from mild or moderate dementia; and if he will make a statement. [36304]

Mr. Bowis: No such representations have been received.

Playgroups

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out into the role of a structured playgroup in social and language development of pre-school children; and if he will make a statement. [36377]

Mr. Bowis: This research is contained in "Playgroups in Practice: Self Help and Public Policy", and "Playgroups in a Changing World", copies of which are available in the Library.

Nursing Homes (Visits)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that all health authorities publish the reports of their visits to nursing homes; and if he will make a statement. [36300]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 25 June, column 88.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the mental handicap hospitals expected to be closed in each region of England, with details of the expected closure date, the current number of residents, and the plans for their future relocation, together with the total number of people currently resident in long-stay mental handicap hospitals. [36555]

Mr. Bowis: The Department does not routinely collect information on hospital closures. However, inter-authority comparisons and consultancy was commissioned in 1994 to conduct a national survey of learning disability hospital closures and closure plans. A copy of its report is in the Library. It is estimated that, at 31 March 1995, there were 9,300 people with a length of stay of one year or more in national health service hospitals and units under the mental handicap (learning disability) specialty.

Clinical Outcome Indicators

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 14 clinical outcome indicators which his Department is piloting for use in measuring the clinical effectiveness of NHS trusts in England; and when he plans to publish a report on clinical outcome indicators for England similar to the report published by the Scottish Office in December 1995. [36556]

Mr. Horam: The national health service executive is working with the Joint Consultants Committee to promote the development of new clinical indicators, which will enable aspects of NHS trusts' performance to be examined. The following set of clinical indicators, recommended by the JCC/NHS executive working group, will be piloted this year to ensure that the information is robust and unlikely to mislead, before publication is considered.

- Perioperative mortality;
- Surgical wound infections;
- Length of hospital stay of stroke patients, and discharge home;
- District rate of hernia recurrence;
- In-hospital mortality for acute myocardial infarction;
- Adverse drug reactions while patients in hospital;
- Reoperation after prostate surgery;
- Length of stay in hospital, mortality and discharge home after admission for fractured neck of femur;
- Frequency of diagnostic curettage in women under the age of 40 years;
- Perioperative organ damage (sentinel event marker);
- Perioperative pulmonary embolism as an alternative to perioperative myocardial infarction (sentinel event marker);
- Perioperative Central Nervous System complications (sentinel event marker);

Some of the clinical outcome indicators mentioned in the report published by the Scottish Office in December 1995 require the linkage of patient records in a way not yet routinely available in England, and, accordingly, there are no plans at present to publish such indicators.

NHS Clinical Staff (Suspensions)

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of suspensions of NHS clinical staff from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands the NHS executive has had referred to it for each of the last five years. [36572]

Mr. Malone: Decisions on employment matters, including suspensions, rest with the employing authority. National health service employers have reported cases of suspension of hospital and community medical and hospital dental staff lasting more than six months since 31 March 1995. Information is, therefore, only available on those cases over six months and from that date. The total number or reported cases from March 1995 to 30 June 1996 in England and the West Midlands is nine and one respectively.

Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS patients in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands have been treated by alternative consultants as a results of NHS clinical suspensions for each of the last five years; [36573]

(2) what was the total cost of investigating and processing suspensions of NHS staff to the NHS (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the west midlands over each of the last five years; [36574]

(3) how many suspensions of NHS clinical staff concerned matters of (a) personal and (b) clinical conduct in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the west midlands in the last five years; [36575]

(4) how many suspensions of NHS clinical staff have been followed by reinstatement in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands for each of the last five years; [36576]

(5) how many NHS clinical staff suspensions there have been (a) nationally and (b) in the west midlands in each of the last five years; [36587]

(6) how many NHS clinical staff suspensions have been processed within (a) three and (b) six months from the first date of suspension in each of the last five years (i) nationally and (ii) in the west midlands. [36588]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally. Decisions on employment matters, including possible suspensions, rest with the employing authority.

Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS clinical staff suspensions have not been processed within (a) six months, (b) a year and (c) two years from first date of suspension in each of the last five years (i) nationally and (ii) in the west midlands. [36589]

Mr. Malone: Decisions on employment matters, including suspensions, rest with the employing authority. National health service employers have reported cases of suspension of hospital and community medical and hospital dental staff lasting more than six months since 31 March 1995. Information is, therefore, available only on those cases of suspension over six months and from that date.

Nationally there were nine reported cases during the period 31 March 1995 to 30 June 1996 of which one was from the west midlands. Seven of these cases have now been resolved and two are still outstanding. Of those resolved nationally, two were cleared within six months to one year and three within one to two years. Two cases lasted over two years, of which one was in the west midlands. One of the two unresolved cases has lasted over two years and the other between one and two years.

Questions relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the estimated public expenditure by the NHS on non-EU foreign nationals on (a) contraception and (b) all community health services in the most recent year for which figures are available. [36848]

Mr. Horam: This information is not collected.

Health Services Staff

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by family health services authority the number of (a) doctors, (b) nurses, (c) midwives, (d) health visitors, (e) administration and clerical staff and (f) managers for the most recent year available. [36847]

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library.

War Disablement Pensions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the scheme for giving recipients of war disablement pensions priority treatment in NHS hospitals after emergency and other critical cases was introduced. [36834]

Mr. Bowis: Following a Government commitment given in 1953, war pensioners receive priority treatment in national health service hospitals for the condition or conditions for which they receive a pension or gratuity. Priority is not given for unrelated conditions.

Shellfish-related Illness

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 335, how many cases of shellfish-related illness reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service were subsequently proved to be linked to (a) the consumption of shellfish, (b) the consumption of shellfish whose deficiencies were traced back to the production practices and (c) factors other than production practices; and in how many cases no link to the consumption of shellfish was established. [36595]

Mr. Horam: All of the 82 cases were reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service as associated with the consumption of shellfish. Information is not available on the precise cause of contamination in the shellfish implicated in each case.

Health Care (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairs and chief executives of national health service trust hospitals, covering the Greater London area, to discuss health matters relating to care in the local community. [37195]

Mr. Bowis: Ministers meet chairmen and chief executives of national health service trusts as necessary to discuss various issues. I am not aware of any recent meetings with all the hospital trusts in the London area.

Care for the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the German system of funding long-term care for the elderly. [37181]

Mr. Bowis: A system of social insurance for long-term care was introduced in Germany in 1995. The system is compulsory, and operates on a pay-as-you-go rather than a funded basis. We have no plans to introduce a similar system here.

Radiotherapy

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations have been made to him regarding compensation for victims of radiotherapy following breast cancer; and if he will make a statement. [36924]

Mr. Horam: The Department has received a number of letters in support of the campaign by the group Radiotherapy Action Group Exposure—RAGE BREAST—which represents those suffering adverse effects following radiotherapy treatment for breast cancer.

Morning-after Pill

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds are currently made available by his Department to (a) the Health Education Council and (b) other bodies, for the promotion of the use of, or awareness about, the morning-after pill; for what precise purpose those funds are used; which of these projects involve the provision of a telephone helpline service; at what cost; in what areas; for what purpose; to what age group of women and in which geographic areas such campaigns are being mounted; and if he will make a statement. [37492]

Mr. Horam: In support of the Government's "Health of the Nation" objective of reducing the level of unwanted pregnancy, the Health Education Authority is conducting a national campaign to raise awareness of emergency contraception among women aged 16 to 49. The Department has made available £600,000 to the HEA to run the campaign, which commenced on 25 June and runs until 24 July. It aims, through press and radio advertising, briefing for general practitioner surgeries and family planning clinics, and through posters and leaflets, to improve knowledge of emergency contraception, where it can be obtained and the time period in which it can be used. A 24-hour freephone helpline is available until the end of September.

Health Authority Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average expenditure per head for each health authority, and the average for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, in the current financial year. [37515]

Mr. Horam: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which health authorities in Yorkshire have had in respect of previous years overspend, made by predecessor constituent health or family health services authorities, (a) sums written off and (b) additional grant aid to reduce those overspends; [37252]

(2) if he will list those health authorities that have (a) had previous years overspend written off by his Department and (b) been given grant aid to reduce overspends in previous years. [37253]

Mr. Horam: The information is not held centrally.

Stevens-Johnson Syndrome

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, columns 148–49, what drugs, other than paracetamol and codeine, were involved in the adverse reactions of erythema multiform and epidermal necrolysis; and how many cases were involved for each drug identified by its generic and trade name. [35492]

Mr. Malone [holding answer on 4 July 1996]: A table has been placed in the Library which lists all drugs reported in association with erythema multiform and epidermal necrolysis between 1991 and 1995 and the number of reports for each drug.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, columns 148–49, how many of the adverse reactions were fatal or caused serious damage to the patient's health. [35493]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 4 July 1996]: The Medicines Control Agency holds the following information relating to suspected adverse drug reactions reported through the voluntary yellow card scheme. These data have been mapped to two relevant preferred terms: erythema multiforme—which includes Stevens-Johnson syndrome—and epidermal necrolysis.

There have been five fatal reports of erythema multiforme and 29 fatal reports of epidermal necrolysis where the fatality was associated directly or indirectly with the adverse reaction. None of the fatal cases were reported to be associated with products containing paracetamol and/or codeine.

Epidermal necrolysis is a serious condition, as indicated by the high proportion of fatalities. However, many cases of erythema multiforme are mild and self-limiting. Of the 715 reported cases of erythema multiforme, 80 were known to have been hospitalised.

Trusts and Health Authorities (Debts)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 July Official Report, column 25, on bad debts, if he will provide equivalent figures for each of the previous five years. [37102]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 12 July 1996]: Information for 1987–88 is not available. The information for 1988–89 to 1991–92 will be placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibitions

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Achievements of the Engineering Industry, Present and Future", to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [37759]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 21 October to Friday 25 October 1996.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Working for Health in Wythenshawe" to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall. [37576]

Mr. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 4 November to Friday 8 November 1996.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition in relation to "Cyprus:—A Photographic Record 1974–1966" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [37550]

Mr. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 28 October to Friday 1 November 1996.

Standing Committee Reports

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council on how many occasions paperback versions of complete Official Reports of Standing Committees on Bills have been published (a) prior to the Report stage of the Bill and (b) to date, in the current Session of Parliament; and what changes there have been in this practice since the Session 1979–80. [37013]

Mr. Newton: There are no set timetables for the publication of paperback versions of complete Standing Committee Hansards. The practice is to publish them in recesses, usually summer recesses.

No such versions have been published (a) before the Report stage of a Bill or (b) to date, in the current Session.

There have been no changes in the practice since the 1979–80 Session.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Special Needs Education (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the funding for special needs education for Cheshire education authority for each of the past five years [36502]

Mrs. Gillan: Provision for special education is contained in the education standard spending assessment, but cannot be separately identified.

Teaching Staff (Devon)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of (a) teachers and (b) classroom assistants employed by Devon education authority in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97. [37049]

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest available information on teachers and education support staff employed by Devon local education authority is shown in the tables. Staff in grant-maintained schools are excluded throughout.

Full-time equivalent—FTE—teachers in the LEA-maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special education sector

| January | FTE |
|---|---|
| 1994 | 7,320 |
| 1995 | 7,400 |
| 1996 | 7,450 |

Full-time equivalent education support staff[1] in LEA-maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools

| January | FTE |
|---|---|
| 1994 | 1,540 |
| 1995 | 1,680 |
| 1996 | n/a |

[1] Includes nursery assistants, special needs support staff and other support staff including librarians, technicians, medical staff and child care assistants. Voluntary or unpaid staff are excluded.
n/a = not available.

New Apprenticeship Schemes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many hours are spent (a) in the classroom studying the theoretical subjects and (b) gaining practical experience under the new apprenticeship scheme in the engineering industry. [37078]

Mr. Paice: This information is not available because employers are free to decide how the skills and underpinning knowledge required by a modern apprenticeship are acquired. The training frameworks for modern apprenticeships specify the outputs to be achieved, but not the process. This allows employers the flexibility they need to organise training.

Physical Education and Sport

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 454, when she will place in the Library the full results of the survey her Department has recently conducted into physical education and sport in schools. [37126]

Mrs. Gillan: The report placed in the Library on 3 July 1996 gives full details of the results of the Department's survey of PE and sports in schools in England. The Department will try to meet any requests for further information on specific aspects of the survey, provided this can be done without incurring disproportionate costs.

Nutrition

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines she has set out in respect of the serving of healthy meals in the canteens of (a) schools, (b) colleges and (c) universities; and if she will make a statement. [37090]

Mrs. Gillan: None. The nutritional content and presentation of school food is for individual LEAs and governing bodies of grant-maintained schools to decide. We expect to publish voluntary dietary guidance for them in the autumn. We hope LEAs and governors will adopt the good practices it recommends. Colleges and universities are autonomous institutions and responsible for their own catering. Although the guidance is not aimed at them, those institutions will no doubt also wish to ensure that healthy food options are available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action she has taken to ensure that the Government offices for the regions are aware of their responsibility to ensure TECs comply with the operating agreement in respect of equal opportunities. [36894]

Mr. Paice: The Department's operating guide for Government regional offices makes specific reference to the requirements relating to equality of opportunity. Training and enterprise council performance, including equality of opportunity, forms part of the regular dialogue between Government offices and the Department.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many TECs have complied with an equal opportunities strategy under paragraph 8 of the TEC operating agreement. [36893]

Mr. Paice: All 74 training and enterprise councils or chambers of commerce, training and enterprise have agreed, and are taking steps to implement, an equal opportunities strategy in accordance with their contracts with the Government.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy to ensure that TECs spend a larger proportion fo their budgets on management training for small firms. [36682]

Mr. Paice: The Government are currently consulting businesses and their support organisations on the simplification of their business support. The purpose of the consultation, which ends in September, is to allow TECs and others greater flexibility in meeting their clients' needs. We look to TECs to tackle management development needs in local companies but have no plans to require TECs to dedicate a specific proportion of their funds to that area.

The TEC contract specifies activity in the skills for small business scheme by which TECs specifically assist small businesses to develop their own in-house training expertise. In addition, it is open to TECs to use the discretionary fund resources to target their small business sector.

Education Funding (Devon)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was available for the local education authority in Devon to spend on each pupil, on average, in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97. [37424]

Mr. Robin Squire: Allocations of education standard spending spending assessments—SSA—per pupil for 5 to 10-year-olds, 11 to 15-year-olds and over-16s are shown in the table. Actual expenditure per pupil is for the local education authority to decide: LEAs can and do spend more or less on education than is provided in their education SSA.

£ per pupil

| | 1994–95 | 1995–96 | 1996–97 |
|---|---|---|---|
| 5 to 10-year-olds | 1,865 | 1,879 | 1,958 |
| 11 to 15-year-olds | 2,605 | 2,506 | 2,609 |
| Over-16s | 3,484 | 3,350 | 3,280 |

Objective 4 Status

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 335, on objective 4 status, how much money has been made available to firms (a) in total, (b) with under 100 employees, (c) with under 50 employees and (d) with under 10 employees in each EU country which has participated in the objective 4 programme. [36745]

Mr. Forth: No information has been made available by the European Commission on the breakdown of funds under objective 4 between firms or other bodies in the countries which have objective 4 programmes.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those local education authorities that pay education maintenance allowance, indicating the amount currently paid by each; and if she will list the practice of each authority as to when the allowance is paid. [36779]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following local education authorities in England and Wales informed the Department that they had paid educational maintenance allowances in 1994–95 as in the table.

Educational maintenance allowances paid by local education authorities

England and Wales [1]: academic year 1994–95

Notes:
[1] Made by Local Education Authorities in England and Wales to students normally domiciled in their area.
[2] National totals have been grossed to compensate for incomplete returns.

This information is derived from returns made by local education authorities to the Department; the fact that there is no entry for some LEAs does not necessarily mean that they paid no allowances. We have no information about the practice of authorities in making these allowances, which are discretionary awards. It is for individual LEAs to decide whether to pay education maintenance allowances and they are responsible for setting the conditions under which such allowances are paid, the level at which they are paid and the timing of payments.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the (a) gross and (b) net expenditure cost of the introduction nationally of a means-tested education maintenance allowance; how such an allowance would be paid; to whom it would be paid; and if such allowances are taxable. [36776]

Mr. Squire: No such assessment has been made by the Department.

Primary Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the (a) number and (b) percentage of primary school children in classes of 31 or more (i) in each local education authority and (ii) nationally in 1996. [37151]

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of pupils in one-teacher classes of 31 or more pupils in maintained primary schools in England in January 1996—provisional—was 1.26 million. This represented 31.8 per cent. of pupils in all one-teacher classes in maintained primary schools in England. Class size figures for local education authorities will be available in the autumn.

English Tests

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the final guidelines issued to markers of key stage 2 English tests included lower thresholds for some levels than those set out in the draft guidelines; and if she will make a statement. [36642]

Mr. Paice [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The draft thresholds set by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority on 22 April were confirmed in full following the level setting procedures based on an initial sample of actual scripts. Dummy thresholds had been issued to markers in March purely for training purposes.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of legal aid applications and the total sums involved received from members of the public in Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36391]

Mr. Streeter: The Legal Aid Board has an area officer in Chester which covers the county of Cheshire along with nine other counties or regions. The data gathered by the board do not separately identify applications received by individual counties.

The total number of applications for civil legal aid received by the Chester area office over the last five years were as follows:

1991–92: 26,391
1992–93: 30,542
1993–94: 24,969
1994–95: 25,517
1995–96: 24,593

For civil legal aid certificates issued by the board's Chester area office, the net cost of cases which closed during the last four years were as follows:

1992–93: £14.056 million
1993–94: £17.657 million
1994–95: £18.320 million
1995–96: £18.622 million

The figures for 1991–92 are not available.

Court Closures (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the (a) magistrates and (b) other courts closed in the county of Cheshire in each of the past five years. [36390]

Mr. Streeter: In the last five years, two courts have been closed in Cheshire. They are: Winsford magistrates court, closed in September 1992; and Ellesmere Port county court, closed in December 1994.

In addition, sittings ceased to be held at Ellesmere Port magistrates court with effect from 31 March 1996.

Leeds Crown Court

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many prosecutions, heard at the Leeds Crown court in the last two years, have proceeded to the Court of Appeal; and if he will make a statement. [35541]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 15 July 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of cases heard at Leeds Crown Court in the last two years which have proceeded to appeal.

In 1994, 192 appeals in cases heard at Leeds Crown Court were received in the Court of Appeal. In 1995 this rose to 211.

Court Debt-recovery Procedures

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the programme to streamline court debt-recovery procedures. [36744]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 15 July 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the programme to streamline court debt-recovery procedures.

There is an ongoing programme to streamline certain aspects of debt recovery business in the county courts. The Summons Production Centre, which opened in 1990, operates a computerised and highly automated system for issuing summonses and now handles 47% of all summonses issued. There are further plans to centralise and computerise the handling of payments under attachment of earnings orders which will enable all employers to make payments to a single central point. It is also planned to implement a new national computer system in local county courts beginning in 1997.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mohammed al-Masari

36. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General when he will reach a decision on whether to prosecute Mr. al-Masari for reported anti-semitic remarks. [35540]

The Attorney-General: Material attributed to Dr. al-Masari has been considered by the Crown Prosecution Service with a view to deciding whether there is evidence that offences of incitement to racial hatred or incitement to murder have been committed. In the light of advice from leading counsel, the CPS has concluded that there is insufficient evidence at present to provide a realistic prospect of conviction for any criminal offence. Any further evidence will be closely reviewed.

War Crimes

37. Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the progress in the prosecution of persons under the War Crimes Act 1991. [35542]

The Solicitor-General: Proceedings have been commenced in the Serafinowicz case which was committed to the central criminal court on 15 April 1996 and is due for trial in January 1997. Nine other cases remain under investigation.

Serious Fraud Office

38. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to reorganise the Serious Fraud Office. [35543]

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office continues to implement recommendations made in the Graham report and by the Davie group, including measures to rationalise its investigative function and to make the most efficient use of police resources. I have no plans for further reorganisation.

Asil Nadir

39. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General what is the latest position over the prosecution in the United Kingdom of Asil Nadir. [35544]

The Solicitor-General: Asil Nadir stands indicted before the central criminal court on 13 counts of theft involving over £33 million alleged to have been stolen from Polly Peck International plc. A warrant has been issued for his arrest. The Crown is ready to proceed as soon as he returns or is returned to the jurisdiction.

Pensions Ombudsman

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what discussions he has had with the pensions ombudsman concerning legal proceedings in connection with decisions of the ombudsman. [36379]

The Attorney-General: None.

Solicitor's Cost

Sir Julian Critchley: To ask the Attorney-General, who is the taxation master in the matter of solicitors' costs; and if he will list the names and firms of those in the legal profession who assist him. [36309]

Mr. Streeter: I have been asked to reply.

In accordance with the Solicitors Act 1974 and order 62 of the rules of the Supreme Court, taxations of solicitor and own client costs—Solicitors Act taxations—may be carried out only by a taxing master or district judge, sitting alone. Reviews of such taxations are carried out by a judge assisted by two assessors, one of whom is a taxing master, and the other a practising solicitor nominated by the president of the Law Society.

Deputy taxing masters and deputy district judges also conduct taxations. There are seven taxing masters, 331 district judges, 16 deputy taxing masters and 691 deputy district judges. There is no panel of practising solicitors acting as assessors. Individual nominations are made for each review. I will write to the hon. Member if he wishes to provide me with details of any particular case that he has in mind.

SCOTLAND

Drugs and Aids

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total funding for Tayside drugs services broken down by the national services division, the helath board and the local authority figures in 1995–96. [31756]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total funding allocated for Tayside drugs services in 1995–96 was as follows:

| | 1995–96 £ |
|---|---|
| National Services Division | [1]1,091,000 |
| Tayside Health Board | 103,350 |
| Tayside Regional Council | [2]71,182 |

[1] This figure does not include additional funding of £13,000 and £33,000 allocated for the Tayside drug development officer, and community drug action projects respectively.

[2] This figure covers grants to the Dundee drugs and AIDS project, and the Perth misuse of drugs project only. In addition, funding was made available to other voluntary sector projects where drug misuse was a factor amongst clients but not the main thrust of the service.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the posts which will be lost in 1996–97 in (a) the Scottish Drugs Forum, (b) Dundee drugs and AIDS project, (c) Wishart centre and (d) Body Positive in Tayside. [31620]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information, which has been provided by Tayside health board, is set out in the table:

| | Posts cut in 1996–97 |
|---|---|
| Scottish Drugs Forum | None |
| Dundee Drugs and Aids Project | [1]6 |
| Wishart Centre | 2 |
| Body Positive | None |

[1] This figure includes a social work secondment and a research post; both were fixed-term appointments which have now ended.

GPs (Special Deprivation Payments)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of patients of (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non-fundholders in Scotland live in areas attracting special deprivation payments under the regulations governing general practitioners' remuneration. [31818]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The percentages of patients of general practitioner fundholders and non-fundholders in Scotland who live in areas attracting special deprivation payments are 11 per cent. and 11.6 per cent. respectively.

GP Fundholding

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were (a) the total national costs, (b) the total cost to each health board and (c) the cost to each NHS trust in Scotland of managing transactions with GP fundholders or supporting GP fundholding. [31814]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally.

Hospital and Community Services Expenditure

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total budget for hospital and community services, excluding GP fundholding, in each year since GP fundholding was introduced in Scotland. [31816]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the list:

1991–92: £2.488 million

1992–93: £2.707 million

1993–94: £2.895 million

1994–95: £2.973 million

1995–96: £3.037 million

Constituency Statistics

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be (a) the number of Scottish constituencies at the next general election and (b) the average number of voters in each; what will be the equivalent figures for (i) England, (ii) Northern Ireland, (iii) Wales and (iv) the United Kingdom. [35996]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

| | Number of seats | Average electorate based on the 1996 electoral registers |
|---|---|---|
| Scotland | 72 | 55,043 |
| England | 529 | [1]69,083 |
| Northern Ireland | 18 | 65,386 |
| Wales | 40 | [1]55,507 |
| United Kingdom | 659 | [1]66,620 |

[1] These figures are based on the 1995 electoral register as the 1996 electorate figures are not available.

Environmental Pollution

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the responsibility of the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency in respect of environmental pollution in the Minches. [36457]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Environmental Protection Agency's pollution control powers are defined in sections 31 and 32 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. These powers cover the regulation of discharges to controlled waters as defined in section 30A of that Act. The Minches are wholly within controlled waters.

Home Energy Conservation Act

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Home Energy Conservation Act 1995 will come into operation in Scotland. [36869]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The provisions of the Home Energy Conservation Act are to be introduced in Scotland on 1 December 1996. Guidance to local authorities on how they must carry out the duties required of them is being prepared and will be issued to the authorities later in the year following consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Algrade Trust

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the investigations of the affairs of the Algrade trust by the Scottish charities office and the police. [37018]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate informs me that the further inquiries referred to in my answer of 24 April 1996, Official Report, column 186, to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson), are drawing to a conclusion. The investigators are awaiting the completion of accounts for the period of the administration of the former trustees. The Charities Office continues to monitor the work of the new trustees.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each trust in Scotland (a) total income, (b) the amount spent on the overall cost of management staff, administrative staff and board members and (c) (b) as a percentage of (a). [37373]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

| NHS Trusts | Income £000 | 1994–95 Management/Administration and board members £000 | Percentage |

Research Projects

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of funding allocated to the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council in respect of indirect costs relating to research projects in Scotland for each of the financial years 1990–91 to 1994–95. [36861]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Scottish Higher Education Funding Council did not receive any grant in aid for allocation to institutions before 1 April 1993. For the 1993–94 financial year, the Secretary of State approved the council's proposal that £98.8 million of the total recurrent resources available to it should be allocated to institutions to support research infrastructure. For 1994–95, he approved the council's proposal that £99 million should be allocated for the same purpose. It is for institutions to determine with project sponsors the appropriate level of contributions towards indirect costs of specific research projects, and in doing so to comply with the arrangements set out in the financial memorandum between the council and the institution regarding full-cost recovery.

Private Landed Estates

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 512, on financial assistance to private estates, if he will list the criteria upon which monitoring conditions imposed on applicants for financial assistance are based; and if he will make a statement; [36771]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 511, what options are under discussion for making more transparent the objectives of schemes involving public funds paid to private estates; and if he will undertake a study of the possibility of publishing assessments of whether all conditions attached to such schemes are fulfilled. [36770]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 11 July 1996]: In accordance with paragraph 3(ii) of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information", we are progressively making available for public scrutiny internal guidelines about the Scottish Office's dealing with the public. This task will take some time to complete, since each document must be scrutinised to ensure that it is comprehensive and does not include any matter which should properly be kept confidential under part II of the code.

The objectives for agriculture schemes apply equally to all applicants whatever their land tenure status, and are set out in the various explanatory leaflets, application and claim forms. Each scheme has its own criteria for monitoring.

Where, as a result of monitoring by departmental officials, it is found that scheme requirements are not being met, steps are taken to withhold assistance or to recover any financial assistance paid, in whole or in part, in accordance with undertakings given. However, I have no plans to publish assessments of the fulfilment of scheme conditions.

Epilepsy Association of Scotland

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial support he currently provides to the Epilepsy Association of Scotland. [36857]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1996]: In the current financial year, the Epilepsy Association of Scotland has received funding of £13,500 from the Scottish Office Department of Health, £3,500 as a core grant towards its administration costs under section 16B of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 and £10,000 towards the cost of publishing the association's information pack on epilepsy and women.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Statistics

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for (a) family credit, (b) attendance allowance, (c) disability working and living allowance, (d) severe disability allowance and (e) invalidity care allowance have been processed since 4 February; how many people have (i) passed and (ii) failed the residence test in (a) to (e); and how many awards previously made or granted in (a) to (e) have been withdrawn. [36040]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table:

| Benefit | Claims processed | Residence and presence test | | Period |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | Passed | Failed | |
| Family credit | 668,227 | n/a | 360 | February 1996 to June 1996 |
| Attendance allowance | 163,575 | n/a | 181 | February 1996 to June 1996 |
| Disability living allowance | 216,039 | n/a | 651 | February 1996 to June 1996 |
| Disability working allowance | 9,758 | n/a | 5 | February 1996 to June 1996 |
| Severe disablement allowance | 32,000 | n/a | n/a | n/a |
| Invalid care allowance | 56,882 | n/a | n/a | n/a |

1. The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.
2. Figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Coventry local authority area in each of the last 12 months were in receipt of (a) unemployment benefits only, (b) income support only, (c) unemployment benefits and income support and (d) national insurance credits only. [35940]

Mr. Evans [holding answer Monday 8 July 1996]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Thousands

| | Total unemployed claimants | Unemployment Benefit (UB) only in payment | UB and Income Support (IS) in payment | IS only in payment | Neither UB nor IS in payment |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| May 1995 | 14.1 | 1.2 | 0.6 | 11.0 | 1.3 |
| August 1995 | 15.1 | 1.4 | 0.8 | 11.0 | 1.9 |
| November 1995 | 13.3 | 1.3 | 0.7 | 9.9 | 1.3 |
| February 1996 | 14.5 | 1.3 | 0.9 | 10.1 | 2.2 |

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a sample of one in 20 claimants.
2. Figures relate to unemployed claimants who sign on at an employment service jobcentre—ESJ—in the Coventry local authority area. The ESJs included are Coventry Bankfield, Coventry Cheylesmore, Coventry Park Court and Coventry Tile Hill.
3. Figures are subject to sampling variability.
4. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred.

Council Tax and Housing Benefits

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the number of claimants for council tax benefit in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years; [36336]

(2) if he will list the number of claimants for housing benefit in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36338]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the tables.

Average number of council tax benefit recipients for Crewe and Nantwich local authority and all local authorities within Cheshire from 1993 to 1995

Number of recipients

| | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Crewe and Nantwich | 9,100 | 9,100 | 8,800 |
| Cheshire | 80,000 | 80,800 | 82,000 |

Average number of housing benefit recipients for Crewe and Nantwich local authority and all local authorities within Cheshire from 1991 to 1995

Number of recipients

| | 1991 | 1992 | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Crewe and Nantwich | 5,400 | 5,700 | 6,200 | 6,300 | 6,300 |
| Cheshire | 49,700 | 54,300 | 57,300 | 58,700 | 60,600 |

Notes:

1. Council tax benefit figures for 1993 are averages of the three quarters ie. May, August and November, due to council tax benefit being introduced from 1 April 1993. All other figures are averages of the four quarters.
2. A proportion of housing benefit recipients may have also been in receipt of council tax benefit.
3. Figures refer to benefit units which may be a single person or a couple.
4. The local authorities within Cheshire are as follows: Chester, Congleton, Crewe and Nantwich, Ellesmere Port, Halton, Macclesfield, Vale Royal and Warrington.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of annual savings resulting from changes to the reduced earnings allowance scheme. [36225]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) on 18 June, Official Report, column 420.

Local Offices (Closures)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the offices within his Department that have been closed in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36344]

Mr. Burt: The information is set out in the table.

During the last five years, no DSS offices have been closed in Crewe and Nantwich.

| Year | Agency/Business unit | Offices closed in Cheshire |
|---|---|---|
| 1991–92 | All | None |
| 1992–93 | Benefits Agency | Royal Avenue, Widnes[1] |
| | All other DSS units | None |
| 1993–94 | All | None |
| 1994–95 | All | None |
| 1995–96 | Child Support Agency | Wimslow[2] |

[1] The public caller facility was moved to the existing Caldwell road site in Widnes, which was deemed better suited in terms of location and accessibility by public transport. The telephone and correspondence work was transferred to Warrington.

[2] The work and staff from this site were transferred to Macclesfield.

Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social security appeals tribunal hearings at (a) Doncaster and (b) Mexborough have been heard in each of the last five years. [36289]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Social Security Appeal Tribunal Hearings in Doncaster

| | 1991–92 | 1992–93 | 1993–94 | 1994–95 | 1995–96 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Actual number of appeals heard | n/a | n/a | n/a | n/a | 777 |
| Approximate number of appeals heard | 750 | 800 | 850 | 900 | — |

The Independent Tribunal Service does not keep detailed records for periods before the previous financial year.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consultations have taken place on the operation of social security appeals tribunals in Doncaster and Mexborough; [36287]

(2) what proposals he has to improve the operation of social security appeals in Doncaster and Mexborough. [38288]

Mr. Evans: The administrative arrangements for social security appeals tribunals are the responsibility of the independent tribunal service, which has been asked to write to the hon. Member.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of staff employed in his Department in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36343]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

| | Crewe | Cheshire |
|---|---|---|
| Benefits Agency | 109 | 726 |
| Contributions Agency | 4 | 32 |
| Information Technology Services Agency | 0 | 0 |
| Child Support Agency | 9 | 46 |
| War Pensions Agency | 0 | 0 |
| Total | 122 | 804 |

1. None of the agencies employ staff in Nantwich.
2. The figures are represented as staff in post figures and include permanent and fixed-term appointment staff as at 31 May 1996.
3. The figures for Cheshire include staff employed in Crewe.
4. Figures for previous years are not available.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 370–71, on statutory sick pay, how many employers reclaimed statutory sick pay under the small earners relief scheme in 1994–95; what was the average amount reclaimed; and how many employers reclaimed in each (a) parliamentary constituency and (b) region. [36681]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

In 1994–95, the estimate of statutory sick pay costs reimbursed to employers under the small earners relief—SER—scheme was £25 million. This is a proportion of the total statutory sick pay—SSP—costs reimbursed to employers during 1994–95 arising from SER and from reimbursement of 80 per cent. of SSP paid by employers during 1993–94. Detailed information on recoveries made under each scheme is not available as employers were not required to distinguish between reimbursement received under each scheme in their end of year returns.

Child Benefit

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for which groups the receipt of child benefit brings eligibility to other social security benefits; and at what income levels such eligibility is reached. [36773]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Receipt of child benefit is the principal qualification for child allowances and, therefore, a family premium in income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit, and for child dependency increases of retirement pension, widows benefit, short-term incapacity benefit—IB—at the higher rate, long-term IB, invalid care allowance, severe disablement allowance, higher rate industrial death benefit, unemployability supplement, and short-term IB at the lower rate and unemployment benefit if the beneficiary is over pension age. In the income-related benefits, eligibility arises where applicable amounts, including any child allowances and family premium, exceed the benefit unit's income. Child benefit is counted as income for the purposes of income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit, but not for family credit and disability working allowance.

Child dependency increases in the non-income-related benefits are not subject to an income rule but, with exception of widows' benefits, the increase for the first child is withdrawn when the beneficiary's spouse or partner's earnings reach £130. Any increases for subsequent children are withdrawn for each subsequent £17 of earnings.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents or guardians of those aged 16 to 19 years in full-time education have received child benefit; and what was the (a) gross and (b) net cost of such payments in each of the last three years and in the current year to date. [36777]

Mr. Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

| | 1993—94 | 1994–95 | 1995–96 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Number of families (000) | 1,016 | 1,038 | 1,089 |
| Gross expenditure (£ million) | 581 | 598 | 644 |
| Net expenditure (£ million) | 465 | 480 | 515 |

Sources:

1. 1996 Departmental Report.
2. Child Benefit management information statistics.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents or guardians of those aged 16 to 19 years, in full-time education, over the last three years to date, have declined to accept child benefit. [36778]

Mr. Mitchell: Take-up of child benefit has always been close to 100 per cent. of those entitled. The benefit is paid only on receipt of a claim from the parent or guardian. No information is available about how many beneficiaries voluntarily relinquish child benefit where there is continuing entitlement, but the number is believed to be negligible.

Widows

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total annual income lost by a widow with (a) one child and (b) two children, aged between 16 and 19 years, in full-time education, if child benefit were abolished; and if he will estimate the effects on widows in receipt of (i) income support, (ii) a third of average earnings, (iii) half average earnings and (iv) average earnings. [36774]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The widows benefit income lost by a widow with one or two children aged between 16 and 19 years in full-time education if child benefit was abolished would depend upon the age of the widow at the date child benefit entitlement ended. A widow with one child, who was aged 55 or over at the time child benefit ended would have widowed mothers allowance replaced with widows pension at a lower rate—a weekly loss, including lost child benefit, of £20.70 a week. Such a widow with two children would lose a total of £40.65 a week. Any additional pension paid with widowed mothers allowance would continue to be paid with widows pension.

A widow with one child, who was aged under 45 when child benefit ended would lose widowed mothers allowance and receive no further widows benefit. With the lost child benefit, there would be a loss of £81.85 a week. Such a widow with two children would lose a total of £101.80 a week. Any additional pension paid with widowed mothers allowance would also be lost. Where, but for its abolition, child benefit would otherwise have continued for at least one child until she attained the age of 45, she would also lose entitlement to age-related widows pension of at least £18.35 a week from this later date. There would be different effects for women aged between 45 and 55 at the date of change. Special rules also apply in respect of women widowed before April 1988.

The net income effect on a widow aged under 45 in receipt of (i) income support, (ii) a third of average earnings, (iii) half average earnings and (iv) average earnings is set out in the table.

Weekly loss of income

| Widow in receipt of | One child, age 16 £ | Two children, one age 16 and one age 18 £ |
|---|---|---|
| Income support | Nil | Nil |
| ⅓ average earnings | 8.14 | 10.54 |
| ½ average earnings | 22.20 | 20.31 |

1. Indicates net loss of income, taking into account entitlement to income support, family credit, housing benefit and council tax benefit as appropriate (April 1996 rates).

2. Assumes continuing child allowances in income support and family credit while children remain in full-time education.

3. Assumes average local authority rent and council tax liability.

4. For all in-work examples it is assumed that the widow is working 30 hours per week and paying not contracted out national insurance contributions.

5. Assumes April 1996 average earnings figure of £349.80 per week, based on April 1995 figure uprated by average earnings index.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account is taken of the payment of education maintenance allowance in calculating social security benefit. [36775]

Mr. Roger Evans: Educational maintenance allowances paid to young people continuing their secondary education beyond the upper limit of compulsory school age are full disregarded when calculating entitlement to social security benefits.

Asylum and Immigration Bill

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the external legal advice he has received in connection with the consequences of Lords Amendments to the Asylum and Immigration Bill. [37401]

Mr. Roger Evans: It is not Government practice to disclose legal advice.

Lost Records

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many teenagers had their records lost as a result of problems in transfers of records between the Benefits Agency and the Contributions Agency; and what remedial action he is proposing. [37403]

Mr. Heald: No records were lost as a result of problems with the transfer of information between the Benefits Agency and the Contributions Agency. A transmission failure did, however, result in an estimated 5,000 data items not being transferred, which were intended automatically to register juveniles approaching age 16 for national insurance purposes. Any teenager affected by this problem can register by completing an application form at their local social security office.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many asylum seekers resident in (a) the London borough of Southwark, (b) south London and (c) London have lost benefits a direct result of two negative decisions on their applications for political asylum in each of (i) March, (ii) April and (iii) May this year. [37251]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Tied Aid

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the levels of returns to the United Kingdom economy of tied aid expenditure for (a) bilateral and (b) multilateral aid in each of the last five years. [36654]

Mr. Hanley: The returns to the United Kingdom economy of bilateral tied aid expenditure were examined in the recently concluded tied aid studies, the findings of which ODA will publish shortly. The studies found that bilateral tied aid has only a small impact on the UK economy. They did not provide a precise measure of the returns.

None of the UK's contributions to multilateral aid is tied. But the returns to the UK economy from our contributions to multilateral aid are significant. The latest estimate is that for every £1 contributed, 90p is spent in the UK on procurement of goods and services—latest available three year moving average. These figures are imprecise, given differing definitions used by the multilateral organisations. But the trend is declining when compared with previous estimates because developing countries themselves are receiving a larger share of procurement and because a bigger proportion of our multilateral aid goes through the EU, where our share of procurement has tended to be lower than in the World bank or UN agencies.

South Africa (Oil Suppliers)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protocols or agreements were entered into between Her Majesty's Government and Oman, Brunei or the United Arab Emirates in relation to the supply of oil to South Africa between 1979 and 1990; and if he will give the dates and summarise the nature of such protocols or agreements. [36610]

Mr. Hanley: We have found no record of any such protocols or agreements.

Angola

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, columns 393–94, what is the latest total number of weapons of each kind handed in by UNITA personnel under the United Nationals verification mission III operation in Angola; and in what condition the verification mission has judged them to be. [37071]

Mr. Hanley: As at 10 July, the number of weapons handed in by UNITA was as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Personal weapons | 26,805 |
| Crew served weapons | 3,641 |
| Artillery and air defence weapons | 65 |
| Tanks and armoured vehicles | 8 |
| Under classification | 113 |

UNAVEM considers that at least 30 per cent. of the weapons handed in are unserviceable.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to prevent by way of international action by the United Nations the export of illegally mined diamonds from UNITA-controlled areas of Angola. [37072]

Mr. Hanley: The prevention of illegally mined diamonds being exported from UNITA-controlled areas is the responsibility of the Angolan Government.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking in the United Nations to increase surveillance, warnings and interdiction to prevent UNITA in Angola from obtaining supplies of arms and material from sources outside Angola, with special reference to Zaire. [37073]

Mr. Hanley: As a permanent member of the Security Council, the UK has supported all efforts to remind states neighbouring Angola, including Zaire, of their obligation to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of United Nation Security Council resolution 864(1993). This was reaffirmed in UNSCR 1064 of 11 July.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, columns 393–94, what is the latest total number of UNITA military personnel quartered under the United Nations Angola verification mission operated in Angola in each of the UN quartering areas and in each of the age categories being monitored.[37074]

Mr. Hanley: As at 10 July, the number of UNITA military personnel in each of the UN quartering areas was as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Prices

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many beef cattle under 30 months have been sold and slaughtered in each week since 20 March; how much per kilogram they have averaged less than the average price in the week previous to 20 March; and what that shortfall amounted to per head. [30024]

Mrs. Browning: The weekly average price for clean cattle for the week ending 6 July was 18p/kg below the equivalent price for the week ending 16 March, a shortfall of some 15 per cent. Weekly average prices, throughput at selected auction markets and total slaughterings, for clean cattle—steers, heifers and young bulls—for the weeks following the 20 March, are detailed in the table.

| Week ending | P/Kg | Throughput (head) | Slaughterings (1,000 head) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 23 March 1996 | 115.81 | 18,580 | 41.6 |
| 30 March 1996 | 96.99 | 447 | 2.3 |
| 6 April 1996 | 108.77 | 5,124 | 16.4 |
| 13 April 1996 | 100.21 | 13,498 | 26.7 |
| 20 April 1996 | 101.21 | 14,327 | 31.8 |
| 27 April 1996 | 107.86 | 14,225 | 38.4 |
| 4 May 1996 | 103.18 | 18,088 | 40.4 |
| 11 May 1996 | 101.56 | 13,497 | 30.9 |

| 15 June 1996 | 101.84 | 16,392 | 35.8 |
| 22 June 1996 | 99.77 | 14,913 | 34.3 |
| 29 June 1996 | 100.22 | 14,134 | n/a |
| 6 July 1996 | 101.16 | 16,215 | n/a |

Slaughtered Cattle

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle have been slaughtered in the latest available four-weekly period in respect of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and how many showed external signs of the disease. [31970]

Mrs. Browning: It is not possible to provide details of the numbers of animals slaughtered in the last four week period as there is a delay of between six to eight weeks from the date of slaughter and recording on the central BSE database. The latest four-week data set available for the numbers of animals slaughtered as BSE suspects is:

| Week beginning | Number |
|---|---|
| 18 March 1996 | 308 |
| 25 March 1996 | 328 |
| 1 April 1996 | 200 |
| 8 April 1996 | 161 |

All animals slaughtered as BSE suspects would have been exhibiting clinical signs.

Beef Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which members of the EU are currently opposing the removal of the ban on the export of British beef; and on what grounds. [32211]

Mrs. Browning: In Florence on 21 June, the European Council unanimously accepted the framework and procedures put forward by the Commission for lifting the wider ban on British beef.

Beef (Germany)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what justification the Germans have given for banning the sale of British beef to non-EU countries. [32183]

Mrs. Browning: The Germans have not banned the sale of British beef to third countries. The decision to prohibit exports of British beef was taken by the Commission in Commission decision 96/239 of 27 March 1996.

Set-aside

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to encourage the replacement of set-aside with an environment-friendly arable extensification policy. [36650]

Mr. Baldry: Set-aside is a requirement of the European Community legislation governing the support arrangements for producers of arable crops. While it remains so, the UK will continue to apply management conditions to set-aside land at national level designed to help maximise its environmental benefits. At the same time, the countryside stewardship scheme includes provisions intended to enhance the conservation value of arable field margins and the Department is in discussion with interested parties on further means of enhancing the conservation value of arable land generally.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that land previously subject to the environmental conditions attached to set-aside land will be subject to the same conditions when it returns to cultivation. [36651]

Mr. Baldry: Most of the environmental conditions that apply to the management of set-aside land would not be relevant in the context of cultivated land. However, during the set-aside period, farmers are required not to damage or destroy certain features on or adjacent to their set-aside land. The Government aim to lay regulations protecting important hedges, including those on agricultural land, by the end of the year.

Rabies

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will arrange for veterinary surgeons to have unimpeded access to the inactivated rabies vaccines already approved by his Department for animals in their care; [36878]

(2) if he will remove the restrictions imposed by his Department on access to rabies vaccines. [36879]

Mrs. Browning: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 29 February, Official Report, column 710.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the risks of European bat lyssavirus infection in the United Kingdom. [36880]

Mrs. Browning: More than 1,880 bats belonging to 23 species from all parts of Great Britain have been screened for rabies since 1986 with negative results. The recent case of European bat lyssavirus 2—EBL 2—found in a bat in Sussex is the first time that rabies virus has been isolated from a bat in this country.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if European lyssavirus type 2 is a notifiable disease in the United Kingdom. [36882]

Mrs. Browning: Yes.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many scientifically proven cases of rabies confirmed by isolation of the rabies virus have occurred in animals in the United Kingdom over the last 25 years; in what species; and in what years they occurred. [36884]

Mrs. Browning: European bat lyssavirus 2 was isolated on 6 June 1996 from a bat found in Sussex. This is the only occasion in the last 25 years on which rabies has been confirmed by isolation of virus.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the comparative risks of infection from European bat lyssavirus and urban and sylvatic rabies virus; and if he will list his sources of information and the methodology used to reach his conclusions. [36881]

Mrs. Browning: No such comparative assessment has been made or is considered necessary while this country remains free from rabies except for the one isolated case of European bat lyssavirus in an insectivorous bat in Sussex. In this particular case, the risk of dissemination of disease to terrestrial wildlife was considered, on the basis of the circumstances of the case, to be very small.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take following the recent diagnosis of rabies in a Daubenton's bat; and if he will make a statement. [36883]

Mrs. Browning: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to the hon. Member for Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) on 11 June 1996, Official Report, column 139, and to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 18 June, Official Report, column 441. These outline the action already taken.

The restrictions on the premises on which the bat had been held will remain in place until they pose no risk of dissemination of rabies. We have asked all members of the Sussex bat group to help us ensure that any dead or sick bats found in Sussex are sent for testing at the Central Veterinary Laboratory as part of our continuing British survey for rabies in bats. Bat groups throughout Britain are being contacted to ask for their continuing support in providing bat carcases for such testing.

Beef Ban

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to get the beef ban lifted in the European Union. [31645]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made a statement to the House on 24 June 1996, Official Report, columns 21–24, about the outcome of the European Council in Florence. He informed the House that the bovine spongiform encephalopathy eradication plan had secured unanimous approval in Florence and that a framework of measures for lifting the wider ban on beef exports had also been agreed.

Sheep Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the total number of live sheep exported from Dover port on 3 June on the Cap Afrique was recorded on the accompanying export health certificate with individual identification as required by the Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1996. [35668]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 11 July 1996]: Five consignments of sheep were exported from Dover on the Cap Afrique on 3 June 1996. Each consignment was accompanied by a health certificate recording the number of animals in that consignment and the individual identification numbers of each animal. Not all the animal identification numbers were in compliance with the requirements of the Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1996—SAGRIMO. However, we are satisfied that the identification numbers provided would enable the sheep to be traced back to the farm of origin as required by the EC directive. Steps have been taken to ensure that all sheep and goats exported in future are identified in accordance with SAGRIMO.

Slaughter Programme (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that the economic advantages of competitive tendering, as set out in the Public Services Contracts Regulations 1993, have been effectively pursued in the allocations to abattoirs of cattle under the 30-month slaughter programme; [37030]

(2) what steps he has taken to meet the requirements of EU directive 92/50 on competitive tendering in the allocations to abattoirs of cattle under the 30-month slaughter programme. [37032]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The requirements of Council directive 92/50/EEC as implemented by the Public Services Contracts Regulations 1993 have only limited application to the procurement of slaughtering services. Competitive tendering for allocations to abattoirs of cattle under the 30-month slaughter scheme was precluded by a number of factors including time constraints, the interrelationships between the sectors of the industry and, in particular, the limitation on rendering capacity. Allocations were granted to abattoirs according to criteria which have been announced by the Government which were: a traditional large-scale trade in cows and heavy steers; logistical consideration such as geographical spread and proximity to renderers; committed to accepting casualty animals; currently operating and with EC approved status; and the ability to process at least 100 animals a day on days specified for participation.

Correspondence

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to reply to the letters of 24 April and 28 May from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby, in respect of a constituency case. [37091]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 July 1996]: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary replied to these letters on 11 July 1996.

WALES

Nursery Voucher Scheme

6. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) opposed to the nursery voucher scheme. [35551]

19. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received about nursery vouchers; and, of those, how many were in favour of the scheme. [35564]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In addition to letters to Ministers, over 40 petitions and some 4,300 separate representations opposing the Government's proposals have been received, mostly printed pro forma letters and postcards. So far, there has been one letter of specific support. I refer also to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) today.

Rural Businesses

14. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the recently published proposals to afford non-domestic rate relief to small rural businesses; and if he will make a statement. [35559]

Mr. Hague: My hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) and I have received 93 responses to date including one from the hon. Member. These are now being considered.

Cardiff International Airport Link Road

15. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has now received a bid for funding from Vale of Glamorgan council for the proposed new dual carriageway linking the Ely link road with Cardiff international airport. [35560]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend is providing transport grant support towards the preparation costs involved in improving the links to the airport in 1996–97. Bids for 1997–98 have recently been invited and need to be submitted by 2 August 1996.

Hospitals (Capital Charging)

16. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of capital charging on smaller district general hospitals and their associated NHS trusts. [35561]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Trusts include capital charges as an element of their contract prices. In the allocation process, health authorities and GPs are funded to meet these contract prices. The size of the hospital should not affect this process.

Incomes

17. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the gross weekly income per household as a percentage of (a) the English, (b) the Scottish and (c) the Northern Ireland average; and what were the percentages in 1980–81. [35562]

Mr. Hague: Average household income per head in Wales in 1994, based on regional accounts data, was 88 per cent. of the average for England, 89 per cent. of the average for Scotland, and 104 per cent. of the average for Northern Ireland. The corresponding figures for 1984, the earliest year available, were almost identical.

An alternative source of information is the family expenditure survey. According to this, in 1994–95, average gross weekly household income in Wales was 75 per cent. of the English average, 78 per cent. of the Scottish average, and 87 per cent. of the Northern Ireland average. The corresponding figures for 1980–81 were 91 per cent. 96 per cent. and 116 per cent. respectively. Given the small sample size in Wales, these figures are subject to considerable variation from year to year.

Schools

18. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals the Welsh Office is taking forward to increase self-government for schools. [35563]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, I launched the White Paper "Self-Government for Schools" on Tuesday 25 June. It includes many proposals to increase substantially self-government in schools.

Inward Investment

20. Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what incentives are offered to inward investors in Wales; and what inward investments have been attracted in the past 12 months. [35565]

Mr. Hague: The incentives available to inward investors into Wales are the same as those possible for indigenous companies: competitive overhead costs; good quality trained labour; a sophisticated industrial infrastructure; support and training; support by the Welsh Development Agency; and Government grant aid. The combination of these secured projects promising over 12,000 new and safeguarded jobs and capital investment of over £970 million in the last financial year. Since then, further new projects have been announced, including LG's £1.7 billion investment at Imperial park, Newport promising the creation of 6,100 jobs.

29. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the current level of inward investment to Wales. [35574]

Mr. Hague: Wales continues to attract levels of inward investment which are higher than its population share. Last year was a good year in which Wales secured projects promising over 12,000 new and safeguarded jobs and capital investment of over £970 million. I expect this year to be even better, particularly in the light of my announcement last week of LG's investment at Imperial park, Newport.

30. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on recent inward investment to Wales. [36923]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Over the past few months, there has been a steady flow of inward investment success for the whole of Wales. The LG project has become the jewel in the crown and my right hon. Friend and I expect it to herald a new phase of success for Wales. The work of everyone involved in the LG project, and in the other projects that we have won over the past few months, should be applauded.

Welsh Assembly

21. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received seeking the establishment of a Welsh Assembly. [35566]

Mr. Hague: Since 1 January 1996, I have received six written representations about the establishment of a Welsh Assembly—two in favour and four against.

A55

22. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has recently been taken to improve the A55. [35567]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The opening of the Aber improvement in September 1994 completed the A55 duelling across mainland north Wales. Since 1979, over £700 million has been spent on improving the 60 miles from Chester to Bangor, cutting journey times from over three hours to about one hour.

Unemployment

23. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the areas with the highest unemployment rates in Wales. [35568]

Mr. Hague: The number of Welsh travel to work areas in which the average rate of unemployment is more than three percentage points above the GB average has fallen significantly in recent years. In the year of 1979, there were 15 such travel to work areas in Wales. In the 12 months to May 1996, there were four.

Privatised Utilities (Employment)

24. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussion he has had with heads of privatised utilities in Wales about their future employment forecasts. [35569]

Mr. Hague: None.

Statutory Instruments

25. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many statutory instruments he has introduced in the last three years. [35570]

Mr. Hague: The number of statutory instruments introduced by the Welsh Office from 1993 onwards is as follows: 1993:48; 1994:64; 1995:109; 1996 (up to and including 31 May):76; total 297.

Governance

26. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received on the reform of government structures in Wales with particular reference to the raising of revenue. [35571]

Mr. Hague: None.

27. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received on holding a referendum in respect of the future government of Wales. [35572]

Mr. Hague: Since 1 January 1996, I have received three written representations in favour of a referendum on a Welsh Assembly.

Judicial Reviews

28. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has held with which bodies in respect of the length of time taken over judicial reviews. [35573]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No recent discussions have been held.

Food Strategy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the people appointed to the advisory group set up in response to the consultation paper on a food strategy for Wales, and for each member to list the (a) commercial interest, (b) non-commercial interest and (c) value of all grants received from his Department in the last six years; and if he will make a statement. [36052]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The group members are listed in "Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales" a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on Welsh Office grant payments is commercially confidential and cannot be disclosed.

GCSE Point Scores

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 212, and the answer of the Secretary of State for Education and Employment of 19 June to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on GCSE point scores, Official Report, column 479, what factors specific to his Department led to his conclusion that to provide a substantive answer would involve disproportionate cost. [36119]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Welsh Office holds summary examination data at school level, drawn from the Welsh examination database and specified to meet the requirements of the school and college performance booklets. To provide the information previously requested, a special analysis of the pupil level data held on WED would need to be commissioned.

Beef

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to help re-establish the market position of Welsh beef; and if he will make a statement. [36053]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government are seeking to have the export ban on British beef lifted. Once this is achieved, the position of Welsh beef in the export market can be re-established.

The Meat and Livestock Commission is working with Welsh Lamb and Beef Promotions Ltd. and Welsh Food Promotions Ltd. to promote Welsh select beef in the UK market. Additionally, Welsh beef will be promoted throughout the Royal Welsh agricultural show 22 to 25 July.

Agriculture

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated, on comparative costing of (i) organic, (ii) bio-dynamic, (iii) permaculture and (iv) conventional intensive agricultural systems where the external costs have been internalised; and if he will make a statement. [36055]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No research of this specific type has been commissioned in Wales.

Youth Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the percentage of youths undergoing training who enjoyed employed status on the last date of their training in each of the training and enterprise council areas in Wales in 1995. [36581]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information is not available on the number of young people with employed status on the last day of their training. Employed status statistics are collected for those in training on the last day of each period. The percentage of young people with employed status who were in training in each TEC area at 31 December 1995 is shown in the following table:

Percentage of young people with employed status in training[1] at 31 December 1995 (provisional)

| TEC | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| Gwent | 66 |
| Mid Glamorgan | 63 |
| North-east Wales | 64 |
| Powys | 44 |
| South Glamorgan | 62 |
| TARGED | 69 |
| West Wales | 46 |
| Wales total | 59 |

[1] Includes Youth Training, Youth Credits, Modern Apprenticeships and Accelerated Modern Apprenticeships.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals started youth training in each year since 1990–91. [36585]

Mr. Evans: The number of young people in training in each year since 1990–91 is shown in the following table:

| Year | Starts |
|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 18,231 |
| 1991–92 | 17,955 |
| 1992–93 | 16,911 |
| 1993–94 | 17,567 |
| 1994–95 | [1]17,179 |
| 1995–96 | [1,2]18,939 |

[1] Includes modern apprenticeship first-time entrants
[2] Provisional.

Education and Training

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department receives notification of applications made to the European Union for financial support for education and training projects. [36113]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Welsh Office is aware of applications made under the structural funds and some Community actions. Other applications, made to the European Commission either directly or through an intermediary, are not automatically notified to the Welsh Office.

Unemployment

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the percentage of (a) males and (b) females currently unemployed in the (i) 16–19 years, (ii) 20–29 years, (iii) 30–39 years, (iv) 40–49 years, (v) 50–59 years and (vi) 60 years and over age groups; and what were the figures in (1) 1979, (2) 1984, (3) 1986, (4) 1989, (5) 1990 and (6) 1992. [36667]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Unemployment rates by age are available from the labour force survey, which was carried out annually up to 1992 and quarterly from 1992 onwards. Estimates in the following table relate to spring (March to May) for years up to 1992; the latest estimate is taken from the winter quarter (December to February) for 1995–96. Data for 1979 are not available on a comparable basis.

ILO unemployment rates, percentage by age and sex, Wales[1]

ILO = International Labour office.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of male unemployment in (a) Newport and (b) Wales. [35533]

Mr. Jones: In May 1996, the unadjusted number of males on the claimant unemployment count in the Newport travel-to-work-area was 5,619, that is 10.4 per cent. of the male work force. The corresponding figures for Wales were 79,696 and 11.2 per cent.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report column 507, what assessment he has made of the incidence of clusters of CJD in Wales. [37459]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is no statistically significant evidence of clustering of CJD in Wales of the rest of the UK.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 507, if he will (a) draw up and (b) place in the Library a map, adopting the model produced by the CJD surveillance unit in Edinburgh for 1995, of definite and probable cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in Wales for the period May 1990 to April 1996. [37456]

Mr. Jones: This information will be contained in the fifth annual report from the CJD unit. The unit anticipates that it will be publishing this report in the late autumn. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Abattoir, Marchwiel

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what controls he exercises over (a) the disposal of (i) solid waste and (ii) open running liquid waste and (b) the spraying of blood from the Marchwiel abattoir, near Wrexham. [37455]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Controls on slaughterhouses for disposal of waste materials are covered by the specified Bovine Materials (No 2) Order 1996, the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 and the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) (Amendment) Regulations 1995. The Specified Bovine Material Order has the effect of separating specified bovine material from other waste materials. This specified bovine material is then rendered and the remaining waste material incinerated. As indicated in the latest progress report on bovine spongiform encephalopathy in Great Britain (May 1996), a copy of which is in the Library of the House, the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has advised Ministers that the current and proposed methods of dealing with waste material from the slaughter of cattle are safe. Minor amendments to the Specified Bovine Material Order are currently being considered to reflect SEAC's recommendations.

The Government are required by the EC framework directive on waste to take the measures necessary to ensure that waste is disposed of without endangering human health and without using processes or methods which could harm the environment. The main requirements of the directive are given effect in Great Britain in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and related regulations. The Environment Agency (England and Wales) and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency are responsible for the enforcement of the regulatory systems. Local authorities are responsible for the enforcement of some air pollution controls.

BSE

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action the Intervention Board executive agency is taking to ensure that the products of rendered cattle aged over 30 months and currently stored in (a) Exeter, *(b)*Belfast, (c) Liverpool and (d) Gloucestershire are not contaminated with BSE; and if he will make a statement. [36339]

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

The produce of animals rendered under the over-30-month scheme is being stored pending destruction. The animals are processed in approved plants which meet Community standards for rendering ruminant waste. Those standards are implemented in GB in the Animals By-Product Order 1992 (as amended) and the Specified Bovine Material (No 2) Order 1996.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36015]

Sir John Wheeler: In the departments of economic development, education, finance and personnel and the Northern Ireland Office a total of £81,959 was spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. To provide this information for the departments of the environment, health and social services and agriculture would incur disproportionate cost.

Mr. Colin Duffy

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 3 July, Official Report, columns 477-78, what payments have been made by the RUC to Mr. Colin Duffy; and on what dates. [36264]

Sir John Wheeler: The RUC has made no payments to Mr. Colin Duffy.

PRIME MINISTER

National Debt

10. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on trends in the level of national debt since 1990. [35821]

The Prime Minister: There are a number of different measures of public debt. On the measure used for the European Union excessive deficits procedure, the general Government gross debt—GGGD/GDP—ratio remains lower than any other EU member state apart from Luxembourg and France.

Since 1991, the GGGD/GDP ratio has averaged 44 per cent. Under the last Labour Government the GGGD/GDP ratio averaged 62 per cent.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessments he has made of the (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages to the United Kingdom of the European Court of Justice. [37734]

The Prime Minister: The advantages and disadvantages to the United Kingdom of the European Court of Justice were set out in the White Paper, "A Partnership of Nations".

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 16 July. [36062]

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 16 July. [36063]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Berlin Bombing 1986

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) of 24 June, Official Report, column 14, what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with (a) the German, (b) the Lebanese and (c) the United States authorities about the activities of Yassar al-Shuraidi alias Yousef-Salam; and if he will make a statement. [36926]

The Prime Minister: We have had occasional contact with the German and United States' authorities about the activities of Yassar al-Shuraidi alias Yousef Salam, but not with the Lebanese authorities, with whom there is no reason to do so.

Bilateral discussions are conducted on the basis of confidence and trust between interlocutors. The substance of such discussions cannot be made public.

ENVIRONMENT

Sewage Treatment, Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the deadline for an application from Southern Water for the transfer of flows from Woodvale, Cowes, Ryde and Norton to Sandown; and what alterations to the treatment of sewage for these outfalls would be required to comply with the EC urban wastewater treatment directive if they are not so transferred. [36820]

Mr. Clappison: The urban waste water treatment directive requires appropriate treatment to be provided by the end of 2000. If the discharges form Woodvale, Cowes, Ryde and Norton are transferred out of the Solent then an application will have to be submitted in order to meet this deadline. If the discharges remain in the Solent secondary treatment will be required for each of them and they will have to comply with the same timescale.

Sandown Bay

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies the Environment Agency is undertaking of the sub-surface current in Sandown bay. [36845]

Mr. Clappison: All studies relevant to the assessment of continual high natural dispersion area status at Sandown bay are being undertaken by Southern Water Services. These are comprehensive in accordance with national guidelines and include modelling of water movement. The Environment Agency will assess these studies and will not certify that HNDA status can continue unless it is satisfied that the results justify this response.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the difference in the designation of the waters of the Solent and Sandown bay so far as future treatment requirements are concerned. [36821]

Mr. Clappison: Sandown bay is designated as a high natural dispersion area. The directive allows for a minimum of primary treatment for discharges into high natural dispersion areas, subject to comprehensive studies, currently being conducted, demonstrating that primary treated discharges will not adversely affect the environment. If this is not demonstrated by the studies, secondary treatment will be required. The Solent is not designated as a high natural dispersion area. Sewage discharges into the Solent serving a population equivalent of greater than 2,000 would be subject to secondary treatment.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the four-yearly review of the designation of Sandown bay as a high natural dispersion area to be completed. [36819]

Mr. Clappison: In accordance with the deadline stipulated in the Urban Waste Water Treatment (England and Wales) Regulations 1994, the first four yearly review of the designation of Sandown bay as a high natural dispersion area is proposed to be completed by the end of 1997.

Eye Tests

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations the Health and Safety Executive has received in each of the last five years from employees concerned that their employer has not ensured that they have their eyes tested in accordance with regulations; how many of these inquiries have led to prosecutions; and if he will make a statement. [37079]

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on representations from employees concerning eye tests is not readily available in the form requested. No prosecutions have been brought by the Health and Safety Executive concerning the provision of eye tests.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total annual expenditure of his Department on the Isle of Wight, including the cost of administration. [36914]

Sir Paul Beresford: The annual expenditure of my Department on the Isle of Wight during the year 1995–96 was over £69 million.

The indicative or planned expenditure for 1996–97 is over £71 million.

These figures include:

| | 1995–96 £ | 1996–97 £ |
|---|---|---|
| Housing investment programme allocation | 1,797,000 | 1,616,000 |
| Revenue support grant | 40,369,000 | 39,880,000 |
| Non-domestic rates | 26,855,000 | 30,019,000 |
| Regional innovation grant (approximately) | 80,000 | 80,000 |
| SRB challenge fund | Nil | 169,000 |

River Thames Working Party

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the River Thames working party indicating who appointed them; and what salary and expenses they are paid. [37197]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Thames advisory group provides advice to the Secretary of State for the Environment on a range of issues relating to the River Thames. It is chaired by the Secretary of State and its members are: the Minister for Transport in London, Alan Baxter, Michael Cassidy, Sir Philip Dowson, Paul Finch, Councillor Nicky Gavron, Christopher Howes, Simon Jenkins, Stuart Lipton, Richard MacCormac, Christopher Moran, Sir Richard Rogers, Eric Sorensen, Stewart Steven and Kim Wilkie. Members are appointed by invitation of the Secretary of State and receive no salary or expenses.

The River Thames working group considers transport issues related to the Thames. It is chaired by the Minister for Transport in London and its members are: David Bayliss, Robin Clement, David Jeffery, Fred Manson, Eric Sorensen and Irving Yass. Members are appointed by invitation of the Minister and receive no salary or expenses.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 694 about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37540]

Sir Paul Beresford: The examination of about 36,542[1] files dating back to 1987–88.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official report, column 710, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37526]

Sir Paul Beresford: The examination of about 30,774[1] files dating back to 1988–89.

Limestone Pavements

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his letter G/PSO/8040/96 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what assessment he has made of the success of the Limestone pavement action group's attempts to raise public awareness of the problem of vandalism against limestone pavements and the campaign to highlight the alternative rockery materials available; and if he will make a statement. [36646]

Mr. Clappison: None. The Government are content that the provisions under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to protect limestone pavements are adequate. However, the limestone pavement action group's efforts to draw the public's attention to the need to conserve this important habitat are welcome.

Residential Apartments

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the companies who lease residential apartments at Birmingham Heartlands, Black Country, London Docklands, Merseyside development corporation, Trafford Park and Tyne and Wear; and if he will make a statement. [37544]

Sir Paul Beresford: Lists of the companies which lease residential apartments in these areas are not held by the respective urban development corporations.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the Ordnance Survey strategic plan for 1996–2001. [37408]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have approved the Ordnance Survey strategic plan for 1996–2001 and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance targets he has set the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre executive agency for 1996–97.

Sir Paul Beresford: The agency's principal target for 1996–97 is to achieve a net operating surplus, excluding rent, of £493,000, after trading costs, and non-cash and notional costs, or of £1.03 million gross operating surplus.

The agency's other main targets are:

a) to achieve total revenue of £6.297 million;

b) to increase the proportion of events with more than 200 delegates to 26 per cent.;

c) to increase the proportion of target revenue achieved six months in advance to 50 per cent.;

d) to achieve at least four out of the following five quality of service targets:

an overall score for quality of service in client questionnaires of at least 77 per cent.;

99 per cent. of clients completing the client questionnaire to report that they would use the centre again;

the number of complaints received to be less than five per 100 events; to achieve an average response time in dealing with complaints of less than 10 working days; and to achieve at least one major industry award.

These targets reflect the agency's successful bid in the recent market test of the management of the conference centre, whose outcome was announced on Thursday 13 February 1996, Official Report, column 483.

Duchy Agricultural College

Sir Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue the written confirmation relating to the Duchy agricultural college, Stock Climsland application, SWP/2005/27/135, for European regional development funding; and if he will make a statement. [37250]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 15 July 1996]: I expect the Government office for the south west to be in a position to issue a decision very shortly.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Administrative Grade Personnel

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the number of administrative grade personnel in each Government Department employed (a) before and (b) after planned completion of the de-layering scheme. [36699]

Mr. Freeman: The number of staff in unified grades 1 to 7 fell from 17,500 on 1 April 1994 to 14,900 on 1 April 1996. Departmental senior management reviews are still being implemented.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress of the sale of HMSO. [37872]

Mr. Freeman: Following the first phase of analysis of the bids for HMSO, I have invited three of the shortlisted bidders to continue in the competition. These are, an independent consortium backed by Mercury Asset Management, 3i and Capita;

National Publishing Group, a consortium led by Electra Fleming; and Westminster Information Systems led by NatWest Ventures.

It is the Government's intention, subject to meeting the safeguards required by Parliament, to identify one of these three as preferred bidder by early August and to complete the sale as planned during the summer when an order will be introduced under section 6 of the Government Trading Funds Act 1973, as amended, to wind up the HMSO trading fund.

Security Classifications

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are his Department's definitions of the security classifications "secret", "confidential", "restricted" and "unclassified". [37614]

Mr. Freeman: Following the review of protective security, the classification system for identifying sensitive official information or material was replaced on 4 April 1994 by the protective marking system, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 23 March 1994, Official Report, columns 259–60. The protective marking system contains four protective markings, the definitions of which are as follows:

Top secret

The compromise of this information or material would be likely: to threaten directly the internal stability of the UK or friendly countries; to lead directly to widespread loss of life; to cause exceptionally grave damage to the effectiveness or security of UK or allied forces or to the continuing effectiveness of extremely valuable security or intelligence operations; to cause exceptionally grave damage to relations with friendly Governments; to cause severe long-term damage to the UK economy.

Secret

The compromise of this information or material would be likely: to raise international tension; to damage seriously relations with friendly Governments; to threaten life directly, or seriously prejudice public order, or individual security or liberty; to cause serious damage to the operational effectiveness or security of UK or allied forces or the continuing effectiveness of highly valuable security or intelligence operations; to cause substantial material damage to national finances or economic and commercial interests.

Confidential

The compromise of this information or material would be likely: materially to damage diplomatic relations (i.e. cause formal protest or other sanction); to prejudice individual security or liberty; to cause damage to the operational effectiveness or security of UK or allied forces or the effectiveness of valuable security or intelligence operations; to work substantially against national finances or economic and commercial interests; substantially to undermine the financial viability of major organisations; to impede the investigation or facilitate the commission of serious crime; to impede seriously the development or operation of major government policies; to shut down or otherwise substantially disrupt significant national operations.

Restricted

The compromise of this information or material would be likely: to affect diplomatic relations adversely; to cause substantial distress to individuals; to make it more difficult to maintain the operational effectiveness or security of UK or allied forces; to cause financial loss or loss of earning potential to or facilitate improper gain or advantage for individuals or companies; to prejudice the investigation or facilitate the commission of crime; to breach proper undertakings to maintain the confidence of information provided by third parties; to impede the effective development or operation of government policies; to breach statutory restrictions on disclosure of information; to disadvantage Government in commercial or policy negotiations with others; to undermine the proper management of the public sector and its operations.

The term "unclassified" was not formally a classification but could be used to indicate positively that information or material did not carry a classification. Under the current arrangements, the corresponding term is "No Protective Marking".

TRANSPORT

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what upgrades are planned on the west coast main line. [36825]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack is currently assessing the likely costs and feasibilities for a wide variety of options for upgrading the west coast main line. These include increasing the line speed over all or part of the route and the introduction of new rolling stock, possibly utilising tilt technology. Advanced signalling systems are also being considered.

Once this assessment work has been completed a decision will be made on the specification for any upgrade project.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the maximum speed for trains on the west coast main line by the year 2000. [36826]

Mr. Watts: Any work undertaken to upgrade the west coast main line will not have been completed by the year 2000. The maximum line speed will therefore be 110mph, as it is now.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what year, on current projections, a rail journey will take (a) two hours between London and Manchester, (b) four hours between London and Glasgow and (c) one hour and forty-five minutes between London and Crewe. [36828]

Mr. Watts: No such projections have been made by my right hon. Friend.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions he has given to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising to issue tender documents in respect of the upgrading of the west coast main line. [36824]

Mr. Watts: The franchising director has invited and received, on 12 July, applications to pre-qualify for the InterCity west coast franchise. He will issue invitations to tender, including any relevant proposals for taking forward the upgrade of the west coast main line, in due course.

Motorways (Interval Chevrons)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, in respect of the study commissioned by his Department into the use of interval chevrons on motorways and receipt in 1995 of project report 118 of the Transport Research Laboratory, when Ministers were informed of the results and recommendations of its authors, which recommendations he accepts, what further studies have been carried out, with what results, what steps have been taken to publicise the findings and what action he has taken to authorise their (i) adoption and (ii) additional extensive trials. [37076]

Mr. Norris: TRL report PR118 described the results of trials at two particular sites, and indicated that in certain conditions chevrons could bring benefits. This was further reported in the October 1995 edition of "Traffic Engineering and Control". Opportunity for further trials will depend on the suitability of site conditions. Chevrons would normally have to be installed in tandem with other maintenance operations to avoid unnecessary disruption to traffic. The Highways Agency is in the process of identifying possible monitoring sites.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what research has been carried out by the Transport

Research Laboratory on the problem of cold-start emissions from catalytic converters; [37011]

(2) what assessment he has made of the results of research undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory on the performance of catalytic converters in service in reducing harmful vehicle emissions. [37012]

Mr. Norris: The research carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory has confirmed that three-way catalytic converters reduce harmful emissions by around 80 per cent. However, this research has also shown that the emissions occurring during the first three minutes after the car is started from cold, approach those of cars which are not equipped with catalysts.

Tighter standards applicable from 1 January 1997 will significantly improve catalyst warm-up times to reduce cold start emissions. Even tighter standards, now being proposed by the European Commission for 2000, coupled with changes to the certification test cycle, will encourage further improvements.

Transport and Works Act

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the target time scale for dealing with applications under the Transport and Works Act 1992 following receipt of the inspector's report; and what current delays there are in processing such applications. [37003]

Mr. Norris: In cases where a public inquiry is held, the target time scale is to issue the decision letter not later than six months from the receipt of the inspector's report. This time scale may be exceeded because of pressure of other work, though the staffing of the processing unit is kept under review with the target in mind, or because of the difficulty or complexity of a particular case.

Greater Manchester Light Rapid Transport System

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what factors underlie the delay in respect of his decision on the Greater Manchester (Light Rapid Transport System) (Eccles Extension) Order. [37001]

Mr. Norris: I regret that, because of pressure of other work, the target time scale of six months from receipt of the inspector's report to the issue of the Secretary of State's decision letter has not been achieved in this case. We are dealing with the order application as quickly as practicable and hope to issue a decision letter within the next four or six weeks.

Highways Agency

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many contractors and consultants to the Highways Agency have been kept waiting for over two months for their accounts to be settled; what interest penalties the agency is liable to pay; and what payments have been made to date. [36898]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 16 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about payments to contractors and consultants.

Interests payments of £28,000 were made to eleven contractors and consultants in relation to invoices for new construction work received during 1995–96 where the contractual payment date was exceeded. All interest payments claimed have been paid in full. Information relating specifically to delays of over two months would only be available at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many redundancies have taken place in the Highways Agency in the last two years; how many more he estimates will take place in the next 12 months; and what factors underlay the redundancies. [36895]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 16 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking how many redundancies have taken place in the Highways Agency in the last two years; how many more he estimates will take place in the next 12 months; and what factors underlay the redundancies.

594 redundancies have taken place in the Highways Agency in the last two financial years. The bulk of these have come about as a consequence of the restructuring of the Highways Agency which was announced in March 1995, and a 20% efficiency gains exercise which was carried out concurrently. We anticipate further redundancies in this financial year mainly as a result of a further review, which commenced in November 1995, into the organisation and staffing needs of the Highways Agency in the light of reduced funding. The number will be determined when work on the implementation of the review's conclusions is completed.

Cycling Policy

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations he consulted prior to his speech of 10 July concerning his policy for cycling; and what role he envisages for the National Cycling Forum additional to that already performed by the former departmental steering group in its development of national cycling strategy. [37343]

Mr. Norris: The steering group which developed the national cycling strategy comprised representative of the following:

the Association of County Councils, the Association of District Councils, the Association of London Government, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Confederation of British Industry, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Cyclists' Public Affairs Group, the Cyclists' Touring Club, the Department of the Environment, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, the Department of Health, the Department of Transport, the London Cycling Campaign, the Scottish Office, Transport 2000, and the Welsh Office.

The steering group sought a wide input of views and contributions to the strategy. Annex 1 of the national cycling strategy lists 65 individuals and organisations who assisted in some way, in addition to the 78 people involved directly in formal steering groups and working groups. Copies of the strategy have been placed in the Library, and I am sending one to my hon. Friend.

A statement explaining the purpose, tasks, and outputs of the National Cycling Forum is contained in section 2.5.4 of the strategy.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 546, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37532]

Mr. Norris: The examination of approximately 20,000 files dating back to 1989–90.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 727, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37533]

Mr. Norris: The examination of approximately 28,000 files dating back to 1987–88.

Bus Lane Enforcement

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the report on the trials of camera-based bus lane enforcement in London. [37441]

Mr. Norris: The traffic director for London, who is managing this project, is preparing a report to be published in September this year. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Scottish Air Traffic Control Centre

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the preferred bidder procedure as set out in the Treasury's guidelines will be adopted for the new Scottish air traffic control centre; when he expects to announce the name of the preferred bidder; and if he will make a statement. [37342]

Mr. Norris: The invitation to participate issued by the Civil Aviation Authority for the Scottish air traffic control centre involves a procedure which is consistent with the Treasury's private finance initiative guidelines. National Air Traffic Services is concerned to ensure that the procedure will avoid unnecessary bidding costs and it will seek to declare a preferred bidder as soon as it is appropriate and prudent to do so. The validity of current offers for this requirement expire on 9 February 1997.

Bristol–Plymouth–Penzance Rail Link

Sir Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a progress report on his Department's application to the European Commission for financial assistance with the funding of a feasibility study for the Bristol–Plymouth–Penzance rail link under the provisions of the trans-European network programme; and if he will make a statement. [37254]

Mr. Watts: The TENS finance committee, which is composed of representatives of member states and determines the allocation of funds to projects, is to meet on 25 July. The committee will consider on the basis of member states' bids, which for the United Kingdom includes the feasibility study for the Bristol–Penzance–Plymouth rail link, how the funds available in 1996 should be allocated. We will be pressing the merits of the UK bid at the meeting. I refer my hon. Friend also to the reply given to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) on 8 July, Official Report, column 78–79.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Referendums

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was (a) the date and (b) the outcome of the latest referendum held in each EU member state on matters relating to the EU. [35828]

Mr. David Davis: The dates and outcome of the latest referenda held in European Union member states on matters relating to the EU are as follows.

| | Date | Subject | Outcome | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | For Percentage | Against Percentage |
| Austria | June 1994 | EU Accession | 66.6 | 33.4 |
| Belgium | Never | — | — | — |
| Denmark | May 1993 | Treaty on European Union | 56.7 | 43.3 |
| Germany | Never | — | — | — |
| Greece | Never | — | — | — |
| Spain | Never | — | — | — |
| France | September 1992 | Treaty on European Union | 51.01 | 48.99 |
| Ireland | June 1992 | Treaty on European Union | 69.05 | 30.95 |
| Italy | June 1989 | European Parliament power to amend the Treaties | 88 | 12 |
| Luxembourg | Never | — | — | — |
| Netherlands | Never | — | — | — |
| Portugal | Never | — | — | — |
| Finland | October 1994 | EU Accession | 56.9 | 43.1 |
| Sweden | November 1994 | EU Accession | 52 | 48 |

Prince Michael of Kent

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits involving costs to public funds were made abroad in 1995–96 by Prince Michael of Kent; on what dates; at what cost; and which visits were made by use of the Royal squadron. [35965]

Mr. Rifkind: Prince Michael did not undertake any official visits during this period.

Bosnia

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the Amnesty International report on Bosnia Herzegovina, "Bury my Brother's Bones", a copy of which has been sent to him. [37435]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We believe that all those who have committed war crimes should be brought to justice, that the missing should be traced, mass graves exhumed and the bodily remains identified and returned to the next of kin for decent burial. The Government fully support the work of the experts group on exhumations and missing persons and the international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

Last year we donated £4 million to the International Committee of the Red Cross to help fund its tracing work in former Yugoslavia. We recently donated vehicles to help the international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia's exhumations currently taking place around Srebrenica.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 107, when he expects to come to a conclusion on the International Court of Justice's opinion on nuclear weapons; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the opinion and the Government's response to it. [37434]

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 8 July in respect of the use of nuclear weapons. [37353]

Mr. David Davis: The court's advisory opinion is long and complex and we are studying it. But we do not believe that it gives rise to any new factors affecting the fundamentals of United Kingdom and NATO defence policy, including the continuing importance of nuclear deterrence in maintaining peace and stability in Europe.

A copy of the court's opinion has been placed in the Library of the House.

Law of the Sea Convention

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the status of Rockall within the UN law of the sea convention 1982; and what plans Her Majesty's Government have to sign the convention. [36950]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Rockall is an island within the meaning of article 121(1) of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea and has a territorial sea of 12 miles. Measuring British fishing limits from Rockall is believed to be inconsistent with the provision in article 121(3) of UNCLOS that rocks which cannot sustain human habitation or economic life of their own shall have no exclusive economic zone.

The Government announced on 20 July 1994 that the United Kingdom would accede to the convention in due course. Timing of the UK's accession remains under review. Parliament will be informed as soon as the Government have taken a decision.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Slave Trade

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage co-operation between the police and social services to help the victims of the trafficking in human beings. [36564]

Mr. Maclean: None. This is an operational matter for chief officers of police and social services.

Toughened Safety Glassware

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to issue guidance to magistrates that the use of toughened safety glassware be made a condition of pub and club licences. [36700]

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to do so. Licensing authorities already have wide powers under both the liquor and entertainment licensing laws to require the use of toughened glass or synthetic drinking vessels on particular occasions or in particular premises if they consider the circumstances justify them doing so.

Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) cautions and (b) prosecutions have been made under regulation 97 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986. [36849]

Mr. Maclean: Written warnings and prosecutions for offences under regulation 97 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 cannot be separately identified from other offences of causing noise by motor vehicles in the statistics collected centrally.

In England and Wales during 1994, the latest year for which statistics are available, there were 560 written warnings issued for noise offences of all types connected with motor vehicles, and 7,823 court proceedings taken. In addition, 735 fixed penalty notices were issued for noise offences during 1994.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of British amusement arcade operators are not members of the British Amusement Catering Trades Association; and what restrictions he proposes to apply to access in these venues. [37065]

Mr. Kirkhope: The British Amusements Catering Trades Association estimates that 20 per cent. of British amusement arcade operators are not members of the association.

The same legal restrictions apply to all amusement arcades irrespective of BACTA membership. The Deregulation (Gaming Machines and Betting Office Facilities) Order 1996, which came into force on 20 June, imposed an age limit of 18 on access to arcades or designated areas within them which have all-cash amusement-with-prizes machines paying up to £10.

We have no plans to restrict access to arcades which have no all-cash machines.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans his Department has to introduce a statutory age restriction with regard to the playing of amusement-with-prizes machines; and how this will be enforced; [37063]

(2) what plans he has in respect of persons of any age having unlimited access to machines with cash prizes of less than £10. [37064]

Mr. Kirkhope: The Deregulation (Gaming Machines and Betting Office Facilities) Order 1996 came into force on 20 June. Under this, local authorities can permit amusement-with-prizes machines making all-cash payments up to £10 in arcades or designated parts of arcades which exclude people under age 18. Local authorities also enforce the provisions.

Otherwise, these machines are allowed only in licensed betting offices and casinos, which have a statutory prohibition on access by people under 18, and in licensed bingo clubs and liquor licensed premises which are essentially adult environments. The police enforce the relevant age restrictions.

We have no plans for a statutory age limit for premises with traditional AWP machines paying up to £4 in cash and £8 in tokens, but local authorities can ban AWP machines from premises such as cafes and leisure centres.

Drugs (Prisons)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when those recommendations outlined in the recently published Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs report, "Drug Misusers and the Prison System-An Integrated Approach" which are to be implemented will come into effect; [37051]

(2) if he will list the reasons why those recommendations outlined in the recently published Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs report, "Drug Misusers and the Prison System-An Integrated Approach" which are not to be implemented, have been rejected; [37052]

(3) which of the recommendations outlined in the recently published Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs report, "Drug Misusers and the Prison System-An Integrated Approach" are to be implemented. [37050]

Miss Widdecombe: This report, which we welcome, was published on 13 June. Its 51 recommendations are still being studied. We hope to be able to respond to them by the autumn.

Gambling

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the draft deregulation orders concerning gambling will be laid before the House. [37060]

Mr. Kirkhope: I hope shortly to lay a draft deregulation order extending betting permits and licences from one to three years.

We are considering the responses to the consultation paper on casinos and bingo clubs which we issued on 27 February. Subject to the outcome, we aim to bring forward a draft deregulation order to implement some of the proposals when the House returns.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serious assaults on staff have occurred in Her Majesty's prison Buckley Hall since 1 June; and what is the total number of assaults on staff that have occurred at the prison since 14 December 1994. [37000]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 16 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on the level of assaults at Buckley Hall prison.

Since the 1 June 1996 there have been two serious assaults on staff. There have been a total of 30 assaults on staff since 14 December 1994.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a copy of the board of visitors' annual report on Her Majesty's prison Buckley Hall for the year ending 31 December 1995 will be placed in the Library. [36780]

Miss Widdecombe: Boards of visitors' annual reports to the Home Secretary are not public documents. However, boards are permitted, if they wish, to publish their annual reports one month after presenting the report to Ministers. The board of visitors at Her Majesty's prison Buckley Hall decided at its June monthly meeting to publish its 1995 report and a copy will therefore be placed in the Library.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which trade union is recognised by Group 4 at Her Majesty's prison Buckley Hall; and what issues the company is prepared to consult and negotiate with the trade union. [37113]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 16 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking which trade union is recognised by Group 4 at Buckley Hall prison and what issues the company is prepared to consult and negotiate with the trade union.

Group 4 has a single union agreement with Apex, a division of the GMB. To quote from the agreement between the union and the company, the general introduction, section D article 1 reads "The company and the union share a common commitment to work jointly together for the prosperity of both the company and its employees, and agree jointly to work towards the adoption of policies on all issues affecting the employment of works which are equitable, safe and fair". Negotiable issues generally encompass pay and conditions of service.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the current number and (b) the percentage of the current prison population at HMP Buckley Hall who have been imprisoned for (i) rape, (ii) murder, (iii) armed robbery, (iv) manslaughter and (v) arson. [37057]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 16 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prisoners serving sentences for rape, murder, armed robbery, manslaughter and arson at Buckley Hall Prison.

On 10 July 1996 there were 340 prisoners at Buckley Hall, of these three have been convicted of rape, none were serving sentences for murder, 14 were serving sentences for robbery with possession of a firearm, five were sentenced on a charge of manslaughter and 11 for arson.

Convictions for rape accounted for 0.8 per cent. Those for robbery with possession of a firearm were 4.1 per cent, sentences of manslaughter were 1.5 per cent and arson was 3.2 per cent.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the full pay scales for staff employed at Her Majesty's prison Buckley Hall, showing the number of employees currently employed at each grade. [37112]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 16 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for pay scales currently used at Buckley Hall prison.

Since Buckley Hall is a privately managed prison this information is commercially confidential.

Banned Drugs

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 April, Official Report, column 107, if he has received the result of the consideration by the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on whether gamma hydroxy butyrate should be added to the list of banned drugs. [37124]

Mr. Sackville: This matter is due to be considered by the advisory council at its next meeting, in November.

Criminal Records (Computerisation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal records have been transferred from the manual collection on to computer; what is the estimated cost of the transfer; and if he will make a statement. [37152]

Mr. Maclean: About 286,000 records have been entered on to the Phoenix database on the police national computer. Other records which have been keyed await final processing or quality assurance.

The cost of the main keying contract is £8.6 million, excluding value added tax, which is reclaimable. This is in addition to the cost of work undertaken by the national identification service staff and the police service.

Dr. Bayo Omoyiole

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on Dr. Bayo Omoyiole who is awaiting his appeal for asylum; and if he will make a statement; [37157]

(2) what is the date of the appeal of Dr. Bayo Omoyiole against the decision of the Home Secretary to refuse his claim for asylum; and if he will make a statement.[37156]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have written to the hon. Member.

Victims of Terrorism

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance his Department provides to those who have been the victims of terrorist incidents; and if he will make a statement. [37056]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 15 July 1996]: The criminal injuries compensation scheme enables compensation to be paid to those injured or killed by terrorist incidents in England, Wales and Scotland. The scheme is funded by my Department with a contribution from the Scottish Office. In such incidents, the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority takes steps to ensure through those directly involved with the victims—usually the police, but often Victim Support, which my Department also funds—that potential applicants for compensation are made aware of the scheme and how to apply.

Small Firms (Compliance Costs)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with and with how many (a) small firms and (b) small firms organisations about the compliance costs of the Asylum and Immigration Bill; if a small business litmus test was completed on the bill; and what conclusions his Department came to regarding the compliance costs to small firms of the Bill. [36658]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 15 July 1996]: We invited views on the estimates set out in the compliance cost assessment published last November from organisations representing small and large firms. Of the nine organisations representing small firms to which CCA was sent none raised concerns about the likely compliance costs or about the estimates provided in the CCA.

A preliminary assessment of the effect of the provision on smaller firms was provided in the CCA. Discussions with a number of small firms are currently nearing completion. Provisional conclusions suggest that the compliance costs for the great majority of small firms will be minimal.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts (Lancashire)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the future of magistrates courts in Lancashire. [37406]

Mr. Streeter: The Lancashire magistrates courts committee will continue to be responsible for the efficient and effective administration of the magistrates courts in Lancashire for the foreseeable future.

Legal Aid

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what he estimates to be the cost in the most recent year for which figures are available of legal aid in juvenile cases which would not attract custodial sentences and (a) where the defendant pleads guilty or (b) where there is no dispute over the facts in the case. [37697]

Mr. Streeter: Legal aid is rarely granted in cases where there is no risk of a custodial sentence; any costs to the legal aid fund are, therefore, likely to be small. In 1995–96, total payments from the legal aid fund in respect of juvenile cases in the youth courts where guilty pleas were entered amounted to £4.3 million gross. It is not possible to give equivalent figures for the Crown Court since the information is not readily available. Nor is it possible to estimate the cost to legal aid of those cases where there was no dispute over the facts of the case, as the information is not recorded centrally.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and which national non-governmental organisations running development programmes overseas qualify for annual block grants; how much each NGO received for each financial year from 1992–93 to 1996–97; what are the criteria for qualifying for block grants; and if he will make a statement. [37347]

Mr. Hanley: Five United Kingdom non-governmental organisations currently receive annual block grants from the joint funding scheme of the Overseas Development Administration for their development work overseas. The five are CAFOD, Christian Aid, Oxfam, Save the Children Fund and the Worldwide Fund for Nature. Under the block grant arrangements, ODA provides up to 50 per cent. of the cost of individual development projects. The grants provided to each of these organisations in the financial years from 1992–93 to 1996–97 are set out in the table.

|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| CAFOD | 1,300 | 1,500 | 1,810 | 1,864 | 1,920 |
| Christian Aid | 2,210 | 2,410 | 2,830 | 2,915 | 3,003 |
| Oxfam | 4,100 | 4,300 | 5,000 | 5,150 | 5,304 |
| SCF | 3,510 | 3,710 | 4,320 | 4,450 | 4,583 |
| WWF | 1,510 | 1,710 | 2,040 | 2,100 | 2,164 |

The ODA's fundamental expenditure review, completed in 1995, recommended that the block grant arrangements should be extended to NGOs which had, in each of the preceding three financial years, received £750,000 or more through the joint funding scheme for its development projects. The award of any new block grant would be subject to the NGO in question satisfying an audit by ODA of its financial and technical management procedures.

Human Reproduction (Research Funding)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the allocation of his Department's funding for (a) the International Planned Parenthood Federation, (b) the UN Population Fund and (c) the World Health Organisation special programmes of research, development and research training in human reproduction for the financial year 1996–97. [37349]

Mr. Hanley: The central allocations for the 1996–97 financial year are:

(a) International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF)—£6.0 million;

(b) United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA)—£7.5 million and

(c) World Health Organisation special programme of research, development and research training in human reproduction (WHO/HRP)—£1.5 million. Additional funding may be allocated during the year for multilateral, bilateral or other specific projects.

Health and Family Planning

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which reproductive health and family planning projects under the aegis of (a) Population Concern, (b) Marie Stopes International and (c) International Family Health have been funded for each financial year since 1993–94; in which countries these projects are based; and what is their funding and duration. [37348]

Mr. Hanley: The table lists ODA supported non-governmental organisation—Population Concern, Marie Stopes International and International Family Health—projects with a reproductive health component.

| Title of project | Financial years where expenditure has taken place to date | Country | Planned project duration in years (where known) |
|---|---|---|---|

| Organisational strengthening of women's health programmes | 1995–96 | Nicaragua | 2 |
| Reproductive health support | 1993–94 to 1995–96 | Nigeria | |

Tied Aid

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have received the most tied aid as a proportion of bilateral official development assistance over the last three years. [56653]

Mr. Hanley: Statistics on the tying status of aid relate to commitments and not expenditure. The three countries with the highest commitments of financial tied aid in 1993 and 1994 are as follows:

| Country | Amount of tied financial aid commitment £ million |
|---|---|
| 1993 | |
| India | 83 |
| Turkey | 23 |
| Uganda | 16 |
| 1994 | |
| Uganda | 21 |
| Tanzania | 18.5 |
| India | 16.5 |

Data for 1992 and earlier are not available on a country basis, nor is information on technical co-operation expenditure.

TREASURY

Financial Incentives (Environmental Practice)

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to introduce financial incentives for sustainable environmental practice by businesses; and if he will make a statement. [34746]

Mr. Jack: Economic instruments, including tax measures, are pursued where they are justified and administratively feasible. Proposals for financial incentives for sustainable environmental practice by businesses are examined on a case-by-case basis. The introduction of the landfill tax starting in October is a clear demonstration of that.

"Europe's Finances"

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that, in future editions of "Europe's Finances", a statement of Europe's unfunded pension liabilities, is included together with a statement as to the possible future impact of such liabilities on the United Kingdom economy. [36355]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No, since the annual White Paper deals solely with European Community finances and the Community budget has no liability for pension costs other than in respect of the employees of the Community institutions.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment he has made of the success of the private finance initiative. [36836]

Mr. Jack: I announced on 3 April that £4.8 billion of private finance deals had been agreed in the financial year 1995–96, with £300 million of deals at preferred bidder stage and £330 million due to be agreed. The current total of agreed private finance deals has now risen to £5.5 billion, including projects such as the development of the Department of Social Security's Newcastle estate at Longbenton, two prison projects at Bridgend and Fazakerley and benefits payments automation through the Post Office. These figures indicate that the Government are well on the way to reaching their target of agreeing £14 billion of deals by the end of 1998–99.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much private capital was invested through the PFI in public projects in each financial year up to 1995–96; and what are his current forecasts for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [36590]

Mr. Jack: Estimated levels of private sector capital spending in public projects via the private finance initiative were, in 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96, £0.3 billion, £0.3 billion and £0.6 billion respectively. The projections for 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 are £1.9 billion, £2.6 billion and £2.8 billion respectively. Further details about the private finance initiative and capital spending can be found in tables 6.4 and 6.5 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1996–97, published on 28 November 1995.

Exchange and Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the changes in (a) real exchange rates relative to those of other EU countries and (b) real interest rates in each quarter since the first quarter of 1993. [37489]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Data on real effective exchange rates for EU countries can be found in Main Economic Indicators, which is published monthly by the OECD. In the June 1996 edition, the real exchange rate data are shown in table 30. Data on short-term nominal interest rates and inflation in the UK can be found in Economic Trends.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the trends in the balance of trade in goods in (a) the last three months and (b) the equivalent period in 1995. [37485]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The deficit on trade in goods was erratically low early last year. Despite fluctuations, there has been no obvious trend in the deficit over the past five years. In 1994 and 1995 the deficit on trade in goods was more than offset by surpluses on trade in services and overseas investment income.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the United Kingdom balance of trade in goods for each year since 1992; and what factors underline this trend. [37490]

Mrs. Knight: In 1993, the trade deficit on goods widened by £0.4 billion compared with 1992. It then narrowed by £2.6 billion in 1994 and widened by £0.8 billion in 1995. In 1995, the trade deficit on goods was £1.5 billion less than it was in 1992. Underpinning this improvement between 1992 and 1995, the volume of exported goods has increased by 24 per cent. while the volume of imported goods was increased by 15 per cent.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37229]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury aims to release all its major publications on the Internet either at the same time as the hard copy publication or as soon as possible thereafter. Simultaneous release is not always possible for some material because of technical or logistical considerations.

Publications which we aim to release at the same time as the hard copy include: the documentation for the Chancellor's Budget; the summer economic forecast; the minutes of the Chancellor's monthly monetary meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England; news releases, such as announcements of interest rate changes; certain consultation papers; and keynote speeches.

Migration

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the total numbers of people (a) immigrating to the United Kingdom and (b) emigrating from the United Kingdom, in the last five years for which figures are available. [37429]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information is shown in the table.

Migration estimates for the United Kingdom (Thousands of migrants)

| Years | Inflow to UK | Outflow from UK |
|---|---|---|
| 1990 | 340.2 | 252.0 |
| 1991 | 337.0 | 263.7 |
| 1992 | 286.6 | 251.5 |
| 1993 | 272.2 | 236.8 |
| 1994 | 321.4 | 213.0 |

The estimates in the table are derived from data on migration intentions obtained from the international passenger survey, from information on migration to and from the Irish Republic obtained from the national health service central register and the Irish labour force survey, and from data on short-term visitors who were granted extension of stay obtained from the Home Office.

Perinatal Mortality

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current perinatal mortality rate broken down by mother's place of birth. [37134]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Perinatal mortality rate by mother's country of birth, England and Wales 1994

| Country of birth | Perinatal rate[1] |
|---|---|
| All | 8.9 |
| United Kingdom | 8.6 |
| Irish Republic | 11.2 |
| Rest of European Union | 8.3 |
| Australia, Canada, New Zealand | 6.4 |
| New Commonwealth including: | 12.6 |
| Bangladesh | 10.8 |
| India | 9.3 |
| Pakistan | 15.0 |
| East Africa | 10.9 |
| Caribbean | 17.4 |
| Other[2] | 9.4 |

[1] Perinatal deaths per 1,000 live and stillbirths.[2] Includes case where no country of birth was stated.

Mr. F. G. Higgins

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will refund the VAT owed, together with interest, to Mr. F. G. Higgins of Lyndhurst, 50 Borough road, Paignton; and what factors have led to the delay. [36955]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 July 1996]: Customs and Excise are not aware of VAT owed to Mr. Higgins. In fact, a long-outstanding debt to Customs and Excise, based on VAT returns completed by Mr. Higgins, is currently being recovered through the courts.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hawk Aircraft

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Hawk aircraft have been exported to Indonesia so far this year. [35426]

Mr. Oppenheim: Eight.

Business Grants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the total value of grants awarded by his Department to businesses in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire, for each of the last five years. [36453]

Mr. Oppenheim: The following is the information:

| Year | Crewe and Nantwich | Cheshire |
|---|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 90,109 | 7,551,997 |
| 1992–93 | 47,320 | 6,059,063 |
| 1993–94 | 90,000 | 4,777,740 |
| 1994–95 | 105,000 | 10,503,421 |
| 1995–96 | 57,676 | 3,305,498 |

Scottish Gas

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South may expect a reply to his letter of 24 April to the Director General of Gas Supply concerning complaints from constituents about the delays and difficulties they are encountering in contacting the telephone inquiry lines for Scottish Gas; and what factors have led to the delay so far in replying. [36569]

Mr. Eggar: The Director General of Gas Supply is independent of my Department. These issues should be addressed to her.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies which participated in trade missions supported by his Department to Indonesia on 19 February, 15 April and 24 June indicating the nature of the products which they were promoting, the names of the company personnel who attended and the names and designation of staff from his and other Government Departments who attended the missions. [36764]

Mr. Nelson: The following is the information:

Participants in mission of 19 February

Missile Exports

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) which Ministers approved the renewal in 1990 of export licences, using the form F680 process, to Ferranti/ISC in respect of precision guided missiles; [36607]

(2) which Ministers approved the issue in 1986 of export licences, using the form F680 process, to Ferranti/ISC in respect of precision guided missiles; [36609]

(3) if Defence ministers were informed when approving an export licence for ISC/Ferranti to supply precision guided missiles to the United Arab Emirates that the missiles were capable of conversion to nuclear use; [36851]

(4) which Ministers approved the renewal in 1988 of export licences, using the form F680 process, to Ferranti/ISC in respect of precision guided missiles; [36608]

(5) if restrictions were placed on the licence to ISC/Ferranti to export precision guided missiles to the United Arab Emirates following consultation between his Department and the Government of the United States of America. [36817]

Mr. Oppenheim: To supply the information requested requires more detailed historical research. I shall write to the hon. Member when investigations are completed.

Foreign Companies (Investment)

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the levels of investment made by British companies in purchasing foreign companies in each of the last four years. [37080]

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on direct investment overseas by United Kingdom companies and public corporations is published by the Office for National Statistics in "The Pink Book, United Kingdom Balance of Payments", which is available in the Library of the House.

Inward Investment

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total amount of inward investment into (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Yorkshire for each of the last three years; if he will list the figures by country of origin; and if he will make a statement. [36885]

Mr. Eggar: Data on the value of inward direct investment into the United Kingdom as a whole, broken down by the country of origin, are regularly published by the Office for National Statistics in "Business Monitor MA4, Overseas Direct Investment" (table 2.4), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. These figures are not collected on a county basis.

Wages Councils

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent assessment he has made of the trend in wages in those industries previously covered by the wages councils. [36891]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 24 April 1996, Official Report, column 180.

Samsung

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what public funds were made available to Samsung for its investment in the north-east; and if he will make a statement. [37224]

Mr. Oppenheim: My Department offered regional selective assistance grant and loans totalling £58 million against a proposed investment of £450 million by the company. The assistance will be paid over the next 10 years as the various elements of the Samsung investment proceed and jobs are created. In addition a number of other agencies are providing support for infrastructure development, job creation and training. Some of this support will not be in the form of grant aid to Samsung but will fall within the current and future work programmes of the agencies concerned.

Insolvency (Reviewers of Complaints)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by location each of the reviewers of complaints appointed by each of the insolvency regulators, indicating who is responsible for (a) appointing, (b) dismissing and (c) retiring them and on what basis; and what remuneration each reviewer receives. [37334]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales—the current reviewer of complaints for the institute is Mr. A. C. Surtees, P.O. Box 51, Farnham, Surrey, GU10 5TA. The reviewer of complaints is appointed by the Council of the institute for a period of not less than three years and his appointment is renewable. The terms of his appointment are a matter for the institute.

Chartered Association of Certified Accountants—the Association appoint a lay observer who is presently Mr. Simon Loveless of Potter Owtram and Peck, 42 West street, Haslemere, Surrey GU27 2AN. The lay observer is responsible for co-ordinating the reviewing of complaints. He is appointed by the council of the association. The terms of his appointment are a matter for the association.

The Law Society—complaints against solicitor insolvency practitioners are dealt with in the first instance by the Solicitors Complaints Bureau, an independent arm of the Law Society. A dissatisfied complainant may refer the matter to the legal services ombudsman who is presently Mr. Michael Barnes, 22 Oxford court, Oxford street, Manchester M2 3QW. The legal services ombudsman is appointed by the Lord Chancellor, normally for a period of three years. The remuneration for the office is a matter between the Lord Chancellor and the appointee.

The Law Society of Scotland—a dissatisfied complainant may ask for the matter to be referred to the Scottish legal services ombudsman who is presently Mr. Garry S. Watson, 2 Greenside lane, Edinburgh, EH1 3AH. The Scottish legal services ombudsman is appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland after consultation with the Lord President of the Supreme Courts of Scotland. The appointment is for a period of three years. The remuneration for the office is a matter between the Secretary of State for Scotland and the appointee.

The three remaining professional bodies are the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ireland and the Insolvency Practitioners Association. These bodies do not have an independent reviewer of complaints although in the case of the Scottish institute, a complaint about the institute itself may fall to be considered by a committee appointed from a panel of lay members of institute committees. This committee may report to the institute's council on its findings.

Each of the professional bodies have recognised the importance of independent input in regulatory matters and all have lay representation on their various regulatory and disciplinary committees.

Auditing Requirements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for exempting small accountancy firms from the audit monitoring requirements introduced by the Companies Act 1989. [37382]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have no such plans. I would, however, refer the hon. Gentleman to the conclusions of the review of the monitoring arrangements of the recognised supervisory bodies for auditors, conducted by Professor Peter Moizer in 1994. The recommendations of the review, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, are being implemented by the bodies.

Limited Liability Partnerships Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the Government of Jersey in connection with the enactment of limited liability partnerships legislation. [37378]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have made no such representations.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to investigate the competition practices of major accountancy firms. [37379]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have no such plans.

Caparo Judgment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce legislation to reverse the Caparo judgment. [37380]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have no such plans, but continue to keep the situation under review.

Electrical Equipment (Plugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if all new electrical equipment designed to be connected to the mains sold in the United Kingdom is required to be fitted with plugs. [37191]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Plugs and Sockets etc. (Safety) Regulations 1994, which came into force on 1 February 1996, introduced a legal requirement that most new and second hand domestic electrical appliances can be sold only if they have been pre-fitted with an approval standard United Kingdom plug.

Industrial Development (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had, and with which bodies, on industrial development within the Greater London area; and if he will make a statement. [37196]

Mr. Eggar: DTI Ministers are frequently in contact with London-based organisations about a wide range of industrial issues.

EU Working Time Directive

Mrs. Currie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received about the European Union working time directive; how many of these came from British companies; and which have expressed concern about the effect of the directive on their profitability. [37432]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has received a wide range of representations about the working time directive. Many of these have been from employers or employer organisations concerned about the potential cost implications of the directive.

Hubble Space Telescope

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 570, to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will make a statement on the progress of the formal discussions about Europe's role in the refurbishment of the Hubble space telescope, planned for 1999. [36645]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Representatives of the European Space Agency and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration met on Thursday 27 June 1996 to discuss the ESA contribution to the Hubble space telescope refurbishment mission due in 1999. It was agreed that ESA will provide the solar array drive mechanism in return for 15 per cent. of observing time being allocated to European groups.

Scott Report

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the appendices to Sir Richard Scott's report to be published. [37885]

Mr. Lang: They are to be published on 18 July as a two-disk CD-ROM set.

Ice Cream (Inquiry)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the evidence submitted by Birds Eye Wall's to a Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry following the undertaking given to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Ms Church) on 17 April, Official Report, column 527. [37966]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Director General of Fair Trading, at the request of my predecessor, the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) carried out an investigation into whether, during an inquiry conducted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1993–94 into the supply of ice cream for immediate consumption in the United Kingdom, Birds Eye Wall's had supplied false or misleading information to the commission. The supply of such false or misleading information is an offence contrary to section 93B of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

Having considered the director general's report, and departmental and other independent legal advice, against the criteria set out in the code for crown prosecutors, I have concluded that my Department should not take any further action in this matter.

Advanced Gas-cooled Reactors

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what implications the shutdown of the reactors at Hinckley Point B and Hunterston have for electricity supply; and what is the estimated impact on the income stream of British Energy. [37603]

Mr. Eggar: The total generating capacity for the electricity markets in Great Britain was 67,620MW at 31 March 1996. Hinkley Point B has a generating capacity of 1,270MW, 1.9 per cent. of the total and Hunterston B has a generating capacity of 1,195MW, 1.8 per cent. of the total. The impact on the income stream of British Energy is a commercial matter for the company.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what factors underlay the timing of the disclosure to the public of news of the shutdown of the AGR reactors at Hinckley Point B and Hunterston; [37601]

(2) what implications the technical faults at Hinckley Point B and Hunterston have for the other five advanced gas-cooled reactors; [37602]

(3) when he was first informed that there was a serious technical fault with the advanced gas-cooled reactors at Hinckley Point B and Hunterston; and if he will make a statement; [37599]

(4) what recent advice he has received from the nuclear installations inspectorate about the advanced gas-cooled reactors at Hinckley Point B and Hunterston; and when he received its report. [37600]

Mr. Eggar: AGR technical issues are covered in the British Energy prospectus published on 26 June.

A continuing programme of steam pipe inspections revealed a crack in a weld at Hinkley Point B which was made public by British Energy on 4 July. Following examination of the cracked weld Nuclear Electric and Scottish Nuclear decided to shut down one reactor at each of Hinkley Point B and Hunterston B power stations, as a precautionary measure, on the evening of Tuesday 9 July. I was informed of the decision to shut down the reactors at about 9 am on Wednesday 10 July. My officials were in close touch with British Energy while the company established with their advisers that their financial position was not significantly affected. A press release was issued at 5.30 pm on 10 July after a high level group at the company had reviewed the evidence from the metallurgical examination and considered the possible financial implications.

DTI has been kept fully informed of these developments by British Energy. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate has confirmed that it is content with he licensees' actions.

FalFab

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from hon. Members on behalf of FalFab LLC since 1994; and on what dates these were received. [35220]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: We have been unable to trace any record of representations from hon. Members on behalf of this company.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what consultations were made by his Department to ensure that the estimated value of FalFab at the time of its application for regional selective assistance was correct; and if he will make a statement; [35248]

(2) what verification was undertaken by his Department to ensure that sufficient capital was available to FalFab LLC to qualify for regional selective assistance from his Department; what assessment he has made of the adequacy of this verification; and if he proposes to recover any of the granted financial assistance. [35247]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: FalFab was a newly-created company set up as a joint venture between two other US-based companies. The Department's offer of grant contained preconditions in order to ensure that capital of at least £1 million had been injected into the company before grant was paid. Appropriate audited confirmation that these preconditions had been met was submitted at the time of FalFab's claim for the first instalment of grant.

Although the company has laid off its workforce, discussions aimed at securing a viable future for the business are taking place and it would be premature for the Department to seek recovery.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what safeguards are in operation to protect his Department's position in relation to regional selective assistance grant and aid given to FalFab LLC if (a) the company ceases to trade and (b) the terms and conditions of the grant are not met; and if he will make a statement. [35246]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: If the company ceases to trade, or the terms and conditions of the offer are not met and there is no prospect of future viability, my Department will seek to recover grant from the company. The Department also has parent company guarantees to repay the grant if FalFab is not in a position to do so.

Companies (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 457–58, if he will list (a) the number and (b) the date of applications to his Department's south-west regional office for regional selective assistance that can be readily identified as being prepared by company W since 1990; and how many applications have been received by his Department's south-west office since this date. [35266]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: The Department has examined all the cases which have been considered by the South West industrial development board since 1990 and subsequently been the subject of a grant offer. Company W appears to have prepared 23 out of the 99 cases falling into this category. The application dates of these cases were:

6 June and 29 October 1991;

1 September 1992;

5 January, 14 June, 8, 22 and 28 October and 2 December 1993;

6, and 24 January, 18 April, 6 May, 15 June, 5 and 12 July and 24 November 1994;

6 February, 1 March and 1 and 2 November 1995;

23 February and 15 March 1996.

I can say with confidence that Mr. Harris was not present for any of the subsequent discussion on the applications submitted by this company.

South West Industrial Development Board

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 464, if he will state (a) the name of the relevant company, (b) the reason it was deemed sufficient for Mr. X to remain in the meeting, (c) the amount of financial assistance applied for, (d) the amount finally offered and (e) the amount granted. [35263]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: The applicant concerned was Pall Europe Ltd. Mr. Roger Harris declared that his firm was the worldwide auditor for Pall Corporation, but that he had no personal involvement in the work. It was deemed sufficient for him to remain in the meeting on condition that he abstained from any vote on the application. The offer was for the amount applied for—£950,000. No payments have yet been made.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 461–64, if he will list the relevant conflict of interests by (a) member of the South West industrial development board and (b) the relevant company. [35267]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: The board members declared their personal interests to the Department and acted correctly in not involving themselves in discussions of cases where a conflict with those interests arose.

It is a matter of public record that Mr. Roger Harris's abstentions stemmed from the fact that KPMG, of which he is a senior partner, acted for the applicants as grant advisers or in other capacities.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what market research reports which referred to the trade in electro-shock weapons have been partially funded by his Department's export market research scheme since June 1994. [36363]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 10 July 1996]: The Department is not aware of any reports which refer to electro-shock batons having received support from the export marketing research scheme since June 1994.

Research Councils

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 June; Official Report, column 513, when he expects to place in the Library, the memoranda and supporting documentation relating to the prior options review. [37457]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 July 1996]: I have today placed in the Library of the House memoranda setting out the rationale underlying the decisions announced on the following establishments:

Establishment for which DTI Ministers are responsible:

Central Laboratory of the Research Councils

Institute of Arable Crops Research (BBSRC-funded institute)

Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research (BBSRC-funded institute)

John Innes Centre (BBSRC-funded institute)

Silsoe Research Institute (BBSRC-funded institute)

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Establishments for which Scottish Office Ministers are responsible:

Fisheries Research Services

Forestry Commission Research Division

Macaulay Land Use Research Institute

Scottish Crop Research Institute

Scottish Agricultural Science Agency

Establishment for which MAFF Ministers are responsible:

Directorate of Fisheries Research.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment was made of the pension and redundancy costs of the privatisation option under the prior options review of the individual research institutes of the Biotechnical and Biological Sciences Research Council, the Medical Research Council, Natural Environment Research Council and the Partical Physics and Astronomy Research Council. [37398]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 July 1996]: Prior options reviews of MRC, NERC and BBSRC institutes remain to be completed. The review of the BBSRC's Institute of Arable Crops Research, Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research, Jon Innes Centre and Silsoe Research Institute estimated pension transfer costs at up to £72.5 million and contingent staff liabilities at up to £64 million. The review of the Royal Observatories did not make any assessment for redundancy costs of privatisation. Pension transfers costs are still being assessed.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will publish a list showing the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by her Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen , Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37328]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available without incurring disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the total number of full-time equivalent staff within her Department engaged in the administration, oversight, audit and other regulation of each of the non-departmental public bodies, agencies and similar bodies, sponsored by her Department, indicating the division within her Department responsible for each. [37504]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Costs

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the total costs to her Department of the administration, oversight, audit and other regulation of all local authority activities within its responsibility, excluding work undertaken by Ofsted. [37502]

Mr. Robin Squire: No discrete record is maintained of the cost incurred by the Department in dealing with issues relating to local authority responsibilities for education and employment. Many different elements of the Department's work relate to local authorities, and they could be disaggregated only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Staff

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the total number of full-time equivalent staff in her Department engaged in the administration, oversight, audit and other regulation of local authority activities within the responsibility of her Department, excluding that undertaken by Ofsted, indicating the division within her Department which has responsibility for each activity. [37501]

Mr. Robin Squire: No discrete record is maintained of the numbers of staff in the Department involved with issues relating to local authority responsibilities for education and employment. Many different elements of the Department's work relate to local authorities, and they could be disaggregated only at disproportionate cost.

Pupils, Devon

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of children educated in Devon by the local education authority in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97. [37425]

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 145,093 pupils, including 3,018 part-time pupils, were being taught in schools maintained in Devon local education authority in January 1995. Information for January 1996 will be available in the autumn.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37231]

Mr. Robin Squire: In line with the Government's open government policy, the Department always considers if it is appropriate to use the Internet to augment other publishing routes. An example is the recent publication of "The Skills Audit", which was published simultaneously on the Internet. The responsibility for considering the Internet as an additional publishing medium for our Command Papers and priced documents rests primarily with HMSO.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many parents of four-year-olds there are in each of the pilot local education authorities; how many vouchers have been issued in each local education authority; and what research she plans to identify which parents are still not receiving vouchers; [37110]

(2) how many vouchers have been issued to parents of four-year-olds in the pilot areas; how many of these have been redeemed; what is the total cash value of the unredeemed vouchers; and if the cash value of the unredeemed vouchers will be retained by the Exchequer. [37107]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows estimates of the number of eligible children in each of the phase 1 authorities. These estimates of population and pupil numbers are less reliable when broken down both by local authority area and by year group. The figures for the number of vouchers issued are for the summer term only and relate to the period to 8 July. The figures for redemption relate only to the first half of the summer term. Research on parents and their use of vouchers will be part of a wider project on phase 1 to be undertaken in the early autumn.

| Local education authority | Estimated number of eligible children | Number of vouchers issued | Number of voucher parts redeemed | Value of vouchers redeemed (£) | Value of unredeemed vouchers (£) |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Norfolk | 9,300 | 8,979 | 36,910 | 1,353,490 | 273,192 |
| Kensington and Chelsea | 1,650 | 1,129 | 4,868 | 178,510 | 28,493 |
| Wandsworth | 3,300 | 3,110 | 12,968 | 475,537 | 94,682 |
| Westminster | 1,900 | 1,391 | 5,458 | 200,145 | 54,895 |

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research projects are (a) planned and (b) in progress to evaluate the pilot phase of the nursery voucher scheme; and in each case what is (i) the objective of the research project, (ii) the budget allocated, (iii) the timeframe and (iv) the expected date of publication of the research findings. [37104]

Mr. Squire: The research projects relating to phase 1 of the nursery education voucher scheme are:

Parents survey: (i) to assess the effectiveness of the publicity campaign for, and attitudes to, phase 1 of the nursery education voucher scheme, and provide guidance on publicity for phase 2; (ii) £41,500; (iii) conducted in March–April 1996; (iv) report placed in Library on 8 July 1996.

Providers survey: (i) to assess levels of awareness and experience of, and attitudes to, the voucher scheme and the information campaign for phase 1; (ii) £47,500; (iii) June 1996; (iv) report to be placed in the Library shortly.

In addition data on the issue and redemption of vouchers will be analysed termly, and will include the number of vouchers issued, the number redeemed and patterns of redemption.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of parents in each of the pilot local education authorities have been found to be not in favour of the nursery voucher scheme. [37109]

Mr. Squire: In the survey of parents conducted shortly before the nursery education voucher scheme started in the phase 1 areas, the following proportions of parents rated the scheme unfavourably overall:

Norfolk: 13 per cent.

Kensington and Chelsea: 33 per cent.

Westminster: 27 per cent.

Wandsworth: 24 per cent.

In Norfolk, where 87 per cent. of parents judged the scheme to be "very or quite good", parents were found to be better informed about the scheme than in the other areas.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of parents, in each of the participating local education authorities, were found to believe that they had not had enough information about the voucher scheme. [37111]

Mr. Squire: At the time of the parental survey conducted in the four phase 1 areas of the nursery education voucher scheme, 94 per cent. of parents were aware of the scheme. Overall, six in 10 parents wanted to know more. A breakdown by LEA is as follows:

Norfolk: 57 per cent.

Kensington and Chelsea: 65 per cent.

Wandsworth: 45 per cent.

Westminster: 73 per cent.

The finding has already been taken into account in the dissemination of information for the remainder of phase 1 and in planning for phase 2.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to have sufficient evidence on the operation of the pilot phase of the voucher scheme to be able to draw firm conclusions for any changes needed before the scheme is extended nationally. [37106]

Mr. Squire: Early in the autumn.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total budget allocated to phase one of the voucher scheme broken down into budget headings; and in which areas actual spending has exceeded projected spending. [37108]

Mr. Squire: In the financial year 1996–97, £17.8 million has been allocated to cover the cost of vouchers for every eligible child in the phase 1 authorities. A total of £10.8 million of this money has been found from existing LEA budgets, the remainder is new money. In addition £5 million has been allocated for setting up the inspection regime, training inspectors for both phases of the scheme and for administration for phase 1 of the scheme. A total of £300,000 has been allocated for providing information to parents and providers in phase 1. None of these budgets has been exceeded.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 148, in respect of each local authority participating in the pilot phase of the voucher scheme, how many four-year-olds have been enrolled who did not have a voucher at the time of their enrolment; and how many applications have been made by providers on behalf of such children. [37469]

Mr. Squire: The number of children who did not have a voucher at the time of their enrolment is not held centrally. Maintained schools in Norfolk have so far made 56 special applications for such children, and there have been 62 applications by schools in Kensington and Chelsea, 93 in Wandsworth and 61 in Westminster. Overall, less than 2 per cent. of the applications have been made in this way.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 48, what proportion of the vouchers that have been redeemed to date, have been redeemed in (a) the private sector, (b) the voluntary sector and (c) the maintained sector. [37471]

Mr. Squire: As of 5 July, 64 per cent. of voucher parts had been redeemed by providers in the maintained sector and 36 per cent. by those in the private and voluntary sectors taken together.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 149, how many voucher-bearing four-year-olds have been accepted by the 40 providers who did not accept four-year-olds prior to initial validation. [37468]

Mr. Squire: A total of 110 voucher-bearing four-year-olds attend those providers who did not have any four-year-olds on roll at the time of initial registration.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 48, how many of the providers now accepting voucher-bearing children, are able to offer such children (a) one session, (b) two sessions and (c) three or more sessions, per week. [37470]

Mr. Robin Squire: Records are not held of the number of sessions offered by providers, only of those provided. The following table shows the number of sessions attended by children, taken from voucher returns made by 11 June.

| Number of sessions attended | Pupils attending one provider | Pupils attending two or more providers |
|---|---|---|
| One | 35 | 0 |
| Two | 343 | 1 |
| Three or more | 10,826 | 592 |

Providers offering only one session cannot join the scheme.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of parents who have changed their choice of provider as a result of the voucher scheme. [37404]

Mr. Squire: The only evidence currently available comes from the survey of parents conducted just before the summer term, where, at this early stage in the nursery education voucher scheme, few reported changing their choice of provider. The expectation is that, over time, a larger number of places of differing types will be created in order to match parental demand.

School Standards

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the number and proportion of grant-maintained schools deemed by Ofsted (a) to be failing and (b) to have serious weaknesses, requiring follow-up visits. [37158]

Mr. Robin Squire: Nine grant-maintained schools have been identified by Her Majesty's chief inspector as failing or likely to fail and therefore in need of special measures. On the basis of the latest comparable figures the proportion of GM schools found to be failing is 1.9 per cent. of those inspected.

Schools having serious weaknesses are not specifically identified as such by registered inspectors. This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the number and proportion of local education authority-maintained schools deemed by Ofsted (a) to be failing and (b) to have serious weaknesses, requiring follow-up visits. [37159]

Mr. Squire: A total of 173 local education authority-maintained schools have been identified by Her Majesty's chief inspector as failing or likely to fail and therefore in need of special measures. On the basis of the latest comparable figures the proportion of LEA schools found to be failing is 2.1 per cent. of those inspected.

Schools having serious weaknesses are not specifically identified as such by registered inspectors. This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

European Social Fund

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to submit a programme to the European Commission under objective 4 of the European social fund for 1997–99. [37467]

Mr. Forth: The Government have no present plans to submit an objective 4 plan to the European Commission.

Teacher Training

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the (i) target intake and (ii) actual intake for primary and early years teacher training in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996; and what is the target intake for 1997. [37255]

Mr. Robin Squire: The target intakes for primary teacher training in England in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 together with the actual intake for 1995–96 are set out in the following table. The actual intake figures for 1996–97 will not be known until after courses start in the autumn. The Government do not publish separate targets for early years teacher training.

| | Target | Actual |
|---|---|---|
| 1995–96 | 12,115 | 13,601 |
| 1996–97 | 11,500 | n/a |
| 1997–98 | 12,200 | n/a |

Pre-school Provision

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was (a) the number and (b) the percentage of four-year-olds in pre-school provision in each local education authority and nationally in 1996; [37256]

(2) what was (a) the number and (b) the percentage of three-year-olds in pre-school provision in each local education authority and nationally in 1996; [37257]

(3) what was (a) the number and (b) the percentage of three and four-year-olds in pre-school provision in each local education authority and nationally in 1996. [37258]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on pupils aged three and four in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in England in January 1996—provisional—is shown in the following table. The Department does not publish information on participation rates of individual age cohorts by local education authority. Participation rates for all pupils aged under five for each local education authority will be available in the autumn.

Pupils aged three and four in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools in England[1]

| Age | Number of pupils | Percentage of population at 31 December 1995 |
|---|---|---|
| 3[2] | 209,200 | 32 |
| 4[3] | 155,100 | 24 |
| 3 and 4 | 364,300 | 28 |

[1] These figures are not directly comparable with those released in previous years due to changes in the data collected.

[2] Includes pupils aged two. Excludes pupils born between 1 September 1991 and 31 December 1991.

[3] Includes pupils born between 1 September 1991 and 31 December 1991. Excludes pupils born between 1 September 1990 and 31 December 1990.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the agencies for which her Department is responsible and the costs incurred by each for printing (a) all publications and (b) its annual report in the last year for which figures are available. [37463]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has two next steps agencies: the Employment Service; and the Teachers' Pensions Agency.

Information on the costs incurred on printing all publications is not recorded separately by the two agencies and could be disaggregated from other printing costs only at disproportionate cost.

Information is, however, available about the specific cost of printing the agencies' annual report and accounts. The cost of printing the Employment Service annual report and accounts for 1995–96 is expected to be around £23,000. The cost of printing the 1995–96 Teachers' Pensions Agency annual report and accounts was £5,400.

Primary School Pupils

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many five, six and seven-year-olds there are (a) in each local education authority and (b) nationally. [37150]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 15 July 1996]: The latest information on the numbers of pupils in school in each local education authority area in England who were aged between five and seven years of age is shown in the following table.

Pupils aged 5–7 years of age (1)(2) in local education authority area in England

WALES

Child Abuse

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authority inquiries into child exploitation of abuse of children looked after or in care are currently taking place in south Wales. [36508]

Mr. Hague: I am not aware of any current local authority inquiries into these matters in south Wales. There is, I understand, an investigation by the police and Cardiff social services currently underway concerning allegations of abuse by a former residential child care social worker.

Chapels (Preservation)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in respect of the preservation of Welsh chapels since the publication of the second report from the Welsh Affairs Committee of Session 1992–93, HC 403, on the Preservation of Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments. [36586]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for issues relating to redundant chapels has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. J. Cassidy to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 16 July 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the progress towards establishing a redundant chapels fund in Wales.

In its response to the Welsh Affairs Committee Report. "The Preservation of Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments", the Government indicated that it was prepared to fund 70% of the costs of a mechanism to care for the best redundant historic chapels for which no other arrangement could be made.

In November 1994 the Wales Council for Voluntary Action, on Cadw's behalf, organised a Conference to identify the problems which such a mechanism might address and to promote the involvement of interested people. That Conference led to the establishment of a Working Group to consider the issue under the chairmanship of Dr. Roger Wools—an architect who has taken a particular interest in historic chapels. The Group's members included the General Secretary of the Presbyterian Church of Wales, an Executive Committee member of CAPEL, the Conservation Officer of Monmouth Borough Council, an archaeologist and a Chartered Building Surveyor. The terms of reference to which the Group has worked were:

to examine questions of redundancy and to consider if chapels of significance will be presented for which preservation is desirable; to consider what mechanisms could be put in place which with support from the Welsh Office might address the needs of such buildings.

The Group has consulted widely, hearing the views of representatives of organisations concerned with chapels. Its report is due shortly.

We look forward to receiving the Group's report which we hope will help us identify important chapels which may be facing redundancy and indicate the best way forward.

Population Statistics

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds there will be in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000; and what were the figures in (i) 1992, (ii) 1993, (iii) 1994 and (iv) 1995. [36599]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is as follows:

Residents in Wales

| Year | Number (thousands) aged: 16 | 17 | 16 and 17 |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1992 | 34.4 | 35.9 | 70.3 |
| 1993 | 32.7 | 34.2 | 66.9 |

Statistical Forms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the statistical forms issued to businesses by his Department and the number sent out of each. [37460]

Mr. Hague: The available information is for 1995 and is as given in the 1996 Welsh Office "Survey Control Report". The forms listed as follows included those sent to agricultural main holdings.

Statistical forms issued to businesses by The Welsh Office in 1995

| | Number of forms |

Full-time Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the percentage of (a) 16-year-olds, (b) 17-year-olds and (c) 18-year-olds in full-time education who are (i) studying A/AS courses, (ii) in higher education, (iii) studying BTEC national courses, (iv) studying GCSE and (v) undertaking other studies; and what percentage of (1) 16-year-olds, (2) 17-year-olds and (3) 18-year-olds are in full-time education in the latest year for which figures are available. [36583]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is in the following table:

16, 17 and 18 year olds in full-time education in Wales 1994–95[1]

Wheelchairs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 342, when he initiated discussions on the future provision of wheelchairs for disabled people in Wales; with which voluntary organisations in Wales he proposes consulting on his future policy; when he hopes to conclude his consultation; and when he plans to make operational revisions to his policy. [36594]

Mr. Hague: My officials have been in discussion with health authorities and service providers in Wales following details of the proposed new arrangements in England becoming available. These are continuing but I hope shortly to be able to consult the major organisations representing wheelchair users in Wales about the issues involved.

Youth Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of those who have undertaken a youth training programme who have (a) been subsequently employed and (b) achieved a recognised qualification in each training and council area in each year from 1990 to 1996. [36582]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The proportion of young people leaving youth training and (a) who gained a job and (b) achieved a recognised qualification in each year from 1991–92 to 1994–5 in each TEC area are shown in the following tables. No figures are available for 1990 as not all TECs were operational in that year. Figures for 1995–1996 are not yet available.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures have been taken to alleviate traffic congestion in and around holiday resorts in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [37089]

Mr. Hague: Access to many Welsh holiday resorts has been significantly improved by the motorway and trunk road improvements—costing some £3 billion—which have been completed since 1979. Roads within holiday resorts are the responsibility of the relevant local authorities, and it is for them to assess the need for any improvements.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums have been allocated by his Department to each training and enterprise council in Wales for modern apprenticeships in year (a) 1, (b) 2 and (c) 3. [37384]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested for years 1 and 2 is shown in the following table. Figures for 1996–97 will not become available until September 1996, as TECs have yet to finalise contracts with their providers.

Modern apprenticeship expenditure (£ million)

| | 1994–95[1] | 1995–96[2] |
|---|---|---|
| Gwent | 1.618 | 0.894 |
| Mid Glamorgan | 1.845 | 0.476 |

| Powys | 1.097 | 0.129 |
| South Glamorgan | 0.492 | 0.221 |
| Targed | 1.149 | 0.309 |
| West Wales | 2.530 | 0.677 |
| Total Wales | 9.562 | 3.036 |

[1] 1994–95 expenditure includes monies for capital equipment.
[2] 1995–96 expenditure figures are provisional.

Eurofreight Terminal

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in establishing a Eurofreight terminal in south Wales; what consultations he has conducted with the chairman of the Welsh development agency concerning the pre-planning study; and when he anticipates commencement of the project's construction phase. [37610]

Mr. Hague: On 3 April I agreed that the Welsh development agency should enter into further discussions with the promoters of the proposal for a rail freight terminal at Wentloog; these discussions are continuing and the WDA will be reporting back to me in due course. I have not held discussions with the WDA chairman on any pre-planning study. The timing of any developments is dependent on the proposals put forward by the promoters and the outcome of the discussions with the WDA.

Extra-contractual Referral System

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the consultation paper he has issued on simplifying the extra-contractual referral system; if he will list the consultees on this document; and if he will make a statement. [37608]

Mr. Hague: I have arranged for copies of the letters sent to the NHS in Wales explaining the proposals for streamlining aspects of the extra-contractual referral process to be placed in the Library. Guidance on other aspects of the process is being developed in partnership with health authorities, NHS trusts and GPs. This guidance is likely to be issued in the autumn.

SCOTLAND

Saltire

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 485, if he will review the list of persons whose birthdays are marked by the flying of the Saltire from public buildings and include the birthdays of (a) Robert Burns and (b) Robert the Bruce. [36241]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am giving consideration to the matter.

Local Government Reorganisation

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that when a new unitary authority has succeeded a number of old authorities the liability limit of 70 per cent. of costs for inherited legal commitments will be calculated by an aggregate total of the old authorities; and if he will make a statement. [37125]

Mr. Kynoch: Demitting local authorities' ability to commit their successors to capital expenditure in 1996–97 was restricted to 70 per cent., of each authorities' individual capital allocation. I have undertaken to give each successor authority a capital allocation equal to the amount of legal commitments they inherit from each of their predecessors, provided that the individual demitting authorities did not exceed their commitment limits. The mechanism which has been put in place for dealing with inherited legal commitments was proposed by and agreed with COSLA last year. I do not propose to change it now.

Speech and Language Disorders

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children from homes in Scotland with (a) specific speech and (b) language disorders are currently having their special educational needs met in establishments in England as a result of a lack of appropriate provision in Scotland. [37017]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants or other financial assistance have been awarded by the Scottish Office, in the financial years 1995–96 and 1996–97, to organisations whose sole remit is to represent children with specific speech and language disorders. [37015]

Mr. Robertson: No funding has been awarded in the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 to any organisation concerned solely with representing children with specific speech and language disorders.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the information about advice, counselling and advocacy for parents of children with special educational needs, currently being gathered by the Scottish Office, will be made available to parents; and in what form. [37014]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Views were invited by 1 July 1996 from statutory bodies, voluntary organisations and others on the content, layout and format of the Scottish Office publication, "A Parents Guide to Special Educational Needs".

A wide range of detailed responses has been made and these are being given careful consideration. The aim is to have a revised version of the guide available before the end of this year. The current edition of the guide is available in printed form in English, Urdu, Hindi, Punjabi and Cantonese and also in English on audio cassette. Views were sought from those consulted on appropriate formats for the revision.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on advocacy for children and the parents of children with special educational needs during the preparation of a record of needs. [37016]

Mr. Robertson: The Scottish Office encourages openness and co-operation between all parties involved in the preparation of a record of needs and acknowledges that advocacy for children and the parents of children with special educational needs, where an involved party feels it appropriate, can contribute to the process.

To support this the Scottish Office has assisted the national voluntary organisation, Children in Scotland, to establish the special needs forum which provides information and training about special educational needs for parents and voluntary organisations. It also provided financial assistance to that organisation to publish "A Special Partnership", a guide book for named persons and parents, to help them to participate more effectively in the recording processes. Additionally, I have asked the Scottish Office, in the light of responses received to the consultation about the new version of its publication, "A Parents' Guide to Special Educational Needs", to review the need for further encouragement and guidance about advocacy services.

Poverty

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to bring together and publish all information held by his Department about poverty in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [37340]

Mr. Kynoch: There is no simple or meaningful way to define poverty. The principal current sources of information on the incomes of households are "Households Below Average Income 1979 to 1992–93" and the "Family Expenditure Survey 1994–95. The latter includes information specifically on Scottish households. Both publications are available in the Library.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list, in (a) real and (b) constant prices the resources available to Scottish Homes for construction work in each year since 1990 projected forward to 1997–98; [37445]

(2) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the resources of Scottish Homes to fund the preparation of plans by (a) housing associations and (b) co-operatives for construction works to commence at the start of 1997–98; and if he will make a statement on trends in the level of support for such projects over the last three years; [37444]

(3) which Scottish Homes construction projects for 1996–97 have been (a) deferred and (b) cancelled because of resource constraints; what was their value; and what was the nature of the constraints. [37446]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Scottish Homes development programme represents the total available each year for investment in projects undertaken by housing associations and co-operatives, private developers and others. The annual development programme in the period to 1996–97 and the amount estimated by Scottish Homes for 1997–98, based on its currently planned resources, are given in the table at cash and constant, or real, 1996–97 prices.

£ million

| | Cash prices | Constant 1996–97 prices |
|---|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 203.0 | 248.4 |
| 1991–92 | 235.0 | 270.9 |
| 1992–93 | 282.6 | 312.9 |
| 1993–94 | 306.6 | 329.7 |
| 1994–95 | 319.5 | 337.4 |
| 1995–96 | 320.6 | 329.3 |
| 1996–97 | 280.0 | 280.0 |
| 1997–98 (estimated) | 260.0 | 253.7 |

Within the total level of resources available to it, Scottish Homes continually makes decisions on priorities to be given to individual projects. As a result, if more funding assistance is sought than can be accommodated within the overall programme, certain projects may be deferred. However, such decisions are a matter for Scottish Homes.

Scottish Homes supplements its grant-in-aid from receipts and other sources. I am satisfied that, given the overall need to restrain public expenditure in order to ensure the maintenance of economic growth, Scottish Homes has sufficient resources at its disposal to support substantial investment work in 1997–98. These resources will also lever in significant sums of private finance for housing development.

Statistical Forms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the statistical forms issued to businesses by his Department and the number sent out of each. [37465]

Mr. Kynoch: The information is as follows:

Nuclear Reactor

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to provide funding assistance to meet the decommissioning costs of the experimental nuclear reactor at the Scottish universities reactor centre, East Kilbride; and if he will make a statement. [37400]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 15 July 1996]: I am aware that the consortium of universities which run the Scottish universities reactor centre will need to incur expenditure on decommissioning the reactor over the next three years. We shall be considering this pressure on the higher education sector during the survey alongside others which have been drawn to our attention.

Public Appointments

Mr Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to which public offices in Scotland the Lord Advocate makes (a) appointments and (b) recommendations of appointments. [32287]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 June 1996]:

(a) The Lord Advocate is responsible for the appointment of:

Advocate Deputes;

Procurators Fiscal;

the Chairman and Members of the Scottish Law Commission;

the Chairman and Members of the Scottish Committee of the Council on Tribunals;

the Chairman of any Building Societies Appeals Tribunal in Scotland.

(b) The Lord Advocate is consulted about or makes nominations in respect of a wide range of public appointments.

DEFENCE

Precision Guided Missiles

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when approaches were made to Her Majesty's Government in relation to the (a) resale and (b) transfer of precision guided missiles supplied to the United Arab Emirates by (i) ISC-Ferranti and (ii) GEC-Marconi; what was the outcome of these approaches; and if he will list the (1) resales and (2) transfers which have subsequently taken place indicating the country concerned. [36831]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a commercially confidential matter.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his officials reviewed the ISC-Ferranti precision guided missile for compliance with the missile technology control regime; and what was the outcome of that review. [36605]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is not normal practice to reveal advice on individual export licence applications, but all applications relating to missiles are reviewed against our obligations under the missile technology control regime, as well as other considerations.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which section of his Department was responsible for expressing the concern referred to on page 865, sub-paragraph vi of the Scott inquiry report in relation to ISC-Ferranti contracts for precision guided missiles. [36606]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is not normal practice to disclose the source of advice, nor did Sir Richard Scott see the need in this particular case.

Lariam

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances his Department (a) prescribes and (b) administers Lariam as an anti-malarial prophylaxis to military pilots and air crew. [36872]

Mr. Soames: Larium is not prescribed as an anti-malarial prophylaxis to service pilots and aircrew.

Trident Programme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Trident submarines there are in the Trident programme; how many have been acquired; and how many are on station at any given time. [37393]

Mr. Arbuthnot: There are four submarines in the Trident programme; so far two have entered service. It is not our practice to give details of the dispositions of the strategic nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to commission the last Trident submarine in its programme. [37392]

Mr. Arbuthnot: HMS Vengeance, the fourth Trident submarine, will enter service around the turn of the century.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the additional contribution of the last Trident submarine to the United Kingdom's nuclear deterrent capability. [37394]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The four boat Trident fleet will guarantee continuous deterrent patrols throughout the planned 25-year life of the submarines, which includes periods for refit.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received from the United States authorities concerning the contents of the bunkers at Kamisayah in southern Iraq in March 1991. [37388]

Mr. Soames: No British troops were present in the vicinity of the Kamisayah arms depot when it was destroyed by US troops in March 1991. We continue, nonetheless, to take a close interest in the investigation being carried out by the US authorities into the incident. I understand that the US troops involved were 5 km from the depot when it was destroyed and that, further, a preliminary study of the health of those involved shows that there is nothing at present to suggest that they were exposed to chemical agents.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37245]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have already released on the MOD home page—http:\\www.mod.uk—a summary of the 1996 "Statement on the Defence Estimates", and have a sub-page for major defence policy speeches. This is in addition to press releases and other information.

The use of the Internet is kept under continual review as we recognise its potential as a publishing medium.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of the International Court of Justice's recent decision on nuclear weapons on the position of the commanding officer of a naval SSBN—strategic submarine ballistic nuclear. [37345]

Mr. Soames: We do not believe the court's advisory opinions will have any implications for the commanding officers of our SSBNs.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if an additional review has been made of the paper on the distribution of uranium 235 and plutonium 239 around the air force base at Greenham Common, referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 3 July 1995, Official Report, column 93; and if he will make a statement on the prospects for the public release of this report. [37739]

Mr. Soames: This report has been reviewed and arrangements are being made to release it to the Public Record Office as soon as possible.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents involving nuclear weapons have taken place in the United Kingdom, or its dependent territories, since 1966. [37514]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 15 July 1996]: A nuclear weapon accident is defined as "any unplanned occurrence involving the destruction of, or damage or suspected damage to, a nuclear weapon, which has resulted in actual, or potential hazard to life, or property, or which may have impaired nuclear safety".

This definition is subdivided into two categories: category 1—where there has not been a release of radioactive material; category 2—where a release of radioactive material has been detected, or (in the early stages) the possibility of a release cannot be excluded. There has never been a category 2 accident, but seven category 1 accidents have been reported since 1966. Without exception these occurrences caused absolutely no hazard either to public safety or that of MoD personnel.

Married Quarters Estate

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings Defence Ministers have had with the Empty Homes Agency to discuss how empty MoD married quarters might be offered for sale or lease by housing associations or local authorities in areas of housing needs; and if he will make a statement. [37175]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence has held a number of meetings with the Empty Homes Agency during 1995 and 1996 to discuss issues related to void properties.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on maintenance of the married quarters estate in each of the past five years. [37605]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on Tuesday 9 July, Official Report, column 127.

Transport and Movements Executive

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Transport and Movements Executive in 1996–97. [37886]

Mr. Soames: The chief executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive has been set the following key targets for 1996–97:

1. To confirm and satisfy the operational requirement through the achievement of a satisfactory operational evaluation.

   Method of Assessment

   (a) The criteria for KT should be an objective assessment by the chief executive based on:

   Key post manning requirements are met.

   Staff training and skills are to the required standard.

   Owned infrastructure can achieve appropriate throughput and sustain 24-hour operation.

   G4 transport and movements contracts or other available transport and movements assets provide the means of meeting the operational requirement.

   The required service level agreements are in place and functioning.

   (b) Crisis management exercise.

   (c) The requirements for trained personnel, op eqpt.

2. To meet the agreed service levels for single service top-level budgets within its wider peacetime transport and movements role.

An objective assessment by DG Log Sp (A) that DTMX has met its wider peacetime role based on the following criteria:

(a) The owner's advisory boards.

(b) Confirmation of success in meeting the criteria for key target 1.

(c) Confirmation that the G1 transport and movements contracts base meets customer's requirements.

3. To provide an agreed transport and movements service which meets the transport and movements element of the standard priority system requirements as laid down in JSP 336, to time in 96.5 per cent. of cases.

4. To implement the agency's competing for quality strategy specifically:

(a) To complete the Falkland Islands resupply contract with the option of a commercial partner by 31 December 1996.

(b) To complete the tri-service freight distribution market test by:

Evaluating tenders by 30 September 1996.

Letting the contract by 11 November 1996.

Commencing the contract by 15 May 1997.

(c) To re-examine the procurement strategy of following existing contracts:

Rail

Freight forwarding.

(d) Identify unavoidable excess spare capacity within owned assets and assess the opportunity to marketing this by December 1996.

(e) Evaluate the requirement for and procurement of additional MoD shipping assets.

5. To develop internal management systems to:

(a) Produce accruals accounts for 1996–97 for a full NAO audit.

(b) Achieve activity-based costing for 90 per cent. of DTMX budgetary responsibilities by 31 March 1997.

(c) Continue to pursue the targets set in the DTMX information systems strategy.

6. Through the use of the DTMX ABC system identify input or output efficiencies against:

(a) Costing appropriate management charges against activities within DTMX's budgetary area and implementing a process for internal and external benchmarking of these costs.

(b) Make output efficiencies in management costs within the following functional areas:

Lands Ops.

Sea Ops.

Unaccompanied baggage—initiate management procedures in policing services and changes to the management organisation to identify output efficiencies.

Chemical Defence Establishment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons files with the classmarks WO 188/679, WO 188/702 and WO 188/707–708 recorded at the Public Record Office concerning the work of the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, are currently retained by his Department; and if he will open them. [37617]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In line with the open government initiative, arrangements are being made to review the papers listed at the Public Record Office under references

WO 188/679, 702 and 707–708 to establish whether release into the public domain is now possible. I will write to the hon. Member on completion of the review process.

Armed Forces Accommodation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to build further armed forces accommodation before the end of the current financial year. [37067]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 12 July 1996]: In addition to the 61 new married quarters and 14 single accommodation projects currently under construction, we plan to build a further two new married quarters before the end of the current financial year.

HEALTH

Nurses (Pay Award)

13. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have received the pay award made for the current year. [35794]

Mr. Malone: National health service employers are negotiating on pay for nurses and other NHS staff, as recommended by the Nursing Pay Review Body.

Ambulance Response Times (Cornwall)

16. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on ambulance response times in Cornwall. [35797]

Mr. Horam: West Country Ambulance National Health Service trust, which includes Cornwall, dealt with over 86,000 emergency calls in 1995–96 and reached nearly 80,000 of them within the patients charter target of 19 minutes. This represents over 8,000 more calls reached within 19 minutes than in 1994–95.

Smoking-related Deaths

17. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce the number of deaths arising from smoking-related diseases. [35798]

Mr. Horam: Government strategy to reduce smoking is based on those measures which are known to work. Our record in reducing smoking prevalence to 26 per cent. is one of the best in Europe.

Private Finance Initiative

18. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the private finance initiative in the health service. [35799]

Mr. Horam: The private finance initiative is providing the services and facilities which enable the national health service to concentrate on providing high-quality health care.

26. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy on the use of private finance initiative; and if he will make a statement. [35808]

Mr. Horam: All capital developments in the national health service have to be tested for private finance. Private finance will be used if it offers the best value for money and transfers risk to the private sector.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions he has varied his decision on local strategies for acute services in response to alternative proposals arising from private finance initiatives. [36380]

Mr. Horam: Capital developments in the national health service, whether privately or publicly financed, must be consistent with local health-care strategies. Any capital scheme must also be supported by the main purchasers of the trust concerned, who can therefore ensure that the scheme is consistent with their purchasing strategies.

General Practitioners

19. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of the available supply of general practitioners. [35800]

Mr. Malone: The most recent information is for 1 October 1995 when there were 26,702 general medical practitioners in England.

Consultant Anaesthetists

20. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to address shortages of consultant anaesthetists in the NHS. [35801]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 20 March 1996 at column 243.

Administrative Costs

21. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairmen of NHS trusts to discuss administrative costs. [35802]

Mr. Malone: I meet national health service trust chairmen regularly. The Government are committed to the effective management of the NHS and to reducing unnecessary bureaucracy. Our programme for streamlining NHS management will release £300 million for patient care by the end of 1997. We have also launched and are now implementing two efficiency scrutinies which will reduce bureaucracy—eliminating over 17 million forms a year.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of his departmental expenditure is allocated to administration. [35796]

Mr. Horam: Spending on administration in all health authorities, the Prescription Pricing Authority, the Dental Practice Board, the Departmental of Health and on general practitioner fundholder management allowances accounted for 4.8 per cent. of total departmental expenditure in 1994–95.

Health Service Managers

22. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of health service managers in (a) 1990 and (b) 1996. [35803]

Mr. Malone: The number of general and senior managers in the hospital and community health services at September 1990 was published in the Department of Health's statistics bulletin "NHS hospital and community health services non-medical staff in England: 1983–1993" published in October 1994. The number of general medical services practice managers at October 1990 was published in the Departmental of Health's statistics bulletin "Statistics for General Medical Practitioners in England: 1985–1995" published in May 1996. Copies of these publications are available in the Library. Information on the numbers of managers in the general dental, pharmaceutical and ophthalmic services is not available centrally. Information for 1996 is not currently available.

Newbury Community Hospital

23. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in securing funds to build the proposed community hospital in Newbury. [35804]

Mr. Horam: The West Berkshire Priority Care Service National Health Service trust has produced plans for a new hospital. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Jim Kerevon, chairman of the trust, for further information.

Hospital Appointments (Waiting Times)

24. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce measures to reduce waiting times for hospital appointments in the north-west region. [35805]

Mr. Horam: Last year we set the first national standard for the waiting time from general practitioner referral to being seen by a hospital specialist. Latest figures show that in the north-west 86 per cent. of patients were seen within 13 weeks of referral and 98 per cent. were seen within 26 weeks. This is better than performance nationally and health authorities and trusts in the region are working to further reduce these waiting times.

Paediatric Nurses

25. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he issues to general practitioner fundholding practices in respect of the training of paediatric nurses; and if he will make a statement. [35806]

Mr. Horam: The training of paediatric nurses is the responsibility of community national health service trusts and local education and training consortia. National education and training planning guidance is issued annually.

Cancer Treatments

27. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received concerning the treatment of cancer patients. [35809]

Mr. Horam: The Department has received a number of recent representations concerning the treatment of cancer patients. These have been mainly concerned with patients who have suffered adverse effects following radiotherapy treatment for cancer, and the implementation of the recommendations of the recent Health Select Committee's report on breast cancer services.

Nursing Students

28. Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chief executives of health trusts to discuss the available complement of nursing students. [35810]

Mr. Horam: We are in frequent contact with chief executives of health trusts about a number of issues, including education and training.

Health Authority Budgets (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the budgets allocated by his Department to health authorities in Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36491]

Mr. Horam: The total funds allocated to the health authorities in the county of Cheshire in the period 1991–92 to 1995–96 are listed in the table.

£000

| Tameside FHSA | 5,286 | 7,175 | 10,649 | 13,515 | 19,296 |

The table lists all the district health authorities and family health services authorities which have been located in the country. Tameside and Glossop DHA and West Pennine DHA also covered part of Cheshire, Lancashire and Derbyshire.

Pharmaceutical Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that 24-hour general pharmaceutical provision is made available, in line with, the development of GP out-of-hour services; and if he will make a statement. [36244]

Mr. Malone: The national health service provides for an emergency supply of drugs to be available at any time when requested by a doctor. Health authorities are also free to make arrangements to provide a 24-hour pharmaceutical service to meet a local need.

Behavioural Psychotherapy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) research he has commissioned and (b) funding he has provided in respect of the advice given during an initial screening for behavioural psychotherapy; and if he will make a statement. [37131]

Mr. Bowis: None. Such advice is a matter for the relevant professional staff.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to promote new initiatives to reduce current levels of alcohol abuse with particular reference to (a) domestic violence and (b) heavy drinking among young people and children; and if he will make a statement. [37129]

Mr. Bowis: We are currently working with the Health Education Authority to develop new health education messages based on the recommendations in our report "Sensible Drinking (1995)". This will include specific advice to the parents and carers of young people who drink alcohol and to the 16 to 24 age group. We will also be placing more emphasis than in the past on avoiding episodes of intoxication in view of the relationship between drunkenness and short-term harm, such as incidents of domestic violence.

Lariam

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to general practitioners by his Department on the side effects of Lariam as an anti-malarial prophylaxis. [36871]

Mr. Horam: General practitioners are informed of the side effects of mefloquine—Lariam—through the manufacturer's data sheet which is approved by the Licensing Authority and made available to doctors. In addition the "British National Formulary" provides information on adverse effects of mefloquine. The Department of Health pays for the formulary to be sent to general practitioners twice a year. Information on mefloquine was circulated to all doctors in the chief medical officer's update 10 in May 1996, and is contained in the book "Health Information for Overseas Travel", a copy of which has been sent to every general practitioner.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Medical Advisory Service for Travellers abroad to publish the results of its trials on the effects of Lariam on tourists. [36873]

Mr. Horam: We are aware of the studies being conducted by the medical advisory service for travellers abroad on mefloquine, Lariam. MASTA is an independent organisation and the responsibility for publication of the results of the studies lies with it.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Malaria Advisory Committee to publish its revised guidelines for the use of Lariam as an anti-malarial prophylaxis; and if the guidelines will be circulated to general practitioners and travel centres. [36875]

Mr. Horam: The revised guidelines from the malaria reference laboratory for malaria prophylaxis for travellers from the United Kingdom are still being developed. No publication date has yet been set, but it is hoped that they will be published, as previous guidelines have, in a suitable journal with a wide circulation. Their publication will be brought to the attention of all doctors.

Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for health what requests he has received from the Isle of Wight council for the provision of health care in conjunction with the request for independence. [36920]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no requests from the Isle of Wight council for the provision of health care in conjunction with any request for independence.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current percentage of patients in England who are covered by general practitioner fundholders. [37061]

Mr. Malone: Fifty-two per cent. of the population of England is currently registered with a general practitioner fundholder.

Contaminated Blood Products

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 21, what actions the Government have taken to encourage (a) research and (b) best treatment for those haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C through NHS treatment with contaminated blood products. [37081]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 15 July. An additional £1 million has been made available by the Department's research and development division to fund research into improving our understanding to the prevalence, transmission and natural history of hepatitis C virus infection.

The national health service standing group on health technology has identified the evaluation of the use of alpha interferon in the treatment of hepatitis C virus infection as a top priority for research. This is being actively taken forward by the Medical Research Council. A trial development group has met with researchers to help them in the design of a clinical trial. It is intended that patients with haemophilia will be invited to enter the trial. The Medical Research Council is also funding a three-year study to investigate the course and complications of hepatitis C virus-induced liver disease in a group of infected haemophilia patients.

In addition, the Department is giving grant support to voluntary organisations working with those infected with hepatitis C.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the infant mortality rate in each country in the EU; and what assessment he has made of the factors underlying variations. [36889]

Mr. Horam: The table supplies details of the infant mortality rate in the United Kingdom and other European Union countries. The causes of health variations are complex. They are associated with a range of often interacting factors, including geography, socio-economic status, gender, ethnicity, life style and environment.

Infant mortality rate in European Union countries, circa 1993

| Country | Year | Infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births |
|---|---|---|
| United Kingdom | '1992 | 6.58 |
| Austria | 1994 | 6.25 |
| Belgium | 1989 | 8.53 |
| Denmark | 1993 | 5.40 |
| Finland | 1993 | 4.40 |
| France | 1992 | 6.82 |
| Germany | 1994 | 5.08 |
| Greece | 1993 | 8.30 |
| Ireland | 1992 | 6.67 |
| Italy | 1991 | 8.22 |
| Luxembourg | 1993 | 5.23 |
| Netherlands | 1993 | 6.29 |
| Portugal | 1993 | 8.73 |
| Spain | 1992 | 7.05 |
| Sweden | 1992 | 5.19 |

Note:
' More up to date figures from the Office for National Statistics indicate that the infant mortality rate in England and Wales in 1995 was 6.1 per 1,000 live births.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of staff in his Department and NHS executive are from ethnic minorities, (a) in total and (b) by grade. [37138]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The information requested for the Department and national health service executive is as shown in the table. It does not include data on staff in the NHS executive regional offices. The regional offices were created on 1 April 1996 and full regional office data are not yet included in the Department's information system.

Percentage breakdown of staff by grade and ethnicity for Department of Health (excluding agencies) as at 12 July 1996

| Grade | Ethnic minority staff (percentage) |
|---|---|
| UG1 | 0 |
| UG2 | 0 |
| UG3 | 0 |
| UG4 | 4.1 |
| UG5 | 2.3 |
| UG6 | 5.3 |
| UG7 | 3.5 |
| SEO | 4.1 |
| HEO | 6.7 |
| EO | 18.0 |
| AO | 25.4 |
| AA | 40.8 |
| Total | 13.5 |

Life Expectancy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average life span for (a) males and (b) females in each country in the EU; and what assessment he has made of the factors underlying variations. [36890]

Mr. Horam: The table supplies details of the average expectation of life at birth for males and females in the United Kingdom and other European Union countries. The causes of health variations are complex. They are associated with a range of often interacting factors, including geography, socio-economic status, gender, ethnicity, life style and environment.

Expectation of life at birth in European Union countries, circa 1993

| Country | Year | Expectation of life at birth (years) Males | Females |
|---|---|---|---|
| United Kingdom | '1992 | 73.6 | 79.1 |
| Austria | 1994 | 73.4 | 79.9 |
| Belgium | 1989 | 72.3 | 79.1 |
| Denmark | 1993 | 72.7 | 77.9 |
| Finland | 1993 | 72.1 | 79.6 |
| France | 1992 | 73.8 | 82.3 |
| Germany | 1994 | 73.1 | 79.7 |
| Greece | 1993 | 75.0 | 80.4 |
| Ireland | 1992 | 72.6 | 78.2 |
| Italy | 1991 | 73.7 | 80.5 |
| Luxembourg | 1993 | 72.4 | 79.3 |
| Netherlands | 1993 | 74.0 | 80.1 |
| Portugal | 1993 | 70.6 | 77.9 |
| Spain | 1992 | 73.8 | 81.3 |
| Sweden | 1992 | 75.5 | 81.1 |

Source:
World Health Organisation European Office 'Health for All' database.
Note:
' More up to date figures from the Government Actuary's Department indicate an average expectation of life in the United Kingdom in 1994 of 74.2 years for men and 79.4 years for women.

Abortion

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the statistically most likely candidate for an abortion within the North Thames region in the latest year for which figures are available in terms of (a) age of the woman, (b) marital status of the woman, (c) the number of previous children of the woman and (d) the grounds under which the abortion is performed. [37006]

Mr. Horam: Statistically most likely candidate for an abortion for each of the variables listed is defined as the category with the highest recorded frequency of legal terminations. The information is based on all legal terminations in the North Thames region in 1993.

The categories with the highest frequencies found in each of the variable listed were:

age of the woman: 20 to 24 age group comprised 29.3 per cent—10,449—of all terminations; material status of the woman: single women comprised 67.3 per cent.—23.963—of all terminations;

number of previous children of the women: women with no previous live and still born children comprised 55.6 per cent.—19,808—of all terminations; and grounds under which the abortion is performed: statutory ground C alone comprised 92.3 per cent.—32,869—of all terminations. Ground C is defined as meaning that the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk, greater than if the pregnancy were terminated, of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the statistically most likely candidate for an abortion within the North Thames region after the 24 week of pregnancy in the latest year for which figures are available in terms of (a) age of the woman, (b) marital status of the woman, (c) number of previous children of the woman and (d) grounds under which the abortion is performed. [37005]

Mr. Horam: The statistically most likely candidate for an abortion for each of the variables listed is defined as the category with the highest recorded frequency of legal terminations. The information is based on all legal terminations in the North Thames region in 1993.

The categories with the highest frequencies found in each of the variables listed were:

age of the woman: 30 to 34 age group comprised 31.5 per cent.—6—of all post-24th week terminations;

marital status of the woman: married women comprised 79 per cent.—15—of all post-24th week terminations;

number of previous children of the women: women with no previous live and still born children comprised 47.4 per cent.—9—of all post-24th week gestation terminations; and grounds under which the abortion is performed: statutory ground E accounted for all the cases—19—of post-24th week terminations. Ground E means that there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the statistically most likely candidate for an abortion within the Northern and Yorkshire region in the latest year for which figures are available in terms of (a) the age of the woman, (b) the marital status of the woman, (c) the number of previous children of the woman and (d) the grounds under which the abortion is performed. [36931]

Mr. Horam: The statistically most likely candidate for an abortion for each of the variables listed is defined as the category with the highest recorded frequency of legal terminations. The percentages are based on all legal terminations in the Northern and Yorkshire region in 1993.

The categories with the highest frequencies found in each of the variables were:

age of the woman: 20 to 24 age group comprised 30.3 per cent.—4,953— of all terminations;

marital status of the woman: single women comprised 65.3 per cent.—10,685—of all terminations; number of previous children of the woman: women with no previous live and still born children comprised 50.2 per cent.—8,203—of all terminations; and legal grounds under which the abortion is performed: statutory ground C alone comprised 87.3 per cent.—14,274—of all terminations. Ground C is defined as meaning that the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk, greater than if the pregnancy were terminated, of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the statistically most likely candidate for an abortion within the Northern and Yorkshire region after the 24 week of pregnancy in the latest year for which figures are available in terms of (a) the age of the woman, (b) the marital status of the woman, (c) the number of previous children of the woman and (d) the grounds under which the abortion is performed. [36932]

Mr. Horam: The statistically most likely candidate for an abortion for each of the variables listed is defined as the category with the highest recorded frequency of legal terminations. The percentages are based on all legal terminations in the Northern and Yorkshire region in 1993.

The categories with the highest frequencies found in each of the variables were:

age of the woman: 25 to 29 age group comprised 100 per cent.—2—of all post-24th week terminations;

marital status of the woman: married women comprised 100 per cent.—2—of all post-24th week terminations;

number of previous children of the woman: women with two or more previous live and stillborn children comprised 100 per cent.—2—of all post-24th week gestation terminations; and grounds under which the abortion is performed: statutory ground E accounted for all the cases—2—of post-24th week terminations. Ground E is defined as meaning that there is substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.

Leucodystrophies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into a national case note review of unclassified leucodystrophies and leucoencephalopathies; and if he will make a statement. [37185]

Mr. Horam: None. Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Breast Screening

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to introduce a national breast screening programme to women aged 65 to 69 years; and if he will make a statement. [37198]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 4 December 1995 at columns 38–39.

Dental Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to meet the commitments set out in his letter of 20 November 1995 to the Association of Community Health Councils in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [37179]

Mr. Malone: The Government are committed to an accessible, high quality national health service general dental service. We will continue to take the action necessary to meet that commitment.

Mental Health Services (Sheffield)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on community mental health services in Sheffield. [36061]

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities are responsible for ensuring that a comprehensive range of services is provided to meet the health needs of their local population within available resources. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Sheffield health authority for details of community mental health services in Sheffield.

In-patient Operations (Costs)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of a NHS in-patient operation; how many were performed in the last year and five years ago; and if he will make a statement. [36064]

Mr. Horam: In 1994–95, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 3,556,048 ordinary admissions—that is, excluding day cases—in all specialties in England, where an operation was recorded, compared with 3,349,095 in 1990–91.

We do not collect information on the average cost of an operation.

Cardiac Rehabilitation Units

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the development of cardiac rehabilitation units. [36659]

Mr. Horam: It is for health authorities to identify cardiac rehabilitation needs, and for providers of health care to meet those needs within available resources. The Department of Health is providing funding to the British Association of Cardiac Rehabilitation and will continue to encourage the development of the service.

Radiological Emergencies (Planning)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Prime Minister's letter of 8 January, to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what consideration he has given to evidence regarding stable iodine prophylaxis, in relation to United Kingdom health service planning for radiological emergencies. [36644]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 March at column 487.

Obstetrics and Gynaecology (Consultant Posts)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many consulting posts in obstetrics and gynaecology were unfilled at the latest date for which figures are available; [36943]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of consultancy posts in obstetrics and gynaecology which have remained unfilled for a period of three months;[36944]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of consultancy posts in obstetrics and gynaecology which have been vacant for a period of (a) six months and (b) between six and 12 months. [36945]

Mr. Malone: In September 1994, there were 23 vacant consultant posts in obstetrics and gynaecology. Information is not available centrally on the period for which posts are vacant.

Information for September 1995 will be available shortly.

Local Community Care Charters

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities have published local community care charters. [37604]

Mr. Bowis: I understand that almost all the local authorities in England have published their own local charters.

NHS Advertising

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 237, on advertising costs, if he will publish such information as is available. [37698]

Mr. Malone: No data are available which separately identify advertising expenditure. The available data include information about a range of expenditure such as recruitment advertising, health promotion initiatives and measures to improve local accountability such as the production of annual reports and information about services.

The information available is as follows:

Expenditure which includes advertising by health authorities and NHS trusts in England by region

Consultancy Index

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of (a) adverse reports from employers made to his Department's consultancy index for each year since 1979 and (b) notifications from the police for convictions for each year since 1979. [36707]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 11 July 1996]: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Non-Hodgkin's Lymphoma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been diagnosed with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in the United Kingdom since 1990 in the age groups (a) 20 to 30 years and (b) 30 to 45 years. [35858]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

Data are not available for the age groups requested. However, the numbers of registrations of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in the United Kingdom in 1990, the latest year for which data are available, in the standard age groups (a) 20 to 29 years and (b) 30 to 44 years are as follows:

| Age groups | Number of registrations[1] |
|---|---|
| 20–29 | 166 |
| 30–44 | 609 |

SOCIAL SECURITY

Earnings Disregard

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the costs of extending the child care disregard to claimants of income support in each of the cases where (a) one child in the family is aged under 11 years and (b) the disregard is applicable to (i) each child aged under 11 years, (ii) one child in the family under five years, (iii) each child aged under five years, (iv) one child in respect of whom a disabled child's premium is payable, (v) each child in respect of whom a disabled child's premium is payable and (vi) each child in a family irrespective of age; [34237]

(2) what is his estimate of the cost to public funds of ignoring (a) travel-to-work expenses and (b) reasonable child care expenses from earnings before the earnings disregard is applied to (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit and (iii) council tax benefit; and how many people would gain from these changes. [34230]

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated cost of ignoring travel to work costs before the earnings disregard is applied in income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit, and the numbers who would gain from this is set out in the table.

Costs are estimated using the 1994 quarterly statistical enquiry and the 1991, 1992, 1993 family expenditure surveys, uprated to 1996–97 levels. Information on travel-to-work costs is taken from the 1994–95 family resources survey. This data should be interpreted with caution, as no figures are collected directly on costs of running cars or motorcycles. Instead, costs are estimated using mileage rates—42p per mile for cars and 9p per mile for motorcycles. Outlying cases have been ignored.

| Cost of disregarding travel to work costs | Costs £ million | Gainers |
|---|---|---|
| Income Support | 15 | 40,000 |
| Housing Benefit | 75 | 170,000 |
| Council Tax Benefit | 25 | 180,000 |

1. Costs are rounded to the nearest £5 million, gainers to the nearest 10,000. Estimates are very general as they are based on information on average travel-to-work expenses for benefit recipients.
2. Figures for income support include the cost of jobseeker's allowance from October 1996.
3. Behavioural effects have not been measured.

The costs of registered child care of up to £60 a week for families with at least one child aged under 11 are already disregarded in housing benefit and council tax benefit as well as in family credit and disability working allowance. Income support is not an in-work benefit. The number of income support recipients who pay for registered child care is extremely small and the cost, subject to any behavioural effects, of disregarding such expenses is negligible.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department has saved through reducing social security fraud in the last year; and what are the estimates for the forthcoming year. [35481]

Mr. Heald: In 1995–96 the Benefits Agency saved an estimated £715.6 million through detection and prevention of fraud against a target of £680 million. This figure excludes the estimated savings achieved through the security and control programme, which have yet to be finalised.

The target for social security fraud savings during 1996–97 is £1.5 billion. This includes savings from the merged Benefits Agency, Employment Service investigation service, organised fraud investigation and security initiatives within the security and control programme.

Child Support Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list for each of the years since the office was opened the total revenue collected by the Child Support Agency office in Dudley; [36332]

(2) if he will list the number of (a) permanent and (b) casual or temporary staff employed by the Child Support Agency office in Dudley in each year since the office was opened; [36330]

(3) if he will list the total number of claims received by the Child Support Agency office in Dudley in each year since the office was opened; [36329]

(4) if he will list for each of the years since the office was opened the total running cost budget for the Child Support Agency office in Dudley; [36333]

(5) if he will list the average response time in respect of (a) written inquiries and (b) telephone inquiries for the Child Support Agency office in Dudley. [36331]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 12 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Dudley Child Support Agency Centre (CSAC).

The staffing figures you have requested for Dudley CSAC are shown in table 1 of the attached set of tables.

It is not possible to provide figures for the total number of claims received in the precise form requested. This is because since the Agency commenced operations, there has been a change in responsibility for initial maintenance assessment work from the CSACs to the Field offices, and changes to the geographical boundaries of responsibility of Dudley CSAC. Approximate figures showing the number of maintenance applications received by the Dudley CSAC for the first three years of operation are shown in table 2.

The Agency does not collect information on average response times to telephone calls or written correspondence. The statistical data collected in this area is gathered to monitor performance against Agency Charter Standards. The charter standards are: to respond to 80% of telephone calls within 20 seconds and to respond to written enquiries within 10 working days. Available information is shown in table 3.

The available information on the total running costs of the Dudley Centre, and child maintenance payments collected by the Centre or arranged by them for direct payment between the parents concerned are shown in table 4. Running costs are made up of Staff costs and Non-Staff costs. The maintenance collected figure includes cash receipts and Benefit Agency deductions. Figures on the amount of maintenance arranged were not collated in the first year of the Agency. During 1994/95, £111 million of maintenance was arranged by the Agency. It is not possible to break this figure down into the amounts contributed by each individual Centre, but a proportionate share is attributable to the Dudley Centre. In 1995/96 a scan of the Child Support Computer System was able to identify maintenance arranged by individual CSAC and this figure is shown.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if representatives of the Office of the Data Protection Registrar are attending, or have been asked to attend meetings with representatives of (a) the Child Support Agency, the DSS and (b) the Information Technology Services Agency to discuss major upgrading or replacement of the current EDS Ltd. child support computer system. [36174]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 12 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency Computer System.

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency, I have regular meetings with the Data Protection Registrar. These meetings address all data Protection issues relating to the Agency, including any proposed changes to the Child Support Computer System.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the Child Support Agency's policy on retaining data about clients on the child support computer system after those clients' cases have been officially closed; [36184]

(2) what operational reasons the Child Support Agency has to retain data about clients on the child support computer system after those clients' cases have been officially closed; [36182]

(3) in what circumstances Child Support Agency staff may access archived data in respect of discontinued or closed data; [36185]

(4) what legislative requirement there is for the Child Support Agency to retain data about clients on the child support computer system after those clients' cases have been officially closed; [36181]

(5) how long the Child Support Agency normally retains data about clients on the child support computer system after the client's case has been officially closed; [36183]

(6) if the CSA deletes data about clients from the child support computer system once the clients' cases have been closed; [36232]

(7) if he will indicate the difference between CSA classifications of suspended, cleared without assessment and closed; [36233]

(8) what definition of archived is used by the CSA; [36234]

(9) how many of the cases so far taken on by the CSA are now officially closed; [36235]

(10) in how many of those cases that have been officially closed by the CSA, data are still held on the child support computer system. [36236]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 12 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency Computer System (CSCS) and the cases held on it.

It is best to start by defining some of the terms you have used or asked about.

Closed cases: Cases where no further action is to be taken by the Agency unless or until a repeat Child Maintenance claim is made. Typical reasons include reconciliation of the absent part and the parent with care where no maintenance payments are outstanding; paternity not established; death of one of the parties; benefit claim ended by the parent with care; or the withdrawal of an application by a private client. No action will occur automatically on cases that are closed, except for weeding and archiving of data.

Cases suspended: A term used when action on assessing maintenance has to stop temporarily until a particular issue is resolved, for example, a dispute over paternity or where the whereabouts of an absent parent cannot be traced. In other circumstances a case may be ready to be closed completely but some accounting action is still required; it will therefore remain open for this action to be taken but no assessment action can be carried out on it.

Cases cleared without assessment: As for "closed", but in circumstances where an initial assessment was never made, for example a decision that there is no prima facie evidence which might lead to the establishment of paternity; the Agency has no jurisdiction; or the prompt withdrawal of a claim to benefit by the parent with care.

Weeding: Weeding is the deletion of particular items of data under specified rules from the Child Support Computer System. This data cannot be retrieved.

Archiving: Archiving is the transfer of particular items of data under specified rules from the online system to a separate storage medium. The data is transferred to disk and if needed can be printed out on paper (a hard copy), but can never be retrieved back on to the CSCS. The facility to access archived material is restricted to staff with the appropriate security profiles. There are a total of 76 security profiles for access to information; only 16 profiles have access to archived information.

There is no legislative requirement for the Agency to retain data after cases are closed. Operationally it is sensible to maintain a record of previous dealings with the Agency for an optimum length of time. Given that a claim may need to be re-opened up to the point where any qualifying child involved reaches the age of 19, this is going to be for a period of years, not months or weeks. There is also the issue of the sensitive nature of some of the information, for example, where paternity has been disputed, or a DNA test has been carried out, or the Agency has accepted "Good Cause" for not pursuing a case. It is in the best interests of clients to keep these records for quite some time to avoid the need to go over the same ground again in the future. We also need to ensure our records contribute properly to the prevention of Social Security fraud and abuse.

We have yet to decide for how long records will be kept, but after 3 years of operations it is already clear that significant numbers of repeat child maintenance applications are going to be made on closed cases. We must strike the balance between our business needs, general DSS requirements, Data Protection legislation and the needs and best interests of our clients.

There are approximately 650,000 closed cases on the computer system at the moment. At present all closed cases are retained, but a programme to introduce weeding and archiving of data has begun. This process leaves a basic record on the system to show that there has been contact with the person concerned, but the details are archived and will not be accessible through the system.

In the event that the Agency recommences dealings with a client whose details are archived, authorised users can request a hard copy of the archived data to ensure that all relevant information is available and the client is not being asked unnecessarily to provide the same details a second time.

I hope all this is helpful.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what would be the costs of modifying the original Child Support Agency computer system to accommodate the proposed departures system and other regulatory changes; [36176]

(2) what is the forecast cost of replacing the existing child support computer system to accommodate the proposed departures system and other regulatory changes. [36177]

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if representatives of the office of the Data Protection Registrar (a) have been invited to meet or (b) have met representatives of (i) the Child Support Agency, (ii) the Department of Social Security and (iii) the Information Technology Services Agency to discuss major upgrading or replacement of the current child support computer system. [36862]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 12 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency Computer System.

The existing Child Support Computer system (CSCS) has been upgraded to incorporate the new functions associated with the Departures scheme. The enhancements were supplied by the existing CSCS supplier, EDS, working as part of a joint development team of Child Support Agency, Information Technology Services Agency and EDS staff.

The implications of other regulatory changes on the CSCS will continue to be considered as part of the impact analysis process when details of such changes emerge. Any further development or upgrade of CSCS that is considered necessary following analysis will be incorporated in the ongoing programme of system amendments. It is supported by existing system development contracts with a number of external suppliers.

The costs of the upgrades and enhancements are "commercial in confidence".

The possibility of wholly replacing the existing Child Support Computer System to accommodate the departures system and other regulatory changes was not considered as either necessary or a practical solution. Therefore the extensive work needed to provide a forecast cost for this activity has not been commissioned.

I hope this is helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of claimants of (a) incapacity benefits, (b) disability living allowance, (c) attendance allowance and (d) disability working allowance in (i) Crewe and Nantwich and (ii) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36345]

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the number of claimants of (a) Incapacity Benefits, (b) Disability Living Allowance, (c) Attendance Allowance and (d) Disability Working Allowance in (i) Crewe and Nantwich and (ii) Cheshire for each of the last five years.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is shown in Annex A, B and C.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Annex A

Incapacity Benefit (IB)

Statistical data for IB claims is collated at District level, the boundaries of which do not correspond with constituency boundaries or specific geographical areas.

South Cheshire District includes the BA's offices of Chester, Crewe (which covers Nantwich), Ellesmere Port and Northwich. Figures for this District are shown in the following list:

1991–1992: 19,675

1992–1993: 22,334

1993–1994: 23,756

1994–1995: 25,552

1995–1996: 26,929

Cheshire covers the following BA Districts South Cheshire, Sale and East Cheshire, North Cheshire, Stockport and Tameside District Offices. Figures for these Districts are shown in the following list:

1991–1992: 73,389

1992–1993: 83,574

1993–1994: 90,926

1994–1995: 97,258

1995–1996: 101,040

All figures are provisional and subject to change.

Annex B

Disability Living Allowance (DLA)

The figures for DLA are rounded to the nearest hundred and are only available for the latest four years. This is because the data for 1992 would not be reliable due to the conversion of existing Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance data onto the new DLA computer system. The figures refer to successful claims only. The totals of unsuccessful claims are not available.

| | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 | 1996 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Crewe and Nantwich | 2,000 | 2,100 | 2,600 | 2,900 |
| Cheshire | 23,700 | 25,600 | 29,900 | 33,200 |

Figures as at 31 May each year.

Attendance Allowance (AA)

The figures for AA are rounded to the nearest hundred and are only available for the latest two years only due to incomplete post code information held on system prior to this date. The figures refer to successful claims only. The totals of unsuccessful claims are not available.

| | 1995 | 1996 |
|---|---|---|
| Crewe and Nantwich | 2,400 | 2,400 |
| Cheshire | 19,200 | 18,900 |

1995 figures at 30 November 1995 due to data problems associated with on-line conversion to the computer system.
1996 figures as at 31 May 1996.
All figures are provisional and subject to change.

Annex C

Disability Working Allowance (DWA)

Statistical data for DWA claims is collated at BA office level, the boundaries of which do not correspond with constituency boundaries or specific geographical areas.

The following figures refer to successful claims only. The totals of unsuccessful claims are not available. The figures are given in the form of cumulative successful claims since 1992:

Crewe BA office: 37

Cheshire: 281

The BA office at Crewe covers Nantwich.

Cheshire includes details for the following local offices: Chester, Crewe, Ellesmere Port, Hyde, Macclesfield, Manchester/Sale, Northwich, Stockport North, Stockport South, Warrington, Widnes and Wilmslow.

All figures given are provisional and subject to amendment.

Social Fund Loans

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of applications for social fund loans in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36337]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the number of applicants for Social Fund loans in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years.

The information is not available in the format requested. With the creation of the Benefits Agency (BA) in April 1991, former departmental local offices were grouped into Districts. Statistical data for SF loans is only collected at District level, the boundaries of which are not the same. Therefore, the information is not available exclusively for Crewe, Nantwich or Cheshire.

Crewe and Nantwich form part of South Cheshire District, which also has offices at Chester, Ellesmere Port and Northwich. The attached Annex gives information for this District and also for the Districts of Sale & East Cheshire, North Cheshire, Stockport and Tameside which between them cover the rest of the Cheshire area.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Annex: Loan applications for period 1991–92 to 1995–96

| District | 1991–92 | 1992–93 | 1993–94 | 1994–95 | 1995–96 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| North Cheshire | 14,511 | 17,200 | 18,725 | 20,968 | 21,526 |
| Sale and East Cheshire | 5,699 | 7,250 | 7,826 | 8,900 | 10,534 |
| South Cheshire | 17,633 | 20,215 | 21,758 | 19,913 | 19,006 |
| Stockport | 9,906 | 11,201 | 12,954 | 11,591 | 11,236 |
| Tameside | 10,085 | 12,486 | 12,618 | 13,201 | 13,041 |

Figures are provisional and subject to change. Sale and East Cheshire District has offices at Sale, Macclesfield and Wilmslow; North Cheshire District has offices at Warrington and Widnes; Stockport District has offices at Stockport and Buxton; and Tameside District has offices at Hyde and Ashton under Lyne.

Income Support

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of claimants for income support in (a) Crew and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36334]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the number of claimants for Income Support in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years.

The information is not available in the format requested as the Benefits Agency (BA) collates statistics by BA District Offices. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries or this specific geographical area.

The information available is shown on the attached table and relates to the actual number of Income Support claims received for the financial years 1991–92 to 1995–96. Not all claims received will have resulted in an award of benefit.

South Cheshire District includes the BA's offices of Cheshire, Crewe (which covers Nantwich), Ellesmere Port and Northwich. The data for Cheshire includes the Tameside and Stockport Districts. These Districts include areas which are outside Cheshire.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Actual number of income support claims

| Financial years | South Cheshire district[1] | Cheshire[2] |
|---|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 34,749 | 127,667 |
| 1992–93 | 33,310 | 123,993 |
| 1993–94 | 31,032 | 116,227 |
| 1994–95 | 31,873 | 116,553 |
| 1995–96 | 30,558 | 111,296 |

[1] South Cheshire District includes the offices of Chester, Crewe (which covers Nantwich), Ellesmere Port and Northwich.
[2] Cheshire consists of the BA Districts of South Cheshire, Sale and East Cheshire (which includes the offices of Sale, Macclesfield and Wilmslow), North Cheshire (which includes the offices of Warrington and Widnes), Stockport (which includes the offices of Stockport and Buxton) and Tameside (which includes the offices of Hyde and Ashton).
The data, which has been provided by the BA's Central Data Unit, is provisional and may be subject to change.
Not all claims will have resulted in an award of benefit.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time that clients in Benefits Agency offices have to wait in the office to obtain an interview. [36167]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the average length of time that clients in Benefits Agency (BA) offices have to wait in the office to obtain an interview.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency does not specifically monitor the length of time customers have to wait to obtain an interview.

The BA commissions independent customer research and the National Customer Survey provides an independent assessment of customer perception of, and satisfaction with, the service they have received from the BA during the previous year. The 1995 results show that the average waiting time for the majority of customers is 15 minutes.

The BA Customer Charter sets the standard that customers should be seen by the receptionist within 10 minutes (or 30 minutes at exceptionally busy times). Initial waiting times have been monitored independently and results for October 1994 to September 1995, the latest figures available, show that customers are seen, on average, within 11 minutes.

The Charter, including the standard on caller waiting times is displayed in local office reception areas and local managers have the overall responsibility for ensuring that customers are seen within that standard.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many (a) full-time doctors, (b) part-time doctors and (c) civil servants are expected to be employed by the successful bidders for the Benefits Agency medical service; [36912]

(2) how many (a) adjudication officers and (b) clerical officers are expected to (i) be relocated within the Benefits Agency, (ii) be employed by the contractor and (iii) be made redundant, as a result of the contractorisation of the Benefits Agency medical service. [36900]

Mr. Burt: During the course of the contractorisation of the Benefits Agency medical service, all permanent administrative civil servants will have to indicate whether they wish to transfer to the private sector or wish to be redeployed within the Department of Social Security. This options exercise is due to take place towards the end of the year, and until the results are known it is impossible to give definitive numbers of staff who will be either redeployed, relocated or transferred to the private sector.

All doctors, whether full or part-time, and all administrative staff employed on a casual basis or on fixed-term appointments, are expected to transfer to the successful bidder or bidders.

No staff will be made redundant as a result of the contractorisation.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance indicators are to be included in the tender for the Benefits Agency medical service. [36906]

Mr. Burt: Targets and performance indicators for the private sector contractors have not yet been specified.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the successful contractor for the Benefits Agency medical service will be responsible for (a) employing doctors on a full-time basis and (b) paying a fee to part-time doctors; and what is the expected administration cost in each case. [36909]

Mr. Burt: It is expected that the successful contractor or contractors will be responsible for employing full and part-time doctors. It is not possible to detail any future administrative costs, but experience of similar exercises within the Department has identified that efficiencies will be gained in all cost areas of the contract or contracts.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the contractorisation of the Benefits Agency medical service includes (a) medical advice and scrutiny, (b) contact with general practitioners for further information about a claimant, (c) medical assessment and examination, (d) disablement questions currently assessed by adjudicating medical authorities and (e) assessment of war pensions. [36901]

Mr. Burt: The current scope of the undertaking to contractorise the Benefits Agency medical service includes medical advice and scrutiny, contact with general practitioners for further information about a claimant, medical assessment and examination, but does not include disablement questions currently assessed by adjudicating medical authorities, or assessment of war pensions.

Benefits Agency Freeline

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from the Disablement Income Group in regard to the planned closure of the Benefits Agency freeline; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement. [35516]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Alfred Morris, dated 15 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what representations he has received from the Disablement Income Group in regard to the planned closure of the Benefits Agency Freeline; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

The BA has received two letters from the Disablement Income Group (DIG) concerning the closure of the BA Freeline, one of which was addressed to the Secretary of State for Social Security and passed to me for reply. I have replied to a letter dated 27 June a copy of which is attached. The second letter was received from DIG in Scotland and has been passed to the Director of Operations with responsibility for Scotland, Mr John Lutton for reply.

The Benefit Enquiry Line for people with disabilities is not affected by the decision to close Freeline. The BA recognises that people with disabilities have special needs and may have difficulties contacting their local office.

The closure of Freeline will allow resources to be refocused so that the customer is in touch with the staff who administer their claims or who can directly link the benefits available with the specific personal details of the customer.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of the DSS freeline service. [37407]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) on 21 June, Official Report, column 629.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the annual cost in the payment of unemployment benefit for each year since 1989, adjusted for inflation; and what is the predicted figure for the years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99. [36925]

Industrial Injuries Benefit

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of industrial injuries benefit paid to recipients after retirement age. [37405]

Mr. Roger Evans: There are no plans to change existing arrangements. Industrial injuries benefits are paid to recipients over pensionable age.

Executive Agencies

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will make available the 1995–96 annual reports and accounts for each of his next steps agencies. [37871]

Mr. Lilley: I have today laid before Parliament the 1995–96 annual reports and accounts for the Benefits, Child Support, Contributions, Information Technology Services and War Pensions Agencies. Copies of these, and the Resettlement Agency's final annual report, have been placed in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the annual value of housing benefit savings, (b) the proportion of this which he expects local authority social services departments to replace and (c) the number of claimants affected by the implementation of the draft Housing Benefit (General) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996. [34113]

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 24 June 1996]: The intention behind the proposed amending legislation was to confirm the policy intention, and the effect of existing housing benefit case law, regarding the extent to which housing benefit should meet service charges. This would have only clarified, rather than changed, our policy on the inclusion of service charges in the rent paid by housing benefits.

In reply to a parliamentary question from the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 8 July, Official Report, column 63, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State stated that he had withdrawn the proposed Housing Benefit (General) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations, pending an interdepartmental review of the funding of supported accommodation. As part of the review, we shall consider the likely effects and the numbers involved had we proceeded with the legislation. We originally estimated that the proposal would have affected housing benefit payments in the region of £50 million to some 26,000 people.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Calf Brains

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if calf brains are permitted to be used in food produced for human consumption; and if he will make a statement. [32270]

Mrs. Browning: Under the Specified Bovine Material (Number 2) Order 1996, brains from calves over six months of age must be destroyed and so cannot enter the food chain. The brains of calves under six months of age can be sold for human consumption. However, the Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984, as amended, do not permit brains from calves under six months to be used except in meat products cooked during manufacture.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what manner the meat, bonemeal and other derivatives of cattle culled due to BSE infection is disposed of; and if he will make a statement. [32406]

Mrs. Browning: All BSE suspects are slaughtered on farm and the entire carcase is disposed of by incineration.

Fisheries

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the treaty articles of regulations or directives of the European Community which would govern the operation of a fisheries enterprise whose ultimate ownership was in Austria or Luxembourg under the registration and flag of another member state within European Community waters. [37083]

Mr. Baldry: Any fishing vessel registered in the United Kingdom would have to comply with the requirements of our merchant shipping legislation, which conforms with the general provisions of the treaty of the European Community. That legislation, which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Transport, requires, among other things, that a fishing vessel shall not be registered unless it is managed, and its operations controlled and directed from within the United Kingdom. I cannot comment on the legislation that operates in other member states.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals or representations he has received from interested environmental organisations within the United Kingdom concerning modifications to the existing set-aside arrangements of the European Community which have the object of conserving beneficial wildlife at minimal or no additional cost to the scheme; and what actions he or other Government representatives have taken consequent to their receipt. [37344]

Mr. Baldry: Following consultations with farming and conservation organisations earlier this year, changes to the set-aside rules were announced in April aimed at benefiting wildlife, particularly ground-nesting birds. The principle changes announced were:

(i) a relaxation in the areas of set-aside which may be left uncut; and

(ii) from 1997, a ban on cutting set-aside between 15 April and 1 July when a non-selective herbicide has been used, and a ban on cultivating set-aside land before 1 July.

We have also pressed the European Commission to allow narrower strips of land to count as set-aside to enhance conservation in field margins.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what communications he has had with the Agriculture Commissioner concerning the allegations by Gilbert Castille in respect of the publication of results of scientific research into BSE. [37736]

Mrs. Browning: The Commission has made its views on this subject perfectly clear in the press and I see no reason to raise this matter with it. It is an internal matter for the Commission.

The policy of the British Government has been to be open in publishing research results in relation to BSE and our track record clearly shows that that is precisely what we have done.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what resources are being devoted by his Department to bio-assay-based research into pre-clinical diagnosis of BSE in cattle. [32325]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: In transmissible spongiform encephalopathy research, bioassays are used to detect infectivity and can therefore be used as a diagnostic test in their own right. They are being used to diagnose pre-clinical infection in experiments where animals have been experimentally challenged with BSE and are probably incubating the disease. Also MAFF has approved a project to develop a transgenic mouse carrying the cattle prior-protein gene which may eventually result in a bio-assay that is more sensitive and faster than existing bio-assays. Such mice may eventually play a role in the development of a pre-clinical bioassay. The support allocated to all these research projects in 1996–97 is £0.7 million.

Fishery, Weymouth

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer, Official Report, 9 May 1996 column 361, if he will place in the Library a copy of the evidence which suggest that the purification practice operated by a fishery in Weymouth poses an unacceptable risk to human health. [37545]

Mr. Baldry: The reasons for the statement in Official Report, column 361 have been outlined in correspondence with the hon. Member, dated 16 and 21 May and 4 July, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Oyster Farming

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food during which periods since 1966 extended water re-use systems have been accepted practice for the farming of oysters. [37466]

Mr. Baldry: The farming of oysters does not involve the re-use of seawater. The re-use of seawater for shellfish purification for periods extending up to one month has been accepted practice in some UK plants for a number years.

Tuna

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value of the tuna landed by the Cornish driftnet boats in 1995; to which countries this tuna was exported; and what was the cost of surveillance of the albacore tuna driftnet fishery (a) in port and (b) at sea, by United Kingdom and EU authorities. [37747]

Mr. Baldry: In 1995, UK vessels landed a total of 196 tonnes of albacore tuna with a first sale value of £335,000. Most of the catch was either landed in, or exported to, France.

The cost to the United Kingdom of surveillance of the 1995 albacore tuna driftnet fishery at sea was approximately £0.6 million. The limited costs incurred in port have not been separately identified. Details of surveillance expenditure by the Commission and other member states are not available.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what measures his Department is taking to prevent the (a) dolphin and (b) other wildlife mortalities recorded in 1995 in Cornish driftnets in the albacore tuna fishery; [37749]

(2) if his Department is funding observation of the wildlife bycatch in the United Kingdom albacore tuna driftnet fishery in 1996. [37748]

Mr. Baldry: Measures are again being taken both in port and at sea to ensure that the drift nets used by UK vessels in the albacore tuna fishery do not exceed the maximum legal length of 2.5 km. The Government have, in addition, encouraged the industry to leave gaps between net panels because skippers have said that these act as "dolphin doors" thereby reducing the dolphin by-catch. We have proposed to the European Commission that the rules be amended so as further to encourage the use of "dolphin doors".

The Government are funding research into the use of acoustic devices in nets to act as deterrents to marine mammals. They have also made funds available to the sea mammal research unit in the event of it being able to reach agreement with the skippers concerned to conduct further observation work on the wildlife bycatch in the UK albacore tuna drifnet fishery.

Cattle Slaughter

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the evidence evaluated by this Department underlying his assessment that no risk to human health will be posed by the slaughter of cattle over the age of 30 months in abattoirs which also slaughter cattle for human consumption; and if he will set out the extra precautionary measures which will be put in place. [28326]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 7 May 1996]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statements issued by the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee following meetings on 20 and 24 March. These statements included recommendations on the need for deboning of cattle over 30 months in licensed plants supervised by the meat Hygiene Service, and that the trimmings must be classified as specified bovine offal. There was no suggestion that deboned meat from these animals would pose any additional risk to the public. Indeed, the committee concluded that if these measures were carried out, the risk from the eating beef would be likely to be extremely small.

The Government took immediate action to implement the recommendations made by SEAC on the reclassification of SBO—through the introduction of the Specified Bovine Material Order 1996, which came into effect on 29 March. SEAC's advice for the establishment of specialist deboning plants for meat from animals over 30 months of age were not carried through; instead, in order to restore consumer confidence, the Government went further than the committee's recommendation and prohibited meat from animals over 30 months old from entering the human and animal feed chain.

The market support measures introduced by the Community under Commission Regulation 716/96 in respect of these animals required complete destruction of animals brought to market over 30 months and imposed detailed rules on the handling and processing of the resulting animal products.

This regulation imposed far more stringent conditions for the disposal of 30-month cattle than was ever envisaged by SEAC. Nevertheless, the Intervention Board executive agency, which is responsible for the running of the scheme, has taken scrupulous care in ensuring that the scheme rules comply in eveyr respect to the requirements of the regulation.

For example, scheme animals can be slaughtered only in designated slaughterhouses which have been checked by the state veterinary service to ensure that facilities are adequate to separately slaughter and dispose of animal material from scheme and non-scheme animals. No carcases or other products destined for human consumption can be present on days when scheme animals are being slaughtered and processed, unless sufficient physical barriers are present to ensure complete physical separation. Abbatoirs should accept for slaughter only cattle which can be disposed of to approved renderers or incinerators on the day of processing. In addition, staining of SBM and non-SBM is required as an additional precaution to ensure that there is no likelihood of any of this material re-entering the human or animal food chains.

There are many more rules which have to be followed. These are set out in the IBEA's scheme leaflet which is available on request.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Information Regulations 1992

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the organisations subject to the Environmental Information Regulations 1992; and what plans he has to include the water companies under these requirements; [37437]

(2) if he will make a statement on the application of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 to water companies. [37436]

Mr. Clappison: My Department issued guidance on the implementation of the Environmental Information Regulations in December 1992. The guidance indicated what types of organisations would be likely to fall within the scope of the regulations, and stated that organisations would need to take a view themselves as to whether they were relevant persons and therefore subject to the requirements of the regulations. It is not for Ministers to interpret the law; in cases of dispute, it is for the courts to decide.

Agenda 21

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the local authorities which have designated an officer responsible for Agenda 21; [37508]

(2) if he will list the local authorities which have launched projects on sustainability under Agenda 21; [37510]

(3) if he will list the local authorities which have carried out environmental audits under Agenda 21; [37509]

(4) if he will list the local authorities which have adopted an action plan for Agenda 21. [37507]

Mr. Clappison: The Department does not hold this information. Statistical information about Local Agenda 21 is contained in the 1996 survey of Local Agenda 21 activity in local government in the UK. The survey was carried out by the environment resource and information centre, university of Westminster, for the Local Government Management Board, on behalf of the Local Agenda 21 UK steering group. Copies of the survey have been placed in the House Library.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress by local authorities on Local Agenda 21. [37506]

Mr. Clappison: Good progress is being made at local level by local authorities in partnership with all sectors of their communities to develop local strategies for sustainable development, through the Local Agenda 21 process. More than 300 local authorities in the UK have embarked on the process and the end of 1996 is the target for production of these strategies.

The 1996 Local Agenda 21 survey is based on a 58 per cent. response from 478 local authorities. It shows that more than 90 per cent. of respondents are participating in Local Agenda 21. More than 83 per cent. are committed to produce a strategy document, more than 40 per cent. by the end of 1996.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list showing the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37324]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is not held centrally by my Department and is obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors underlie reductions in stocks of high-level nuclear waste between 1991 and 1994 compared with the period 1986 to 1991, as set out in figure 15 of "The United Kingdom National Environmental Health Plan", Cm 3323. [37387]

Mr. Clappison: The decrease results from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Agency concentrating by evaporation the high-level waste liquors that it stores at Dounreay.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what benefits accrue to an area from its designation as an enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement. [36070]

Sir Paul Beresford: The benefits available to businesses during the 10-year life of an enterprise zone are the following: 100 per cent. allowances for corporation tax purposes for capital expenditure on industrial and commercial buildings; exemption from the national non-domestic rate on industrial and commercial property; a simplified planning regime; speedier administration of residual statutory planning controls; exemption from industrial training levies and from the requirement to supply information to industrial training boards; processing of applications for certain customs facilities as a priority, and the relaxation of certain criteria; and the reduction of Government requests for statistical information.

Since the EZ scheme was introduced in 1981, the Government have developed a range of alternative schemes to promote regeneration and growth. These are generally better targeted and can be implemented more rapidly than the enterprise zone scheme which, in part as a result of EC regulations, can take up to three years to designate. Enterprise zones can affect economic activity over a wide area through displacement effects and are not the appropriate regeneration measure in most circumstances. In December 1987 the Government announced that the enterprise zone scheme would not be extended other than in exceptional circumstances.

Mineworkers

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that mineworkers employed underground by sub-contractors are covered by the same safety regulations as those employed by the mine owner, particularly in relation to free medical checks. [37632]

Sir Paul Beresford: Mineworkers employed underground by sub-contractors are subject to the same health, safety and welfare provisions as those employed by the mine owner. In particular, it is the duty of any employer of persons at work at a mine, including sub-contractors, to ensure that they are provided with such health surveillance as is appropriate. Section 9 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 provides that no employer shall charge any employee for anything provided in pursuance of a relevant statutory provision.

Licences

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the licences issued by his Department; for what purpose they are issued; and what are the administrative costs involved for each. [37626]

Sir Paul Beresford: Licences are issued by, or on behalf of, my Department in respect of the following:

waste management—to ensure that waste is disposed of, recovered or kept without harming human health or the environment, in accordance with the EC framework directive on waste; radioactive materials and waste—to control the retention and use of radioactive materials and waste, to safeguard workers, the public and the environment from the detrimental effects of radioactive materials and waste; water abstraction—to provide for the proper management of water resources;

the control of discharges into water and sewers—to control water pollution;

the operation of potentially polluting processes—to control the emissions from these processes to the air, water and/or land.

the release or marketing of genetically modified organisms—to ensure proper consideration is given to human health and safety and to environmental protection, before GMOs are released into the environment or sold as products; hazardous substances—to control, and minimise, the risk of accidents resulting from the keeping of hazardous substances at particular locations;

CITES—to control the import and export of endangered species; birds—to control the killing, taking and sale of birds from the wild;

zoos—to ensure that the Secretary of State's standards of modern zoo practice are met in respect of animal welfare and public safety; caravan and camping sites—to ensure that sites are properly equipped and run in the interests of occupiers and of general amenity; navigation—to enable licence holders to use their boats on specified waterways; asbestos—to control most work with asbestos insulation and/or coating, including stripping and removal; petroleum—to ensure that petroleum is stored in a manner which minimises danger to workers and the public; explosives—to help ensure explosives are manufactured and stored in a manner which minimises danger to workers and the public, and to ensure adequate security measures being taken to prevent theft or misuse.

In addition, the Department of the Environment has responsibility for arrangements relating to offshore oil and gas safety cases. To ensure public confidence in these areas of high hazard, safety arrangements must be accepted by the Health and Safety Executive before certain functions may be undertaken for the safe operation of offshore installations and gas transmission systems.

HSE has administrative responsibility for nuclear licences and railway safety cases. Ministerial responsibility rests with my right hon. Friends the President of the Board of Trade and the Secretary of State for Transport, respectively.

Central records are not maintained to record the administrative costs for the licensing regimes.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37699]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Dogs (Fouling of Land) Act 1996

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to implement the Dogs (Fouling of Land) Act 1996. [38004]

Mr. Clappison: My Department has today invited local authorities and other interested bodies to comment by 13 September on the proposed implementation of this Act. Our aim is that local authorities will be able to use these welcome new powers before the end of this year.

I have placed a copy of the consultation documents in the Library.

Water Regulations Advisory Committee

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the membership of the Water Regulations Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement. [38218]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Professor John Swaffield of Heriot-Watt university, Edinburgh, has accepted my invitation to chair the Water Regulations Advisory Committee. I have formally appointed Professor Swaffield and 10 members of the committee, whose names appear in the list.

The committee's terms of reference are to advise the Secretary of State for the Environment on the requirements of plumbing installations and fittings to be included in regulations made under powers in section 74 of the Water Industry Act 1991 and on other technical matters connected with the regulations.

The regulations will deal with contamination, waste, undue consumption and misuse of water in premises. As part of its remit, the committee will also consider the requirements for water usage by fittings and appliances. This will include advice on such things as WC flush volumes and water used by washing machines and dishwashers.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE WATER REGULATIONS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Chairman:

Prof. J. A. Swaffield

Members:

Mr. J. A. Andrew
Mrs. B. M. Bickley
Mr. S. B. Butler
Mr. R. F. Clayton
Mr. P. Crane
Dr. J. Hall
Mr. P. W. Herbertson
Mr. G. Marsh
Mr. J. Roy
Mr. M. A. Rymill

Waste Dumping at Sea

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what duty the United Kingdom, as a contracting party to the London convention, has to provide assistance to United Kingdom dependent territories in respect of the dumping of industrial waste in the marine environment. [37575]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

The UK ensures that the dependent territories act in accordance with those international obligations, including the London convention of 1972 which the UK has extended to them.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received from the Bermudan Government in respect of their plans to dump asbestos waste in a marine site off Bermuda. [37569]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

The Governor's office in Bermuda is in close contact with us on Bermuda's plans to dispose of asbestos and has kept us fully informed of the options that the Bermudian Government are considering.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37703]

Mr. Streeter: No exercise has been carried out within the Lord Chancellor's Department, Court Service or Public Trust Office to detect fraud by cross-checking the Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit. Consequently, no suspensions, dismissals or prosecutions can be attributed to such checks. However, the Chessington Computer Centre, which provides the payroll service to the Department, and the Department of Social Security have arrangements which are designed to ensure that employees claiming benefit can be identified.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to issue guidance for Departments and agencies on redress under the citizens charter. [38390]

Mr. Freeman: The Office of Public Service issued guidance to Departments and agencies today on redress under the citizens charter. This guidance takes into account the views of the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and those of the citizens charter complaints task force. It provides a framework for Departments and agencies to enable them to provide quick and effective redress when things go wrong.

I am placing a copy of the guidance in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Induction Programme

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what arrangements have been put in hand for an induction programme for new hon. Members. [37820]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Since 1994, the Administration Committee has initiated or endorsed a number of measures to aid the induction process of new hon. Members. Such measures include:

(a) supporting the use of the Members' handbook: as announced in my reply of 13 December 1995 to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), Official Report, column 659, a revised edition has already been issued, which is also available on the PDVN and on disk;

(b) inviting the Board of Management to consider further steps to assist in making new hon. Members aware of the procedures of the House and it services: in response, the Board of Management has produced a video which will be issued to all hon. Members newly elected at the forthcoming general election;

(c) concurring with the Information Committee that the Parliamentary Information Technology Committee be permitted to host an exhibition of IT systems in the Grand Committee Room and the Jubilee Room for new hon. Members: the Communications Directorate, the Department of the Library and the Department of the Official Report will take part in this exhibition;

(d) endorsing a proposal from the Serjeant at Arms that a temporary reception area be situated in the Upper Waiting Hall after the forthcoming general election to enable new hon. Members and their staff to obtain information and advice on the service provided by his Department.

I know that the Departments of the House will also be making their usual arrangements to make newly elected hon. Members aware of the services that they provide. My hon. Friend may wish to consult the Board of Management or individual heads of Departments directly to ascertain what advice and assistance will be provided.

TREASURY

Personal Savings

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of personal savings are held in (a) retail banks, (b) building societies, (c) life companies, (d) friendly societies and (e) other institutions; and what were the corresponding figures 10 years ago. [36465]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Details of personal sector financial assets are published in table 9.1J of "Financial Statistics". The information is also held on the Office for National Statistics database which has recently been updated to 1996 Q1, and includes revisions to earlier years' data. These figures will be included in the July issue of "Financial Statistics" which will be published on 19 July. Both sources are available in the Library. There are no separate data for savings with friendly societies, which are included under life assurance and pension funds. Estimates of the percentage of personal assets held in various savings media in 1985 and 1995 are as follows:

Percentage

| | End-years | |
|---|---|---|
| | 1985 | 1995 |
| Deposits with banks | 9.9 | 10.0 |
| Deposits with building societies | 16.1 | 10.5 |
| Life assurance and pension Funds | 45.1 | 49.1 |

Amounts deposited with building societies have been affected by building societies converting to, and being taken over by, banks.

Unfunded Pension Liabilities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that in all future deliberations of pay review bodies the impact of awards on unfunded pension liabilities is considered and disclosed by each body. [36352]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no plans to instruct all pay review bodies to consider and report on the impact of pay awards on unfunded pension liabilities.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will examine the province of Alberta's new accounting treatment and disclosure of unfunded pension liabilities; and if he will adopt a similar system for United Kingdom accounts disclosure. [36353]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 July at column 371, for each of the main occupational public service pension schemes administered by central Government, a scheme statement will be published as a note attached to the departmental resource account. There is further work to be done on the detail of these statements.

Personal Debt

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the levels of personal debt in the United Kingdom in each year since 1992. [36272]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Details of personal sector financial liabilities (debt) are published in table 9.1J of "Financial Statistics". The information is also held on the Office for National Statistics database which has recently been updated to 1996Q1, and includes revisions to earlier years' data. These figures will be included in the July issue of "Financial Statistics", which will be published on 19 July. Both sources are available in the House of Commons Library. The revised figures for personal sector financial liabilities are as follows:

| End-year | £ billion |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 489.9 |
| 1993 | 505.4 |
| 1994 | 528.8 |
| 1995 | 552.6 |

Public Sector Assets

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of real assets held by the public sector by (a) land, (b) buildings and (c) other. [36578]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Estimates of real assets held by the public sector grouped by the asset types requested are unavailable. Estimates are available for public sector assets, but with a different grouping of assets, in table 12.12 of "United Kingdom National Accounts", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Abortion Statistics

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many abortions have been performed within the North Thames region under the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967; and how many and what percentage of those abortions were performed in an emergency to save the life of the mother. [37010]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The total number of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act to women usually resident in the North Thames health region[1] from 1970 to 1994[2] was 752,736. During this period 19 abortions—zero per cent. of the total number—were performed in an emergency, certified by the operating practitioner as immediately necessary to save the life of the woman[3].

Notes:

[1] Figures are based, where possible, on 1994 health authority boundaries. Other boundary changes have not been reflected in the figures.

[2] Figures for 1968–69 are not held on a comparable basis.

[3] Abortions performed under statutory ground 5 (1970–31 March 1991) and F (1 April 1991–present) i.e. where in the case of emergency it was necessary to save the life of the woman.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many abortions have been performed within the Northern and Yorkshire region under the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967; and how many and what percentage of those abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother. [36927]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The total number of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act to women usually resident in the Northern and Yorkshire health region[1] from 1970 to 1994[2] was 336,549. During this period, 12 abortions—zero per cent. of the total number of abortions performed—were carried out in an emergency, certificated by the operating practitioner as immediately necessary to save the life of the woman[3].

Notes:

[1] Figures are based, where possible, on 1994 health authority boundaries. Other boundary changes have not been reflected in the figures.

[2] Figures for 1968–69 are not held on a comparable basis.

[3] Abortions performed under statutory grounds 5 (1970—31 March 1991) and F (1 April 1991–present) i.e. where in the case of emergency it was necessary to save the life of the woman.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown by gestation of pregnancy of the number of abortions performed in the Northern and Yorkshire region in the latest year for which figures are available. [36929]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The figures presented give a breakdown of the number of abortions performed to women usually resident in the Northern and Yorkshire health region by gestation of pregnancy, for the year 1994[1], the latest year for which figures are available.

| Gestation of pregnancy in weeks | Number of abortions |
|---|---|
| Under 9 | 5,220 |
| 9 to 12 | 9,103 |
| 13 to 19 | 1,735 |
| 20 and over | 201 |
| Not stated | 1 |
| Total | 16,260 |

European Monetary Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact on UK tax rates of UK entry into European monetary union in 1999. [37176]

Mrs. Angela Knight: It is too early to assess the possible impact of joining a single currency on the UK. A full assessment of the costs and benefits will be carried out nearer the time, when the facts are known. Decisions on fiscal policy, including decisions on rates and levels of tax, must remain a matter for member states. These are at the heart of national politics.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the advantages of monetary union to each member of the EU. [37177]

Mrs. Knight: It is too early to assess the possible impact of joining the single currency on the UK. A full assessment of the costs and benefits will be carried out nearer the time, when the facts are known. No assessment has been made of other member states' positions.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list showing the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37315]

Mrs. Angela Knight: During 1995–96 one contract was awarded to KPMG for assistance in the review of pay, grading and appraisal, and one to Coopers and Lybrand in connection with the privatisation programme. No contracts were awarded to any of the other firms during 1995–96, nor have any contracts been awarded to any of the firms this year.

I am unable to provide values for the contracts as this information is commercially confidential.

Income Tax

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the highest rate of tax on income in (a) 1978–79, (b) 1983–84 and (c) 1995–96. [37577]

Mr. Jack: The highest rates of income tax were 83 per cent. on earned income and 98 per cent. on investment income in 1978–79, 60 per cent. on earned income and 75 per cent. on investment income in 1983–84 and 40 per cent. and earned and unearned income in 1995–96.

Trade Unions (Tax Exemptions)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if tax exemptions were claimed by (a) the Joint Industry Board for Electrical Contracting Industry and (b) Scottish Joint Industry Board for Electrical Contracting Industry during the period when they were registered as trade unions. [37560]

Mr. Jack: The provision of the details sought would be in breach of the statutory restrictions on the disclosure of information concerning the affairs of taxpayers, companies and other concerns.

Earnings

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average hourly earnings of part-time male and female workers working less than 16 hours a week, giving the most recent available figures. [37590]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Figures from the labour force survey, winter 1995, show that in Great Britain average hourly earnings for part-time males working less than 16 hours per week were £5.73. Average hourly earnings for part-time females working less than 16 hours per week were £5.67.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 418, what were the average hourly earnings of (a) men and (b) women with total earnings below the national insurance contribution lower earnings limit. [37587]

Mrs. Knight: Figures from the labour force survey, winter 1995, shows that in Great Britain the average hourly earnings for males earning less than the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions were £2.20. Average hourly earnings for females earning less than the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions were £3.29.

Unemployment (North-East)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current unemployment rates in (a) South Tyneside borough council, (b) North Tyneside borough council, (c) Gateshead borough council and (d) Newcastle borough council. [37779]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Percentage rates of claimant unemployment are not available below the level of travel-to-work area except in the case of unitary authorities.

The labour force survey produces unemployment figures based on the internationally standard definition of unemployment recommended by the International Labour Organisation. The LFS shows that in winter 1995–96 the rates of ILO unemployment in the Newcastle and South Tyneside borough council areas were 11.3 per cent. and 15.6 per cent. respectively. This represents the extent of the available information.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37710]

Mr. Jack: The Treasury responds to inquiries made by the Benefits Agency where there are reasonable grounds for suspicion that an individual may be involved in benefit fraud. There have been no such cases among Treasury staff for at least the last five years.

Customs and Excise National Investigation Service

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the conclusions of the fundamental expenditure review of the investigation division of Customs and Excise national investigation service on (a) the preferred location of the regional office to serve the Hampshire area and (b) the need for a fast response team to serve the Hampshire area. [36946]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The fundamental expenditure review carried out on the investigation and intelligence functions of HM Customs and Excise recommended

"the creation of a National Investigation Service organised in regions".

The FER proposed eight or nine regional offices with a headquarters in London, but was not explicit about the location of the regional offices.

The FER also stated:

"The process of "fast response" to detections by AS (Anti-Smuggling) staff will be streamlined to offer the immediate attendance of investigations to add value to every case where possible".

In the case of the central south coast area of England, the investigative first response team will almost certainly be based in Shoreham.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what expenditure has been incurred on seeking office accommodation for a regional office of the national investigation service in Hampshire. [36947]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 July 1996]: No expenses has been incurred in seeking office accommodation specifically in Hampshire. Minimal expenses has been incurred at national and regional level, in seeking options for accommodation to house the NIS staff, including those in the central south coast area.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sum was allocated for the acquisition of offices for a regional office of the national investigation service in Hampshire. [36948]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 July 1996]: No funds were specifically earmarked for any regional office. Implementation of the FER recommendations will take place using funds from the Department's capital allocation.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proposed location of the nearest regional office and fast response team of the national investigation service to parts of Portsmouth and Southampton. [36949]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The nearest NIS office and first specialist investigator response team will almost certainly be located in Shoreham.

Euro Coinage

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has estimated the cost to the Exchequer of running the competition for artists to design the reverse side of the eight denominations of the proposed Euro coinage as advertised in the Royal Mint's press release of 5 July. [37059]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The Royal Mint announced on 5 July the launch of the national heat of a EU-wide competition to design the common faces of Euro coins. The competition is not restricted to artists from countries which have said that they intend to adopt the single currency.

The total prize money being provided by the Royal Mint will amount to £6,000. In addition, the mint will commission a small number of designers and pay for the production of plaster models. These procedures and the level of prizes and fees are in line with the Royal Mint's normal procedures for selecting coin designs. The total administrative costs of running the competition are estimated to be about £35,000. The prizes for the European final of the competition will be financed from the European Community budget, towards which all European Union countries contribute.

The Government are committed to full involvement in preparations for economic and monetary union, including preparatory work on the single currency coinage, to protect the interests of the United Kingdom, including commercial opportunities for the Royal Mint and UK coin designers, whether or not the United Kingdom participates in the third stage of economic and monetary union.

TRANSPORT

Road and Rail Transport (Midlands)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will refer the ownership of road and rail transport in the midlands to the Director General of Fair Trading. [35962]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend has no powers to refer matters to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Bypass Schemes (Yorkshire)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has carried out on the reduction in the number of road accidents resulting from the opening of bypass schemes in Yorkshire in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [36886]

Mr. Norris: There have been five studies carried out on bypass schemes on trunk roads that have opened in Yorkshire in the last five years. Each of the studies covered the first year after the bypass opened. The change in the number of accidents following the opening of the bypasses was as follows:

A65 Settle and Gigglewick Bypass: –1

A65 Addingham bypass: –3

A1079 Market Weighton bypass: +9

A650 Drighlington bypass: –8

A65 Draughton bypass: –1

The accident record on the Market Weighton bypass primarily reflects problems at one particular junction which were identified and addressed at an early stage.

The changes in accidents recorded in these studies in the first year after opening do not necessarily represent the longer-term accident trend on each bypass.

It is for local highway authorities to monitor accidents on non-trunk roads. My Department does not hold information on the reduction in the number of road accidents resulting from the opening of local authority bypass scheme in Yorkshire in the last five years.

Intelligent Transport Systems

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much finance will be invested in the current financial year in the installation of intelligent transport system in the United Kingdom, with particular reference to advanced motorway control technology. [37552]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Thomas McAvoy, dated 17 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question regarding the level of expenditure in the current financial year on intelligent transport systems in the United Kingdom, with particular reference to advanced motorway control technology.

The Highways Agency only keeps information relating to motorways in England. However, we have obtained comparable information from colleagues in the Northern Ireland DoE and the Welsh and Scottish Offices which, taken together, indicate a total forecast expenditure for the United Kingdom in 1996/97 of £75.6m.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the agencies for which his Department is responsible and the costs incurred by each for printing (a) all publications and (b) its annual report in the last year for which figures are available. [37473]

Mr. Norris: The costs incurred by each of the Department's agencies in printing (a) all publications and (b) its annual report in 1995–96 are as follows:

| | (a) £ | (b) £ |
|---|---|---|
| The Coastguard Agency | 86,652 | 8,330 |
| Driver Vehicle and Licensing Agency | 108,059 | 8,715 |
| Driving Standards Agency | 3,885 | 1,042 |
| Highways Agency | n/a | 30,333 |
| Marine Safety Agency | 207,874 | 5,313 |
| Vehicle Certification Agency | 26,869 | 813 |
| Vehicle Inspectorate | 256,544 | 10,178 |

Information on total printing costs incurred by the Highways Agency is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Statistical Forms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statistical forms issued to businesses by his Department and the number sent out of each. [37474]

Mr. Norris: The following regular statistical forms are sent to businesses by the Department of Transport.

| Title | Number of forms sent in 1995 |
|---|---|
| Continuing survey of road goods transport | 20,200 |
| Continuing international road haulage survey | 8,420 |
| Roll-on-roll-off goods vehicles | 140 |
| Local bus fares index | 440 |
| Public service vehicle operators' return | 1,930 |
| Ship owners' capital expenditure and international trade credit | 93 |
| Return of port traffic | 227 |
| Domestic waterborne freight | 25 |
| Overseas airlines' UK expenditure | 106 |
| Origins and destinations of UK international trade | [1]20,000 |

[1] This is a periodic survey previously carried out in 1978, 1987 and 1991, and now being carried out in 1996.

In addition, a number of ad hoc surveys are usually carried out each year. Some will involve the use of a questionnaire, but others will be carried out mainly by personal interview. Numbers of surveys and subject areas covered vary from year to year; however, on average about 12 such surveys are carried out annually, involving contact with about 10,000 businesses.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37243]

Mr. Norris: My Department is discussing the matter with our main publisher, Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the findings of the independent investigation into the Coastguard actions in the Lyme bay canoeing tragedy; and if he will make a statement. [38519]

Mr. Norris: In March 1993, four teenagers were tragically drowned in a sea canoeing accident in the Lyme bay area. Mr. John Reeder QC was appointed to conduct a review, the terms of reference of which were:

"In the light of the COASTGUARD's internal inquiry, the evidence presented to the Lyme Bay trial and the judge's comments in his summing up—

(i) to review all of the actions, both internal and external, taken by the COASTGUARD during and subsequent to the tragedy.

(ii) to consider how far this action was appropriate and whether any further action was necessary, and

(iii) to make recommendations.

Consideration under item (ii) should cover the suggestion by Sir James Spicer MP that harbourmasters should be given a more formal role in COASTGUARD's emergency procedures."

We have today published Mr. Reeder's findings.

Mr. Reeder has produced a thorough and well-researched report of the Coastguard involvement in this tragedy. He reported that no lives had been lost as a result of the Coastguard's actions and that the lessons of the incident had been fully learned. He has endorsed the action taken by the Coastguard agency and other parts of my Department to make sure that all lessons were fully learned. He recommends that no further disciplinary action should be taken.

It is right that all concerned should do all that can be done to prevent similar incidents form happening in the future. We have made regulations to seek to improve the safety of activity centres. Thanks to Mr. Reeder's report, we can now be confident that the Coastguard agency has responded fully to the tragedy, and that all necessary steps have been taken to safeguard against similar incidents in the future.

Following the incident, the Coastguard agency carried out their own investigation and took appropriate action. Portland Coastguard has since been reorganised and all of the officers involved have been retrained.

Mr. Reeder made recommendations on the radio coverage of the area, on the relationship between Coastguard and harbourmasters, and on the Coastguard agency and British Canoe Union's advice on sea canoeing. All his recommendations either have been implemented by the Coastguard agency, or are being urgently addressed.

DEFENCE

Epidemiology Research Proposals

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many outline research proposals were received for the epidemiology programme to be initiated by the Medical Research Council at the request of his Department; what proposals in other fields besides epidemiology have been received by the MRC; if there is a deadline; how much of his Department's funding will be made available for these studies; and if he will make a statement. [37430]

Mr. Soames: Work on establishing the detailed programme of research into Gulf health issues, which I announced on 30 January, Official Report, columns 607–608, is progressing well. As I announced at that time, the work is being overseen by the Medical Research Council, whose independent supervision of the research programme will ensure an objective, impartial and scientific approach and compliance with the highest professional standards.

Following a period of assessment of the most appropriate areas for research, the MRC issued its call for research proposals in scientific and medical journals at the end of May. I understand that it has already received 37 outline proposals for research in a variety of fields. Those have been submitted in confidence, and I am therefore not able to detail the precise areas which they cover. All the proposals are now being thoroughly evaluated by a scientific advisory committee, appointed by the MRC, which includes some of the most eminent medical experts in the relevant fields. The MRC will then invite the most promising applicants to submit substantive proposals by the end of August.

The final research programme is expected to include both epidemiological studies to compare the prevalence of illness among Gulf war veterans and similar control groups, including the relative incidence of birth defects among their children, and studies to investigate other aspects of Gulf health-related issues such as any possible interaction between the vaccinations administered to personnel serving in the Gulf and the nerve agent pre-treatment sets, with which they were issued.

Final decisions on the research projects to be funded will be made in November. My Department will meet the full costs of those research projects recommended by the MRC as being the most appropriate.

We are keeping in close touch with US plans for research in similar fields to ensure that work is not duplicated, and that our respective programmes cover all aspects of this important issue. The US authorities have recently announced their plans for 12 major research studies, one of which is to be undertaken by Dr. Simon Wessely of King's college school of medicine. We will continue to liaise with the US authorities as this work progresses.

In parallel with the research programmes I have described, we continue to offer assessment and counselling services under the medical assessment programme established in 1993 to all serving and ex-service personnel who may be concerned about their health. Six hundred and thirty-five individual veterans have now been examined on the programme. Additional resources have been made available both to support the clinical programme itself and to develop the comprehensive database necessary for a full analysis of the programme's overall results to date. Group Captain Coker, the principal consultant on the programme, expects to publish a report on his findings to date later this year.

On the basis of the examination of veterans undertaken so far, there is no evidence that there is any unique syndrome or illness associated specifically with Gulf service. The Government, nevertheless, retain an open mind. The painstaking, detailed approach I have outlined, which will of necessity take time, is soundly and scientifically based, and illustrates our total commitment to the health of our service personnel.

Trident Programme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 184, how much of the remaining expenditure on the Trident programme will be spent in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the United States of America. [37426]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The estimated £1.61 billion of remaining expenditure on the Trident acquisition programme is planned to be spent as follows:

£ million

| | UK | USA |
|---|---|---|
| Submarine | 475 | 12 |
| Strategic weapons system | 21 | 495 |
| Tactical weapons system[1] | 68 | 1 |
| Building works | 11 | — |
| Dockyards | 266 | — |
| Warhead/miscellaneous: | | |
| Unallocated contingency[1] | 206 | 55 |
| Total | 1,047 | 563 |

[1] The apparent variation from the answer given to the hon. Member on 10 July 1996, Official Report, column 184, results from rounding of figures.

RAF Burtonwood

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of installing new telecommunications equipment at RAF Burtonwood; and if he will make a statement. [37639]

Mr. Soames: The cost of installing new telecommunications equipment on the RAF Burtonwood site is a matter for the tenants. No extra costs have been incurred by my Department.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new telephone lines have been installed at RAF Burtonwood this year; and if he will make a statement. [37640]

Mr. Soames: Tenants at Burtonwood deal directly with suppliers regarding the installation of any additional telephone lines they may require. My Department does not hold a record of such new installations.

Defence Police Salaries

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the salaries of the chief constable, Ministry of Defence police, and his deputy will be determined; what performance indicators will be used to determine the level of performance-related elements; and what is the minimum and maximum possible salary in the financial year 1996–97. [37352]

Mr. Soames: With effect from 1 April 1996, the salaries of the chief constable and deputy chief constable, Ministry of Defence police, including any elements relating to performance will be determined in line with the provisions applying to the senior civil service.

Maximum and minimum values for salaries are as set out in the White Paper "Taking Forward Continuity and Change" and as stated by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his reply of 8 February, Official Report, columns 294–96.

Residential Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account is taken of military rank or grade in the allocation of military tenants to MOD residential property consisting of detached single storey dwellings. [37561]

Mr. Soames: Military rank or grade is taken into account when allocating MOD residential property. This has no bearing, however, on whether the particular properties are detached and single storey in nature.

HMS Fearless and Intrepid

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the replacement vessels for HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid will be constructed at the same time; and if he will make a statement; [36951]

(2) how many months the construction of the replacements for (a) HMS Fearless and (b) HMS Intrepid are planned to take; and if he will make a statement. [36953]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A final decision has yet to be announced concerning the replacements for HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid. A construction programme is dependent upon an order being placed.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments he has made of the cost of preparing HMS Intrepid to go to sea. [36952]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The cost of preparing HMS Intrepid for sea from her present material state would be some £1.5 million.

Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the key targets for 1996–97 for the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency. [38313]

Mr. Soames: The chief executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency has been set the following key targets for 1996–97:

| Key targets | Performance output 1996–97 |
|---|---|
| 1. To develop and implement the full ABSDA IS strategy by: | |
| (a) Implementing the IS strategy by initiating action to make changes to existing systems and to procure IT as appropriate. | 31 March 1997 |
| (b) Implement the full corporate MIS throughout ABSDA. (Subject to IS Strategy Study recommendations.) | (31 March 1998) |
| 2. Implement the outstanding DCS 10 recommendations: | |
| (a) Handback of BAD Bracht site on schedule. | 30 September 1996 |
| (b) Closure of Vehicle Depot Ludgershall for operations on schedule. | 31 March 1997 |
| 3. To meet targets for storage, maintenance and distribution and monitor progress towards achieving standards: | |
| a. Stores Demands | |
| Stores and Equipment. To meet the Standard Priority System (SPS) 96 Supply Chain Processing Times (SCPT) for material authorised for issue | |
| (a) Immediate Priority—Operational Standard Priority Code (SPC) 1 | 99 per cent. |
| (b) High Priority—Operational SPC 2 | 98 per cent. |
| (c) Medium Priority—Operational SPC 3 | 97 per cent. |
| (d) Routine Priority—Operational SPC 4 | 95 per cent. |
| (e) Immediate Priority—Non Operational SPC 5 | 99 per cent. |
| (f) High Priority—Non Operational SPC 6 | 98 per cent. |
| (g) Medium Priority—Non Operational SPC 7 | 97 per cent. |
| (h) Routine Priority—Non Operational SPC 8 (Operational demands take precedence over all other demands in SPC order) | 95 per cent. |
| Ammunition | |
| To meet the required Delivery date | 99.8 per cent. |
| Vehicles | |
| (a) Immediate Priority | 96 per cent. |
| (b) High Priority | 94 per cent. |
| (c) Medium Priority | 92 per cent. |
| (d) Routine Demands | 90 per cent. |
| Petroleum | |

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances the United States Government have powers to commandeer assets owned by Brown and Root at Devonport dockyard. [37606]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 16 July 1996]: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent on meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36008]

Mr. Hanley: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

University of Oman

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which officials of Her Majesty's Government were invited to be present at the opening of the university in Oman; and on what date the opening ceremonies took place. [36611]

Mr. Hanley: The Sultan Qaboos university in Muscat was officially opened on 9 November 1986 by His Majesty Sultan Qaboos. We have no details of who was invited to attend or who was present at the opening ceremony.

Gulf War

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work of the United Nations Compensation Commission since the Gulf war, with numbers of claims received in each category and funds accumulated in all accounts; and if he will make a statement on the work of the panels of commissioners, with particular reference to British claims. [37511]

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations Compensation Commission in Geneva was established in 1991. More than 2.6 million claims with an estimated asserted value of more than $180 billion have been submitted, and almost 2.2 million of these have already been assessed. Claims have been submitted by individuals, corporations and Governments.

Her Majesty's Government have forwarded 4,990 claims from 3,418 claimants. These claims are broken down into the following categories:

| Type of claim | Total number of claims received by UNCC | Total number of claims submitted by UK | Value of UK claims in US$ |
|---|---|---|---|
| Category A | 922,796 | 1,148 | 4,035,000 |
| Category B | 5,949 | 258 | 710,000 |
| Category C | 417,557 | 2,746 | 122,907,312 |
| Egyptian Bank transfer claims | 1.24 million | | |
| Category D | 9,673 | 381 | 133,253,256 |
| Category E | 6,455 | 457 | 1,189,325,112 |
| Category F | 212 | 1 | 11,237,641 |
| Totals | 2,602,642 | 4,990 | US$ 1,461,468,321 |

All category B claims have been assessed and full payment made.

The assessment of all category A claims will be completed by October this year. The next instalment of British category C claims are expected to be approved by the governing council in December this year, with the remainder to be completed by the end of 1997.

The UNCC is hoping to set up panels of commissioners this summer to start work on categories D, E and F.

As at 20 September 1995, the compensation fund had $31,151,700 available to meet running costs and payment of claims; 30 per cent. of the revenue under Security Council resolution 986 will be paid to the UNCC enabling it to make at least interim payments on approved A and C awards.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 386, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested; [37541]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 796, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37542]

Mr. Hanley: The examination of more than 23,000 documents dating back to 1989.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37234]

Mr. Hanley: Our information section run the award-winning web site "FCO On-Line". The service, which is heavily accessed both in the UK and overseas, carries 800 pages of regularly updated public diplomacy material, including selected major FCO publications.

For practical reasons, it is not always possible to place all our publications on the Internet. However, we are always keen to make relevant texts available to a wide audience, either via the Internet or by other means. The FCO web site is at: http://www.fco.gov.uk/

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list showing the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37321]

Mr. Hapley: The table sets out the details of contracts awarded to the above firms in 1995 and 1996 by the diplomatic and aid wings of the FCO.

The details of contracts awarded by the aid wing do not include contracts let under the aid programme.

Waste Dumping at Sea

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department has given to the Bermudan Government on their plans for dumping of asbestos waste in the marine environment; and if he will make a statement. [37574]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The UK has provided advice to the Government of Bermuda on their obligation under the 1972 London convention relating to the disposal of waste at sea. The London convention has been extended to Bermuda.

Disposal of asbestos waste in Bermudan territorial waters is within the competence of the Government of Bermuda.

Since their earlier announcement of the intention to dispose of asbestos waste at sea, the Government of Bermuda have decided further to explore other options for disposal.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on providing advice to United Kingdom dependent nationals on legal issues relating to the dumping of waste at sea. [37568]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Government's policy is to ensure that the United Kingdom dependent territories comply with their international obligations, including those relating to the dumping of waste at sea.

Advice is provided whenever necessary by the UK to its dependent territories.

Nuclear Smuggling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes in policy concerning the detection and deterrence of nuclear smuggling he plans to implement. [36073]

Mr. David Davis: The UK is actively involved in international efforts to confront the problems of nuclear smuggling. The nuclear safety summit held in Moscow in April agreed a programme for preventing and combating illicit trafficking in nuclear materials. Adherents—the G7 and Russia, plus the Ukraine—agreed to improve co-ordination between their Governments on all aspects of prevention, detection and prosecution of cases involving nuclear smuggling. We strongly encourage other states with an interest in the issue to join, and an international experts meeting dedicated to the implementation of this programme will be held as soon as possible.

Dependent Countries (International Conventions)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if United Kingdom dependent nations are bound to abide by international conventions to which the United Kingdom has signed up; and what responsibility is held by which United Kingdom authorities for ensuring that they adhere to such conventions. [37566]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The UK dependent territories are bound to abide by only those international conventions that the UK, in consultation with the territories in question, has extended to them.

The Government bear international responsibility for ensuring that the dependent territories comply with the obligations of those international conventions which apply to them.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37700]

Mr. Hanley: We have made no inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking the Department's payroll with details of benefit claimants.

We would respond to inquiries made by the Benefits Agency where it had reasonable grounds for suspicion that any individual might have been involved in benefit fraud.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Tied Aid

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each of the last three years (a) the top 30 companies receiving bilateral tied aid contracts by value and (b) the top 30 companies receiving contracts as part of the aid and trade provision by value. [36591]

Mr. Hanley: The number of ATP projects agreed in each of the last three years—1993 to 1995—was five, five and seven, respectively. The companies which won ATP support business as prime contractors on those projects were as follows:

| Company | ATP allocation (£ millions) |
|---|---|
| 1993 | |
| John Brown Engineering Ltd. | 10.925 |
| Siemens Plessey Radar Ltd. | 4.300 |

| Siemens Plessey | 8.400 |
| Serco-IAL Systems Ltd. | 4.167 |
| Clough Smith | 1.601 |
| Landrover Exports Ltd. | 1.386 |

The ODA is currently compiling data on the top 30 companies receiving bilateral tied aid contracts and will provide an answer shortly.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to ensure an equitable regional distribution of national lottery funds. [37143]

Mr. Sproat: I want to see the whole country benefiting from the success of the national lottery. With the distributing bodies, we are monitoring the spread of awards across the regions and will take steps to encourage applicants in areas which do not seem to be getting a fair share.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37319]

Mr. Sproat: The agencies for which my Department is responsible have not let any contracts with the companies listed during 1995 and 1996. However, contracts with the following companies were let by my Department during that period. The contracts were awarded for various policy reviews and to provide management advice.

| | Company | Number of contracts | Total cost £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1995 | KPMG | 5 | 228,000 |
| 1996 | Coopers and LybrandDeloitte and Touche | 2 | 175,000 |

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) pursuant to her answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 724, what method would be used by her Department in collating the information requested; [37539]

(2) pursuant to her answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 518, what method would be used by her Department in collating the information requested. [37538]

Mr. Sproat: The examination of more than 4,900 files dating back to April 1992 when this Department was established.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37237]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage is reviewing its publication policy with respect to on-line publication. A number of documents are already provided on the DNH web site and the range of documents provided will be developed in the light of experience.

DNH is committed to providing official information as widely and readily as possible in line with the Government's open government policy.

Primary Schools Radio

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made of the impact of the recent withdrawal of the BBC from primary schools radio; and if she will make a statement. [37173]

Mr. Sproat: In all matters concerning the editorial content and delivery of programming, responsibility rests with the corporation itself. I understand from the BBC that it is not withdrawing from primary schools radio programming. Following consultation, the BBC has opted for an alternative delivery system involving the provision of high-quality educational radio broadcast tape cassettes to primary schools, a move which has been well received by the teaching profession. The BBC continues to broadcast a range of radio services for young children.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking her Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit she has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37706]

Mr. Sproat: My Department responds to enquiries made by the Benefits Agency where there are reasonable grounds for suspicion that an individual may be involved in benefit fraud. No staff have been suspended, dismissed or prosecuted.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on her forthcoming visit to the United States of America. [38421]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall visit Atlanta, Washington, New York and Los Angeles from 18 to 26 July. I am going to Atlanta to support the British team in the 1996 Olympics and to represent the Government at the opening ceremony. I intend to emphasise to the key sporting figures and bodies the Government's overall commitment to sport and our readiness to be actively involved in attracting major sporting events to the UK.

The rest of my visit will be devoted primarily to promoting UK competitiveness and encouraging inward investment, particularly in the film and tourism sectors. I shall give the Government's support to the efforts being made by the industries themselves to increase the UK exports of television programmes to the US, to attract US moviemakers to make use of the abundance of talent, expertise and facilities available to them in Britain, and to encourage more American tourists to come to Britain.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the agencies for which her Department is responsible and the costs incurred by each for printing (a) all publications and (b) its annual report in the last year for which figures are available. [37461]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 July 1996]: My Department is responsible for the Royal Parks and Historic Royal Palaces agencies. Listed in the table are the costs incurred by each of the agencies for printing all publications, and their annual reports in the last year for which figures are available.

| Agency | Annual report 1994–95 £ | Publications 1995–96 £ |
|---|---|---|
| Historic Royal Palaces | 20,226.00 | 708,686.00 |
| Royal Parks[1] | 7,409.00 | 43,160.00 |

[1] These figures do not include other associated cost of producing documents, e.g., design and photography. Figures for associated cost could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm is eligible for grant aid from the Millennium Commission; [37493]

(2) what are the criteria for judging eligibility for grant aid from the Millennium Commission. [37494]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 15 July 1996]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Attorney-General what inquiries he has undertaken to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit when these exercises took place, and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37716]

The Attorney-General: The departments and agencies for which I am responsible conduct checks to ensure that payments are made only to staff currently entitled to be on the payroll. Those departments and agencies do not hold information about individuals claiming benefit and therefore are not in a position to conduct inquiries into benefit fraud. However, they respond to inquiries made by the Benefits Agency where there are reasonable grounds for suspicion that an individual may be involved in benefit fraud.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in a full year of (a) abolishing the 2 per cent. employee national insurance contribution on earnings below the lower earnings limit, (b) levying a 2 per cent. employee contribution on all earnings below the lower earnings limit and (c) levying employer contributions at 3 per cent. on the wages of employees earning less than the lower earnings limit. [34790]

Mr. Heald: The estimated effects on national insurance contribution revenue for 1997–98 are:

(a) – £1.200 billion

(b) + £0.095 billion

(c) + £0.145 billion.

Bates Case

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the chief executive of the Benefits Agency was notified of the judgment of 16 May by the House of Lords in relation to the Department of Social Security's appeal in relation to the Bates case; what factors led Mr. Mathison in a letter to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South dated 30 May, reference DB 220109, concerning Mr. R. W., to indicate that it might be early June before the outcome of his Department's appeal into the Bates case would be known; when the decision of the House of Lords was notified to individual Benefits Agency offices; and what steps have been taken to lessen the time taken by his Department to notify the Benefits Agency of the outcome of appeals to the House of Lords and the time taken by the Benefits Agency to notify its offices of the decisions taken by the House of Lords. [36567]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 16 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency was notified of the judgement of 16th May by the House of Lords in relation to the Department of Social Security's appeal in relation to the Bates case; what factors led Mr. Mathison in a letter to the honourable Member for Cunninghame South dated 30th May, reference DB 220109, concerning Mr. R. W., to indicate that it may be early June before the outcome of his Department's appeal into the Bates case would be known; when the decision of the House of Lords was notified to individual Benefits Agency offices; and what steps have been taken to lessen the time taken by his Department to notify the Benefits Agency of the outcome of appeals to the House of Lords and also the time taken by the Benefits Agency to notify its offices of the decisions taken by the House of Lords.

The Benefits Agency (BA) was informed as soon as possible, on 16 May, after the Department itself had been informed.

I am sorry that my letter of 30 May stated incorrectly that the House of Lords decision on the "Bate" case had not been issued. As soon as I was aware of this error I wrote to you (on 7 July) to apologise. Steps are being taken to ensure this does not happen again.

BA district offices had been advised on 15 May that the decision was expected. Once all the implications had been considered, full procedural instructions were issued on 29 May 1996.

Generally, when a House of Lords judgement affects a Social Security Benefit the Department of Social Security Policy Group are notified of the decision. Policy Group notify the BA who in conjunction with Central Adjudication Services issue appropriate guidance as soon as possible.

I hope my reply has been helpful.

Operation Speakeasy

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has collated regarding the results of Operation Speakeasy; and if he will make a statement. [37062]

Mr. Heald: Operation Speakeasy was a pilot freephone fraud hotline which was in operation between 23 October 1995 and 31 January 1996. The pilot ran in four areas: Hull, Stockport, Blackburn/Burnley and Tunbridge Wells. The freephone line was set up for the public to pass information to the Benefits Agency about benefit fraud.

Over the period of the pilot, 3,131 telephone calls were received. The value of fraud stopped as a result of information received amounted to £920,000.

Child Benefit

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to means-test child benefit; and if he will make a statement. [37008]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: We have no plans to means-test child benefit either for 16 to 18-year-olds or for any other age group.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what items of data are deleted on a Child Support Agency data printout when it is sent to an absent parent; and what are the reasons for each deletion. [37058]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 16 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about data protection issues.

Prior to the issue of a Data Protection print the Agency deletes any information which relates to an individual other than the client requesting the data print. We are prevented from disclosing this information by the requirements of the Data Protection Act.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, columns 228–29, on the Child Support Agency computer system, if he will (a) provide a definition of nationally sensitive or locally sensitive cases and (b) set out the procedures that are followed in designating a case as either nationally or locally sensitive. [37114]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 16 July 1996:

I am replying to the your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency Computer System.

A case is considered nationally sensitive if it involves a VIP; any person so deemed for security reasons; or a transsexual. Decisions on whether a case is to be marked nationally sensitive are made by a section of the Contributions Agency (CA). This classification is then applied to all the Department's computer systems.

At present a case is considered locally sensitive if it involves a member of staff, their partner or a relative of either party; a local dignitary; or any person who asks for their case to be treated as sensitive. These criteria have been reviewed recently and the revised procedures are soon to be issued. The revised instructions state that a case should be regarded as locally sensitive if the Parent With Care (PWC) or Absent Parent (AP) is employed by CSA; a close relative (mother, father, brother or sister) of the PWC or AP is employed by CSA; a member of staff has an interest in a case; or the PWC or AP has requested the case to be made sensitive and the manager considers the request to be valid. The classification applies only on the Child Support Computer System (CSCS).

You also asked about the procedures followed in classifying cases as sensitive. Each Child Support Agency Centre (CSAC) has a nominated manger who is the focal point for sensitive cases.

If a case is identified as being potentially nationally sensitive, the Manager contacts the appropriate section in CA. If CA accepts the case as nationally sensitive all the Department's computer system are annotated accordingly. The nominated manager maintains a control record showing the case details, and all requests to have access to them. All papers are locked away in accommodation separate from the non-sensitive cases.

The same procedures are followed for cases designated as locally sensitive except that the decision on classification is made by a CSA manager and the classification is annotated only on the CSCS, not the other Departmental computer system.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answers on 27 June, Official Report, columns 228-29, on the Child Support Agency, how many cases have been removed from the Child Support Agency computer system due to the process of archiving or weeding out data. [36842]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 16 July 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency Computer system.

Your question is worded only slightly differently from the series of questions asked by James Pawsey MP, to which I replied recently. No complete cases have been removed from the Child Support Agency Computer System due to the process of weeding or archiving data. The process leaves a basic record on the system to show that there has been contact with the person concerned.

I hope this is helpful.

Funeral Expenses

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the expenditure from the social fund in respect of funeral expenses in Wales for each of the last three years. [37607]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 16 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the expenditure from the Social Fund in respect of funeral expenses in Wales for each of the last three years.

The information you requested is shown in the table:

Funeral payment expenditure in Wales

| Year | Expenditure |
|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 4,026,281.25 |
| 1994–95 | 3,942,311.77 |
| 1995–96 | 3,032,421.64 |

Figures are provisional and subject to change. I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Offices

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all benefits offices indicating the owner of the freehold, the owner of the lease, and the length of lease, and the annual cost to his Department. [37548]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Freehold ownership of the Government's civil estate is vested in the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Information regarding the ownership and cost of individual leasehold properties is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The total annual cost to the Department is currently £200.5 million.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department began its review of the relocation of Highgate and Finsbury Park benefits offices; when the offices were relocated; and what was the cost of the relocation. [37547]

Mr. Evans: The Department began its review in the mid-1980s. Finsbury Park benefit office moved out of Archway tower in November 1992 and Highgate benefit office moved out in March 1995. The estimated cost of the total relocation project was £216 million, which resulted in net estimated savings of £43 million.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when a lease was first taken out on Archway tower, London N19, by his Department, what was its length; what has been the total payment to date; and what are the projected future payments on this building. [37546]

Mr. Evans: The property was acquired in 1974. Historic costs are not readily available because of variations in rent. rates and other costs over the term of the lease. Current holding costs are around £1 million per annum and the lease expires in 2009.

Licences

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the licences issued by his Department; for what purpose they are issued; and what are the administrative costs involved for each. [37627]

Mr. Burt: From time to time, this Department deposits data from surveys it has commissioned in the Economic and Social Research Council data archive at the university of Essex. The archive is licensed to provide access to the data for the purposes of academic research. The administrative costs to the Department are small.

The Information Technology Services Agency of the DSS may license external suppliers who are providing various services to use certain departmental assets such as IT software. Details of the administrative costs involved could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish his annual report on the social fund for 1995–96 and the Social Fund Commissioner's annual report; and if he will make a statement. [37972]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Secretary of State's annual report on the social fund for 1995–96, Cm 3320, was published today and has been laid before Parliament. The report records that the gross budget allocated to the discretionary part of the fund on 1 April 1995 was £406 million, an increase of £53 million on the budget set at 1 April 1994. For the current year, we have increased the gross discretionary budget by £13.5 million to £419.5 million.

Total gross expenditure in 1995–96 was £534 million, £83 million higher than in 1994–95 and was the highest annual level of expenditure since the fund was set up in 1988. This included over 2 million non-repayable grants and interest-free loans worth £401 million and funeral, maternity and cold weather payments worth £133 million.

Cold weather payments were increased from £7 to £8.50 on 1 November 1995. Over 7 million payments were made to around 3 million people at a cost of £62 million.

As part of the aim of eliminating abuse, changes to the funeral payment scheme came into effect on 5 June 1995 to ensure that only those with good cause for taking responsibility for a funeral were eligible for help. In addition, a ceiling was placed on the amount payable to cover specified funeral directors' charges. The number of funeral payments had nearly doubled between 1988–89 and 1994–95, but expenditure had more than trebled. The new arrangements continue to provide for a dignified funeral but at the same time protect public funds. Expenditure on funeral payments has reduced from £63 million in 1994–95 to £49 million in 1995–96.

The social fund continues to play an important role in supporting mainstream social security provision, in providing a varied and flexible response to the individual needs of applicants and in offering the taxpayer value for money.

The Social Fund Commissioner's annual report has also been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Legal Costs

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what external legal costs have been incurred by his Department in the cases in which his Department's actions have been judged to be unlawful. [35910]

Mr. Howard: No central record has been kept of the outcome of all the cases against the Home Office during the more than 200 years of its existence. The cases include claims for personal injuries as well as applications for judicial review.

Police Patrol Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many road traffic accidents involving police patrol vehicles were reported in each police force area in England and Wales for the years 1994 and 1995; and how many (a) police officers and (b) civilians sustained serious or fatal injuries in such accidents. [37105]

Mr. Maclean: Information for the years 1994 and 1995 in the precise form requested is not available centrally. Some information is available, however, for the financial year 1994–95 and is set out in the table. The figures for deaths and serious injuries relate to the incidents which are recorded in the second column, which arose in the course of either police pursuits or responses to emergency calls in England and Wales.

Post Office (Postal Ballot Papers)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Post Office and with returning officers about the need for a statutory duty for the Post Office to deliver postal ballot papers for public elections on time; and if he will make a statement. [37410]

Mr. Sackville: None. There is already a statutory duty upon the Post Office to deliver these ballot papers as set out in regulation 86 of the Representation of the People Regulations 1986.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 405, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37535]

Mr. Howard: The examination of nearly 30,000 files dating back to 1987–88.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 495, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37534]

Mr. Howard: The examination of nearly 22,000 files dating back to 1989–90.

Driving Offences

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the driving offences which involve (a) obligatory disqualification and (b) obligatory endorsement, indicating the degree of endorsement for each offence. [37484]

Mr. Maclean: Information on driving offences which attract obligatory disqualification and/or endorsement is given in the table.

Driving offences attracting disqualification or endorsement

| Provision | Offence | Disqualification | Endorsement | Penalty points |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Road Traffic Act 1988 | | | | |

Prisons (Boards of Visitors)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has, over what time scale and at what cost, (i) to ensure that boards of visitors in the Prison Service are properly resourced and (ii) to provide the liaison section with its own premises. [37762]

Miss Widdecombe: As the hon. Member will be aware, recommendations about the resourcing of boards of visitors and moving the liaison section from the Prison Service to the Home Office were made by a review of the role of boards of visitors, whose report was published in May 1995. These recommendations were supported by the Learmont report, published in October 1995.

In accordance with the recommendations, the liaison section, which provides the central administration for boards, was moved from Prison Service headquarters to new offices in a Home Office building, Horseferry house, on 1 January and it formally joined the Home Office on 1 April. On the appointment of a national director for boards, as recommended by the review, the liaison section became the secretariat to the director.

The additional costs of providing the central administrative support necessary to implement the review were originally estimated in the review report as £270,000.

In accordance with the review, a management consultancy review of staffing in the liaison section was carried out between May and October 1995 to determine more exactly the levels and grades of staff required. Its staffing recommendations were implemented by May 1996.

The additional staffing costs required to implement the consultancy review with effect from the financial year 1996–97 in fact required an increase of £282,000 on the budgeted cost but an increase of only £126,000 on actual spend as compared with the outturn figures for financial year 1995–96, as some gradual increase in staffing support had already been endorsed by the Prison Service.

Local administrative support for boards is provided by the establishment to which each board is appointed. The level of support provided is subject to agreement between the governor and the chairman of the board. A survey is currently being carried out to determine the level of support provided and ensure that it meets the standards set out in the review. Details of the costs of such administrative support are not available centrally.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of applications made for asylum by citizens born in Nigeria for each of the last three years up to the latest available date; how many applications have been (a) granted and (b) rejected; and if he will make a statement. [37478]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on asylum applications from nationals of Nigeria, and decisions on applications, for the first six months of 1996, is given in the table. Similar information for the years 1993 to 1995 is given in tables 4.2 to 4.4 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1995", issue 9/96, a copy of which is in the Library.

Decisions[1] on applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom from nationals of Nigeria, excluding dependants, January to June 1996

| | January to June 1996 |
|---|---|
| Asylum applications[2] | 1,815 |
| Decisions[2,3] | 2,530 |
| Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum | 5 |
| Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain[4] | 5 |
| Total refused | 2,520 |
| Refused asylum and ELR—after full consideration | 2,260 |
| Refused on non-compliance grounds[5] | 230 |
| Refused on safe third country grounds[6] | 30 |

[1] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5, with '0' = 1 or 2 and '..' = not available.
[2] Figures exclude information on applications made overseas.
[3] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same year.
[4] Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.
[5] Paragraph 340 (paragraph 180F prior to 1 October 1994 and paragraph 101 prior to 26 July 1993) of the Immigration Rules, for failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitations to interview to establish identity.
[6] Refused on the grounds that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Deaprtment how many persons who have had their claims for asylum rejected are held in detention at the present time. [37518]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 27 June, there were 586 asylum seekers held in detention after having their claims for asylum rejected.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37702]

Mr. Howard: The Department responds to inquiries made by the Benefits Agency on the basis of its belief that there are reasonable grounds for suspicion that an individual may be involved in benefit fraud.

In the past five years, one member of staff has been dismissed following conviction for benefit fraud.

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the status of the UK Passport Agency's framework document following the decision to confirm the agency's status as an executive agency of the Home Office for a further period. [38419]

Mr. Kirkhope: Following a "prior options" review, an announcement was made to Parliament in November 1994 that Ministers had agreed that the Passport Agency should retain its status as an executive agency for another five years. The agency's framework document has been revised and I am pleased to say that copies of the revised document have now been placed in the Library.

Forensic Science Service

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will lay before Parliament the annual report for the Forensic Science Service. [38420]

Mr. Howard: I have today laid before Parliament copies of the Forensic Science Service's annual report and accounts for 1995–96.

The FSS met or exceeded all its targets in 1995–96. During 1996–97, I expect the service to continue to improve its efficiency and effectiveness. The financial targets for the year are recovery of full economic costs; and a cash unit cost target of £81.33 based on an efficiency gain of 3.6 per cent. on the audited 1995–96 results. In view of the merger of the FSS with the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory on 1 April, this target has been calculated taking into account retrospective adjustment to 1995–96 as if the merged organisation had existed throughout 1995–96. From 1996–97 onwards, the cash unit cost measure has been translated into the cost per process output hour rather than as previously the chargeable output day. The service level targets are to meet 90 per cent. of delivery dates agreed with customers; to maintain accreditation to UKAS NAMAS M10 and BSI.QA ISO 9000 series standards; and the completion of a customer satisfaction survey.

Licences

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the licences issued by his Department; for what purpose they are issued; and what are the administrative costs involved for each. [37597]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The Home Office is responsible for a large number of licensing regimes; in most cases, the licences themselves are issued not by the Department but by bodies such as the Gaming Board, licensing justices, local authorities and the police.

A list of Home Office issued licences and, where available, their administrative costs are as follows:

(a) Possession of prohibited weapons authority. Details of administrative costs, which are shared with the police, are not available.

(b) Licences to regulate the supply, etcetera of controlled drugs and precursor chemicals. The total administrative cost to the Home Office for 1996–97 will be $481,000.

(c) Licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The total annual cost of the administrative and licensing system is £2.3 million.

(d) Licences for the removal of human remains. Licences are administered free of charge and administrative costs are not available.

HEALTH

HIV Prevention (Prisons)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what measures are in place to monitor the allocation of HIV prevention money by health authorities for health promotion in prisons; [35439]

(2) what proportion of the current HIV prevention budget has been allocated for HIV prevention initiatives in prisons. [35438]

Mr. Horam: Guidance issued to health authorities in EL(96)30 states that approximately 50 per cent. of the prevention allocation should be used to develop locally targeted HIV health promotion and prevention programmes. These programmes should be directed towards both the national target groups identified in the Government's HIV-AIDS health promotion strategy and any locally determined priorities. The latter may include the provision of HIV prevention programmes in prisons.

For 1996–97, health authorities have been asked to submit a mid-year report and a detailed outturn report on prevention spending. This will take the form of a breakdown of spend by national target group and by type of activity, but does not require spend on HIV health promotion work in prisons to be shown separately.

Copies of the guidance and the health promotion strategy are available in the Library.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 515, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37528]

Mr. Horam: The examination of more than 24,000 files dating back to 1989–90.

Intensive Care Patients

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into the psychological reactions of intensive care unit patients; and if he will make a statement. [37184]

Mr. Horam: None. The report of the working group on guidelines on admission to and discharge from intensive care and high dependency units published in March this year drew attention to the potential for psychological distress for the patient undergoing intensive care.

Epilepsy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he is funding into factors associated with depression in epilepsy; and if he will make a statement. [37186]

Mr. Bowis: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council.

Homelessness (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will fund research into the utilisation of health care services by homeless people in Doncaster; and if he will make a statement. [37187]

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for Doncaster health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority for details.

Hepatitis B

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the infectivity of hepatitis B. [37189]

Mr. Horam: The Department has commissioned some work on hepatitis B virus deoxyribonucleic acid assays and on their use as a possible marker of transmissibility of hepatitis B infection.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the proportion of babies born to mothers infected with hepatitis B who will also become chronically infected. [37192]

Mr. Horam: The risk that a baby born to a mother infected with hepatitis B will become infected depends upon the relative infectivity of the mother. Studies indicate that transmission rates of around 10 to 20 per cent. or less may occur with mothers of low infectivity but these may rise to 70 to 90 per cent. with highly infectious carrier mothers. About 90 per cent. of babies infected perinatally by a highly infectious mother will become chronic carriers of hepatitis B virus; those infected by mothers of low infectivity have a much lower risk of becoming carriers. These figures are in the absence of immune prophylaxis.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hepatitis B carriers there are in the United Kingdom. [37194]

Mr. Horam: The number of chronic carriers of hepatitis B in the United Kingdom is not known precisely. Available data indicate that the UK, in common with other north-western European countries, has one of the lowest prevalence rates of hepatitis B carriers in the world, being around 0.1 to 0.2 per cent. The carriage rate in the UK will vary with geographical location, being low in some rural areas and higher in some inner cities where there are aggregations of high-risk groups.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities have put out to tender (a) the arrangement of mental health services and (b) the provision of mental health services. [37330]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the level of spending on mental health services in each health authority and as a percentage of total expenditure in each health authority in each of the last three years. [37329]

Mr. Bowis: The information will be placed in the Library.

Dementia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into interventions in early dementia; and if he will make a statement. [37182]

Mr. Bowis: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Pregnancy (Advice)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance his Department issues to general practitioners on best practice on how to advise newly pregnant women on health and dietary matters; [37223]

(2) what advice is available from his Department to assist women in the first 10 weeks of pregnancy. [3722]

Mr. Horam: In the early weeks of pregnancy, advice and information are available to women from a range of health professionals, including midwives and general practitioners. It is important for women to book for antenatal care as soon as they think they might be pregnant. The report "Changing Childbirth", published in 1993, sets out the principles of woman-centred maternity care and emphasises the critical importance of good communication skills in enabling health professionals to present clear and unbiased information to women that allows them to make informed choices and take an active part in decisions about their care. Local maternity units have also been encouraged, as part of the implementation process of "Changing Childbirth", to produce their own information for women.

An important and comprehensive source of information to women and health professionals on health and dietary needs during pregnancy is contained in the Health Education Authority's pregnancy book, given free to all first-time mothers. A Department of Health leaflet, "While You Are Pregnant," provides guidance on safe eating and how to avoid infection from food and animals. The Department has also commissioned the HEA to undertake a programme of education about the importance of an increased intake of folic acid in the prevention of neural tube defects, such as spina bifida. To achieve its full effect this needs to be increased before conception and in the very early stages of pregnancy.

Health Care (Brent and Harrow)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will undertake an investigation into the provision of services to expectant mothers and young children by Brent and Harrow health authority and Parkside community trust, with particular reference to services provided by health visitors and district nurses. [37174]

Mr. Horam: We have no plans to do so.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37233]

Mr. Horam: The decision as to what media to use for a departmental publication is generally taken on a case-by-case basis. Major departmental publications are accompanied by simultaneous release on the Internet only when it is felt that the Internet is an equally appropriate and accessible medium for the target audience. The cost of preparing publications for the Internet and copyright issues are also taken into consideration when assessing publications' suitability for mounting on the world wide web. A number of publications have been published on the Department of Health Internet site, most recently the "National Health Service Performance Guide 1995–96". The DH site also includes bibliographic details about major departmental publications as they are issued, including availability, and this information is among the most heavily accessed on its home pages.

Slimming Clinics

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has in respect of the future management and control of slimming clinics and the drugs that they prescribe; and if he will make a statement. [37735]

Mr. Malone: The Medicines Commission has considered a proposal to ban anorectic agents under section 62 of the Medicines Act 1968. I have exceptionally decided to make the commission's report public and have today placed copies in the Library.

Following extensive consultation, the commission concluded that there was insufficient evidence of significant harm to the public as a consequence of the use of anorectic drugs to justify a ban. The Government have accepted this advice and have no plans to ban anorectic agents or introduce new regulation of slimming clinics. However, the commission has expressed concern that there may be inappropriate use of anorectic agents by some practitioners. In response to that concern, I have asked the Royal College of Physicians of London to draw up recommendations on the clinical management of obesity, including the appropriate use of anorectic drugs. The royal college has agreed to report back by the end of this year.

Childline

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase his Department's grant to the Childline charity. [37821]

Mr. Bowis: There has been a substantial increase in Department of Health support for Childline from this financial year. Childline's main grant from the Government is £519,000 over the three financial years ending in 1998–99. In addition, a Government grant of £60,000 is being paid to Childline over three financial years ending 1998–99 to help it continue operating its dedicated line for children in care.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each NHS trust has spent to date on the private finance initiative; and if he will make a statement. [37844]

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by NHS region the financial costs to the NHS associated with the administration and testing of projects under the private finance initiative. [37714]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 15 January at column 337. Further information is not available centrally.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names and values of each private finance initiative contract which has been signed to date by NHS region. [37715]

Mr. Horam: The information requested for each private finance scheme with a capital value of £1 million or more has been placed in the Library. Information on schemes with a capital value of less than £1 million is not held centrally.

Medicines Control Agency

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the annual report and accounts of the Medicines Control Agency. [38214]

Mr. Malone: I have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) and 5(3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

Medicines Commission

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the annual report of the Medicines Commission for 1995. [38215]

Mr. Malone: We have received the report, and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968.

Bound volumes have been placed in the Library containing the 1995 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Advisory Board on the Registration of Homoeopathic Products, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission and the Veterinary Products Committee.

We are glad to pay tribute to the valuable work done by the distinguished members of the Medicines Act advisory bodies and thank them warmly for the time and effort which they contribute in the public interest to this most important field.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the agencies for which his Department is responsible and the costs incurred by each for printing (a) all publications and (b) its annual report in the last year for which figures are available. [37472]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for the following agencies: National Health Service Estates agency, Medical Devices Agency, Medicines Control Agency and NHS Pensions Agency.

The costs incurred by each agency for printing all publications and its annual report are as follows:

| | NHSE | MDA | MCA | NHSPA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| All publications[1] | 240,000 | 414,490 | 56,003 | 203,507 |
| Annual report[2] | 7,789 | 8,550 | 6,411 | 4,512 |

[1] Figures are for 1995–96. They exclude costs of artwork and photography as this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.
[2] For production of the 1994–95 annual report including printing costs.

Rubery-Hollymoor Health Centre Project

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the Rubery-Hollymoor health centre project in Birmingham; [37625]

(2) when building will start on the Rubery-Hollymoor health centre project in Birmingham; what is the scheduled date for completion; what were the projected dates in the former West Midlands regional health authority's "Moving Ahead" and "Looking Forward" documents; and, if so, how they differ; [37623]

(3) if he will list the costs to the national health service (a) incurred to date and (b) projected in the current financial year in respect of the administration and testing of the proposed Rubery-Hollymoor health centre project in Birmingham under the private finance initiative; [37624]

(4) if he will make a statement on the availability of capital to build the capital to build the proposed Rubery-Hollymoor health centre in Birmingham in the financial year (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [37622]

Mr. Horam: Proposals for a new health centre to be built on the Rubery-Hollymoor site in the west midlands are well advanced. Although the method of financing the project has yet to be decided, building should be completed in 1997. This is two years later than expected because of a number of problems, including difficulties over the siting, but the extra time has allowed for an improved design to be developed and significant reduction in the cost to be identified.

Costs incurred by the South Birmingham Mental Health national health service trust in exploring finance options are a matter for the trust and the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Mrs. A. Hingley. Should the project need to be financed publicly, arrangements are in hand for enabling work to take place in 1996–97 with full funding in 1997–98.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to his Department of funding research into Alzheimer's disease in each of the last five years and the present year to date. [37629]

Mr. Bowis: The main agency through which the Government support bio-medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. The Department's policy research programme has contributed £750,000 to the MRC cognitive and aging study between October 1990 and June 1996. Another study, "Husbands and wives who care for elderly people with dementia and function psychiatric disorder", was undertaken at the Institute of Psychiatry and ended in December 1995; the total cost was £134,331.

NHS Reference Guide

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of (a) collating, (b) collecting, (c) printing and (d) publishing the annual NHS reference guide. [37628]

Mr. Malone: The national health service executive publishes an annual report which provides public information about the performance of the NHS and plays an important role in ensuring that the service remains accountable.

The annual report for 1994–95 was published on 2 November 1995 and cost £32,712 to produce.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37701]

Mr. Horam: None.

Child Abuse Inquiries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to public funds of the review conducted by Sir William Utting of residential child care and his report "Children in the Public Care". [35145]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 1 July 1996]: The cost of Sir William Utting's review was around £25,000.

The Utting report, "Children in the Public Care", was a priced Her Majesty's Stationery Office document and there were no costs to public funds arising from its publication.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to public funds of the committee of inquiry into the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes separately identifying the cost of the report "Choosing with Care". [35147]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 1 July 1996]: The cost of the Warner committee of inquiry into the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes was £171,000.

There were no costs from the publication of "Choosing with Care", which was a Her Majesty's Stationery Office priced publication.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums have been spent by (a) his Department and (b) the NHS executive on external research on ethnic minority health in each of the last five years; and if he will list the recipient organisations and the amounts concerned. [37093]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The Department attaches great importance to ensuring that the health needs of ethnic minority populations are recognised and met. Since 1989 it has allocated £0.5 million each year to fund a range of development projects aimed at improving access to health services. A directory listing the initiatives has recently been published and copies are available in the Library.

In addition, the Department's research programme currently funds a number of projects, to a combined value of £3.5 million, which have an ethnic dimension.

Information on research commissioned during the last five years by the Department of Health is contained in "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commission 1994–95", copies of which are also available in the Library.

The national health service executive has funded the following projects on ethnic minority health within the last five years:

(i) Within the national research programme on cardiovascular disease and stroke a project on developing methods in primary care for prevention of vascular disease and diabetes in high risk ethnic groups. The total allocation was £99,353 to the department of public health, University of Manchester.

(ii) Within the national programme on mental health, a project on screening tests for depression and dementia in elderly people from ethnic minorities. The total allocation was £116,302 to the University of Manchester.

In addition to these projects, the NHS executive has inherited programmes of research from the former regional health authorities which were replaced by regional offices of the executive on 1 April 1996. Complete information is not available on these programmes, which have an estimated value of £420,000. Within the executive, the west midlands regional office leads on research into ethnic health issues.

WALES

Higher Education Expenditure

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 211, what has been the public expenditure on higher education in Wales, excluding public expenditure on student maintenance, in (a) cash, (b) real terms and (c) expressed as a percentage of (i) estimated Welsh gross domestic product and (ii) estimated United Kingdom gross domestic product for each financial year since 1989–90; and what is planned for (1) 1996–97, (2) 1997–98 and (3) 1998–99. [37527]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the last three lines of the table in the reply that I gave him on Wednesday 26 June 1996, Official Report, columns 154–55.

European Union Measures

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the impact on Wales on the blocking of European Union measures in respect of (a) civil protection on (i) the community action programme and (ii) Council regulations on research, (b) the internal market on (i) resolution on legislative simplification, (ii) conclusions on accounting standards, (iii) decision on action programme for European Union industry and (iv) proposals for decision on adoption of a programme to promote European linguistic diversity in the information society, (c) social affairs on (i) decision on a Year Against Racism and Xenophobia, (ii) resolution on transferability of vocational training qualifications and (iii) recommendation on balanced participation in roles in decision making, (d) justice and home affairs on (i) recommendations on the fight against counterfeiting, (ii) draft 1997 European budget, (iii) joint action on drugs liaison offices and (iv) common positions on draft Hague convention on protection on minors, (e) fisheries decision on the implementation of community action programme on competitiveness in industry and (f) cultural/audio-visual on (i) common position on Ariane programme and (ii) common position on Raphael programme. [37227]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The effect of the policy of non-co-operation was to delay some measures for a short period. None was lost and no lasting damage has been caused, while considerable advantage has been gained for Wales by progress on the beef issue which would not have been achieved otherwise.

The hon. Member may wish to note that the proposal for a programme promoting linguistic diversity was not blocked.

Youth Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of those currently on youth training schemes joined them at 16 years of age in (i) Wales and (ii) in each training and enterprise council area. [37555]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is contained in the following table:

Proportion of starts aged 16 at start of programme 1995–96

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| Gwent | 44 |
| Mid Glamorgan | 35 |
| North East Wales | 37 |
| Powys | n/a |
| South Glamorgan | n/a |
| Targed | 39 |
| West Wales | 45 |
| Total Wales | 41 |

Suicide (Farmers)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers committed suicide in Wales in 1995; and what percentage change this represents on each of the last three years. [37153]

Mr. Hague: There were seven cases registered in 1995 with the Office for National Statistics, representing a reduction of 42 per cent. on 1994, a reduction of 50 per cent. on 1993 and an increase of 17 per cent. on 1992.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37709]

Mr. Hague: None.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Queen's University (Fair Employment Cases)

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many fair employment cases taken against Queen's university, Belfast, have been settled out of court; [36603]

(2) what legal costs have been paid by Queen's university, Belfast, in relation to fair employment cases in each of the last 10 years; [36601]

(3) what disciplinary action has been taken against employees of Queen's university, Belfast, for failure to implement fair employment legislation and practice; [36604]

(4) what compensation costs have been paid by Queen's university, Belfast, in relation to fair employment cases in each of the last 10 years. [36602]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not held by my Department, but I have asked the vice-chancellor of Queen's university, Belfast to write to the hon. Member and I will place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Long-term Unemployment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the report on long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland, commissioned by the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action; and if he will make a statement. [37261]

Sir John Wheeler: The report, "Long-Term Unemployment in Northern Ireland", commissioned by the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action, is an important and interesting contribution to the on-going debate on long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Many of the issues raised by the report are already being addressed by the Government as part of a wide ranging review of policy responses to the issue. The Training and Employment Agency has also recently commenced an in-depth review of the long-term unemployed and related issues and will take on board relevant recommendations contained in the report.

Business in the Community

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the business in the community, Northern Ireland scheme. [36152]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 8 July 1996]: Business in the Community, established in September 1989 is a charitable organisation which seeks to develop business involvement in the community by creating links between business and local community groups, schools and small businesses. One of BITC's key strategic objectives is to establish lasting partnerships between NI companies, and relevant Government Departments and community organisations.

Three of the NI Departments—Department of the Environment, Department of Economic Development and Department of Agriculture—have involvement with BITC through a number of initiatives.

A copy of Business in the Community's annual review has been placed in the Library.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what environmental impact study he has made on the fluoridation of water supplies; and if he will make a statement. [37458]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 15 July 1996]: None. On the evidence of studies carried out elsewhere, a specific Northern Ireland study was not deemed necessary.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Links

4. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to improve relationships between business links chairmen and his Department. [36068]

Mr. Page: My Department has good relationships with business links chairmen. The starting point has been our common commitment to the success of business links in strengthening the competitiveness of local businesses. As the business links network has developed the relationship has been strengthened by good communication links with chairmen and I will ensure that this continues.

22. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), of 17 June, Official Report, column 318, if he will make a statement on the proportion of business links chairmen who defined their relations with his Department as poor. [36089]

Mr. Page: The survey of chairmen and chief executives of business links was undertaken on their behalf and funded by my Department.

The majority of business links chairmen and chief executives said that their relationships with my Department were good.

25. Mr. Hunter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what statistics he collects on the use of business links (a) nationally and (b) in the south of England. [36092]

Mr. Page: The Department of Trade and Industry collects information on the number of businesses using business links, and the services they use, both nationally and regionally.

National statistics on businesses using business links are available in the quarterly "Reports on Business Link and Business Link Regional Supply Network Management Information". A copy was placed in the Library of the House on June 29.

Small Firms

5. Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small firms were operating in the United Kingdom (a) at the latest available date and (b) in 1979. [36069]

Mr. Lang: Provisional estimates show there were 3.7 million businesses with fewer than 50 employees at end 1994, the most recent year for which statistics are available. Comparable estimates for 1979 show there were then only 2.4 million businesses.

Manufacturing Industry

18. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many manufacturing businesses employing between 10 and 50 employees there are in the United Kingdom. [36085]

Mr. Page: There are 34,614 manufacturing businesses employing between 10 and 50 employees, according to figures from the interdepartmental businesses register.

29. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives he is taking to encourage British firms to invest in manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom. [36096]

Mr. Eggar: We are providing a stable economic environment with low inflation, low corporation tax rates and historically low interest rates. Profits are high and the Treasury's latest forecast is that business investment, which incorporates manufacturing investment, will rise by over 7 per cent. in both 1996 and 1997.

20. Sir David Knox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry. [36087]

Mr. Lang: DTI Ministers regularly meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss a range of issues, including manufacturing industry.

Engineering Productivity

19. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of British engineering productivity relative to other EU countries. [36086]

Mr. Nelson: The rate of growth of productivity in the United Kingdom engineering industry was nearly twice that of the EU average between 1991 and 1994.

World Trade (UK Share)

21. Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the United Kingdom percentage share of world trade in (a) exports and (b) imports in 1979 and 1995; and if he will make a statement. [36088]

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom share of world exports of goods was 4.8 per cent. in 1995 compared with 5.7 per cent. in 1979. Comparable figures for imports are 6.4 per cent. in 1979 and 5.1 per cent. in 1995.

Manufacturing Output

23. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the rate of manufacturing output since 1992. [36090]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since 1992 manufacturing output has grown by 8 per cent., an annual growth rate of 2.5 per cent.

Barmac Nigg Site

24. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress of the Barmac Nigg site objective 1 application. [36091]

Mr. Eggar: I am pleased to say that my hon. Friend the Minister responsible for industry at the Scottish Office announced on 8 July that the objective 1 grant of £3.3 million to the Barmac oil rig at Nigg had been confirmed.

Car Clocking

26. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure that trading standards officers can more effectively tackle car clocking. [36093]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Trade Descriptions Act 1968 already makes it an offence to sell a car with a false odometer reading in the course of a business, but I am aware that there can be difficulties in gathering the necessary evidence of a car's true mileage and in tracing previous owners. I understand that the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency has introduced voluntary arrangements to encourage the recording of mileage and is currently looking at ways of improving these as well as at other means of improving the accuracy of the information it holds.

I also understand that the Director General of Fair Trading is shortly to seek the views of interested parties on consumer problems when buying new cars, including the problem of car clocking. Following consultation, the director general will wish to make his own recommendations for dealing with their unacceptable practice and I and ministerial colleagues will, of course, consider these extremely carefully.

National Minimum Wage

27. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the impact on employment in the north-west regions of the introduction of minimum of £4 an hour under social chapter provisions. [36094]

Mr. Lang: A recent study estimated that a minimum wage of £4 an hour would cost 140,000 jobs in the north-west assuming only half restoration of differentials.

Holiday Price Advertisements

28. Mr. Mudie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he intends to take to discourage misleading holiday price advertisements. [36095]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I believe that the present legislation deals adequately with misleading holiday prices advertisements. There are provisions in the Consumer Protection Act 1987, enforced by trading standards departments, which make it a criminal offence to give consumers a misleading price indication about goods, services, accommodation or facilities.

In addition, the Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992 prohibit organisers and retailers from supplying to consumers any descriptive matter concerning a package, the price of a package or any other conditions applying to the contract which contains any misleading information.

Research and Development

30. Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the United Kingdom's gross domestic product is spent on research and development. [36097]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The UK's gross expenditure on R and D in 1994—the latest year for which figures are available—was 2.2 per cent. of GDP, as set out in "Science, Engineering and Technology Statistics 1996", a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Balance of Trade

31. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the balance of trade with the EU over the last five years; and what were the equivalent figures for trade with those countries in the five years prior to the United Kingdom's EU accession. [36098]

Mr. Nelson: In the latest five years the United Kingdom trade deficit in goods with the EU was worth £26.8 billion compared with a deficit of £1.9 billion in the five years preceding UK accession in 1973. The UK deficit, as a proportion of total UK trade with the EU countries, has fallen from 5.75 per cent. prior to accession to 3.5 per cent. in the latest five years.

37. Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on trends in the visible balance of trade between the first quarter of 1995 and the first quarter of 1996. [36104]

Mr. Nelson: After a deterioration in the second quarter of 1995, the trend in the balance of trade in goods has been broadly flat.

Environmental Claims

32. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he intends to take to protect consumers from misleading environmental claims. [36099]

36. Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he intends to take to protect consumers from abuses highlighted in the National Consumer Council report on environmental claims on goods. [36103]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department is currently working with the Department of the Environment to draw up, in consultation with industry and consumer interests, a code of practice for the making of environmental claims.

Nuclear Privatisation

33. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress with the privatisation of the nuclear industry. [36100]

Mr. Eggar: British Energy has been floated successfully on the stock market. Dealings in shares began on Monday 15 July.

Marketed Services

35. Mr. Brian David Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's average level of productivity in marketed services relative to its major competitors in each of the last three years. [36102]

Mr. Eggar: There are no comparative international official statistics for marketed services.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36017]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The DTI does not record expenditure on taxi fares separately from other travel and subsistence expenses paid to staff undertaking departmental business. To provide the information requested would entail disproportionate cost.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37241]

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department will continue to publish appropriate material on the Internet, including some major publications that have traditionally appeared only in print. Command papers are available on the DTI web site. Indeed, the DTI has also been at the forefront of making use of this interactive medium to deliver best practice and benchmarking guidance to business under the information society initiative and the managing in the 90s campaigns. Traffic to the DTI world wide web site is on the increase and more specialised pages are about to be launched to provide information to UK exporters to enhance further the range of information delivered to the business community through our Internet presence. OST also has its own home page on the net.

Employment Rights

Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the Green Paper "Resolving Employment Rights Disputes: Options for Reform." [38391]

Mr. Lang: The Government are today publishing, for consultation, a draft Bill on industrial tribunals and the resolution of employment rights disputes. As foreshadowed by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Competition and Consumer Affairs on 13 March, Official Report, column 671, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin), the key thrust of the draft Bill is to encourage the use of alternative ways of resolving disputes such as in-house appeals procedures, conciliation and arbitration and to streamline and improve industrial tribunals procedures enabling cases to be dealt with more speedily and efficiently.

The draft Bill contains proposals to implement those aspects of the Green Paper "Resolving Employment Rights Disputes: Options for Reform" Cm 2707, which commanded wide support and which require primary legislation. Some of the proposals have been modified to take account of views expressed in the consultation on the Green Paper. In some cases this has been to make them more even-handed and in others to make them more workable. The consultation document includes the draft Bill, explains the proposals in detail and seeks views on a number of specific questions.

The publication of legislation in draft is Government policy where time allows and will give all those with an interest in the proposals an opportunity to comment on legislation of direct interest to them. This will help to improve the quality of the legislation before it is introduced to Parliament.

The Government would welcome responses to the consultation document from all interested parties. These should be sent to:

Ben Rimington

Employment Rights (Dispute Resolution) Bill Team

2.D.52

Department of Trade and Industry

1 Victoria Street

London SW1H 0ET

before Friday 27 September.

Copies of the consultation document are being distributed widely and have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Skill Levels

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the UK skills audit survey of multinationals, if he will list the average weighted skill level in the USA, Singapore, Japan, Germany, France and the UK, in respect of (a) numeracy, (b) ability to learn, (c) team working, (d) information technology, (e) technical, inlcuding occupation specific, (f) communication and (g) intellectual skills for the work force at all levels. [37409]

Mr. Oppenheim: The following table shows the average weighted skill level of the work force at all levels for the skills and countries covered in the "Skills Audit Survey of Multinationals". These figures have been estimated by assigning the following weights to the responses: good 4, adequate 2 and poor 1 and then combining the weighted responses to calculate the average weighted skill level for each skill in each country.

| | UK | France | Germany | Japan | Singapore | USA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Numeracy | 2.7 | 3.0 | 3.4 | 3.7 | 3.3 | 2.7 |
| Ability to learn | 3.2 | 2.9 | 3.3 | 3.3 | 3.7 | 2.9 |
| Team working | 2.8 | 2.5 | 2.5 | 3.4 | 3.2 | 2.9 |
| IT | 2.5 | 2.8 | 3.1 | 3.4 | 2.6 | 2.6 |
| Technical | 2.8 | 3.1 | 3.3 | 3.5 | 3.4 | 2.6 |
| Communication | 2.7 | 2.6 | 2.7 | 3.4 | 3.1 | 2.6 |
| Intellectual | 2.8 | 2.8 | 2.8 | 3.0 | 3.7 | 2.5 |

Coal Industry

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current level of coal stocks in the United Kingdom; and what is the minimum level of stock set by his Department. [37630]

Mr. Page: Latest available data are for the end of April 1996 when stocks of coal totalled 12.7 million tonnes of which stocks held by electricity generators totalled 6.2 million tonnes, stocks at coke ovens totalled 1.2 million tonnes, and stocks at collieries and opencast sites totalled 5.3 million tonnes.

I am currently reviewing the level of fossil fuel stocks to be held by generators.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance he will make available to recover underground plant and machinery at those collieries which closed when Coal Investment ceased to trade. [37631]

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the owners of the plant and equipment, who should contact the Coal Authority or the new licensees at those collieries which have been assigned or relicensed.

Management Standards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to improve the standard of management of British industry. [36079]

Mr. Eggar: The Government's recent White Paper "Competitiveness–Creating the enterprise centre of Europe" set out a range of initiatives to improve the standards of management in British industry in partnership with business support organisations.

Inward Investment

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average cost to public funds for each full-time job created by inward investment during 1995. [37633]

Mr. Eggar: This information is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Research Base

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from industrialists regarding the United Kingdom's science and technology research base. [36553]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have received a wide range of representations from industry and industrialists regarding the United Kingdom's science and technology research base. Some eminent industrialists sit on the Council for Science and Technology and the research councils' bodies for informing themselves of the needs of their user communities. Thousands of industrialists are involved in the technology foresight programme, the findings of which continue to inform decisions on the science and technology base.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the contribution made by universities to the science and engineering base for the United Kingdom's industrial competitiveness. [36552]

Mr. Taylor: As set out in the White Paper "Competitiveness; Creating the enterprise centre of Europe", the United Kingdom universities play a vital part in enabling British industry to develop and exploit new science, engineering and technology and in the creation of a well education and highly skilled work force. Without the excellence of our science and engineering base and our graduate work force, the United Kingdom could not sustain the innovation and general business performance needed to ensure our competitiveness.

The Scottish Office, as part of its "Commercialisation Enquiry" with the Royal Society of Edinburgh, undertook a number of studies which highlight the importance of commercialisation of research to the Scottish economy, and the direct and indirect benefits of research in Scottish universities. Producing indicators which reflect and impact upon publicly funded research in new ideas and understanding is not a trivial task and is one issue I addressed in my speech to the Royal Institution on March 21.

Licences

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the licences issued by his Department; for what purpose they are issued; and what are the administrative costs involved for each. [37596]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 july 1996]: The information requested on licences and their purposes is as follows. The administrative costs involved for each could not be assessed without incurring disproportionate cost.

Exports

Open General Export licences.

Open General Transhipment licence.

Individual Specific Export licence.

Temporary Export licence.

Open Individual export licence.

Transhipment licence.

Export licensing is imposed on certain goods for a variety of reasons including national security and international treaty obligations and commitments.

Imports

Import licences issued against quota.

Import licences issued for surveillance purposes.

Special import licenses for national provisions.

Open individual licences.

Import licensing controls are imposed to implement internationally agreed policies, designed to stabilise markets and generate free trade, to protect UK and EU industry, to protect health and safety, and to enforce international trade sanctions.

Insurance

Authorisation of insurance companies, to maintain confidence in the market and protect policy holders.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 433, about parliamentary questions what method would be used by her Department in collating the information requested. [37525]

Mr. Robin Squire: The examination of more than 36,000 files dating back to 1987.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 484, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by her Department in collating the information requested. [37524]

Mr. Squire: The examination of more than 24,000 files dating back to 1989.

Administration Costs

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each local education authority in England the cash per pupil of the schools' budget spent on administration in 1995–96 and estimated to be so spent in 1996–97. [37512]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information set out in the following table is derived, for both years, from local management of schools budget statements produced by local education authorities.

Outturn figures for 1995–96 are not yet available. The budget figures for that year are as previously given on 28 February in my answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey), Official Report, columns 594–95.

University Graduates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the rate of employment for young people who graduated from universities in Wales in 1994–95; and what is the equivalent figure for graduates from universities in England. [37115]

Mr. Forth: Information for 1994–95 is not yet available. The available data for 1993–94 are as follows:

UK domiciled graduates employed six months after graduation

| | Number | As a percentage of all graduates with known destinations |
|---|---|---|
| England | 64,747 | 54.4 |
| Wales | 3,778 | 46.8 |

Education Funding

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions have taken place since the announcement of the Government's expenditure plans for the period 1996–97 to 1998–99 between her officials and representative bodies in respect of future funding levels for (a) schools, (b) further education and (c) universities. [37262]

Mr. Robin Squire: Ministers and officials have had a number of meetings with representative bodies to discuss the future funding of schools, further education and universities since the announcement of the Government's expenditure plans for the period 1996–97 to 1998–99.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations Minister have received since the announcement of the Government's expenditure plans for the period 1996–97 to 1998–99 on the future funding of (a) schools, (b) further education and (c) universities. [37263]

Mr. Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a range of representations from a number of bodies and individuals on the future funding of schools, further education and universities since the announcement of the Government's expenditure plans for the period 1996–97 to 1998–99.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects the Government and the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals working party studying the impact of (a) the private finance initiative and (b) budget cuts on higher education to report. [37411]

Mr. Forth: We expect the working groups to report in the next few weeks, subject to final discussions with the CVCP.

School Pupils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each local education authority the full-time equivalent number of school pupils in 1995–96 and 1996–97. [37746]

Mr. Squire: Information for January 1996 will be available in the autumn. Information for January 1995, the latest data available, is shown in the following table.

School Inspections

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the average cost of (a) a primary and (b) a secondary school Office for Standards in Education inspection in the most recent year for which figures are available; [37780]

(2) what were the targets for the number of school inspections by the Office for Standards in Education in (a) 1994–95 and (b) the current school year; and if she will break the targets down for (i) primary schools, (ii) secondary schools, (iii) special schools and (iv) sixth form colleges; and how many have been inspected in the current school year; [37750]

(3) what are the targets for the number of school inspections to be undertaken by Ofsted in the next school year; how many contracts have been awarded; and if she will break the information down for school terms and for (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools, (c) special schools and (d) sixth form colleges. [37751]

Mr. Robin Squire: These are matters for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking her Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit she has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37711]

Mr. Robin Squire: No such inquiries have been undertaken by the Department.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement about teachers' pay in 1996–97. [38216]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am today laying before Parliament a second Pay and Conditions Order bringing the provisions of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1996 into force from 1 September 1996. Copies of this order are being sent to local education authorities and the teachers' and employers' organisations. I have already implemented the first stage of the 3.75 per cent. pay award for teachers by a first Pay and Conditions Order in April.

The School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1996 was published on 27 June following detailed consultation with the teachers' and employers' associations and representatives of the governors of voluntary and grant-maintained schools. The document sets out the statutory pay and conditions of service for teachers in maintained schools in England and Wales.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress Birmingham, Manchester and Sandwell training and enterprise councils are making in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [38217]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of a three-year licence to Birmingham, Manchester and Sandwell training and enterprise councils which have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set.

Teachers Pension Agency

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what key performance targets she has set for the Teachers Pension Agency in the first half of 1996–97. [38314]

Mr. Robin Squire: For the period of 1 April to 30 September 1996, the key performance targets for the Teachers Pension Agency are:

(a) to process 98 per cent. of the applications for retirement awards by the payable date, or if later, then within 30 days of receipt of the application;

(b) to meet the agreed accuracy target for pensions-related calculations;

(c) to provide a substantive answer to 95 per cent. of all inquiries within 15 working days of receipt;

(d) to manage the programme agreed with the agency's clients for the collection and processing of service and salary data relating to teachers and to seek timely submission of that data; and

(e) to support Capita Managed Services Ltd. in the orderly transition of the administration of the teachers superannuation scheme to the private sector on 1 October 1996.

Medical Students

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the percentage of applicants to (a) colleges of nursing and (b) medical schools who were offered a place, broken down by ethnic group in 1995. [37096]

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 July 1996]: Data on colleges of nursing are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Data on UK domiciled applicants and acceptances to first degree courses in medicine in the UK, autumn 1995 entry, are as follows:

| Ethnic group | Applicants | Accepted applicants | Percentage accepted |
|---|---|---|---|
| Asian Bangladeshi | 156 | 39 | 25 |
| Asian Chinese | 143 | 58 | 41 |
| Asian Indian | 1,034 | 433 | 42 |
| Asian Pakistani | 633 | 163 | 26 |
| Asian Other | 480 | 180 | 38 |
| Black African | 230 | 31 | 13 |
| Black Caribbean | 55 | 5 | 9 |
| Black Other | 39 | 7 | 18 |
| Other ethnic groups | 248 | 92 | 37 |
| White | 5,984 | 3,174 | 53 |
| Unknown | 190 | 53 | 28 |
| Total | 9,192 | 4,235 | 46 |

SCOTLAND

Union (Benefits)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the (a) strategic and (b) economic interests which require the maintenance of the union between Scotland and the rest of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [35992]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Union between Scotland and the rest of the United Kingdom has provided political and financial stability for nearly 300 years. It has been the cornerstone of the prosperity enjoyed by all the peoples of the United Kingdom. The creation of a tax-raising Scottish Parliament as proposed by Opposition parties would threaten the existence of the Union and the benefits of partnership would be lost.

Newchurch and Co.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update his answer of 9 January, Official Report, column 131, concerning the consultancy contracts awarded by (a) Scottish health boards and (b) NHS trusts to Newchurch and Co. in relation to private finance industry contracts. [37346]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Newchurch and Co. has been engaged as a consultant by the following health bodies in relation to private finance schemes:

Hairmyres and Stonehouse NHS Trust

Dumfries and Galloway Acute and Maternity NHS Trust

Grampian health board

New Hairmyres hospital

New day case unit and maternity facilities

Kincardineshire health services

Each contract was awarded following an open, competitive process.

Scottish Diet Action Group

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the Scottish diet action group report; and if he will make a statement. [37395]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The action plan prepared by the Scottish diet action group, which I have chaired, will be published on 25 July 1996. The plan will provide an innovative framework for tackling the dietary shortcomings which have contributed to our poor health record over many years.

New Hospital, Stonehaven

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received about the new Stonehaven hospital through the postcard campaign. [37358]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received 1,386 postcards about Grampian health board's proposals for improved health services in Kincardineshire.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to (a) Grampian health board and (b) the consortium led by Grampian Healthcare NHS trust of the tendering process for the new hospital in Stonehaven. [37377]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Up to 4 July 1996, the costs incurred by Grampian health board and by Grampian Healthcare NHS trust were around £83,000 and £200,000 respectively. This exercise will result in significantly improved health services for the people of Kincardineshire.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of patients in each health board area is registered with a GP fundholding practice. [37443]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

| | Percentage |
|---|---|
| Scotland | 42.7 |
| Argyll and Clyde | 30.5 |
| Ayrshire and Arran | 13.1 |
| Borders | 53.2 |
| Dumfries and Galloway | 34.7 |
| Fife | 39.4 |
| Forth Valley | 35.5 |
| Grampian | 68.3 |

| Lanarkshire | 42.0 |
| Lothian | 44.9 |
| Orkney | = |
| Shetland | = |
| Tayside | 49.5 |
| Western Isles | 23.1 |

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37240]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A number of recent Scottish Office publications have been accompanied by a release on the Internet. The possibility of making wider use of the Internet as a publishing medium is being kept under review.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients, in each of the last five years, were readmitted to hospital within three months of leaving, in each health board area. [37337]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total number of patients readmitted to hospital within three months of discharge for the last five available years is given in the table. Over the same period, total discharges increased by almost 21 per cent. The reason for a patient being readmitted is not necessarily related to the reason for original admission. The longer after discharge that a patient is readmitted, the less likely it is that the reasons are related.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37336]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for 1995–96 is as follows:

| | Nature of Contract | Value £ |
|---|---|---|
| Coopers and Lybrand | Advice on IT strategies | 7,708 |
| Coopers and Lybrand | Priority base budgeting review | 2,370 |
| Coopers and Lybrand | Financial accounts | 663 |
| Price Waterhouse | Examination of urban programme funding | 5,500 |
| Price Waterhouse | Review and report on Historic Scotland treatment of VAT | 4,000 |
| Ernst and Young | VFM study | 10,827 |

This information relates only to the appointment of management consultants. Information relating to appointments for services provided by lawyers, surveyors, civil engineers, auditors, etcetera. is not included as this information is not held centrally.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will report on the progress of each PFI health project in Scotland, indicating in each case when a contract was signed or when a preferred bidder was selected or when a preferred bidder is likely to be selected. [37371]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Progress on PFI schemes in health in Scotland is set out in the tables:

Contracts signed

| Scheme | Procured by: |
|---|---|
| 1990 | |
| Rutherglen elderly care beds | Greater Glasgow health board |
| 1991 | |
| Darnley elderly care beds | Greater Glasgow health board |

Social Development Summit

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Scottish Office has taken to implement the agreements signed by the Government at the world summit on social development in Copenhagen in 1995; and if he will make a statement. [37339]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The documents arising from the summit were not binding on the participating states. However, in keeping with the rest of the United Kingdom, Scotland will continue to benefit from the Government's comprehensive national policies and programmes to improve living standards, reduce unemployment and promote social integration.

Bible John Case

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will itemise the costs of the Strathclyde police inquiry into the Bible John case in respect of forensic tests conducted in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Germany. [37199]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information in the table has been obtained from Strathclyde police. No charge was levied for the costs, as such, of carrying out the forensic tests in England and Germany, but there were associated costs. The figure for Scotland is calculated on the basis of the time taken by forensic scientists to carry out the tests, charged at the standard commercial rate used by Strathclyde police for undertaking all DNA analyses.

Scotland: £1,420

England: £1,600

Germany: £250

Energy Action Scotland

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made by the Scottish Office working party considering the eight-point action plan produced by Energy Action Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [37341]

Mr. Kynoch: The action plan put forward by Energy Action Scotland was carefully considered by the severe weather working party in its review of the issues arising from the events at new year 1996. The working party's report was placed in the Library of the House in June. Several of its recommendations benefited from the action plan. All the recommendations are being pursued.

Information Technology

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what organisations during the last 10 years have undertaken information technology functions which are similar to those undertaken by the information management group in England; and what is the total expenditure of those organisations over this period. [37376]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No one organisation in Scotland has mirrored the range of activities carried out by the information management group of the Department of Health. In Scotland, information technology issues have, since 1988, been managed successively by the directorate of health service information systems, health systems division, within the Common Services Agency and currently by the computing and IT strategy division of the Scottish Office Department of Health, management executive.

Expenditure figures are available from 1991–92. The table lists the expenditure directly managed by these organisations and shows a steady reduction in the retention of centrally managed funds for information technology projects, and an increase in the release of funds to health boards to make their own decisions about funding priorities in the light of the needs of patients.

1991–92: £13.1 million

1992–93: £11.8 million

1993–94: £9.1 million

1994–95: £7.7 million

1995–96: £6.0 million

1996–97: £4.3 million

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37708]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Fire Safety

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many large single-storey buildings in Scotland have been damaged by fire in the last year for which figures are available. [37803]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to secure harmonisation of Scottish building standards with regulations for England and Wales; and if he will make a statement on the evidence his Department has evaluated into the effectiveness of Scottish standards in respect of fire safety. [37804]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Harmonisation of the technical requirements in the Scottish building standards and the building regulations for England and Wales is proceeding as parts of the regulations are updated and where judged appropriate. Given the differences in legal backgrounds, compliance checking systems, existing circumstances, and traditions in construction, complete harmonisation is not always possible. Close rapport is maintained between officials from England and Wales and from Scotland during the revision of both sets of regulations. In Scotland, the Building Standards Advisory Committee recently recommended the adoption of amended standards dealing with fire safety, which will include further harmonised requirements and which, with other amendments, are expected to come into force next year.

Drink Driving

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of (a) deaths and (b) injuries from accidents caused by drink driving in Scotland in each year since 1990; [35671]

(2) if he will list the number of (a) children and (b) adults in Scotland who have been (i) killed or (ii) injured in accidents caused by drink driving in each year since 1990. [35672]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 July 1996]: The number of reported casualties resulting from road accidents where one or more drivers failed or refused the breath test is set out in the following table. Estimates of total casualties in drink drive accidents, including those where the driver cannot be breath tested, are not available.

Number of casualties in positive/refused breath test road accidents

| Year | Fatalities | Injuries |
|---|---|---|
| Children (0–15 years) | | |
| 1990 | 1 | 49 |

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 375, if he will take account of the opinion of the director of Landmark Centre, concerning the project's economic viability, in considering the application by Highlands and Islands Enterprise to incur expenditure on the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm. [37517]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 15 July 1996]: Yes. The director of the Landmark Centre has made direct representations to me about the project. I have assured him that my right hon. Friend will bear these in mind in reaching his decision.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 56, how many further representations he has since received about the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm; and how many of these have been in opposition to the proposal. [37516]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 15 July 1996]: To date, my right hon. Friend has received a further 774 letters about the Cairn Gorm funicular railway. Of these, 83 support the proposal and 691 oppose the development.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabies

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research including risk assessment and full economic audit his Department has (a) carried out or (b) commissioned, on alternatives to the quarantine-based rabies control procedure; and what conclusions he has drawn. [35765]

Mrs. Browning: The Government made it clear, in their response to the Agriculture Select Committee report on health controls on the importation of live animals, that they did not believe that the time was yet right for any changes to be introduced to the current quarantine arrangements for pet animals coming into this country. No specific research, risk assessment or economic audit has therefore been commissioned on what alternatives might be introduced. None the less, Ministers receive regular advice from officials on all aspects of rabies control, including the risk of introducing the disease.

Taxi Fares

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spent in meeting the costs of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. [36018]

Mr. Boswell: It is not possible currently to identify how much the Ministry spent in meeting the cost of taxi cab fares in the 1995–96 financial year. The cost of extracting the information from the financial records would be disproportionate.

Seeds

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons (a) Uncle Fred's pea, (b) the Welsh onion, (c) the Mortgage Lifter runner bean and (d) the Ormskirk late green Savoy cabbage are omitted from the list of species which are allowed to be commercially bought or sold as seeds; and if he will make a statement. [36226]

Mr. Boswell: The Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) Regulations 1982, as amended, which implement EC directives, require a variety on the UK national list or EC common catalogue to have a maintainer responsible for maintaining it true to its original description. A variety of Savoy cabbage named Ormskirk was removed from the UK national list in 1989 because no one wished to maintain it. My Department has no record of the varieties Uncle Fred's pea and the Mortgage Lifter runner bean being entered as candidates for the UK national list under those names. Marketing of varieties of the species Welsh onion is not controlled by the Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) Regulations 1982, as amended, and may therefore take place without these varieties being listed.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) why (a) the May Blossom cauliflower, (b) the Prizewinner swede, (c) the Black Kidney potato, (d) the everlasting green kale, (e) the Black Sugarsweet turnip, (f) the blight resistant Virginia spinach, (g) the Tommy Toe tomato and (h) the Giant Tree tomato are omitted from the list of species which are allowed to be commercially bought or sold as seeds; and if he will make a statement; [37450]

(2) for what reasons Ely white celery is omitted from the list of species which are allowed to be commercially bought or sold as seeds; and if he will make a statement. [37359]

Mr. Boswell: The Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) Regulations 1982, as amended, which implement EC directives, require a variety on the UK national list or EC common catalogue to have a maintainer responsible for maintaining it true to its original description. A variety of cauliflower named May Blossom was removed from the UK national list in 1984 because no one wished to maintain it; a variety of swede named Prizewinner was removed from the UK national list in 1975 and a celery named Ely white was removed in 1985 for the same reason. My Department has no record of the varieties Black Kidney potato, everlasting green kale, Black Sugarsweet turnip, blight resistant Virginia spinach, Tommy Toe tomato or Giant Tree tomato as being entered as candidates for the UK national list under these names.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were slaughtered in the United Kingdom under the 30-months scheme in the weeks beginning (a) 3 June and (b) 10 June.

Mr. Boswell: The number of cattle slaughtered under the scheme in these weeks was (a) 26,149 and (b) 28,271.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those questions submitted by the hon. Member that his Department has not answered, together with the number of days elapsed since the date for which they were originally set down to answer; and if he will make a statement. [37361]

Mrs. Browning: According to the Department's records, none of the hon. Member's questions is overdue for reply.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 march, Official Report, column 640, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37522]

Mr. Boswell: The examination of more than 17,000 files dating back to 1987–88.

Water Re-use

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will undertake a study to determine the safety and effectiveness of the extended water reuse system compared to conventional farming methods. [37475]

Mr. Baldry: I am not aware of any significant commercial advantage or public health benefit from extending beyond one month the period during which seawater may be reused in the purification of shellfish. We therefore have no plans to undertake studies to determine the safety and effectiveness of reusing seawater for extended periods, although we remain ready to evaluate any evidence of safety and effectiveness that independent researchers produce.

Oyster Farms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) licensed and (b) unlicensed oyster farms exist in the United Kingdom; and how many oysters are produced in each category per annum. [37476]

Mr. Baldry: Oysters may be harvested from wild fisheries or cultivated on farms. All oyster farms must be registered for shellfish disease control purposes. There are 153 registered oyster farms in the UK. UK production of farmed oysters sold for the table amounts to some 950 tonnes per annum. Around 538 tonnes of oysters were landed from wild fisheries in 1994.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37704]

Mr. Boswell: The Department responds to inquiries made by the Benefits Agency where there are reasonable grounds for suspicion that an individual may be involved in benefit fraud.

The Department has no record of any member of staff being suspended, dismissed or prosecuted as a result of such inquiries.

ADAS

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for ADAS in 1996–97. [38584]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary of State for Wales and I have set ADAS the following targets for 1996–97:

- to recover 100 per cent. of its costs for advisory services through charges to commercial customers;
- to comply with budgetary controls resulting from the Public Expenditure Survey and the Supply Estimates;
- to reduce the total cost per hour in contact delivery in real terms by 3 per cent;
- to maintain average debtor days at or better than 53 days;
- to meet 90 per cent. of research and development project milestones;
- to continue to achieve customer satisfaction as measured by customer surveys.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what guarantees have been sought by his EU counterparts during the negotiations on matters relating to BSE to ensure that all beef carcase exports comply with BSE control regulations and are BSE-free following any raising of the EU ban on beef meat trading; [32323]

(2) what guarantees have been sought by his EU counterparts during the negotiations on matters relating to BSE that all live beef exports will comply with BSE control regulations and will be BSE-free following any raising of the European Union ban on beef meat trading. [32322]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: Other member states agreed a framework for lifting the EU beef export ban unanimously at the Florence European Council. This included a commitment that the ban would be lifted:

> only and exclusively on the basis of public health and objective scientific criteria and of the judgement of the Commission.

We expect all other member states to honour this commitment.

ENVIRONMENT

Fruit Trees

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage local authorities to promote local food production in inner cities and urban areas by the planting of fruit trees in parks and cities; and if he will make a statement. [37360]

Mr. Clappison: There are already a number of Government initiatives which promote local food production and the planting of fruit trees in urban areas. This year we gave a £26,100 grant from the environmental action fund to the charity Common Ground, which successfully encourages volunteer involvement in a number of campaigns including the development in urban areas of community orchards containing indigenous fruit trees, and which promote the annual apple day.

This year my Department is again funding the National Society of Allotment and Leisure Gardeners with a grant of £30,450, part of which is designed to help it to promote allotment gardening and increase the take-up of vacant allotments, including those in inner cities. The NSALG has a number of information leaflets on how to acquire an allotment and how to cultivate it.

Furthermore, last October I announced the launch of the greening the city initiative which will culminate this autumn in the publication of a good practice guide on urban greening. It will be up to individual authorities and bodies how they implement these guidelines, but the planting of trees is an integral component of the urban greening process. It will be for individual authorities to determine which species are appropriate for specific projects.

Drought

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to help farmers prepare for the possibility of drought. [36434]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Agency has a policy of seeking to minimise the impact of any restrictions which might be necessary on the direct abstraction of water for irrigation purposes. It will provide information in advance of possible restrictions. It is working to encourage farmers to determine the risks to the reliability of their supplies of potential restrictions, and to assess the costs and benefits of providing on-farm winter storage bearing in mind the substantial reductions in charges for winter abstraction which the agency makes.

Parliamentary Boundary Changes

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 500, if he will place in the Library two copies of base maps of 1:100,000 scale for each county, bearing the new local authority and new parliamentary boundaries. [37721]

Sir Paul Beresford: No. Ordnance Survey does not produce 1:100,000 scale county maps with local authority and parliamentary boundary overprints as a standard, paper-based product. The agency is able to supply a customised product, derived from the computerised national topographic database, at a price estimated for individual requirements.

Local Education Authorities (Budget)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for local education authorities in England (i) individually, (ii) by class and (iii) in total (a) the actual budget outturn for 1996–97, (b) the provisional budget for 1997–98 and (c) the provisional education standard spending assessment. [37781]

Mr. Curry: Budgeted 1996–97 net revenue expenditure information by individual authority has been placed in the Library of the House. Class totals are as follows:

£ million

| | Total net revenue expenditure | Education net revenue expenditure |
|---|---|---|
| Shire counties | 17,190 | 9,956 |
| Unitary authorities[1] | 2,136 | 1,028 |
| Isles of Scilly | 3 | 1 |
| Metropolitan districts[1] | 9,470 | 4,462 |
| City of London | 143 | 4 |
| Inner London boroughs | 2,857 | 1,109 |
| Outer London boroughs | 3,873 | 1,849 |
| All local education authorities[1] | 35,672 | 18,409 |

[1] Includes estimates for two authorities who have yet to return a valid RA96/97 form.

Provisional budgets and standard spending assessments for 1997–98 will not be available until after the revenue support grant consultation announcement towards the end of this year.

Nuclear Waste (Culham)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he has to give further consideration to the granting of permission for a low-level nuclear waste repository at Culham, what is the minimum distance from a school required for (a) short-term and (b) permanent permission for such a repository; how far the European school is from the site at Culham; and if he will make a statement; [37988]

(2) what representations he has received against the granting of permission for a low-level nuclear waste repository at Culham. [37989]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Agency is considering an application from Safeguard International for authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 in respect of a radioactive waste transfer station at Culham. The facility would be a temporary store, not a repository for the permanent disposal of radioactive waste and would handle non-nuclear radioactive waste—e.g. from hospitals, universities, research laboratories and non-nuclear industries. The European school is 1.5 km from the proposed facility. There is no requirement to set minimum distance for schools or any other development, since the surroundings of a facility are taken into account by the Environment Agency when considering applications. The Secretary of State has received one petition and 89 nine letters and will consider whether to call in the application for his own determination under section 24 of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

Empty Homes

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how Departments performed against last year's targets for reducing empty homes; and what new targets have been set for 1996–97. [38816]

Mr. Curry: The number of empty homes in the civil estate owned by Government Departments fell by almost 600 between (1) April 1995 and 1 April 1996, a reduction of nearly 40 per cent.

In 1995–96, almost all Government Departments reduced the number of empty homes that they hold. I am particularly pleased that the Home Office, Department of Transport and Scottish Office all exceeded their targets.

Departments' progress demonstrates the Government's continued commitment to reduce the number of empty homes. The new, more exacting targets set for 1996–97 will build on this success. I am also confident that the sale of the Ministry of Defence married quarters estate will lead to an improvement in performance in tackling MOD empty homes.

Details of achievement against targets for 1995–96, and new targets for 1996–97 are shown in the table:

| | Total stock at 1 April 1996 | 1995–96 target for percentage empty | Achievement against target | 1996–97 target for percentage empty | 1995–96 target for percentage habitable homes empty more than six months | Percentage achievement against target | 1996–97 target for percentage habitable homes empty more than six months | Action being taken to dispose of homes empty more than six months |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Home Office | 3,455 | <11 | 7 (242) | <6 | <3 | 0.3 (10) | 1 | — |
| Department of Transport | 3,532 | <25 | 18.9 (669) | <17 | <9 | 8.3 (293) | <7 | 194 of these homes are in the process of being sold, including 60 being auctioned. 99 are in the process of being let |
| Welsh Office | 243 | [1]<3 | 20.5 (50) | <15 | <3 | 9.0 (22) | <5 | Seven sales in progress, one under offer, three to be auctioned. Seven awaiting disposal as part of larger package |
| Scottish Office | 213 | 10 | 9.8 (21) | 1 | <3 | 1.8 (4) | 1 | Expected occupation of all houses by winter 1996 |
| Ministry of Defence | 70,409 | To dispose of 1,500 homes by April 1996 and to dispose of a further 2,500 by end summer 1996 | 1,703 disposed of by April | To dispose of 4,000 empty homes | n/a | n/a | n/a | n/a |

[1] The 3 per cent. target was based on the position at 1 April 1995. In relation to the properties empty at that time 2.8 per cent. are still empty. However, others have become empty since then. The targets for 1996–97 make realistic provision for properties becoming empty during the year.

< = less than.

1. Properties that are "habitable"include all properties except:

(a) derelict properties that await demolition (e.g., to make way for road schemes),

(b) those that are expected to be demolished in the near future where the expenditure required to make them habitable would be disproportionate to their expected life (e.g. where substantial investment would be required to connect essential services such as water, sewage or electricity),

(c) those that cannot be made accessible (e.g., due to adjacent construction works).

2. Figures for the national health service in England and Scotland are not included in the table. The recent survey figures for England show a decrease in vacant properties from 1,800 at 1 December 1992 to 1,604 at 21 October 1995. The target for this period was to reduce the number of vacant properties to 1,100. The NHS is committed to future reductions in the number of empty properties held, but do not intend to carry out further surveys since the void rate equates to only about 3.5 units per NHS trust. Figures for NHS Trust properties in Scotland at 1 April 1995 were; total stock 1,185—properties empty 113 [9.5 per cent.]. Figures at 1 April 1996 are; total stock 1,087—properties empty 162 [14.9 per cent.]. The NHS in Scotland is also committed to future reductions in the number of empty properties held.

3. The Welsh Office figure includes information about empty property belonging to health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales.

4. The total number of empty homes in the civil estate owned by Govnerment Departments—(i.e., excluding MOD and the NHS—was 1,567 on 1 April 1995 and 970 on 1 April 1996, a reduction of 38.1 per cent.

Water Payments

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what mechanisms people living in new properties are able to change from meters to rateable value means of paying for water. [37370]

Mr. Clappison: Properties built after April 1990 do not have rateable values. Consequently, where a water company has a policy of metering new properties, it is not possible to change to a rateable value basis of paying for water.

House Condition Survey

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the supplement to the English house condition survey will be published. [37991]

Mr. Clappison: The supplementary energy report will be published this summer.

Footpaths

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in taking forward the commitment in the White Paper, "Rural England", to stimulate the more active participation of parish councils in footpath management and to develop, with the Countryside Commission, a pilot project to build on the experience of the parish paths partnership. [38817]

Mr. Clappison: The aims of the local access initiative will be to maximise the role of local people in access management and maintenance, to integrate more fully the rights of way network with other access and recreational opportunities, and to provide opportunities for additional access, on a voluntary basis.

We also intend that the initiative will consider the relationship of local management to the accurate recording of rights of way and look at the scope for changes to the network. We intend to set up projects in four or five areas in England.

We have asked the Countryside Commission to manage the initiative. The commission will be seeking to set up schemes involving partnerships of local landowners, farmers, other local people and interested groups of individuals, on a parish basis. Participation in the initiative will be entirely voluntary and management of the scheme is expected to be through the local highway authority. We hope to announce the projects by the end of the year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Record Office

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he takes to protect from (a) fire and (b) other damage manuscripts and other records at the Public Record Office. [36892]

Mr. Streeter: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Public Record Office is best placed to provide an answer. I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from Duncan Simpson to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 18 July 1996:

In the absence on leave of the Chief Executive, I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about the steps taken to protect from (a) fire and (b) other damage manuscripts and other records at the Public Record Office.

a) Protection from fire

At Kew the two buildings have advanced fire protection systems. Fire detection is provided in offices and plant areas by smoke, heat and beam detectors, and manual call points. Detection in document storage areas is provided by an early smoke detection system. All systems are connected to a central computerised control centre, from which the fire services can be summoned. Document storage areas are divided into fire compartments by walls of two hour fire resistance; doors in these walls are held open on fusible links so that they will close automatically in case of fire.

At Chancery Lane fire detection is through a manual alarm system linked to a central control centre. Document storage areas are divided into fire compartments by fire resistant walls and doors.

At both sites the document storage areas are also served by hose reels and extinguishers and are subject to regular round the clock patrols.

We are currently transferring the Chancery Lane documents to Kew so that all will be protected by the highest modern standards.

b) Protection from other damage

The Office has established and promotes a preservation policy. This sets out the obligations of the Office, the staff and the readers protect the documents it its care.

It also has a preservation strategy and programme which includes:

Security

—invigilation of the reading rooms by security staff and, at Kew, by CCTV cameras

—round the clock security patrols of the buildings, with CCTV monitoring at Kew —registering document users

—computerised tracking of document requisitions and movements

—prosecuting those who are caught damaging documents

Storing and protecting material

—monitoring the environmental conditions in which documents are stored: at Kew documents are stored to the requirements of BS 5454 Recommendations for the storage and exhibition of archival material

—regular cleaning of document storage areas

—protecting documents against damage in transit or by fire or water by boxing them

—providing protective equipment in the reading rooms, for example book supports, melinex sheets through which to trace maps, and cotton gloves for use while handling material such as photographic negatives or prints

—following recommended standards for the exhibiton of documents

Training

—training staff and readers in the care and handling of documents

—producing leaflets to promote understanding of the physical nature of documents

—holding workshops for staff and readers on preservation and conservation issues

Conservation

—the Office has trained staff to conserve documents

Disaster control

—the Office has a disaster control plan which includes staff training and periodic trial exercises

Providing surrogates

—The Office is undertaking a programme of copying heavily used classes of documents, mainly on microfilm, in order to enable readers to access the information without subjecting the originals to wear and tear

I shall be happy to provide further information about any of these subjects if you require.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those magistrates courts in the Yorkshire and Humberside region that are to be built under the private finance initiative proposals; and if he will make a statement. [36876]

Mr. Streeter: PFI bids will be sought for the provision of new or improved magistrates court facilities at: Kingston upon Hull, Beverley, Keighley, Wakefield, Huddersfield, Northallerton, Malton and Doncaster.

The programme for procuring magistrates courthouse facilities under PFI is now to be taken forward. Details of the programme and guidance are being sent to local authorities and magistrates courts committees this week.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many schemes for the building of magistrates courts are proposed under the private finance initiative. [36887]

Mr. Streeter: There are proposals to provide new or improved facilities at 50 magistrates courts under the private finance initiative.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

South Africa

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent advice he has given to the Republic of South Africa on land reform; and if he will make a statement. [38191]

Mr. Hanley: Land reform is a major priority for the South African Government. We are currently supporting, with the EU and the Danish Government, a Government pilot programme of land reform which aims to promote land transfer to the rural poor using the market and to develop local capacity for service provision. Her Majesty's Government's contribution is about £7 million including our share of EU funding.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television Licences (Caravans)

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the current television licensing requirements for touring caravans; and if she will make a statement. [38769]

Mr. Sproat: As announced on 2 July on Report stage of the Broadcasting Bill, the Government will introduce regulations to take account of the changes in the use of television in recent years. Our intention is that the scope of the television licence will be altered so that a licence will be required only when a television is installed or used in a "fixed abode or permanent place of residence". This will be reflected in the regulations which specify the fees. Use of television in touring caravans, and in other vehicles and vessels, will require a separate licence only if they are used as a permanent place of residence or if no licence is held for the normal place of residence. The revised licensing requirements will be set out in detail in new consolidated regulations, which we aim to lay before the end of this calendar year.

Deregulation

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what deregulation orders her Department has made under sections 1 to 4 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. [38770]

Mr. Sproat: The Department's first deregulation order was made on 16 July 1996 and will come into force on 16 August 1996. It abolishes the existing statutory requirements for television dealers both to register with the BBC and to hold and pay a fee for a dealer demonstration licence. Dealers will still be required to notify all sales or rentals of television sets to the BBC.

TREASURY

Abortion Statistics

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown by (a) procedure, (b) gestation of pregnancy and (c) technique of the number of abortions performed in the North Thames region in the latest year for which figures are available. [37007]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The figures presented are for legal abortions performed in 1994 on women usually resident in the North Thames health region.[1]

(a) Number of abortions by procedure

| Procedure | Number of abortions |
|---|---|
| Hysterotomy (only) | 6 |
| Hysterectomy (only) | 1 |
| Vacuum aspiration (only) | 29,416 |
| Vacuum aspiration with dilation and evacuation | 2,979 |
| Dilation and evacuation | 745 |
| Other surgical | 1 |
| Prostaglandins (only) | 302 |
| Prostaglandins with other agents | 154 |
| Antiprogesterone with or without prostaglandins | 595 |
| Other medical | 30 |
| Other combined methods | 5 |
| Total | 34,234 |

(b) Number of abortions by gestation of pregnancy

| Gestation in weeks | Number of abortions |
|---|---|
| Under 9 | 15,786 |
| 9–12 | 15,195 |
| 13–19 | 2,865 |
| 20 and over | 388 |
| Total | 34,234 |

(c) Number of abortions by technique Abortion data by technique are not routinely collected.

[1] 1994 Abortion Statistics, England and Wales, Series AB no. 21.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown by the procedure adopted of the number of abortions performed in the Northern and Yorkshire region in the latest year for which figures are available. [36928]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The figures presented give a breakdown of the number of abortions performed to women usually resident in the Northern and Yorkshire health region by procedure, for the year 1994[1].

| Procedure | Number of abortions |
|---|---|
| Hysterotomy (only) | 3 |
| Hysterectomy (only) | 1 |
| Vacuum aspiration (only) | 13,503 |
| Vacuum aspiration with dilation and evacuation | 335 |
| Dilation and Evacuation | 450 |
| Other surgical | 2 |
| Prostaglandins (only) | 595 |
| Prostaglandins with other agents | 203 |
| Antiprogesterone with or without prostaglandins | 1,130 |
| Other medical | 24 |
| Other combined methods | 14 |
| Total | 16,260 |

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown by technique of the number of abortions performed in the Northern and Yorkshire region in the latest year for which figures are available. [36930]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 16 July 1996]: Abortion data are not routinely collected by technique.

Suicides

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of suicides in England and Wales in each of the last three years. [37842]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The number of deaths from suicide and injury of undetermined intent, ICD[1] E950–E959, E980–E989 less E988.8, in England and Wales is shown in the table. The deaths in 1993 and 1994 represent occurrences whereas those for 1995 are registrations.

| Year | Deaths |
|---|---|
| 1993 | 5,250 |
| 1994 | 5,144 |
| 1995 | 5,146 |

[1] International Classification of Diseases, 9th Revision.

ICD codes E950–E959 refer to deaths where suicide is the underlying cause of death; ICD codes E950–E989, minus E988.8 relate to deaths where it is undetermined whether the injury was accidentally or purposefully inflicted. The majority of these, however, are regarded as suicides.

Diesel Duty

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer of reducing the duty on commercial diesel by £0.09 per litre. [37981]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The last published "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs" by HM Treasury shows that reducing the duty rate on road diesel by 9p would cost around £1.5 billion in the first full year, measured against a non-indexed base.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer of reducing duty on diesel to the European average. [37980]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The last published "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs" by HM Treasury shows that reducing the duty rate on road diesel by approximately 6p to the European average would cost around £1 billion in the first full year, measured against a non-indexed base.

Indirect Taxation

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he proposes to take to limit retrospective repayments of VAT and other indirect taxes and duties. [38693]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government have become concerned at the increasing amounts of revenue at risk in taxation boundary disputes, particularly VAT. Large sums, collected and paid in good faith, are being repaid to businesses, in some cases many years after the tax was collected and with no possibility that refunds will be passed on to final consumers. The Chancellor therefore asked Customs to undertake a review of the refund provisions applying to VAT and other indirect taxes. I am today announcing the outcome of that review.

I am proposing that with effect from today a three-year limit will be introduced for retrospective refund claims, applying to VAT and other indirect taxes, and to associated statutory interest. This will be subject to parliamentary approval.

I also propose to recommend changes to the unsatisfactory law on unjust enrichment. Draft legislation effecting these changes will be published shortly and will subsequently be included in the 1997 Finance Bill.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Costs Review)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 145, when the cost of implementing the recommendations arising from the review of the open prison estate will be made available. [37451]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 18 July 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about when the cost of implementing the recommendations arising from the review of the open prison estate will be made available.

The Prison Services' plan for the implementation of the open prisons review is intended to be completed by December 1996. The plan will include details of the costs of implementation.

Sexual Offences (Re-offenders)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records his Department collates in respect of re-offending by those convicted of sexual offences against children. [37786]

Mr. Maclean: Offenders who are convicted of sexual offences against a child can be charged with any one of a number of offences. The legal categories of sexual offence do not always differentiate between child and adult victims. This means that the Department's centrally available records cannot be used to determine reconviction rates for offenders convicted of sexual offences against children.

House Fires (Deaths)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths in England and Wales in house fires occurred in each of the last three years. [37792]

Mr. Kirkhope: The number of fire-related deaths from dwelling fires attended by local authority fire brigades in England and Wales in the last three years for which figures are available are 502 in 1992, 406 in 1993 and 383 in 1994.

Electoral Registration (Homeless Persons)

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account will be taken of the judgment in the case of Kevin Lippiatt v. the Electoral Registration Officer, Penwith district council in the guidelines to be issued to electoral registration officers concerning the registration of homeless people. [38167]

Mr. Sackville: The guidance will take the judgment fully into consideration, within the context of existing legislation.

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many dangerous dogs have been registered under the Dangerous Dogs Acts; and how many people have been (a) injured and (b) killed by dogs in each year since 1988; [38009]

(2) what plans he has to extend the categories of dog in the provisions of the Dangerous Dogs Acts; [38007]

(3) if he will make a statement on the operation of the Dangerous Dogs Acts; [38006]

(4) what plans he has to make ownership of a dangerous dog, as specified under the provisions of the Dangerous Dogs Acts, illegal; and if he will make a statement. [38008]

Mr. Sackville: The Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 imposed controls on dogs bred for fighting. The dogs so designated are the types known as the pit bull terrier, the Japanese Tosa, the Dogo Argentino and Fila Braziliero. There are no plans to extend this designation.

Section 1 of the Act makes it an offence to possess a designated type of dog unless the owner had the dog registered, neutered, tattooed, and insured by 30 November 1991. It is also an offence to allow such a dog to be in a public place without being muzzled or on a lead. A total of 8,600 pit bull terriers were notified to the police and the index of exempted dogs. Of these, 5,223 were issued with certificates of exemption, of which 3,609 are currently valid.

Section 3 of the Act also created new offences, applying to all types of dog, of owning or being in charge of a dog dangerously out of control in a public place. A conviction for an offence in respect of one of the designated types of dog or for any dog not kept under proper control, and when there is an injury to the person, results in mandatory destruction of the dog. These provisions are intended to encourage more responsible dog ownership.

Information on attacks by dogs is not collected centrally. The Act has resulted in a substantial reduction in pit bull ownership, in line with eliminating this type of dog in the United Kingdom. The Government remain committed to the objectives of the Act and have no plans to amend the law.

Betting and Gaming

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further announcement on the future of the Tote. [38626]

Mr. Howard: I announced last year that I intend to carry out a review of the options for the future of the Tote in a way which preserves the extent to which racing benefits from the Tote's activities.

Since that time, my officials have been carrying out preparatory work including informal consultations with a number of interested parties. The conclusion which I have drawn from this preliminary work is that those options which involve changing the existing statutory framework might put at risk the contribution which the Tote makes to racing.

I have concluded that, pending further work on these issues, I should end the uncertainty surrounding the future of the Tote by retaining the present statutory framework for the present. In reaching this conclusion, I have had regard to the wish of the British Horseracing Board to take on responsibility for the Tote. However, while it is the representative body of racing, transfer of a public asset to a private body such as the BHB raises complex issues which are unlikely to be settled in the short term.

I am laying in the Library a brief explanatory note about the Tote and the issues which have led to this conclusion.

I intend to begin very shortly the search for a new chairman to take on responsibility for the organisation and to work with racing when Lord Wyatt retires in April 1997. The post will be advertised. In view of the importance of the Tote to racing, I intend to consult the BHB and other interested parties about the appointment and the responsibilities of the post so far as is consistent with the statute and the code of practice on public appointments.

The new chairman will be tasked both with supporting racing and with conducting a wide-ranging review of the Tote's operations. I would expect them to pursue further the improvements in efficiency the Tote has made in recent years. The Government will wish to return to the issue of the Tote's status in the future.

The Government wish to enhance further their working relationship with the horseracing industry. I have therefore accepted a proposal from the chairman of the British Horseracing Board that he should personally select a small horseracing advisory group, who will meet me from time to time to discuss the general state of, and key issues affecting, the horseracing industry. The group will complement, not replace, the established arrangements for regulation and communication between government and the industry.

Lord Wakeham has agreed to select the group, to which appointments will be personal, not formally representative of any particular interest, by the autumn and I look forward to a first meeting later in the year.

Drug Prevention Initiative

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish a report on the progress of his Department's drug prevention initiative. [38627]

Mr. Sackville: I am publishing today the drugs prevention initiative's sixth annual progress report which covers the period from 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996. The report describes the varied and extensive programme of community-based drugs prevention work which the initiative has developed during the first year of its expanded operation in 12 areas in England. The programme will run until 1998–99, and aims to show by then what people can do to respond to local drugs problems. I have placed a copy of the report in the Library.

Manchester Bomb Incident

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has determined the materials used to produce the explosive mixture used in the Manchester bomb; and if Semtex was used in the device. [34844]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 1 July 1996]: The investigation into the bombing in Manchester on Saturday 15 June is a matter for the police. It is for them to decide if, having regard to any possible future criminal proceedings, they should make public the results of their current forensic inquiries.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghan Refugees (Pakistan)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Pakistan on the issue of refugees from Afghanistan living in Pakistan. [37785]

Mr. Hanley: We regularly discuss with the Government of Pakistan a wide range of issues including Afghan refugees. Officials last discussed the issue with Pakistani counterparts during the annual aid talks in Islamabad in December 1995.

Albania

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had on the recent elections in Albania and with whom. [37791]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have had discussions in the European Union and continue to work with our partners in the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe and the Council of Europe to establish a dialogue between the Government and the Opposition with the aim of agreeing steps to restore confidence in the democratic process.

Westminster Foundation for Democracy

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual report of the Westminster Foundation for Democracy will be available. [38625]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Copies of the foundation's annual report for 1995–96 will be placed in the Libraries of the House during the week beginning 22 July. The foundation received £2.5 million from the FCO for its activities in 1995–96. With this grant it has supported 426 projects, compared with 244 last year. Its priority areas for assistance have been central and eastern Europe, central Asia and anglophone Africa, but it has also funded projects elsewhere. The foundation continues to make a valuable contribution to the promotion of democracy overseas. Projects have included work with political parties, the independent media, trade unions, human rights groups, women's group and other non-governmental organisations involved in political development.

Overseas Visits (Royal Family)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 28, if he will provide a breakdown of the main spending involved in the miscellaneous expenditure of £4,600 incurred by his Department on the visit of the Duchess of Kent to the Seychelles on 3 to 6 December 1993; and if he will break down the travel cost to show the methods and people carried. [35875]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The main expenditure was for clothing, which cost £4,300 for the whole party.

Commercial flights were used. Four staff accompanied the Duchess of Kent, at a total cost for the whole party of £15,500.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 26, if he will itemise the main spending involved in the miscellaneous expenditure of £7,500 on the official visit by the Duke and Duchess of Kent to Hong Kong from 25 November to 2 December 1994. [35740]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The main miscellaneous expenditure was for clothing, which cost £7,400 for the whole party.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 27, if he will itemise the main spending involved in the miscellaneous expenditure of £7,400 on the official visit by the Duke of Edinburgh to the Caribbean in March 1993. [35742]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The main headings of expenditure in the miscellaneous categories were as follows:

Clothing for the whole party: £1,800

Expenditure on royal yacht: £4,400

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 27, if he will give details of the methods and costs of travel for the visit by the Prince Edward to Swaziland between 4 and 7 September; and if he will give a breakdown of the main spending involved in the miscellaneous expenditure of £4,900. [35873]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The party travelled by commercial flight at a total cost of £11,600. The main expenditure in the miscellaneous heading was as follows:

Clothing for the whole party: £2,200

Reconnaissance visit: £2,600

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 29, if he will give a breakdown of the main spending in the expenditure of £6,300 incurred by his Department arising from the visit by the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester to Mexico on 20 to 23 November 1995. [35877]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The main headings of expenditure in the miscellaneous category were as follows:

Clothing for the whole party: £3,000

Reconnaissance visit: £3,300

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 28, if he will provide a breakdown of the miscellaneous expenditure of £8,100 incurred by his Department for the visit of Princess Alexandra to Hong Kong and India on 14 to 27 October 1994. [35874]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The main expenditure in the miscellaneous category was for clothing for the whole party at £7,000.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 28, if he will give the dates of the visit and the engagements undertaken by the Princess Margaret to San Francisco in 1995; and if he will give a breakdown of the main spending involved in the miscellaneous expenditure of £10,300 incurred by his Department as part of the visit. [35876]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The visit by Princess Margaret to San Francisco was from 23 to 29 June 1995.

Engagements included attendance at events celebrating the 50th Anniversary of the United Nations, a concert by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, and official receptions including for the English Speaking Union.

The main headings of expenditure in the miscellaneous category were as follows:

Clothing for the whole party: £7,200

Reconnaissance visit: £2,200

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, columns 26–27, if he will list those countries visited by the Duke of Edinburgh in the Caribbean in March 1993 and Her Majesty the Queen in the same area in 1994. [35741]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: In 1993, the Duke of Edinburgh visited Dominica, Montserrat, St. Christopher and Nevis, Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

In 1994 the Queen visited Puerto Rico, Anguilla, Dominica, Guyana, Belize, the Cayman Islands, Jamaica, the Bahamas and Bermuda.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 27, if he will provide a breakdown of the main items comprising the £13,400 miscellaneous expenditure incurred by his Department in respect of the visit by the Princess of Wales to Nepal on 2 to 6 March 1993; and how much of the expenditure related to clothes for the princess. [35872]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 8 July 1996]: The main headings of expenditure in the miscellaneous category were:

Clothing for the whole party: £4,800

Reconnaissance visit: £7,000

It would be inappropriate to provide further details. High-profile and worthy representation of Britain abroad inevitably involves additional expenditure on clothes by members of the royal family and certain of those accompanying them. It is right that such expenditure should be met by the Government for visits undertaken at our request.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek to ensure that at least one member of an industrial tribunal dealing with cases raised under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 is a person with special knowledge or experience of disability issues in the employment field; and if he will make a statement. [37894]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The constitution of individual tribunals is a matter for the president of the industrial tribunals and their regional chairmen. However, my Department and the industrial tribunals are currently considering the implications of the employment provisions contained in the Disability Discrimination Act. As part of this, special efforts were made in October last year to recruit new lay members who are disabled or have a special interest in disability matters. Eight per cent. of those appointed were people with disabilities. We also added the Employers Forum on Disability and the National League of the Blind and Disabled to the list of sponsor bodies which provide nominations to the Secretary of State.

Queen's Moat Houses plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's investigation into the Queen's Moat Houses group, indicating the costs to public funds incurred to date. [37822]

Mr. John M. Taylor: On 12 November 1993 inspectors were appointed under section 432(2) of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs of Queen's Moat Houses plc. Their inquiries are continuing. The cost of the inspection to date is £2.5 million.

Brick Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps he is taking to promote competition in the manufacture and supply of bricks; and if he will make a statement; [38039]

(2) what steps he intends to take to prevent the creation of a duopoly in the supply of bricks to the building industry. [38036]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Director General of Fair Trading has a duty to keep markets under review and to consider taking action where he believes there may be anti-competitive behaviour.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the proposed acquisition of Redland Brick plc by Ibstock Building Products Ltd; and if he will make a statement. [38034]

Mr. Taylor: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made clear on 11 July, Official Report, column 284, on the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading he will refer this proposed acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission unless suitable undertakings are given by Ibstock to remove the competition concerns arising from the acquisition. A public consultation exercise is under way on the form and content of those undertakings and it would be wrong to prejudge the final outcome.

Mr. Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received to date from the housebuilding industry about the proposed acquisition of Redland Brick plc by Ibstock Building Products Ltd. [38035]

Mr. Taylor: One has been made to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. Representations about mergers under consideration by the Director General of Fair Trading would usually be made to the DGFT in the first instance so that he could include them in his advice to my right hon. Friend.

Export Guarantees Advisory Council

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Export Guarantees Advisory Council (a) holds public meetings, (b) conducts public consultation exercises, (c) conducts consultation exercises with outside interests, (d) publishes a register of members' interests, (e) publishes agendas for meetings and (f) publishes the minutes of meetings; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [37904]

Mr. Nelson: The Export Guarantees Advisory Council is a purely advisory body appointed under the terms of the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991. Its function is to advise the Secretary of State, at his request, in respect of any matter relating to the exercise of his functions under the Act. Its members receive no remuneration.

The answers to the specific questions are no in every case except that in respect of (d); the Export Credits Guarantee Department's annual report lists the main interest of each of the advisory council members. A full register of interests is not published.

Office of Electricity Regulation (Sponsored Bodies)

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Electricity Regulation (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary; [37905]

(2) what is the statutory base of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of Electricity Regulation; and if they (a) publish their advice to OFFER, (b) publish an annual report and (c) lay an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [37906]

Mr. Eggar: There are 14 electricity consumers committees, which are independent bodies established under section 2 of the Electricity Act 1989. Section 52 of the Electricity Act requires each committee to report annually to the Director General of Electricity Supply and to include a statement on all the matters on which the committee has advised the director during that period. Section 52 enables the director to publish the reports of the consumers committees. In practice he has done this by incorporating them into the Offer annual report, which is published and laid before Parliament. Schedule 2 of the Act requires that the meetings of the committees, with certain exceptions, shall be open to the public and that agendas be published. Copies of the minutes of public meetings are available on request. Section 51 of the Act requires each committee to consult with and make representations to the relevant public electricity supplier. The consumers committees consult local consumer groups. A register of members' interests is not published.

The National Consumers Consultative Committee was established under section 53 of the Act. Its statutory duty is to keep under review matters affecting the interests of electricity customers generally and to facilitate the exchange of information between the director and the consumers committees. Its membership is made up of the chairmen of the electricity consumer councils. Details of the work of the National Consumers Consultative Committee appears in the Offer annual report.

Departmental Bills (Payment)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of bills were paid on time by Government Departments and their agencies during the financial year 1995–96. [38855]

Mr. Lang: Government Departments and their agencies are required to monitor their payment performance and to publish the results in their departmental or annual reports. The following table lists, by Department, the proportion of bills paid within 30 days, or other agreed credit period, of receipt of a valid invoice for financial year 1995–96.

The figures in the tables have been calculated using different monitoring methods and concerns have been expressed that these differences have made comparisons between Departments difficult.

The Prime Minister therefore announced on 11 March this year that more consistent monitoring requirements were to be placed on Departments and that they were to publish their performance against strict targets in an annual league table. This would allow more valid comparison between Departments in addition to the year on year comparisons possible under the previous monitoring system.

The new monitoring requirements have been in place since 1 June 1996 and the first league table of performance based on these requirements will be published in the autumn. It is currently the intention to publish the information annually thereafter, following the end of each financial year. All Departments should aim to pay 100 per cent. of invoices, including disputed invoices once the dispute has been settled, on time. No Department should fall below 95 per cent. for undisputed bills.

The results for 1995–96 based on the previous monitoring procedures are:

Departmental payment performance 1995–96

| Department | Percentage of invoices paid on time |

Export Initiatives

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new initiatives he is planning to secure business for the United Kingdom in (a) the middle east and (b) the far east; and if he will make a statement. [36381]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 July 1996]: Through the overseas trade services organisation the Government spend more than £200 million a year on a wide range of export promotion services and support helping to secure business of UK companies across the world. For the markets of the middle east and the far east, my Department is supporting an extensive programme of trade missions, trade fairs, exhibitions, seminars, sectoral and market promotions, and is planning ministerial and other high-level visits with accompanying business delegations. Examples of initiatives include:

(a) Middle east.

A major exhibition in Bahrain in February 1997 to highlight British design excellence.

A programme of Gulf update conferences through the UK to promote the Gulf as an export destination and to market the 14 DTI supported trade missions to the Gulf between autumn 1996 and spring 1997.

A series of initiatives to encourage British business women to visit the Gulf and to access the extensive network of Arab women who own businesses in the region. My Department took a team of British business women to Saudi Arabia in March—to demonstrate that women can do business there.

The Israel-Britain Business Council, a new forum for business, has been established and has now held its second meeting.

(b) Far east.

Visits in September by the President of the Board of Trade to China, by myself to east Asia, and by Lord Fraser to south-east Asia, all with UK business delegations.

Hosting the meeting of the Singapore British Business Group in October in the UK and supporting the first meeting of the British Philippines business group in Manila in September.

Working with UK business to set up a British industrial centre in Japan, where British businesses can share facilities.

Running a regular programme of "Key Contacts Japan" events where high-level UK-based Japanese contacts are introduced to quality British manufacturers.

Supporting UK participation in over 100 trade fairs and trade missions throughout the region over the next six to nine months.

Research Councils

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the book value of each research institute site of the research institutes of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, Medical Research Council, Natural Environment Research Council and Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council; and who is the registered owner of each site. [37399]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 July 1996]: The information is as follows:

Post Office

Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to suspend the Post Office's statutory monopoly on delivery of letters under £1. [38854]

Mr. Lang: I wrote last week to the chairman of the Post Office initiating consultations on the implications of suspension of the monopoly. These consultations are continuing.

SCOTLAND

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each occasion in the last two months in which his Department has consulted farmers directly about policy development concerning the BSE and beef crisis; and if he will make a statement. [37363]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During May to July my Department has consulted directly with the beef industry on the following specific occasions:

3 May: Mature beef assurance scheme

6 June: Proposals for compulsory cattle passports

10 June: Mammalian meat and bonemeal—proposed legislation (The Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (Amendment) (No 2) Order 1996)

11 June: specified bovine material controls in abattoirs

3 July: BSE accelerated slaughter scheme

10 July: meat and bone meal proposed legislation

11 July: Mammalian meat and bonemeal—proposed legislation (The Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (Amendment) (No 2) Order 1996)

Where direct consultation with individual farmers is not possible, my Department works closely with the main representative bodies involved in the industry. I am particularly appreciative of the way in which the industry in Scotland has been co-operating throughout the BSE crisis. Individual beef producers are kept abreast of developments, through the regular newsletter distributed by my Department.

Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance he has given to the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors in pursuit of its Doomsday 2000 initiative; and if he will make a statement. [37992]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The keeper and chief executive of the Registers of Scotland executive agency is actively assisting and co-operating with the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors in pursuit of the ScotLIS initiative, the Scottish version of Domesday 2000.

The agency is currently chairing a core group of interested parties, including the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, Scottish Homes, Scottish Enterprise and Ordnance Survey, which is considering how best to take forward the development of a national land information system for Scotland.

Scottish Courts Administration

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the advisory non-departmental public body sponsored by the Scottish Courts Administration (a) holds public meetings, (b) conducts public consultation exercises, (c) conducts consultation exercises with outside interests, (d) publishes a register of members' interests, (e) publishes agendas for meetings and (f) publishes the minutes of meetings; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [37908]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission does not hold public meetings, publish a register of commissioners' interests or publish agendas or minutes of meetings. The commission does hold public consultation exercises and consultation exercises with outside interests. It does so voluntarily in order to carry out effectively its statutory duty to keep the law under review and make proposals for its reform.

Prison Service Targets

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what targets he has set the Scottish Prison Service for 1996–97. [38628]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have set the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service the following targets:

| Performance measures | Key targets |
|---|---|
| The number of prisoners unlawfully at large | No 'A' category prisoners should escape.The number of escapes by 'B' category prisoners should be no higher than 2 per 1,000 prisoners.The number of escapes by 'C' category prisoners should be no higher than 2.5 per 1,000 prisoners. |

| Performance measures | Key targets |
|---|---|
| The number of serious assaults on staff and prisoners | The number of serious assaults on staff should be no higher than 3 per 1,000 staff. The number of serious assaults on other prisoners should be no higher than 10 per 1,000 prisoners. |
| The amount of available opportunities for prisoners' self development | To ensure that 400 prisoners have completed a cognitive skills programme and 100 prisoners have completed a sex offender programme during 1996–97. |
| Average annual cost per prisoner place | To keep costs within £27,392 per place available for use. |
| The level of absence through staff sickness | To reduce the average number of days lost per person per year through staff sickness to 16. |

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibition

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Association for Science Education to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [38230]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 25 November to Friday 29 November 1996.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Tackling Drugs Together—Those Who Make it Possible", to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [38474]

Mr. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 2 December to Friday 6 December 1996.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to 100 years of British mycology to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [38514]

Mr. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 11 November to Friday 15 November 1996.

House of Commons Staff Salaries

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the average annual salary, including where appropriate any overtime, on 1 October 1971 of (i) (a) a Senior Library Clerk, (b) the highest paid Chef, (c) a Senior Clerk in the House of Commons and (ii) a ministerial car driver; if he will indicate in each of those cases what that salary would be today if it had been increased annually in line with inflation; and what is the current annual salary for each of those grades.

Mr. Beith: Figures for salaries of Commission staff prior to 1978 are not available centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Since the establishment of the House of Commons Commission in 1978, staff salaries have been included in the Commission's annual reports. Figures for ministerial car drivers are a matter for the Cabinet Office. The earliest figures readily available are those for 1 April 1978. London-based salaries are as follows:

Senior Clerk: £7,315–£9,235 p.a.

Senior Library Clerk: £5,917–£8,879 p.a.

Executive Chef: £9,980 p.a. (at 1 January 1980)[1]

[1]The Refreshment Department did not become a Department of the House until 1980 and staff salaries for that Department did not appear in the Commission's report until that for 1979–80

Those Senior Clerks and Senior Library Clerks who performed additional night duty were paid an allowance of £1,555 p.a.

Applying the inflation factors for 1 April 1978 (x 3.093) and 1 April 1980 (x 2.454), respectively, these figures become:

Senior Clerk: £22,625–£28,619 p.a.

Senior Library Clerk: £18,301–£27,463 p.a.

Executive Chef: £24,490 p.a.

The night allowance becomes £4,810 p.a.

Current salaries for the above grades are as follows:

Senior Clerk: £28,954–£43,802 p.a.

Senior Library Clerk: £28,954–£43,802 p.a.

Executive Chef: £28,954–£43,802 p.a.

The current rate of night allowance is £4,010 p.a.

In 1992 staff pay scales were radically restructured and they now include an element for performance-related pay so that strict comparison with the earlier pay scales is not valid.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a list showing the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37312]

Mr. Willetts: In 1995–96 the number and value of contracts let to these consultancy firms, and their subsidiaries and associates, by the Cabinet Office including the Office of Public Service and its executive agencies, the Central Office of Information and Her Majesty's Stationery Office was as follows:

| Firms | Total value (£) | Contracts let |
|---|---|---|
| Coopers and Lybrand | 1,147,000 | 9 |
| KPMG | 928,000 | 16 |
| Price Waterhouse | 292,000 | 6 |
| Ernst and Young | 43,000 | 3 |
| Deloitte and Touche | 180,000 | 5 |
| Arthur Andersen | 41,000 | 1 |
| Grant Thornton | Nil | 0 |
| BDO Stoy Hayward | Nil | 0 |
| Pannel Kerr Forster | 130,000 | 2 |
| Robson Rhodes | Nil | 0 |

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37230]

Mr. Willetts: Several divisions and groups within the Office of Public Service and its agencies have Internet websites which provide electronic versions of published documents; these include the Civil Service Employer Group, citizens charter unit, Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency and Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Ministers also have addresses on Internet.

Civil Service College

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what key performance targets he has set for the Civil Service College executive agency for the current year. [38694]

Mr. Freeman: The key performance targets for the Civil Service College executive agency for 1996–97 are:

to break even in accrual accounting terms;

to earn £1,600,000 from consultancy work;

to attract 2,400 students from the senior civil service;

to attract 1,400 students from the private sector;

to earn 83 per cent. of course evaluations in the two highest of six categories.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister on how many occasions during the current parliamentary Session his office has co-ordinated responses from his ministerial colleagues to parliamentary questions. [36110]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The reply that I gave to the hon. Member in answer to a previous question on this matter, Official Report, 2 April 1996, column 86, sets out the circumstances in which procedures for co-ordinating responses to parliamentary questions come into play. Such co-ordination takes place on an ad hoc basis, and advice is often sought, and provided, informally. I am not, therefore, able to give the hon. Member a figure for the number of times responses have been co-ordinated in the course of the current parliamentary Session.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what account he took of the research by York university, commissioned by his Department, in drawing up the Housing Benefit General Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996; [34333]

(2) when he intends to publish the research commissioned by his Department into service charges in relation to supported housing; and if he will make a statement. [34334]

Mr. Roger Evans: The proposed amendment would restate the current position concerning which service charges can be met by housing benefit on the basis that the service relates to the provision of adequate accommodation. It was proposed after a commissioner's decision in an income support case cast doubt on the meaning of binding case law on this point, possibly leading to unplanned housing benefit expenditure in respect of charges for personal services. Early results of research by the centre for housing policy at the university of York suggested that payments of housing benefit were already being used for this purpose, confirming the need to regularise the position. We expect to publish the final results of the research before the end of the year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed Housing Benefit (General) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996 on (a) the availability of (i) sheltered accommodation, (ii) departments' supported accommodation where housing benefit is currently payable and (iii) residential accommodation provided by social services departments and (b) community care policy. [35688]

Mr. Evans: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already advised the chairman of the Social Security Advisory Committee and the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson), that these regulations have been withdrawn pending an inter-departmental review of the funding of services in supported accommodation. This review will consider matters such as the impact of the proposed legislation on accommodation supply and community care policy.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list as a proportion of all pensioners those (a) pensioners, (b) single male pensioners aged under 75 years, (c) single female pensioners aged under 75 years, (d) single pensioners aged under 75 years, (e) pensioner couples aged under 75 years, (f) single male pensioners aged 75 years and over, (g) single female pensioners aged 75 years and over, (h) single pensioners aged 75 years and over and (i) pensioner couples where at least one partner is aged 75 years and over receiving income from occupational pensions; and if he will provide figures for the mean and median amount received for the latest year for which figures are available. [36257]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

| | Proportion with income from occupational pensions (per cent.) | Mean amount (£ per week) | Median amount (£ per week) |
|---|---|---|---|
| All pensioner units | 62 | 73.60 | 38.60 |
| Single male pensioners under 75 | 50 | '80.80 | '41.60 |
| Single female pensioners under 75 | 64 | 51.00 | 29.20 |
| Single pensioners under 75 | 61 | 58.10 | 31.00 |
| Pensioner couples with head under 75 | 74 | 100.10 | 60.60 |
| Single male pensioners 75 and over | 61 | '64.10 | '32.40 |
| Single female pensioners 75 and over | 49 | 42.60 | 21.30 |
| Single pensioners 75 and over | 52 | 49.00 | 23.80 |
| Pensioner couples with head over 75 | 66 | 81.40 | 44.10 |

' These results are based on a relatively small sample size. Therefore these results should be treated with a higher degree of caution than usual.

1. Proportions are rounded to the nearest whole percentage, amounts are rounded to the nearest 10p.

2. Information is based on the family expenditure Survey 1993 and the GAD survey of occupational pension schemes. All amounts are in July 1993 prices.

3. A pensioner unit is defined as a single pensioner over state pension age (SPA) and a couple where the husband, or head, is over SPA. To provide consistency the age of the head has been used to define the age of the couple.

Family Credit

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of claimants for family credit in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years. [36335]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of family credit is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 17 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the number of claimants for Family Credit (FC) in (a) Crewe and Nantwich and (b) Cheshire for each of the last five years.

The information is not available in the format requested. The FC computer system holds records of the total number of claims received, awarded and disallowed on a national basis. Statistics are available which provide the number of families in receipt of FC within a BA office area on a given date. These offices do not correspond to constituency boundaries or to specific geographical areas.

Details relating to FC claims are normally destroyed after 18 months, therefore the information is available from 1993 only. The statistics available are shown in the attached Annex.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Families in receipt of Family Credit at that date

| Date of Scan | BA office–Crewe | Cheshire |
|---|---|---|
| 20 August 1993 | 1,393 | 13,895 |
| 15 April 1994 | 1,455 | 14,686 |
| 10 November 1994 | 1,563 | 15,553 |
| 13 April 1995 | 1,676 | 16,252 |
| 10 November 1995 | 1,785 | 17,503 |
| 16 February 1996 | 1,862 | 18,164 |
| 7 June 1996 | 1,966 | 19,380 |

Figures are provisional and subject to amendment. The BA office at Crewe includes details for Nantwich.

Cheshire covers the following BA offices:-Chester, Crewe, Ellesmere Port, Hyde, Macclesfield, Manchester-Sale, Northwich, Stockport, Warrington, Widnes and Wilmslow.

Whilst these offices will primarily deal with their relevant part of the Cheshire County, they may also service parts of neighbouring counties. It is not possible to separate the figures presented and exclude any customers in receipt of Family Credit in those other countries.

Pensioner Incomes

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage and number of (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples have a total income of at least £125 per week; and what percentage and number of pensioner couples have a total income of at least (i) £200 per week and (ii) £250 per week. [36823]

Mr. Heald: The number of single pensioners with gross income of at least £125 per week is 1,200,000, or 28 per cent. of all single pensioners. The number of pensioner couples with gross income of at least £125 per week is 2,250,000, or 85 per cent. of all pensioner couples.

The number of pensioner couples with gross income of at least £200 per week is 1,150,000, or 43 per cent. of all pensioner couples. The number of pensioner couples with gross income of at least £250 per week is 800,000, or 29 per cent. of all pensioner couples.

Notes:

1. Income is measured as gross income before housing costs.

2. Information is based on the family expenditure survey 1993. All amounts are in July 1993 prices.

3. The numbers of pensioner units are rounded to the nearest 50,000. Percentages are rounded to the nearest whole percentage.

4. A pensioner couple is defined as a couple where the head, or husband is over state pension age.

Doctors' Fees

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the (a) current hourly rate and (b) current payment per half-day session for fee-paid part-time doctors. [36908]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 17 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question asking what is the (a) current hourly rate and (b) current payment per half-day session for fee-paid part-time doctors.

Examining doctors are paid £30.70 per hour, and £107.45 per half-day session of 3.5 hours.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Medical Examinations

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average number of appointments for a medical examination for the all-work test of incapacity which are lost in each half-day session. [36910]

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Benefits Agency medical services is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 17 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question asking what is the average number of appointments for a medical examination for the all-work test of incapacity which are lost in each half-day session.

The information is not available in the format requested.

Separate figures are not available in respect of the All Work Test. However, figures are available for all medical examinations for Incapacity Benefit. In the first six months of this year an average of 1.15 appointments per session were lost. The majority of these appointments will have been for the All Work Test, with a small proportion being in respect of the Own Occupation Test.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 3 April, Official Report, column 345, about the cost of answering written questions, what work would be necessary to collate the information requested. [37513]

Mr. Burt: The examination of over 12,000 files dating back to 1989–90.

Disabled People (Discrimination)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent action the Government have taken to tackle discrimination against disabled people. [37155]

Mr. Burt: The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 makes discrimination against disabled people unlawful in employment, access to goods, facilities, services and premises. These areas of the Act come into force on 2 December this year.

I have today laid the Disability Discrimination (Services and Premises) Regulations before the House under part III of the DDA. These regulations relate to: insurance, where the way in which the Act operates needs to be qualified so that objective underwriting decisions are not restricted; guarantees and refundable deposits; education-related services; and people who have a power of attorney and act on behalf of a disabled person.

I have placed in the Library copies of the analysis of responses to our recent consultation on these regulations. I have also placed in the Library copies of the National Disability Council's analysis of responses to its recent consultation exercise on proposals for a code of practice on the first of the rights of access to goods, facilities, services and premises under the DDA.

The council is to be commended for all its efforts in producing a code of practice to such a high standard so quickly after its creation.

Meal Costs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the 15p limit on the allowable cost of a meal during working hours, stipulated under regulation 4 of the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1978, was last increased; what estimate he has made of the percentage increase in restaurant meal prices since then; and if he will increase the limit by a similar percentage. [37841]

Mr. Burt: The 15p limit reflects the treatment, for tax purposes, of employees who receive luncheon vouchers. It has not been increased since its introduction in 1967. No estimate has been made of the increase in restaurant meal prices and we have no plans to increase the limit.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the latest year for which figures are available the distribution of child benefit expenditure among families with children, broken down into equal value income bands before and after housing costs. [37915]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The latest available information is in the table:

Distribution of child benefit expenditure by equivalised income band, UK 1992–93

Percentages

| Equivalised weekly household income (January 1993 prices) | Before housing costs | After housing costs |
|---|---|---|
| £100 or less | 12 | 28 |
| > £100 to £150 | 26 | 21 |
| > £150 to £200 | 19 | 18 |
| > £200 to £250 | 15 | 13 |
| > £250 to £300 | 10 | 8 |
| > £300 to £350 | 7 | 4 |
| Over £350 | 11 | 8 |

1. Information in the table is derived from the 1992–93 households below average income dataset; 1992–93 figures are for two calendar years data combined.

2. Income bands are based on the standard households below average income definition of income—weekly household disposable income adjusted for household size and composition (equivalised).

3. Estimates are shown by £50 income bands except where figures would be unreliable due to small sample sizes. All estimates are subject to sampling error.

Road Tax (Disabled People)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to revise the arrangement whereby people in receipt of the higher rate of the mobility component of disability living allowance are exempt from payment of the vehicle road fund tax on their personal vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [37985]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is considering options for changes to the law relating to disabled vehicle excise duty exemptions to be introduced within the November budget. We are assured that, in the meantime, no disabled person will lose entitlement to free vehicle excise duty, even if they are affected by the disability living allowance changes.

Motability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action has been taken by his Department in respect of the National Audit Office's study into Motability; and if he will make a statement. [38629]

Mr. Burt: The National Audit Office report has just been received and is now being studied by the Department.

The motability scheme was founded in 1977 by the late Lord Goodman and Lord Sterling with all-party support. It is a unique example of collaboration between the public, voluntary and private sectors. This independent charity enables severely disabled people receiving mobility allowance—replaced by the higher rate mobility component of disability living allowance from April 1992—or war pensioners mobility supplement to gain access to personal transport. Currently, over a quarter of a million disabled people enjoy the benefits of the scheme.

The NAO report examines whether the scheme offers value for money to disabled people and how Motability monitors the quality of service the scheme provides. The report also looks at how the Department monitors Motability's activities against the conditions of the grant in aid provided. The NAO report concludes that the scheme provides good value for money to disabled people. It also notes that the Department has improved its oversight of Motability by setting out in a financial memorandum the accountability arrangements for the grant in aid towards Motability's administration costs, and holding six-monthly meetings to monitor progress.

The NAO makes sensible recommendations for improvements in Motability's customer service and oversight of service providers. Motability has already begun to implement these recommendations and many are now in place.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

British Beef

10. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will undertake discussions with major fast food chains in the United Kingdom to encourage them to revert to the serving of British beef. [36414]

Mrs. Browning: We have already had several productive discussions with representatives of those companies who have not reverted to the serving of British beef. We continue to do all that we can in consultation with the Meat and Livestock Commission to persuade such establishments to restore British beef to their menus.

Roseclear

11. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into products with similar ingredients to Roseclear remaining on the market; and if he will make a statement. [36415]

Mrs. Browning: We are assessing whether other amateur use products may present similar risks to consumers as Roseclear. In the light of this, we may require the manufacturers to carry out further safety studies.

Subsidies

12. Mr. Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of agricultural subsidy in the United Kingdom which went to (a) production, (b) non-production and set-aside and (c) organic farming for each of the last five years. [36416]

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is contained in table 9.1 of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1995", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Crops

13. Dr. Spink: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance is available to develop uses for residual raw material from crops. [36417]

Mr. Boswell: The Government have funded research into industrial uses for crop by-products such as cereal and linseed straw, and there are grant-aided schemes which can be used to help projects in this area.

Food Purity

14. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to provide consumers with information on the purity of the food they buy. [36418]

Mrs. Browning: It is an offence under the Food Safety Act 1990 to label or advertise food in a way which is likely to mislead as to the nature, substance and quality of the food. Enforcement of these requirements is the responsibility of local authorities.

Beef Processing (Job Losses)

15. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of jobs lost since March in the beef processing industries on a regional basis. [36419]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Job losses resulting from the bovine spongiform encephalopathy crisis are being monitored by the Employment Service, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. Reliable regional or sectoral analysis is not available, but it is estimated that nationally up to 10,000 jobs might have been lost across all sectors affected.

Coastal Erosion (Isle of Wight)

16. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance and advice his Department has given the Isle of Wight on coastal erosion in the last three years. [36420]

Mr. Boswell: In the last three years, the Ministry has provided the Isle of Wight council and all other coast protection authorities with (a) written guidance on the strategic approach to coastal defences and their environmental and economic appraisal, and (b) the results of the Ministry's coast protection survey and of the commissioned research programme. The regional engineer has advised on individual proposals for studies and schemes, and approval for grant aid has been given to 13 such schemes and studies at an estimated cost of £4.2 million.

EU Farm Holdings

17. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the distribution of payments under the common agricultural policy to EU farm holdings. [36421]

Mr. Boswell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my hon. Friend the Minister of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Mr. Budgen).

Beef Export Ban

18. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in having the EU's ban on the export of British beef lifted. [36422]

Mrs. Browning: We have agreed a framework for lifting the ban, based on objective scientific criteria. We are working hard to fulfil the conditions attached to the agreement to secure the earliest possible removal of the ban.

19. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the ban on British beef exports to be fully lifted. [36423]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Florence agreement provides a framework for lifting the ban, with decisions based on objective criteria. We hope to be in a position by November to meet the necessary conditions for decisions to resume an export trade worth £530 million.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which directives with their relevant treaty articles have been quoted by official bodies of the European Community in respect of (a) restriction of inter-community trade in beef or derived foods and (b) prohibition of export of beef from the United Kingdom to any third nation not prohibiting its import. [24442]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 2 April 1996]: I very much regret that the hon. Member has had to wait so long for a reply.

Commission decision 96/239/EC of 27 March 1996, which prohibited both the dispatch to other member states and the export to third countries of British beef and beef products from the UK, and Commission decision 96/362/EC of 11 June, amending decision 96/239/EC and allowing the export of certain beef products from the UK under strictly controlled conditions, were based on Council directives 90/425/EEC and 89/662/EEC. The treaty base of both these directives is article 43 EC. This treaty provision allows the Council to adopt proposals relating to implementation of the common agricultural policy.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

20. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle from Cornish farms have gone for slaughter under the 30 months scheme in each week since it started. [36424]

Mr. Baldry: Numbers of cattle slaughtered under the over 30 months scheme by farm of origin are not available.

Animal Welfare

21. Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has received from animal welfare groups to his proposal to seek to add a protocol on animal welfare to the treaty of Rome. [36425]

Mrs. Browning: The Government's proposal has been broadly welcomed by the welfare groups. Some argue that we should go further—for example, by pressing for an amendment to the body of the treaty with explicit reference to animals as sentient beings. However, the addition of a protocol would create a legally binding obligation and so be sufficient to meet our objective.

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on farm animal welfare. [36428]

Mrs. Browning: We continue to receive a high volume of comment on animal welfare issues.

Fish Stocks

22. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the efficacy to date of the European common fisheries policy in conserving herring stocks in the British sector of the North sea. [36426]

Mr. Baldry: Fish stocks, including North sea herring, are not constrained by national boundaries, which is why international co-operation on their conservation is essential. In the late 1970s and early 1980s, before the creation of the common fisheries policy, the North sea herring stock was subject to a total moratorium due to overfishing. Since 1983 the stock has, under joint management by the EU and Norway, been able to sustain a viable fishery. However, in the light of new and urgent scientific advice, the European Commission, with the support of member states, has agreed a reduced total allowable catch with Norway and introduced an emergency regulation to halve the catches of North sea herring in 1996. This came into effect on 2 July. This swift action is a good example of the common fisheries policy working in a responsible way to conserve fish stocks for the long-term benefit of the industry.

23. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals Her Majesty's Government have made recently for improvements in the common fisheries policy that are aimed at conserving fish stocks and the livelihoods of those employed in the fishing industry. [36427]

Mr. Baldry: In December last year I launched the Fisheries Conservation Group, which brought together the industry, fisheries scientists and Fisheries Department experts to look at new ways to conserve fish stocks. Their findings were issued as a consultation document last month and the European Commission have been kept in touch with developments as they prepared their own proposals on technical conservation.

In addition, the CFP review group established in January 1995 by the then Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), has almost completed its work and is expected to report before the summer recess. I will give serious consideration to all constructive suggestions for improved fish stock conservation.

The Government have already made it clear that it will be putting proposals to the intergovernmental conference to tackle the problem of quota hoppers. These proposals are designed to ensure that the economic benefits of UK quotas accrue to the UK's fishing communities.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

25. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is next meeting his EU counterparts to discuss BSE. [36429]

Mrs. Browning: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will attend the Agriculture Council on 22 and 23 July and expects to discuss BSE during that meeting.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what warranties will be provided regarding freedom from BSE of cattle imported to the United Kingdom as herd replacements. [37720]

Mrs. Browning: The existing arrangements for the importation of cattle and other livestock from the European Community and from third countries already provide for a veterinary inspection to certify that the livestock are free from any clinical signs of disease. These arrangements are on-going and apply to animals imported now as herd replacements and imported in the past as herd replacements and will continue to apply for the future. Although BSE is present in a number of other countries the incidence is much lower than in the United Kingdom, and the certification requirements which are recommended by the international animal health code of the Office International des Epizoöties are much less stringent. Purchasers may, however, specify whatever warranty they wish when buying cattle, and should take veterinary advice before doing so.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of cattle that contracted BSE as a result of failures of animal feed producers to implement fully BSE-related control regulations in the production, distribution and supply of animal feed since 1989. [31251]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 June 1996]: No such estimates are available. It has however been estimated that the introduction of the ruminant feed ban prevented more than 150,000 cases of BSE.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the results to date of the Weybridge study into possible maternal transmission of BSE. [32196]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 June 1996]: The work being undertaken at the Veterinary Laboratories Agency will be published in the scientific literature in due course. We have undertaken to make known any significant findings when the interim results of the experiment are evaluated.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the 10 most recent dates of birth of cattle confirmed since 1 January as carrying the BSE agent. [32097]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 June 1996]: As at 17 July, the 10 most recent dates of birth for BSE cases confirmed since 1 January 1996 are:

28 October 1992
31 October 1992
31 October 1992
01 November 1992
03 November 1992
05 November 1992
12 November 1992
01 December 1992
05 December 1992
31 December 1992

Mr. Campbell-Savours: to ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent (a) antibody and (b) other research carried out at the central veterinary laboratory into the infectivity of BSE in the ileum indicates infectivity of BSE eight months prior to an animal displaying clinical signs of BSE. [32324]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: No PrP antibody test has been established that in BSE can specifically detect the altered protein in the ileum—assuming the protein to be a proxy for infectivity. Further work is planned in this area.

Research at CVL into infectivity of BSE in the ileum has been confined to mouse bioassay of this tissue from cattle experimentally infected by oral dosing using a large dose of affected cow brains. Groups of infected cattle were then killed at sequential four month intervals and their tissues were sampled for bioassay of infectivity. Results of the study are incomplete, but so far infectivity has been detected in ileum of cattle from six months to 18 months after dosing. Those cattle which remained in the study developed clinical signs of BSE at 35 to 37 months after dosing. The results of assays started after 18 months post challenge are not yet available. Thus the studies indicate that, under these specified experimental conditions, infectivity is detectable by bioassay in mice from six months to at least 18 months after dosing.

There is no evidence from the research or otherwise at present that infectivity and/or the altered PrP protein in BSE can be detected eight months prior to the onset of clinical disease.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made of the potential for securing an end to the European ban on beef on the basis of introducing post mortem tests in abattoirs for diagnosing the pre-clinical incidence of BSE in animals using ileum and or brain material; and what is his assessment of the costs and efficacy of such tests. [32309]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: It is impractical to use brain material for diagnosing pre-clinical BSE as the tests which exist are effective only on clinically affected cattle, or on cattle that are about to develop clinical disease. Immunological tests using the ileum are still being evaluated.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the usefulness of cattle post mortem antibody testing for pre-clinical diagnosis of BSE which provides for results within 15 hours of testing taking place. [32320]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: Several potential diagnostic tests exist—some rapid, others slow—which are effective only on clinically affected cattle, or on cattle that are about to develop clinical disease within three to four months. Neither the specificity of PrP antibodies nor the sensitivity of the current diagnostic immunological methods allow detection of the accumulated disease specific protein in tissues at earlier stages of incubation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the advantages of introducing a national screening programme on the basis of amending current diagnostic procedures for BSE detection in abattoirs to include a three-month retrospective pre-clinical assessment of BSE infectivity. [32321]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 17 June 1996]: We see no benefit from doing this. Only three clinical cases of BSE have occurred since the beginning of 1995 in animals young enough to be eligible for human consumption under existing rules. The currently available diagnostic techniques do not identify cattle at the earliest stages of disease although the exact correlation between clinical symptoms, histopathology and infectivity in different tissues will not be established until the completion of the pathogenesis experiment currently under way at CVL, Weybridge.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned, and (b) evaluated concerning the survival of BSE infectivity through the rendering processes as used by Prosper De Mulder. [33141]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 June 1996]: Research into the inactivation of the BSE agent was commissioned jointly by MAFF, the EU and the European and UK rendering industry. The results were published in The Veterinary Record on 9 December 1995.

Genetically Engineered Food

26. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards genetically engineered food. [36430]

Mrs. Browning: The UK has a well established and internationally respected system for the approval of novel foods including genetically modified foods. The safety of novel foods is assessed by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes, an independent body of experts set up to advise Agriculture and Health Ministers, and the need for labelling by the independent Food Advisory Committee.

The Government support the concept of an EU regulation on novel foods and novel food ingredients and are actively participating in discussions on the details.

27. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the labelling of foods which have been subject to genetic engineering. [36432]

Mrs. Browning: The Government have accepted the advice of the independent Food Advisory Committee in this area, and have supported the proposed EC regulation on novel foods and novel food ingredients. This would require special labelling for genetically modified foods where these may be significantly different from conventional foods.

Bovine Offals

28. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many breaches of the ban on specified bovine offals have occurred in abattoirs since 1 May. [36433]

Mrs. Browning: The Meat Hygiene Service is responsible for the day to day enforcement of the specified bovine material controls in licensed fresh meat premises. Between 1 May and 10 July the agency identified three breaches of the SBM legislation. It is following up each of these cases.

As at 10 July, the State Veterinary Service had reported 599 unannounced inspection visits to abattoirs since the 1 May. Of these two 0.3 per cent. were unsatisfactory. Problems encountered related to a number of relatively minor infractions, such as incorrect record keeping and storage. Any case involving a serious breach of these provisions will be investigated with a view to prosecution.

Birds (Insect Control)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the insect pest control benefits of certain species of bird; and if he will make a statement. [37366]

Mrs. Browning: This Department has commissioned no research on this subject and therefore has had none to evaluate.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many deaths amongst farmers and agricultural workers have been attributed to the use of organophosphate sheep dips and similar treatments since 1980. [37440]

Mrs. Browning: Under the suspected adverse reaction surveillance scheme, officials at the Veterinary Medicines Directorate are aware of a total of four deaths in connection with OP sheep dips since the records were computerised in 1984.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated which shows a correlation between the use of organophosphate sheep dips and similar treatments, and the incidence of suicide amongst farmers; and if he will make a statement. [37439]

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

A three-year study by the institute of occupational medicine at Edinburgh university, to examine the neuropsychological effects of the use of organophosphate sheep dips, was commissioned jointly by the Department of Health, the Health and Safety Executive and the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, in November 1995. The study will seek to establish whether there are any links between abnormalities of the human nervous system and exposure to sheep dips.

Animal Feed (Wood Flour)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what analysis he has made of wood flour as used in animal feeds; and if he will make a statement. [37914]

Mrs. Browning: We are not aware of the use of wood flour in animal feeds. The Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995 prohibit the use in compound feeds of wood, sawdust or other materials derived from wood if they have been treated with wood protection products. In addition under the Agriculture Act 1970, it is an offence to sell, or have in possession with a view to sale, any material which is deleterious to animals or, through the consumption of animal products, deleterious to human beings.

Pesticides Safety Directorate

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Pesticides Safety Directorate has revised its framework document since its launch as an executive agency on 1 April 1993. [38777]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Pesticides Safety Directorate has revised its framework document with effect from 1 April 1996. The revised document, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House, reflects the changes and developments that have occurred since the directorate's launch as an agency three years ago. The changes will help the agency to build upon its record of success in the coming years.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the prior options review of the Central Science Laboratory. [38775]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following the prior options review of the Central Science Laboratory, the Government have decided to seek the views of independent consultants. My Department has approached potential consultants and expects to make an appointment shortly.

This further study will consider the options of retention in the public sector as an executive agency, contractorisation and privatisation. It is expected to be completed in October 1996.

ADAS (Research and Development)

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the prior options review of Agricultural Development Advisory Service research and development. [38776]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following the prior options review the Government have decided that all of ADAS's research and development functions are suitable for privatisation. I announced on 28 June 1995 at column 696 that most of ADAS's non-research and development functions would be privatised. The ADAS research centres will therefore form part of the body to be transferred to the private sector.

My Department is now appointing financial advisers to assist us in managing the sale of all the ADAS functions which do not need to be retained in the public sector. The timing of the sale will be decided in the light of their advice.

Slaughtered Cattle (Disposal)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the oral statement of 20 March, Official Report, columns 375-86, what research he (a) has commissioned and (b) plans to commission into the effects on the water supply of the disposal of (i) offal and (ii) other waste from the slaughter of cattle on agricultural land. [23005]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 26 March 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her on 16 April, Official Report, column 466.

Beef Exports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cash value of (a) imports and (b) exports of beef meat and beef meat products for the United Kingdom in each of the last three years for each trading partner. [29622]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 16 May 1996]: I very much regret that the hon. Member has had to wait so long for a reply.

Total imports and exports of beef meat and beef meat products, as recorded in the overseas trade statistics, and for the United Kingdom's top 10 trading partners for each of the last three years, are as follows:

Exports of meat and meat offal of bovine animals

Gelatine

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what experiments have been carried out on gelatine purified from cattle sources to indicate whether it might be contaminated with the infectious agent responsible for bovine spongiform encephalopathy. [31066]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 June 1996]: Work has been published which has examined the effects of various of the several steps involved in making gelatine. This research indicates that each stage is likely to be able to reduce any infectivity. It is important to note, however, that the raw materials for gelatine production—from animals fit for human consumption and not including specified bovine materials—should not include potentially infectious material since infectivity has never been detected experimentally in any bovine tissue not covered by the current specified bovine material ban.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to act on the outcome of research concerning the treatment processes of (a) heating and (b) caustic soda used in gelatine purification in respect of the inactivation of BSE infectivity, funded by his Department, carried out at the neuropathogenisis unit, Edinburgh and published in the 1994 archives of virology, Vol. 139; and if he will make a statement. [33136]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 June 1996]: This experiment examined the reduction in infectivity of the BSE agent when exposed to caustic soda only and was therefore representative of one of the processes to which bone material is subjected in order to produce gelatine. A number of other steps are involved, including acid treatment, sterilisation and filtration, each of which contributed to the level of inactivation provided by the entire gelatine making process. The raw materials used to make gelatine do not include any tissues which have ever been found to harbour BSE infectivity. Information about all the processing steps was available to the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee when it prepared its advice to Ministers on the safety of gelatine.

Beef Farmers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will match by way of a national top-up payment to farmers who have sold finished stock since 20 March, the sum agreed by EU Agriculture Ministers to be distributed to beef farmers in special difficulties. [36839]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 11 July 1996]: I have no plans to do so at the present time.

WALES

Social Services Inspectors

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many social services inspectors were employed in each year since 1991 in Wales. [36507]

Mr. Hague: The number of social services inspectors employed by my Department for the years 1991 to date are as follows:

1991: 7
1992: 8
1993: 8
1994: 8
1995: 8
1996: 6

Three additional inspectors will be appointed as set out in my answer of 4 July 1996, Official Report, columns 507–08.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37244]

Mr. Hague: My Department already makes some use of the Internet to publish major publications, and is considering extending its use more generally.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 521, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37529]

Mr. Hague: The examination of over 17,000 files dated back to 1989–90.

Training for Work

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums have been allocated by his Department to each training and enterprise council in Wales in respect of (a) those starting training for work, (b) those in employment for seven days or more following training for work (i) in total (ii) in respect of the registered disabled, (c) registered disabled starting training for work, (d) weekly allowances for youth training and (e) disabled people on a training for work programme gaining a national vocational qualification level 2–3 qualification. [37385]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested for parts (a), (b), (c) and (e) is contained in the following table. The amounts paid to youth trainees for weekly allowances are not collected centrally by the Welsh Office.

Training for work expenditure 1995–96

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums have been allocated by his Department to each TEC in Wales for those on training for work who gain an NVQ level 2/3 qualification (a) in total and (b) for youth trainees. [37386]

Mr. Evans: The information requested is contained in the following table:

| TEC | Expenditure 1995–96 £ million Youth training NVQ level 2–3 | Training for work NVQ level 2–3 |

Obesity

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the estimated percentage of (a) men and (b) women, aged (i) 16 to 64 years and (ii) 64 years and over, who were obese for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [37369]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health Promotion Wales carried out surveys concerning obesity in 18 to 64-year-olds in 1985, 1988, 1990 and 1993 and for 65 to 75-year-olds in 1993. The information is given in the following table. The 1996 survey is currently being undertaken and results should be available next spring.

Per cent. of the population who were obese[1]

| | 1985 | 1988 | 1990 | 1993 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Residents aged 18 to 64: | | | | |

| Men | [2]— | [2]— | [3]— | 10.1 |
| Women | [2]— | [2]— | [2]— | 21.0 |

[1] Overweight or obese is defined as body mass index (weight (Kg)/(height (m))
[2] of 30 or more for males, 28 or more for females based on self reported weight and height.
[2] Not available.

Bus Drivers and Conductors (Assaults)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up a study of incidents of public service bus drivers and conductors in Wales suffering from assault in the course of their work, with a view to publishing guidelines to improve their safety. [37117]

Mr. Hague: There is already a programme of research into assaults on bus staff and passengers which covers Wales together with England and Scotland. The programme is overseen by a standing panel on assaults on bus staff.

Guidance for bus operators is provided in the recently revised booklet "Protecting Bus Crews", published by the Department of Transport.

Inward Investment

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the 10 largest industrial or commercial developments in Wales which resulted from inward investment since 1993; and, in each case, what estimate he has made of the number of jobs created and the average cost to public funds for each of these jobs. [37635]

Mr. Hague: All our dealings with inward investors are undertaken on a commercially confidential basis and we do not therefore publish details of individual projects except in cases where details of the project have been announced by the company itself. The following table contains details of the 10 largest inward investment projects, in terms of planned new jobs, which have been attracted to Wales since 1 January 1993 and which have been the subject of public announcements:

| | Published figures for: | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Company | Planned investment (£ million) | Planned new jobs | RSA (£ million) |
| LG | 1,700 | 6,100 | [1]— |
| ASAT | 42 | 1,000 | 17 |
| Newport Wafer-Fab | 230 | 768 | [1]— |

| Fenner | 12 | 377 | [1]— |
| Midland Bank | [1]— | 370 | No support |

[1] Not published.

Details of the financial assistance offered to inward investors are commercially confidential. All such assistance complies with the rules of the relevant schemes and with EC state aid rules. The principal form of assistance offered in support of inward investment projects is regional selective assistance and where the amount offered is £75,000 or more, the total amount offered is published in "Labour Market Trends" in the quarter after the first instalment of grant is paid. Where such publication has already taken place, the relevant figure is included in the table.

Most of the above projects are still in the process of being implemented and up-to-date information on the number of new jobs so far created by them is not held centrally.

School Security

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make additional sums available to individual nursery, infant, primary and high schools for the purpose of adopting security measures against intruders; and if he will make a statement. [38090]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Funds have already been provided from my Department to enable eight schools in Wales to benefit from the Home Office's closed circuit television challenge. In addition, all the recommendations of the working group on school security, which included providing funding for security measures in schools, were welcomed and accepted by the Government and consideration is currently being given as to how best to implement them in Wales.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the implications for Wales of the Government's acceptance of the recommendations of the working group on school security regarding the provision of additional long-term funding specifically allocated for improving school security. [37846]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Funds have already been provided from my Department to enable eight schools in Wales to benefit from the Home Office's closed circuit television challenge. In addition, all the recommendations of the working group on school security, which included providing funding for security measures in schools, were welcomed and accepted by the Government and consideration is currently being given as to how best to implement them in Wales.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the Environment Commissioner of the European Commission concerning the lawfulness of expenditure on the Cardiff bay barrage, in the light of the Lappel Bank judgment at the European Court of Justice; [37984]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the European Court of Justice judgment on the Lappel Bank case on the status of the Cardiff bay barrage scheme; [37990]

(3) what independent legal advice he (a) has received and (b) proposes to commission on the impact of the Lappel Bank judgment on the exclusion of the Cardiff bay site of special scientific interest from the lower Severn estuary special protection area; if he will re-insert it into the SPA; and if he will make a statement. [37987]

Mr. Hague: My Department has been in regular consultation with the European Commission about the development of the Cardiff bay barrage. The Commission have accepted the UK Government's view that the construction of the Cardiff bay barrage is justified for reasons of overriding socio-economic interest. Furthermore, they are satisfied that the compensation measures under way meet the requirements of article 6(4) of Council directive 92/43/EEC. The European Court of Justice's judgment on Lappel Bank does not, therefore, have any implications for the Cardiff bay barrage.

Beef

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available top-up payments to producers of clean beef carcases under 30 months of age; and if he will make a statement. [38091]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Top-up payments of £23.13 and £19.70 per animal under the suckler cow and beef special premium schemes respectively will be made this summer. In addition a further £29 million is being made available to help beef producers and we are considering in consultation with the Welsh farming unions how to put this to best use.

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the Gwent health authority's report into the appointment of a senior manager in January; if he was consulted on the decision not to proceed with the report's publication on 12 July; if he has received a report back from his special independent observer on the working party of non-executive directors; and if he will make a statement. [37983]

Mr. Hague: No. The report was not published on legal advice and, since this was a decision for the authority to take, I was not consulted. The independent adviser does not report to me but provides advice to the sub-committee inquiring into the appointment and my Department is being kept informed of her views which are of necessity confidential. I support the authority's determination to publish a full and correct account and this will be done with as little further delay as possible.

DEFENCE

Military Service

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the advice given to individuals liable to military service who have sworn allegiance to the Crown but whose domicile subsequently becomes independent of the United Kingdom. [36921]

Mr. Soames: Since the UK does not have conscription into the armed forces, on the basis that all those joining the services do so voluntarily, the question of liability for military service arises only for those members of the reserve forces with a residual call-out liability. No advice is provided to reservists whose domicile subsequently becomes independent of the UK.

Parliamentary Question

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 441, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37521]

Mr. Soames: The examination of over 27,500 files dating back to 1987–88.

Residential Property

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many properties there are in the Ministry of Defence's stock of residential property; what is the current average rent; how many are detached single storey dwellings and what is their average rent; and how many properties are empty. [37695]

Mr. Soames: My Department owns 73,873 properties, including civilian dwellings, in Great Britain and Northern Ireland. Some 14,498 of these are currently empty. Average weekly rents, which are set by the independent armed forces pay review body and are based on the most commonly occupied type of unfurnished accommodation, are £46.13 for officers and £30.10 for other ranks.

There are 157 detached single storey dwellings, for which the average rent conforms with the figures given above.

Service Men (Active Service)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 126, to the hon. Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton), if he will list those countries where (a) British service personnel categorised as loan service personnel are based and (b) training exercises involving British service personnel are being conducted. [37836]

Mr. Soames: British loan service personnel are currently based in the following countries:

Angola
Australia
Barbados
Belize
Bermuda

British Virgin Islands
Brunei
Czech Republic
Ghana
Indonesia
Italy
Kenya
Kuwait
Latvia
Malaysia
Mauritius
New Zealand
Oman
Portugal
Saudi Arabia
Sierra Leone
Singapore
South Africa
Turks and Caicos Islands
United Arab Emirates
Zimbabwe

Training exercises involving British service personnel are currently being conducted in the following countries:

Australia
Belize
Canada
Cyprus
Denmark
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Jordan
Netherlands
Norway
United Arab Emirates
USA

Market Testing

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when market testing of support services in Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation and the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency took place; what the outcome was; and if he will make a statement. [37900]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency was formed as an agency within the Ministry of Defence on 1 April 1995. The separate organisations which came together to form the agency each had their own market testing policies in place before 1995 operating under the umbrella of the MoD competing for quality initiative. The Defence Research Agency, for example, had already undertaken the market testing of its engineering services and support services at a number of sites. This led to the implementation of a number of different arrangements involving a mixture of outsourcing and retention of restructured in-house services. In the Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation, the support operations at several ranges have for many years been run on our behalf by contractors. I will be considering whether the entire support services division of DERA, known as DSSD, could be privatised; the feasibility of this, including the possibility of incorporating some elements of support for the DTEO ranges which are not yet contractorised is currently being examined.

Mr. Gordon Foxley

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 June to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar), Official Report, column 63, what actions his Department has taken against Mr. Gordon Foxley following the expiry of the time limits on payment on midnight 8 and 10 July. [38189]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Mr. Gordon Foxley did not contest the statutory demand, nor did he remit to my Department the sum adjudged by the court to be due by way of compensation in respect of his actions. As a result, my Department has taken appropriate legal action. I regret that, for legal reasons, I am unable at this stage to disclose what that action is.

Joint Rapid Deployment Force

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve the capability of the joint rapid deployment force. [38804]

Mr. Portillo: The Government are committed to the joint rapid deployment force which will become operational on 1 August. Our amphibious capability will play a key role in that force: the Royal Marines' ability to mount amphibious operations is critically dependent on the landing platform docks, currently HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid. Both vessels have given long and distinguished service, including in the Falklands campaign, but will soon be approaching the end of their operational lives. I am pleased, therefore, to be able to announce that I am today placing a contract with GEC Marine to design and build two replacement ships at the Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. shipyard at Barrow-in-Furness. The new LPDs will be called HMS Albion and HMS Bulwark. They displace 13,000 tonnes, have a maximum speed of 18 knots and have a crew of just over 320. They can carry up to 650 troops, a range of vehicles, including tanks, and eight landing craft. They also have a flight deck that can accommodate two EH101 helicopters or one Chinook. They are expected to enter service early in the next decade. This order will be warmly welcomed by the Royal Navy and will also be good news for Barrow and for the many subcontractors throughout the UK, providing weapons systems, marine equipments and other components for the ships. The order, worth more than £450 million to GEC Marine and its sub-contractors, will help to sustain some 2,000 jobs in the UK.

Married Quarters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many units of service married quarters accommodation are currently under construction; and at what cost to his Department. [37738]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 16 July 1996]: Some 53 officers' married quarters are currently being demolished and rebuilt at an estimated cost of £4.5 million.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the cost of constructing new married quarters at Catterick garrison. [37737]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The provision of 86 quarters at Belton park, Catterick, at the end of last year cost £4.7 million. Further plans to demolish and rebuild 529 quarters at Pleasantdale, Leadmill and Waitwith/Warell estates will cost in the region of £33 million.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37705]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 17 July 1996]: None. The Ministry of Defence has neither the information nor the responsibility to make such checks. However, it would respond to inquiries made by the Benefits Agency if there were reasonable grounds for suspicion that an individual might be involved in benefit fraud.

Britannia

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the programme for Her Majesty's yacht Britannia up to decommissioning. [37722]

Mr. Soames: Her Majesty's yacht Britannia is to be decommissioned in 1997. Until then, she will fulfil an active programme in support of the royal family's commitments at home and abroad, and of promotion of British commercial interests overseas. However, as with all Royal Navy vessels, we do not provide details in advance of Britannia's programme.

PRIME MINISTER

European Central Bank

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations the Governor of the Bank of England held with him in drawing up the Maastricht proposals for a European central bank; and if he consented to those proposals. [37825]

The Prime Minister: The predecessor of the existing Governor of the Bank of England was a member of a committee which compiled the so-called Delors report on economic and monetary union, published in April 1989. Although influenced by this report, the plans for economic and monetary union set out in the EC treaty as amended at Maastricht were the result of negotiations between member states' Governments and were ratified according to national constitutional requirements. In particular, protocol No. 11 to the EC treaty requires Parliament and the Government to give consent to the United Kingdom's participation in the third stage of economic an monetary union, on the terms contained in the treaty, before the United Kingdom would be able to take part. The Government have stated that they will seek to participate in the third stage only if they believe that it would be in the national interest to do so, on the basis of a full assessment of the implications for the United Kingdom at the appropriate time.

Monetary and Exchange Rate Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what steps he will take in the intergovernmental conference to ensure that decisions of the EU, the European system of central banks and the European Court of Justice concerning monetary and exchange rate policy are not binding on the United Kingdom; [37829]

(2) if he will ensure at the intergovernmental conference that no restriction, with special reference to the role of the Bank of England and EU institutions, is placed directly or indirectly on the power of the United Kingdom Government to determine monetary and exchange rate policy. [37828]

The Prime Minister: Protocol No. 11 to the EC treaty on certain provisions relating to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland states that the United Kingdom shall not be obliged or committed to participate in the third stage of economic and monetary union without a separate decision to do so by the Government and Parliament. Paragraph 4 of the protocol states that the United Kingdom would were it to notify the Council of Ministers that it did not intend to move to the third stage. Paragraphs 5 and 8 of the protocol list those articles from the treaty and the statute of the European system of central banks from which the United Kingdom would be specifically excluded in these circumstances.

"retain its powers in the field of monetary policy according to national law"

As the Government's White Paper on the intergovernmental conference, "A Partnership of Nations", made clear, it is not expected that economic and monetary union will be discussed at the IGC. The Government have no reason to challenge that expectation, and will not be seeking to change the treaty arrangements relating to the United Kingdom.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set up an inquiry to examine (a) the reasons for the spread of BSE, (b) the use of animal material in feedstuffs, (c) the effectiveness of the measures taken to deal with the situation since 1986 and (d) the quality of the advice available to the Government on this matter. [38003]

The Prime Minister: No. These are essentially technical scientific issues which have been considered many times by the Government's own committee of independent scientific advisers, the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee. I have every confidence in the quality of the advice from SEAC.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 July. [36683]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 18 July. [36685]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Burma

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has made to the Burmese Government about the death of James Leo Nichols, a United Kingdom citizen; and if he will make a statement. [37477]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 July 1996]: Together with our EU partners, we issued a statement on 5 July calling for a full and satisfactory explanation from the Burmese authorities of the circumstances leading up to and surrounding the death on 22 June of Mr. Nichols, who was a Burmese citizen. The statement also called for an investigation into Mr. Nichols' death by the United Nations Special Rapporteur for Burma.

HEALTH

General Practitioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will ensure that health authorities consult community health councils on proposals to establish GP out-of-hours treatment centres; and if he will make a statement; [36191]

(2) if he will ensure that community health councils are given the right to be formally consulted about the services commissioned from general practitioners; and if he will make a statement; [36189]

(3) if he will make it his policy that health authorities consult community health councils on proposals to establish general practitioner out-of-hours treatment centres; and if he will make a statement. [36293]

Mr. Horam: Under the Community Health Councils Regulations 1996, health authorities are required to consult their local community health council

"on any proposals which the Health Authority may have under consideration for any substantial development of the health service in the Council's district and on any proposals to make any substantial variation in the provision of such service".

There is no explicit requirement for health authorities to consult CHCs about general medical services, which are the responsibility of general medical practitioners and governed by the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of general practitioners (a) born outside the EC and (b) who qualified outside the EC by region. [37147]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The latest available information is shown in the table. Data on country of birth of general practitioners is derived from General Medical Council data, which are incomplete and unreliable.

Number of unrestricted principals who qualified outside the European Community by region at 1 October 1995

| Region | Total number of unrestricted principals | Number of unrestricted principals qualified outside EC |
|---|---|---|
| Northern and Yorkshire | 3,749 | 550 |
| Trent | 2,555 | 406 |
| Anglia and Oxford | 2,932 | 258 |
| North Thames | 3,776 | 1,144 |
| South Thames | 3,640 | 669 |
| South and West | 3,860 | 111 |
| West Midlands | 2,799 | 672 |
| North Western | 3,391 | 770 |
| Total | 26,702 | 4,580 |

NHS Staff Morale

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission research into the factors underlying staff morale in the NHS. [37188]

Mr. Malone: It is the responsibility of local employers to ensure good morale is maintained within the national health service work force. The NHS executive maintains a national overview of human resource effectiveness in the NHS and commissions, and collaborates with, research studies into human resource management issues.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 585, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones), if he will publish the information on hospital readmissions. [37505]

Mr. Bowis: We shall publish information on hospital re-admissions in the next "NHS Quarterly Review".

Saquinivir

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into an extended access programme for saquinivir; and if he will make a statement. [37183]

Mr. Horam: Where different drug regimes are available, it is a matter for individual clinicians to discuss with patients and decide on the best form of treatment. We do not run extended access programmes in the United Kingdom.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has in respect of haemophilia and the hepatitis C virus to increase the resources for (a) treatment and support services for those infected, (b) research, (c) core funding to the Haemophilia Society to provide services and support on a continuing basis and (d) funding for recombinant products. [37875]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) on 15 July, Official Report, columns 376-77.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals in the Greater London area currently have facilities to incinerate their own clinical waste. [37861]

Mr. Malone: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Purchasing

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the research brief on alternative models for purchasing in the NHS on which he plans to seek tenders. [38033]

Mr. Malone: Work on primary care models of purchasing has already been tendered. There is, as yet, no commitment to support further research.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a public inquiry into the irregular payments made to senior officers at the Yorkshire regional health authority. [38320]

Mr. Malone: No.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the ninth annual report of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship. [38806]

Mr. Horam: The chairman of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship has submitted the ninth report to Health Ministers and the Secretary of State for National Heritage. Copies will be placed in the Library. I am very grateful to the committee, and particularly the chairman, Sir Clive Whitmore, GCB CVO, for their valuable work in monitoring the agreements. The report shows that the industry has continued to honour its commitments.

Royal Victoria Infirmary

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the business case for a multi-storey car park at the Royal Victoria infirmary was received; when a partner company was selected; when the proposals was submitted for private finance initiative approval; and when he expects to announce the commencement of construction. [38093]

Mr. Horam: The full business case for this development was received by the former Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority in August 1994. A partner company was selected in March 1993. The proposal was submitted for private finance initiative approval and it was approved by the national health service executive in February 1995. The Royal Victoria and Associated Hospitals national health service trust expects to announce commencement of construction shortly.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has received from the German Government to support allegations that the slaughter measures originally proposed by the British Government in March in respect of BSE were inadequate on health grounds. [31819]

Mrs. Browning: I have been asked to reply.

None. The Government's bovine spongiform encephalopathy eradication plan was approved unanimously by the Commission's Standing Veterinary Committee on 19 June and adopted unanimously by the European Council at Florence on 21 June. The Prime Minister made a full statement to the House on 24 June, Official Report, columns 21–24.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Traditional Engineering Apprenticeships

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many hours are spent (a) in the classroom studying the theoretical subjects and (b) gaining practical experience under the traditional engineering apprenticeship. [37077]

Mr. Paice: This information is not available.

School Security

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of expenditure within the 1997–98 grant for education support and training programme will be allocated to the improvement of school security. [37438]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government have accepted all the recommendations of the working group on school security, including the need for additional funding. This will be made available through the GEST programme from 1997–98 as indicated in the Department for Education and Employment circular 13/96 issued to LEAs on 12 July. Funding levels within the 1997–98 GEST programme will be determined as part of the public expenditure survey and announced after the Budget. A copy of the circular 13/96 has been placed in the Library.

Children (Mobility Impairments)

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures she has taken to secure access to nursery education for children with mobility impairments. [3726]

Mrs. Gillan: Proposals in the Nursery Education and Grant-Maintained Schools Bill and the associated requirements of grant will ensure that all children, including those with disabilities, have the opportunity to experience good quality nursery education.

Departmental Costs

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the total aggregate costs to her Department of administration, oversight, audit and other regulation of each of the non-departmental public bodies, agencies and similar bodies sponsored by her Department. [37503]

Mr. Robin Squire: The costs of overseeing the bodies sponsored by the Department cannot easily be disaggregated from the costs of related activities. However, estimated total aggregate costs of a recurring nature for the 1996–97 financial year in respect of the Department's oversight of the Employment Service, the Teachers' Pensions Agency and the 25 non-departmental public bodies and similar bodies sponsored by the Department are £1.4 million.

Teachers (Redundancies)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers have been made redundant in each year since 1979. [37752]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

Teachers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many qualified (a) maths, (b) English and (c) science teachers there were in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools, in each year since 1979. [37753]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information about the qualifications of all secondary teachers is available only from the secondary school staffing surveys, which were conducted in 1984, 1988, and 1992. The number of full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in England who had a post A-level qualification in one of the subjects requested was as follows:

Thousands

| Year | Maths[1] | English[1] | Science[1] |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1984 | 47.9 | 54.6 | n/a |
| 1988 | 42.0 | 45.7 | 49.6 |
| 1992 | 38.1 | 40.1 | 46.2 |

[1] Some teachers counted in more than one of the three subjects listed.

Primary teachers are generally trained to teach the full range of the primary curriculum.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will give the approximate expenditure expected to be incurred prior to the end of July 1996 in relation to the scheme for under-five pre-school settings by (a) her Department, (b) Capita Managed Services, (c) each of the education authorities now operating phase 1 of the scheme, (d) inspection activities, (e) surveys or investigations and (f) information. [38089]

Mr. Robin Squire: To date, the following sums have been paid to the local education authorities operating phase 1 of the scheme:

Norfolk LEA: £2,266,668

Wandsworth: £863,600

Westminster: £358,318

Kensington and Chelsea: £255,750.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 20 February, Official Report, column 120, to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Hall) on 26 June, Official Report, column 158, to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Mr. Deva) on 7 March, Official Report, column 348, to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend for Chingford (Mr. Duncan Smith) on 19 April, Official Report, column 621 and to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 16 July, Official Report, column 466.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will place in the Library the tender documents received by the Office for Standards in Education for the main contract for inspection of (a) nursery settings in the area of the four education authorities receiving nursery vouchers and (b) other settings elsewhere which she expects to participate in the scheme after April 1997. [38088]

Mr. Squire: I understand the tenders received by Ofsted for the administration of the contracting for the inspections of private and voluntary sector providers in the nursery education voucher scheme are still under evaluation. It is inappropriate to release information regarding commercially sensitive pricing.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will place in the Library a list of the surveys, investigations or evaluations which have been commissioned in respect of the scheme for nursery vouchers, and for each give (a) the cope and purpose of each investigation, (b) the terms of reference, (c) the questions asked, (d) the body or organisations (i) commissioning and (ii) undertaking the study, (e) the cost, (f) the body providing the finance and (g) the date or planned date of publication. [38087]

Mr. Squire: I gave details of research projects relating to phase 1 of the nursery education voucher scheme in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 16 July, Official Report, column 466. The two surveys were commissioned by the Central Office of Information on behalf of the Department, and undertaken by the British Market Research Bureau International. I am arranging for copies of the questionnaires employed to be placed in the Library. The analyses of data on voucher issue and redemption are being conducted internally.

Tenders for a longitudinal research study of effective pre-school education are currently being considered. Details will be announced if and when a contract results.

In addition, the nursery education voucher scheme comes within the ambit of the Department's internal audit division and will be reviewed in the usual way.

Langham School, Haringey

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the future of Langham secondary school, Haringey. [38773]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following letter was today sent by an official of the Department to the chairman of the governing body of Langham school, Haringey:

I am directed by the Secretary of State to thank you for your letter received on 14 June 1996 giving the governing body's response to Mr. Stark's letter of 9 May 1996, which consulted you on a proposal to provide for Langham School to be conducted by an Education Association.

The Secretary of State has considered carefully all the responses she has received, including the representations made by the school's governors and the chief education officer of Haringey when they met with the Minister for Schools, Mr. Squire on 2 July.

The Secretary of State notes that the Governors have a clear sense of purpose and show dedication to the school. She notes that they have taken a firm grip on finance and management, and that in June they appointed a substantive head teacher and deputy head teacher. She also notes that in the past few months there have been encouraging signs of improvement at the school, including a sharp fall in permanent exclusions, an improvement in the key stage 3 SAT results, and an increase in the proportion of pupils entered for GCSEs. She also notes the Governors' assurances that measures are in hand to improve the quality of teaching, including where necessary competence proceedings. She has also noted the assurances from Haringey LEA that it will provide continued support to underpin improvements at the school.

Therefore the Secretary of State has decided not to transfer Langham School to the conduct of an Education Association at the present time. However, the Secretary of State's power to transfer Langham School to the conduct of an Education Association remains in force until such time as the school receives an HMI report stating that it no longer requires special measures. The Secretary of State will continue to watch carefully developments of the school and will pay particular attention on to the report of the next HMI monitoring visit, which we understand is likely to be in November.

The Secretary of State remains concerned by one aspect of the responses from the Governors and LEA. In the earlier stages of consultation the chief education officer of Haringey contested the validity of the HMI monitoring report of March 1996. Subsequently, however, the chief education officer has said that standards of teaching had in fact fallen sharply between November 1995 and March 1996, but has argued that remedial measures had begun to remedy the situation by the time of the March 1996 HMI visit. The Secretary of State is disappointed that the governors and LEA did not make this complete view of the position clear to her much earlier, especially since they were given the opportunity to do so. In particular, the Secretary of State considers that the action of Haringey LEA in impugning the validity of the HMI monitoring report was unjustifiable and reprehensible.

The Secretary of State believes that Langham School and others in its position can recover only if their governors and local education authorities are open in their reports on the situation. She is concerned that this has not happened at Langham, and proposes that you and the chief education officer of Haringey meet the Minister for Schools, Mr. Robin Squire, at this Department to discuss this further. A meeting has been arranged for 3.00pm this afternoon, Thursday 18 July.

I am also writing in similar terms to the Director of Education Services at Haringey Council, the Head Teacher of Langham School and the Chief Executive of the Funding Agency for Schools.

N J Sanders

Director, School Funding and Effectiveness and Teachers

Self-employment

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to encourage self-employment in rural areas. [38774]

Mr. Paice: Since the issue of the White Paper "Rural England—A Nation Committed to a Living Countryside" in October 1995, we have worked closely with the Rural Development Commission, RDC, and the Consortium of Rural Training and Enterprise Councils, CORT, to evaluate possible new arrangements to encourage business start-ups in rural areas.

The Government continue to provide a wide range of services for people, including those living in rural areas, who are either already in self-employment or are considering starting up in business. The services are used extensively by people who live in rural areas, but there is scope to improve access for people who live in remote areas. Consequently, we intend to strengthen the delivery of these services in rural development areas through:

(a) local projects contributing to a national focus for good practice and innovation in promoting self-employment in remote rural areas;

(b) a new brochure for self-employed people living in remote rural areas, outlining what help is available through training and enterprise councils—TECs—colleges, business links and other agencies;

(c) a conference for TECs and their partners on effective strategies for promoting self-employment in remote rural areas, and

(d) increased attention to the needs of remote rural areas when agreeing plans for support services for self-employed people.

TRANSPORT

Maritime Skills Report

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the report of the study into the requirement for United Kingdom maritime skills. [38856]

Mr. Norris: The report, "A Study of the UK Economy's Requirements for People with Experience of Working at Sea" commissioned jointly by the Department of Transport, the Chamber of Shipping and the Marine Society has been published today. I have placed copies of the report in the Library.

The Government have long recognised the importance of trained seafarers for defence and economic reasons and provides targeted support for Merchant Navy training, principally through the Government assistance for training and the development of certificated seafarers schemes.

The Government will consider the report's findings very carefully. The shipping and related shore-based industries will also want to consider how best to meet the potential problems highlighted in the report.

Rail Franchising

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much the subsidy requirements of the railway franchises which have so far been let fall below the claim made by British Rail for financial support less any administered profit; and if he will list the reductions for each franchise over the next seven years. [35986]

Mr. Watts: The table shows the reductions in support for passenger rail services required by private sector franchisees compared with the BR budget, excluding budgeted administered profit. The grant figures for franchisees include costs associated with the substantial additional investment in rail services to which they are committed. Because the BR figures exclude administered profit, this comparison makes no allowance for the additional benefit to the taxpayer of transferring financial risk from the public to the private sector through franchising. Nonetheless, the figures show that, after an initial increase, the net financial burden on the taxpayer will fall by nearly £200 million by the seventh year.

£ million

| | BR budget | Franchise year 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| South West Trains | 65,940 | –4.632 | –5.275 | –7.561 | –12.527 | –17.189 | –22.340 | –25.668 |

The BR budget is the latest available. For GW and SWT it is the revised 1995–96, for the others the preliminary 1996–97.
Positive numbers indicate price increases, negative numbers price decreases.
The BR budget figure for South West Trains and Great Western refers to the final 1995–96 budget, since these two franchises began operations during the financial year 1995–96. The remaining BR budget figures refer to the preliminary 1996–97 budget, which is still subject to negotiation between the BR Board and the franchising director.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37320]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is set out in the following tables.

Number and value of contracts let during 1995–96

| | Coopers and Lybrand | KPMG | Price Waterhouse | Ernst and Young | Deloitte and Touche | Arthur Andersen | Grant Thornton | BDO Stoy Hayward | Pannel Kerr Forster | Robson Rhodes | Total number | Total value £ |

Rail Ticket Sales

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute a review of rail ticket sales following the research findings of the Consumers Association relating to the compliance of train operators with their licence obligations in respect of ticket advice, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will fine those companies found to be in breach of their licences. [37845]

Mr. Watts: The enforcement of licence obligations is a matter for the independent rail regulator. He has said that the intends shortly to launch a wide-ranging consultation exercise on the practical application of train operators' obligations on impartial ticket retailing.

Heavy Goods Vehicle Licences

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if "grandfather rights" under the requirements of the second EC directive on licences will be revoked from 1 January 1997 for all existing lorry licence holders when they apply to renew a licence. [38182]

Mr. Norris: We propose that existing holders of group 2 driving licences should be able to renew their licences as long as they continue to meet present eyesight standards. Drivers who cannot meet these standards, but who have been allowed to continue driving under "grandfather rights" will also be able to renew their licences if they are regular drivers and have not been involved in an accident where eyesight might have been a factor. These proposals will shortly be the subject of consultation.

Trans-European Transport Network

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in reaching the necessary European Parliament and Council co-decision on Community guidelines for the development of the trans-European transport network. [38857]

Mr. Watts: Negotiations to agree a suitable text for the transport TENS guidelines have reached a successful conclusion. The text of the agreement was deposited before the Scrutiny Committee of the House, and that of another place, on 12 July. It was adopted formally by the Council by means of the written procedure on 16 July, and on the same day by the European Parliament after a formal debate.

Adoption of the guidelines means that member states can now proceed to decide on the allocation of the TENS funds available for transport projects in 1996. The TENS financial assistance committee, which is composed of representatives of member states, is to meet to determine this allocation on 25 July.

North Circular Road

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the various contracts to upgrade the A406—north circular road—at Sterling way, Fore street, Angel road and Lea valley viaduct to be completed; what steps he is taking to overcome the delays announced on some of them; and if he will make a statement. [36843]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Clare Short, dated 18 July 1996:

As you know I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the A406 London North Circular Road.

There are three adjoining contracts to improve this road between Stirling Way and Hall Lane. Contract A, the Fore Street Underpass section, is expected to be completed in December 1997, Contract B, the Angel Road Viaduct section, is scheduled for completion in December 1996 and Contract C, the Lea Valley section should be finished in August this year.

Delays have been caused by several factors including having to contend with uncharted essential utility service pipes and cables, unexpected ground conditions and unforeseen obstructions encountered during piling work. To try to overcome some of the problems, the Contractors are working longer hours, increasing resources and reviewing their methods and sequence of construction.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how far negotiations have proceeded with the London borough of Enfield regarding compensation for the removal from Pymmes park, N18 of a cedar tree as part of the compulsory purchase of licence land relating to the widening of the A406 at Sterling way—north circular road; what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current replacement offer from the Highways Agency; what further compensation is due as a result of the compulsory purchase order procedures and carrying out of highway and other works in the vicinity of Pymmes park; and if he will make a statement. [36844]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Clare Short, dated 18 July 1996:

As you know, The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the compensation being claimed by Enfield Borough Council in respect of land taken from Pymmes Park for the widening of the A406 North Circular Road.

The plot of land on which the cedar tree was located is required under an essential licence for the purpose of providing the contractor with working space for the duration of the adjacent roadworks. The District Valuer has reached agreement with the Council on the compensation payable for the use of this land and the Highways Agency propose to arrange for this to be settled shortly. The Council have not raised the possibility of submitting a further claim in respect of the loss of the tree itself.

The major part of the land taken at Pymmes Park is required for the permanent works and is proceeding on the basis of an exchange of land. The Highways Agency is arranging for the former Willoughby Gas Works Site to be upgraded and given to the Council as replacement pubic open space for that which has been lost as a result of the highway scheme.

Lighthouses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has held with (a) the Lights Advisory Committee, (b) the Marine Safety Agency, (c) Trinity House, (d) the Northern Lighthouse Board and (e) the Commissioners for Irish Lights concerning the advisability of constructing lighthouses in particular locations; and if he will make a statement. [37264]

Mr. Norris: All significant changes to the provision of aids to navigation around the coasts of the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland, proposed by the general lighthouse authorities, are discussed with the Lights Advisory Committee and the Marine Safety Agency. Recent discussions have been held regarding the provision of leading lights at Corlis Point—Shannon estuary—by the commissioners for Irish Lights, construction of a major light at Haskeir island and minor lights at Monach and Gasker islands in the deep water route west of the Hebrides and marking of the south eastern extremity of the 8 m islet to the west of Eileanan Dubha by the Northern Lighthouse Board.

Cycling Accidents (Children)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children received head injuries in cycling accidents in each of the past five years. [38234]

Mr. Norris: National statistics are not available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children (a) died and (b) were injured in cycling accidents in each of the past five years. [38233]

Mr. Norris: The information is shown in the following table:

Child casualties (0 to 15 years in cycling accidents) [1]

| | 1991 | 1992 | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Child fatalities | 50 | 48 | 37 | 42 | 48 |
| Child injured | 8,132 | 7,677 | 7,349 | 8,033 | 8,085 |
| Total child casualties | 8,182 | 7,725 | 7,386 | 8,075 | 8,133 |

[1] The child casualties relate to those killed or injured while cycling and exclude children injured in cycling accidents who were not cycling.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Queen's University, Belfast

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many actions have been brought by the Fair Employment Commission against Queen's university, Belfast in each of the last 10 years. [36600]

Mr. Ancram: The Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland was established on 1 January 1990. Since that date, the commission has provided limited assistance to 35 complainants involving Queens university, Belfast.

The breakdown of cases lodged by calendar year is as follows:

| Year | Cases lodged |
|---|---|
| 1990 | 4 |
| 1991 | 2 |
| 1992 | 10 |
| 1993 | 11 |
| 1994 | 5 |
| 1995 | 3 |
| 1996 | [1]0 |

[1] To date.

Drumcree, Portadown

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if razor wire is being used by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Army at Drumcree, Portadown; and if he will make a statement. [37162]

Sir John Wheeler: The use of barbed wire in the Drumcree area was an operational decision taken by the Chief Constable and a direct result of the public order situation prevailing at that time. The security forces did not use razor wire.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if armed forces are deployed on the line between Drumcree cemetery and the Derryonville road, Portadown. [37127]

Sir John Wheeler: The Army was deployed in support of the RUC operation in the Greater Portadown area.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what requirements are placed on members of the RUC to display their service numbers when on duty; for what reasons RUC officers serving at Drumcree parish church since Sunday 6 July have not been displaying their service numbers; if he will make arrangements to ensure that all officers of the RUC display service numbers when on duty; and if he will make a statement. [37160]

Sir John Wheeler: The display of service numbers is a matter for the Chief Constable. RUC directions require constables and sergeants to wear their service number on the epaulettes of all outer garments when in uniform. Officers of inspector rank and above display rank only on their epaulettes when in uniform.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic bullets have been fired in the vicinity of Drumcree, Portadown since Sunday 6 July; how many civilians have been injured by the use of these bullets at Drumcree; and how many of the bullets have been fired at close range. [37161]

Sir John Wheeler: Plastic bullets are not in use in Northern Ireland, but 90 plastic baton rounds were fired in the Portadown sub-divisional area between 6 am on Sunday 7 July and noon on Thursday 11 July. Four persons are alleged to have been injured as a result. The RUC has strict guidelines governing the use of plastic baton rounds, including the range of fire; their usage is carefully monitored as a matter of policy.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure the primacy of the RUC in operations in Portadown and district. [37128]

Sir John Wheeler: The fact that the police have complete primacy in operational matters has been well established throughout Northern Ireland.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his proposals for reducing the number of education and library boards will be implemented. [37217]

Mr. Ancram: In my statement of 25 June, I undertook to consult the education and library boards before finalising a date for the implementation of the new structure. Those consultations are continuing.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors underlay his policy of appointing representatives to education and library boards. [37221]

Mr. Ancram: The present arrangements for appointments to education and library boards are set out in schedule 2 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money will be saved under his proposals for reducing the number of education and library boards; and if he will itemise the savings. [37168]

Mr. Ancram: My estimate is that the restructuring will save approximately £2 million, of which one half is expected to come from a reduction in senior management structures and central service functions and one half from efficiencies in the delivery of executive services. These estimates will be updated as detailed planning proceeds for the implementation of the new structure.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent to which his proposals for reducing the number of education and library boards ensure greater uniformity of provision for comparable schools. [37220]

Mr. Ancram: One of the objectives in reducing the number of education and library boards from five to three is to reduce the number of different school funding formulae presently used by the boards and to develop, in conjunction with the newly restructured boards, a greater uniformity of approach in allocating resources to similar schools under the local management of schools funding arrangements.

Creches

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the capital expenditure on creche provision in further education in each of the last five years. [37165]

Mr. Ancram: Capital expenditure on creche provision has been an integral part of capital works at colleges of further education and is not separately identifiable.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 1 April, Official Report, column 68, on parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37537]

Sir John Wheeler: To collate the information for the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office would require the examination of over 11,000 files dating back to 1989–90.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 27 March, Official Report, columns 613–14, about parliamentary questions, what method would be used by his Department in collating the information requested. [37536]

Sir John Wheeler: The method used by the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office would be an examination of over 15,000 files dating back to 1987–88.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultation papers he has produced on the policy of incorporation of further education colleges; and if he will make them available. [37201]

Mr. Ancram: The planning and funding system for further education colleges has been discussed widely as part of the work of the review group on further education which reported in 1992 and as part of the review of educational administration from 1993 to 1995. The documents relating to these reviews are widely available. Since the announcement of incorporation in September 1995, the planning process has involved widespread dialogue and consultation with education and library boards, colleges, governors and unions. There will also be a period of formal consultation following the publication of the draft order.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which further education colleges involve students in their managing bodies. [37209]

Mr. Ancram: The Belfast institute of further and higher education is the only further education college whose constitution specifically provides for student representation on its governing body.

Full-time Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of young people are full-time students for each year group in the age cohort 16 to 25 years and for the cohort as a whole. [37203]

Mr. Ancram: Information in respect of Northern Ireland domiciled students in 1994–95 is set out in the table:

| Age | Estimated full-time students as percentage of home population |
|---|---|
| 16 | 75 |
| 17 | 62 |
| 18 | 48 |
| 19 | 36 |
| 20 | 32 |
| 21 | 23 |
| 22 | 14 |
| 23 | 8 |
| 24 | 5 |
| 25 | 3 |
| 16 to 25 | 30 |

Graduates (Employment)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statistics he collates on the number and percentage of graduates obtaining employment after leaving Northern Ireland higher education establishments. [37205]

Mr. Ancram: Data on the first destinations of students qualifying at higher education institutions throughout the United Kingdom are collated by the Higher Education Statistics Agency, and the standard tabulation breaks employment into paid full-time permanent employment in the UK, other employment in the UK, and employment overseas. Further breakdowns by age, sex, subject of study, standard industrial classification of employer, standard occupational classification, and geographical region of employment can be produced.

Book Allowances

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, by institution, the number and value of book allowances made available to students in further education. [37213]

Mr. Ancram: No specific book allowances are made available to students in colleges of further education in Northern Ireland. Colleges' delegated budgets, which are allocated by education and library boards on a formula funding basis, include provision for expenditure on books.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37238]

Sir John Wheeler: The Department of Finance and Personnel has had a presence on the Internet since May 1995 and provides an electronic publication service for Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office.

Each Department has identified a senior official who is responsible for co-operating with departmental business managers to determine which publications should be published on the Internet.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the charge of the firm, Capita, for administering the nursery voucher scheme in Northern Ireland; and what will be the cost per voucher. [37167]

Mr. Ancram: No contract has yet been entered into with any firm for the administration of the voucher scheme in Northern Ireland.

Obesity

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the estimated percentage of (a) men and (b) women, aged (i) 16 to 64 years and (ii) 64 years and over, who were obese for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [37367]

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland health and activity survey, which was published in April 1994, provides data on obesity in Northern Ireland in 1992. This information is given in the following table in the age groups used in the survey. Data on obesity for other years since 1979 are not available.

Per cent. of the population who were obese in [1] 1992

| | Aged 16–24 | 25–34 | 35–44 | 45–54 | 55–64 | 65–74 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Men | 3 | 9 | 25 | 18 | 25 | 23 |
| Women | 16 | 15 | 23 | 30 | 33 | 23 |

[1] Obese is defined as Body Mass Index (weight (KG)/height (m)) [2] of 30 or more for males and 28.6 for females.

Incorporated Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make available the interim report of the Department of Education and education and library boards working groups and the guidance documents relating to incorporation of further education colleges. [37202]

Mr. Ancram: The interim report is an internal document prepared by a working group for use by colleges and education and library boards in taking forward various issues relating to the transfer of responsibilities. It was not intended for publication. A guidance document is currently being prepared for publication and will be widely available.

Further Education Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what analysis he has conducted of the characteristics of students entering further education; and if he will make a statement. [37208]

Mr. Ancram: Analysis which has been conducted on the profile of further education students has related to all such students, rather than entrants alone. This indicates that, in 1994–95, 71 per cent. of further education enrolments were part-time; 60 per cent. were female; 52 per cent. were aged 19 years or under and 34 per cent. aged 26 years or over; 25 per cent. were studying "science only" subjects and 42 per cent. "arts only"; and the breakdown of enrolments by course was A/AS level 11 per cent. GCSE 15 per cent., Business and Technician Education Council 17 per cent., city and guilds 17 per cent., Royal Society of Arts 18 per cent., professional bodies 6 per cent., others 16 per cent.

Student Awards

Mr. Wothington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will express expenditure on student awards as a percentage of the Northern Ireland gross domestic product in each of the past five years. [37206]

Mr. Ancram: The information is set out in the table.

£ million

| | 1991–92 | 1992–93 | 1993–94 | 1994–95 | 1995–96 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Expenditure on student awards | 107.7 | 131.3 | 141.5 | 131.9 | 130.8 |
| As percentage of Northern Ireland GDP [2] | 0.97 | 1.13 | 1.15 | 1.00 | n/a |

[1] Provisional.
[2] Northern Ireland gross domestic product figures are expressed in calendar year terms.

Staff-student Ratios

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list staff-student ratios in (a) further education and (b) higher education for the past five years. [37212]

Mr. Ancram: The Northern Ireland average staff-student ratios in further education colleges for the five years ending 1994–95 are as follows:

1990–91: 1: 12.21

1991–92: 1: 13.24

1992–93: 1: 13.15

1993–94: 1: 13.65

1994–95: 1: 13.68.

The figures for 1995–96 are not yet available.

The staff-student ratios for higher education are as follows:

| | 1990–91 | 1991–92 | 1992–93 | 1993–94 | 1994–95 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Universities | 1: 14.5 | 1: 15.6 | 1: 15.7 | 1: 16.4 | [1] 1: 14.4 |
| Colleges of education | 1: 10.7 | 1: 10.6 | 1: 11.5 | 1: 12.0 | 1: 13.1 |

[1] The ratio for universities in 1994-95 is not comparable with the ratios for earlier years, because of a change in the basis of the count of staff in 1994-95.

Voluntary and Community Sector Funding

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has relating to the ring fencing of the funding of adult and community education in the voluntary and community sectors; and if he will make a statement. [37259]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 17 July 1996]: The funding of adult and community education is not ring fenced and there are no plans to change this. Adult and community education in Northern Ireland is an integral part of normal further education provision and this will remain the case following the planned incorporation of further education colleges.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action to discuss continuing financial support for the (a) community and (b) voluntary sectors; and if he will make a statement. [37260]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 17 July 1996]: My right hon. and learned Friend last met representatives of the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action on 30 May 1996 to discuss a wide range of issues affecting the voluntary and community sector, including funding for the sector. The Government remain committed to working in partnership with the sector and to continuing to support it so far as the inevitable constraints upon the availability of resources permit.

Child Benefits

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number and value of child benefits payable to those past the minimum school leaving age in each of the last five years. [37164]

Mr. Moss: The information is presented in the table.

Number of children past school-leaving age in receipt of child benefit and amount payable [1]

| | Number of children past minimum school leaving age [2] | Amounts of benefit payable (£) [3] | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | First child | Subsequent child |
| 1991 | 43,540 | 8.25 | 7.25 |
| 1992 | 44,052 | 9.65 | 7.80 |
| 1993 | 45,254 | 10.00 | 8.10 |
| 1994 | 45,864 | 10.20 | 8.25 |
| 1995 | 47,814 | 10.40 | 8.45 |

[1] Child benefit is normally paid up to the age of 16 but may be paid up to the age of 19 if the child is in full-time non-advanced education.
[2] At 31 December for each year.
[3] At April for each year. Total child benefit expenditure on 16 to 18-year-olds is not available. Child benefit is accounted for as a whole and is not apportioned between different age bands.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland in 1996–97. [38771]

Mr. Moss: For 1996–97 the following key performance targets have been set for the agency:

To meet an overall efficiency gain of 2 per cent.

To reduce the unit cost per vehicle excise enforcement case by 0.5 per cent. in real terms compared with 1995–96.

To dispatch 94 per cent. of registration books for new vehicles in 16 working days from receipt.

To dispatch 92 per cent. of refunds of vehicle excise duty in 10 working days from receipt.

To dispatch 93 per cent. of vehicle excise licences in five working days from receipt of postal applications.

To dispatch 93 per cent of duplicate vehicle registration books in six working days from receipt of applications.

To dispatch 93 per cent. of ordinary driving licences in 10 working days of receipt of applications.

To dispatch 96 per cent. of vocational driving licences in 10 working days from receipt of applications.

To dispatch 95 per cent. of provisional driving licences in 10 working days from receipt of applications.

To dispatch substantive replies to 95 per cent. of written inquiries for information from the drivers and vehicles registers in three working days from receipt.

To limit maximum waiting time at local vehicle licensing offices so that 95 per cent. of customers are attended to within 23 minutes during peak periods–the first eight and last two working days of each month—and within 10 minutes at other periods.

To limit the error rate—errors on any item sent out by the agency—to a maximum of 0.5 per cent. of total agency output.

Valuations and Lands Agency

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Valuation and Lands Agency in 1996–97. [38772]

Sir John Wheeler: For 1996–97, the following key performance targets have been set for the agency:

(1) To complete 40,000 rating cases—equivalent to 22,000 work units.

(2) To complete 24,600 client service cases—equivalent to 20,050 work units.

(3) To have met by 31 March 1997, all 1996–97 non-domestic revaluation project milestones as specified in the business plan.

(4) To have completed by 31 December 1996 the action plan activities implementing the recommendations of the efficiency scrutiny on Government-owned land.

(5) To achieve a productivity for case working valuers of 327 work units.

(6) To achieve at least a 2 per cent. efficiency saving on the 1995–96 allocation in real terms.

(7) To reduce the unit cost of casework by 3 per cent. in real terms.

(8) To issue 94 per cent. of certificates for rating cases subject to backdating within 12 months of the events giving rise to revisions of the valuation list.

(9) To achieve a standard in rating valuations such that 88 per cent. of those determined on appeal are within (plus) + or (minus) —10 per cent. of the initial assessment.

(10) To complete 85 per cent. of rating appeals within six months of receipt.

(11) To complete 93 per cent. of a representative sample of client services casework within agreed time limits.

Full details are set out in the agency's corporate and business plans, copies of which are being placed in the Library of the House.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inquiries to detect fraud by cross-checking his Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit he has undertaken; when these exercises took place; and how many staff were (a) suspended, (b) dismissed and (c) prosecuted as a result. [37707]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 17 July 1996]: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alex Wylie and I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Frank Field dated 17 July 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on the detection of social security fraud by cross-checking Department's payroll with details of those claiming benefit.

The Social Security Agency has not carried out any data matching exercises where Departmental payroll information has been cross-checked against benefit details. Northern Ireland Departments currently respond to enquiries made by the Agency's Fraud and Prosecutions Branch and relevant information appropriate to an investigation is provided where there are reasonable grounds to suspect that an individual member of staff has been involved in benefit fraud. No separate records are kept on these cases.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

Mature Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people aged 65 years or over were engaged in full-time or part-time education (a) in 1990–91 and (b) at the latest available date; and what percentage this represents of the age group. [37204]

Mr. Ancram: In 1994–95, some 600 Northern Ireland domiciled students were aged 65 or over; this represents 0.3 per cent. of the age group. Reliable information for 1990–91 is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Boards of Visitors)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, columns 141–42, concerning membership of boards of visitors, for what reasons the Minister proposes to remove those visitors who have served for longer than 15 years as of January 1997. [37454]

Miss Widdecombe: It is a general principle of public appointments that appointments should neither be renewed automatically nor renewed an indefinite number of times. This principle has recently been reaffirmed by Lord Nolan and by the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of places left vacant on prison boards of visitors on 3 July; [37452]

(2) what is the estimated average length of time that unoccupied places on prison boards of visitors remain vacant. [37453]

Miss Widdecombe: As of 3 July, 254 vacancies were recorded for boards of visitors serving prisons in England and Wales. Information on the estimated average length of time that unoccupied places on boards of visitors remain vacant can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Constituency Visits

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which constituencies he has visited in the last three months on official business and which constituencies he intends to visit in the next three months; and if he will make a statement. [32337]

Mr. Howard: During the past three months, I have made official visits to the following constituencies:

Derby, South
Derby, North
Maidstone
Guildford
Brighton, Kemptown
Brighton, Pavilion
Hove
Worthing
Wimbledon
St. Albans
Watford
Scarborough
Eastleigh
Arundel
Crawley
Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Central Wallsend
Hendon, South
Leicester, South

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37235]

Mr. Howard: My Department's plans to ensure that major publications are accompanied by simultaneous release on the Internet are quite well advanced. A departmental home page went live on the Internet last March. Two recent consultation documents have been loaded on to the site—"Proposed European Community (EC) Data Protection Directive (95/46/EC)"; and "Stalking: The Solutions—A Consultation Paper". The proposed EC directive will be taken off this week because the closing date for responses is 19 July.

I support developments in publishing suitable information by electronic means and my Department plans to release through the Internet all future consultation documents and other major publications.

The Department's immigration and nationality directorate and the research and statistics directorate have their own home pages. These include summarised background information.

All Home Office material on the Internet can be reached through the main home page on www.open.gov.uk/home_off/hofront.htm

Departmental Visits (United States of America)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1996–97 on which visits to himself, his Ministers or officials within his Department were made by (i) advisers, consultants or academics from the United States of America, (ii) representatives of American federal or state prison services, (iii) representatives of American companies providing private prison or associated services and (iv) other Americans in connection with criminal justice policy; if he will list the names of those visitors, who they represented, and who they met; what was the purpose of each visit and the outcome of each meeting; and what was the cost to public funds of each visit. [37976]

Mr. Howard: The information requested could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers arriving at United Kingdom ports of entry during 1995 and the first quarter of 1996 were referred to port medical inspectors for examination; what were the most common diagnoses made; and how many people have been (a) refused entry (i) wholly or (ii) partly on medical grounds and for what medical reasons and (b) required to report for further medical treatment after entry, and for what medical reason. [38058]

Mr. Kirkhope: Four passengers were refused entry principally on medical grounds in 1995 and four during the first quarter of 1996. The other information requested is not available centrally.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the past five years how many people have presented claims for asylum to a British embassy or high commission; and what the number of such claims has been by country of origin of the claimant. [38195]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 18 July 1996]: Aggregate information on the number of claims for asylum made at British embassies or high commissions is not available. However, details of applications made at specific British high commissions is given in explanatory note 14 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom, 1995", issue 9/96, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the past five years how many people have been granted visas to enter the United Kingdom as a result of presenting a claim for asylum to a British embassy or high commission; and what the number of such cases has been by country of origin of the claimant. [38194]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The requested information is not available.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total sum of money paid in (a) legal aid and (b) legal advice services during 1995. [37193]

Mr. Streeter: Net expenditure on criminal and civil legal aid in 1995–96 was £1,141 million. In the same period, net expenditure on legal advice and assistance, including the duty solicitor scheme, was £250 million.

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37236]

Mr. Streeter: My Department has published a number of documents on the Internet—recent examples include the legal aid White Paper, the Lord Chancellor's Department strategic plan and the charter for court users—and will continue to do so. Such documents are normally available via the Internet within a day of publication.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Anderson, Grant Thornton, DBO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37313]

Mr. Streeter: The information requested is as follows:

| Consultants | Number of Contracts | Nature | Amount £000's |
|---|---|---|---|
| Coopers and Lybrand | nil | — | — |
| KPMG | nil | — | — |
| Price Waterhouse | nil | — | — |
| Ernst and Young | 1 | External Audit | 179 |
| | 1 | Research and advice on civil fees | 193 |
| Deloitte and Touche | nil | — | — |
| Arthur Anderson | 1 | Training | 20 |
| Grant Thornton | nil | — | — |
| DBO Stoy Hayward | 1 | External audit | 3 |
| Pannel Kerr Forster | nil | — | — |
| Robson Rhodes | nil | — | — |

The Lord Chancellor is responsible for four agencies; the Court Service, Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. The question concerns operational matters on which the chief executives are best placed to provide answers. I have accordingly asked them to reply direct.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 19 July 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the number and value of accountancy consultant contracts awarded in 1995 and 1996.

Six contracts have been awarded to the firms referred to in the Question and these are listed below:

| Consultant | Nature | Value |
|---|---|---|
| KPMG | Provide advice on pay systems used in other organisations and help develop the framework for a Court Service pay system | £60,000 |
| KPMG | Pay and Grading Review—carry out scoping study and assist in preparation of final consultation document | £82,735 |
| Price Waterhouse | Provide expert advice on the framework and selection process for senior managers | £10,692 |
| Price Waterhouse | Develop methodology to identify the key performance drivers in the Crown Court trial process | £91,000 |
| Cooper and Lybrand | Financial advice on accruals accounting requirements | £14,700 |
| Binder Hamlyn Fry (part of Arthur Andersen) | Financial advice on accruals accounting requirements | £13,165 |

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 19 July 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 11 July 1996, regarding the number, nature and value of contracts awarded to various firms and their subsidiaries and associates during 1995 and 1996.

In 1995 a contract was awarded to Ernst & Young to provide consultancy advice on the Public Trust Office's Information Systems Strategy. Two payments were made in 1995 and 1996 in respect of this contract—one for £36,056.75 in 1995 and the other for £21,478.41 in 1996.

Letter from Stuart Hill to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 19 July 1996:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning the number, nature and value of contracts awarded to specified companies during 1995 and 1996.

Two contracts have been awarded to KPMG as follows:

September 1995—Consultancy Services for Market Testing—£14,720.48 (inc.vat)

April 1996—Business Study and Market Research for National Land Information Service Project—£100,000 (plus vat)

Letter from Duncan Simpson to Mr Austin Mitchell, dated 19 July 1996:

In the absence on leave of the Chief Executive, I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about contracts awarded to specified companies during 1995 and 1996.

One such contract was let, to Ernst and Young, in 1995. It was for a logistical study and review of procedures in connection with removing 44 linear kilometres of historical records to a different site and subsequent services in making them available to users. The value was £99,500.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Salaries

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members have now informed the Fees Office that they do not wish to draw the recently agreed increase in salary. [38245]

Mr. Newton: I am advised by the Fees Office that, to date, four hon. Members have informed them that they do not wish to draw the full increase in salary.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members claimed car mileage allowances during the year 1995–96 for a vehicle of (a) less than 1300cc and (b) less than 1000cc. [38443]

Mr. Newton: In the financial year 1995–96, 44 hon. Members claimed for vehicles of 1300cc or less. The information relating to vehicles of less than 1000cc is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will estimate the difference since (a) the 1987 and (b) the 1992 general election between the actual cumulative out-of-London parliamentary salaries of hon. Members and the total assuming the salaries were to be at the level recommended by the review body on senior salaries reduced for previous years by the national movement in (i) earnings and (ii) prices. [36850]

Mr. Newton: The estimated gross differences are:

(a) (i): £60,000
(ii): £120,000
(b) (i): £40,000
(ii): £70,000

These figures are calculated to March 1996, as that is the latest available figure for the average earnings index, and to the nearest £10,000, that being the highest degree of accuracy obtainable on the basis of the published figures for retail prices index.

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibitions

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Still Moving After 100 Years" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [38611]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 9 December to Friday 13 December 1996.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the British Epilepsy Association to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [38696]

Mr. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 16 December to Friday 20 December 1996.

TREASURY

Unfunded Pension Liabilities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the capacity of the United Kingdom economy to meet the costs of public sector pensions which are currently unfunded when such liabilities fall due; and if he will estimate the impact in billions of pounds and as a percentage of gross domestic product such annual costs will have on public finances for each of the next 30 years based on current trends. [36392]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Broadly speaking, unfunded public service pension liabilities rise in relation to GDP as schemes mature. Thereafter, the relationship should be relatively stable, depending on trends in public service pay and employment. Not all the schemes are similarly mature, and detail figuring on the basis proposed in the question is unavailable. Nevertheless, assuming pay rises do not exceed economic growth in the long term, the Government Actuary does not expect a substantial upward movement in unfunded public service pension liabilities in relation to GDP.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total value of service charges paid by Departments on contracts signed under the PFI in 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96; and how much has so far been committed in all future financial years for which figures are available. [36577]

Mr. Jack: This information is not held centrally.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Burundi

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take in response to the current political situation in Burundi. [38251]

Mr. Hanley: We remain deeply concerned about the situation in Burundi and support the efforts of ex-President Nyerere to negotiate a political settlement. We welcome the decision of regional leaders at the Arusha summit to consider Burundi's request for security assistance, and we await concrete proposals.

TRANSPORT

Expressways

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new traffic rules will accompany the designation of a road as an expressway; and to what extent (a) cyclists, (b) pedestrians and (c) other classes of road user will be prohibited from using these roads. [36579]

Mr. Norris: I see the designation of expressways primarily as a way of drawing to the attention of road users and business the existence of high quality roads of near-motorway standard. Restrictions on particular categories of road user are not part of my Department's plans for expressways.

Marine Environment Protection Committee

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what items are presently on the agenda of the marine environment protection committee at the International Maritime Organisation; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of each of them. [37567]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 19 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about items that are presently on the agenda of the Marine Environment Protection Committee (MEPC) at the IMO.

The provisional work programme of MEPC was discussed at the Committee's recent meeting earlier this month. An agenda, as such, does not exist at present, but a list of the issues under consideration is attached to this letter. We take a positive approach to MEPC's work, intended to enhance the prevention and control of marine pollution. Our policy on a number of these issues is reflected in the recent United Kingdom contributions to the Committee, which are also included for your information.

Cycling

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to take forward the proposals outlined in the national cycling strategy; and if he will make a statement. [38018]

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has already announced that the Department fully supports the national cycling strategy launched on 10 July. We shall take action wherever we can to implement the strategy, both on our own and in conjunction with others. The process of realising the detailed proposals in the strategy will be guided by the national cycling forum, and I expect a first meeting of the forum to be held this autumn.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which sections of the national cycling strategy it is Government policy to implement. [38005]

Mr. Norris: The Government's policy towards cycling was set out in a statement in June 1994. This is relevant to all the sections of the new national cycling strategy. The Department of Transport will work with other Government Departments and organisations in the public, commercial and voluntary sectors to achieve the strategy's objectives.

Tingewick Bypass

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the reasons for the delay to the Tingewick bypass in Buckinghamshire and act to expedite matters. [38229]

Mr. Norris: The reasons for the delay to the Tingewick bypass are set out in my letter of 16 July 1996. Officials will make every effort to expedite a decision on this important local scheme once these issues have been satisfactorily resolved.

Le Shuttle Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if X-ray security checks are undertaken on passengers and vehicles boarding Le Shuttle services at Folkestone. [38594]

Mr. Watts: All vehicles and passengers boarding Le Shuttle services at Folkestone are liable to security screening. It is not our practice to reveal details of the actual measures.

Rail Regulator

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what mechanisms the Rail Regulator has in place to ensure that competition between operators is encouraged after 31 December. [38528]

Mr. Watts: The Rail regulator has published a policy statement setting out his approach to competition issues for railway passenger services. He has concluded that no significant competitive new entry should be allowed before 31 March 1999 to allow the railway industry to settle down in the early period of restructuring. He believes the franchising process itself creates considerable potential for competition, even without allowing new entry by open access operators. Substantial restrictions will apply for three years after 31 March 1999—until 31 March 2002. The Rail Regulator intends to review the restrictions in 2001. He believes that these steps are necessary for the development of a more competitive environment for passenger services in the long term.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he plans to improve the helicopter search and rescue coverage in the Dover strait. [38556]

Mr. Norris: Following publication of the interdepartmental helicopter review group report, formal consultations are being held on, among other things, the location of the two Coastguard search and rescue aircraft on the south coast. The aim is to provide the optimum helicopter availability to meet the search and rescue requirements along the south coast including the Dover strait and mid-channel. We will await the outcome of those consultations before any decisions are made.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what negotiations he (a) has had and (b) proposes to have with Shell (UK) regarding the continued operation of its offshore-based helicopter used for air rescue; and if he will make a statement. [38445]

Mr. Norris: There have been no negotiations with Shell (UK) and none are planned. The helicopter referred to has been provided by Shell Expro as an additional service and is not a declared UK search and rescue facility. Local discussions have taken place with Shell Expro about the effects of its decision, and the extra cover it will make available for night medical emergencies.

Radioactive Material (Road Accidents)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents have been reported in each year since 1980 involving the transport by road of radioactive material. [38331]

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

| Year | Number of Accidents Reported |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 0 |
| 1981 | 3 |
| 1982 | 1 |
| 1983 | 3 |
| 1984 | 1 |
| 1985 | 4 |
| 1986 | 1 |
| 1987 | 2 |
| 1988 | 5 |
| 1989 | 2 |
| 1990 | 0 |
| 1991 | 2 |
| 1992 | 2 |
| 1993 | 1 |
| 1994 | 1 |
| 1995 | 3 |

Part-time Employees

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each agency within his Department and the Central Transport Group the number of part-time employees by grade employed in each of the last five years. [38595]

Mr. Norris: I have placed the information obtained from our Department's personnel systems in the Library of the House.

Rail Services (Holyhead)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review on a regular basis under the Railway Acts the provision by the railway operating companies of adequate, prompt and clean railway through services between (a) Holyhead and London and (b) Holyhead and Cardiff; and if he will make a statement. [38565]

Mr. Watts: Under the Railways Act 1993, the franchising director has statutory responsibility for securing the provision of passenger railway services either through franchise agreements, or, where services are not yet franchised, through agreements with the British Railways Board or its subsidiaries.

Levels of service are specified through the passenger service requirement, PSR, included in each franchise agreement. Each PSR is based on the British Rail timetable in operation at the time the PSR is drawn up by the franchising director. Holyhead-Cardiff services are included in the PSR for the South Wales and West franchise, which has now been finalised. This requires the franchise operator to provide on weekdays and Saturdays one through service in each direction between Holyhead and Cardiff. Other services between Holyhead and Crewe, where interchange opportunities exist with services to Cardiff and services between Holyhead and London will be considered as part of the consultation process on respectively the North West Regional Railways and InterCity West Coast PSRs.

In respect of the quality of railway services, a principal objective of the franchising director is to improve the quality of services available to passengers, so franchise operators must have their own passengers charter which sets targets for operational performance. Where the commercial impetus is weak, there are financial incentives to encourage better punctuality and reliability, and a customer satisfaction monitoring regime requires franchise operators to secure an improvement in customer satisfaction during the franchise term.

Retired Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many retired permanent secretaries currently serve on the boards of (a) London Regional Transport and (b) London Buses Ltd. [38249]

Mr. Norris: (a) One. (b) None.

Licences

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the licences currently issued by his Department, indicating their function and the annual administrative costs for each. [37817]

Mr. Norris: Licences are issued by the Department in respect of the following:

Driving licences—to ensure that drivers of cars, motorcycles, goods vehicles, public service vehicles meet the necessary standard of competency and maintain standards of road safety.

Goods vehicle and public service vehicle operator licences—To ensure operators have sufficient financial provisions to maintain their vehicles properly, according to minimum safety standards.

Testing and examining vehicles—MOT examiners/ tachograph testing centres—To ensure that vehicles are maintained according to the minimum safety and environmental standards, the latter following the recent requirement to test emissions, and that tachographs are properly installed.

Approved training bodies—learner motorcycle testing—To ensure bodies have the facilities and expertise to provide instruction of learner motorcyclists.

Approval of business to train for carrying dangerous goods—EU requirement which allows businesses with suitable premises and staff to run their own training courses.

In-vehicle driver information system—allows access by private companies to public sector infrastructure, which would otherwise require special permission from each highway authority.

Street works—allows any business to dig up the highway, other than utilities, which already have such powers.

Marine licences—to ensure an appropriate level of competency for ship officers and crew.

Although not issued by this Department, the Rail Regulator issues licences that allow businesses to operate networks, passenger services, stations and depots. Operators of stations, trains and networks must normally have an accepted safety case before the regulator will grant a licence for operation. The Civil Aviation Authority also issues various licences which affect air operators, carriers and travel organisers. A full list of its licences can be found in its publication, CAP 393. Similarly, taxi and private hire vehicles licences are issued by the Public Carriage Office in London, and district councils outside London.

Central records are not maintained of the administrative costs of the licensing regimes, but in setting the licence fees, the Department has regard to the Treasury guidelines on fees and charges which require the recovery of costs.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of the Rail Regulator are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [37911]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 18 July 1996]: (a) The central rail users consultative committee, CRUCC, and the rail users consultative committees, RUCCs, are not listed in schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 and hence their activities are not subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. However, where a committee acts on behalf of the Office of the Rail Regulator to conduct an investigation, its activities are subject to investigation.

(b) The CRUCC and RUCCs are not subject to investigation by the Audit Commission.

(c) The Office of the Rail Regulator, ORR, accounts, which include the CRUCC and RUCCs annual accounts, are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

(d) The CRUCC and RUCCs are not subject to the code of practice on access to Government information.

(e) The CRUCC and RUCCs have developed their own performance indicators which are agreed by ORR. They are actively examining a wider range of performance indicators.

(f) The CRUCC and RUCCs are not subject to the provisions under the citizen's charter.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of the Rail Regulator publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [37913]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 18 July 1996]: It is a statutory requirement for the central rail users consultative committee, CRUCC, and the rail users consultative committees, RUCCs to publish annual reports. The CRUCC and RUCCs' annual accounts are included in the Office of the Rail Regulator's annual accounts as a statutory requirement. The total spending for each RUCC, broken down by committee and category, is also included in the CRUCC annual report.

The minutes and agendas for meetings for the CRUCC and RUCCs are available to the public. The former is a voluntary action and is limited by the statutory requirement not to disclose without prior consent information with respect to any particular business or individual. The latter is a statutory requirement but does not extend to matters from which the public will be excluded.

There is currently no register of members' interests and there is no statutory requirement to produce one. A register is currently under consideration as part of the code of conduct for members of the committees.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the statutory base of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Office of the Rail Regulator; and if they (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public, indicating in both instances whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [37912]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The central rail users consultative committee and the eight rail users consultative committees are independent statutory bodies established under sections 2 and 3 of the Railways Act 1993. Under schedules 2 and 3 of the Railways Act 1993, the Office of the Rail Regulator provides finance from within its running cost out of money provided by Parliament, and administrative support and accommodation for the committees.

Meetings of the committees are required by statute to be open to the public. Members of the public are excluded from meetings when confidential matters or matters the disclosure of which may seriously and prejudicially effect the interest of an individual or body are discussed. In addition, sub-committee meetings are held which are not open to the public.

SCOTLAND

Computer Sciences Corporation

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to assess customer satisfaction with the performance of the company CSC; and what conclusions he has drawn from these assessments. [37375]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the terms of the contract with Computer Sciences Corporation (CSC) Ltd. the Common Services Agency of the NHS in Scotland provides a contract management service which includes, as a prime task, continuous assessment of CSC performance and customer satisfaction. This has been achieved through a combination of correspondence, meetings of groups of representatives of the health boards and trusts and by customer satisfaction surveys.

From this survey work, it is clear that the CSC service has taken time to bed in over a period in which it has had to carry out a major reorganisation, concentrating now on two sites—reduced from six—in Scotland. However, a firm implementation plan is now in place and this is being closely monitored by both sides to ensure that the standard of service delivery continues to improve. There are welcome signs of improvement, a fact acknowledged by customers. It is expected that the level of satisfaction will continue to rise and that the provisions of the contract will be met.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings were predicted to accrue from market testing of the computing services in the NHS in Scotland during the first year of the contract with the successful bidder CSC; and what savings are now projected for the first year of the contract. [37374]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The contract with CSC for central computing and IT services agreed for the first year that a static price would be set for the first six months on the basis of current price for current usage. Thereafter, a saving of 5 per cent. would be expected over the second six months. Expected revenue to CSC for the year was estimated to be £16 million and, therefore, expected savings were in the order of £800,000. From April to June 1996, a saving of £220,000 has been made against a revenue of £4.2 million. This represents a saving of 5 per cent. These are unaudited figures.

Anti-drug Operations

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the application of challenge fund principles to anti-drug efforts. [39103]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: With the strong commitment of the leaders of all the main political parties in Scotland, we now have the ground-breaking and distinctive Scotland against drugs campaign. This reflects concern on all sides about the threat of drug misuse. We must keep on finding innovative ways of dealing with drug misuse—ways that counter its growth and acceptability to young people. I am therefore pleased to announce that I am offering £200,000 in the current financial year, on top of the £1 million already promised to the Scotland against drugs campaign, as a contribution to a new Scottish drugs challenge fund.

Bids will be invited for projects that will help unite local communities and businesses in the fight against drug misuse. This new challenge fund, to be matched by business, will bring partnership with the private sector into local communities that seek to combat drug misuse.

Young as it is, the Scotland against drugs campaign is already attracting a high level of business support. The campaign has much in common with the new challenge fund—partnership, local involvement and ownership, media and business participation, and changing the culture—and they will indeed be linked. I shall consider the best way of doing so, and from the autumn we can expect projects which put this money to good effect.

Rural Land Use

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on projects dealing with (a) alternations to rural land use, (b) alteration to rural ownership patterns and (c) land management projects since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [38193]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 18 July 1996]: Information is not held in this form, but details of expenditure on the various grants and subsidies administered on behalf of my right hon. Friend are contained in the annual expenditure plans and appropriation accounts for the Scottish Office and the Forestry Commission. Copies of these documents are available in the Library of the House.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conditions are placed on grants and loans of public money made to private landed estates in pursuit of (a) environmental and (b) other strategic aims; and if he will make a statement. [37993]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The conditions placed on grants and loans of public money to owners and occupiers of land vary according to the nature of the scheme under which the assistance is provided. The conditions are specified in the explanatory literature for each relevant schemes, and, where appropriate, in declarations and undertaking set out in application and claim forms. They may also be set out in the legislation under which the scheme operates.

Scottish Courts Administration

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the statutory base of the advisory non-departmental public body sponsored by the Scottish Courts Administration; and if it (a) publishes its advice, (b) publishes an annual report and (c) lays an annual report before Parliament; and if he will indicate in each instance whether this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [37907]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The Scottish Law Commission was set up by the Law Commissions Act 1965. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has an obligation under the 1965 Act to lay before Parliament any proposals for reform formulated by the Scottish Law Commission. The commission is required by the Act to make an annual report to the Lord Advocate which he likewise must lay before Parliament. The commission's reports on law reform and its annual reports are published and are available from HMSO.

WALES

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37323]

Mr. Hague: During the period 1 January 1995 to 30 June 1996, the Welsh Office has awarded contracts to four of the firms mentioned. The value of the contracts awarded cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality. Information on the number and the nature of the contracts awarded is as follows:

| Name | Consultancy | Accountancy |
|---|---|---|
| KPMG | 1 | 1 |
| Price Waterhouse | 1 | — |
| Grant Thornton | 2 | — |
| Pannel Kerr Forster | 1 | — |

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the current median waiting periods for patients needing (a) hip replacement treatment, and (b) cataract treatment at (i) each hospital where this operation is provided and (ii) in Wales indicating the equivalent waiting times for the two preceding years. [37500]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The median time between the date of decision to admit and the date of admission is given in the table for patients admitted in 1995–96 and the two preceding years. As some results are based on a small number of operations, there are some large fluctuations from year to year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to commence (a) collection and (b) publication of statistics on total waiting times for treatment for patients referred on or after 1 April 1995 on an equivalent basis to the combined wait times published in the hospital waiting times bulletin. [38572]

Mr. Jones: Information about those patients who (i) were referred on or after 1 April 1995; (ii) are still waiting; and (iii) have a total waiting time of more than 18 months is to be collected on a quarterly basis from December 1996. Information on those with a total waiting time of more than two years will be collected from June 1997.

The total waiting time is the time elapsed since referral by the patient's GP. It is not equivalent to the likely combined wait as given in the booklet "Waiting Times Information", published by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Publication of information about total waiting times is planned for the September 1997 issue of "NHS Wales: Quarterly Statistics".

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistical information he has collated on the average wait between first out-patient consultation and a decision to admit a patient by (a) health authority, (b) hospital trust and (c) specialism. [38568]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations underlay his Department's decision to discontinue publication of the quarterly Welsh hospital waiting list bulletin; what consultations he undertook prior to this decision; what representations he has received on this matter; how many issues of the bulletin were published; and at what cost to public funds. [38451]

Mr. Jones: This bi-annual publication was discontinued in May 1995 as part of a package of improvements to the programme of health statistics publications which has been welcomed by the NHS in Wales.

More timely aggregate waiting list figures are now published in "NHS Wales: Quarterly Statistics" which has been issued each quarter since June 1995.

Detailed waiting list figures continue to be published annually in the new "Health Statistics Wales" series. As a single volume, this new publication provides a definitive official statement on health statistics each year.

The decision to discontinue the bulletin also reflected reductions to the frequency that hospitals were being asked to return detailed waiting list figures to my Department and the increased availability of alternative information on expected waiting times for individual consultants.

The changes to the programme of health statistics publications were the subject of consultation with the NHS Welsh information managers group in May 1995.

In total, 23 issues of the bulletin were published from March 1984 to March 1995. The cost of printing the last bulletin was £1,300, making an estimated total cost of around £30,000, at 1995 prices, for printing the complete series.

Earlier this year, comments on the new "Health Statistics, Wales" publication were received from 62 respondents to a readership survey; 57 of these said that they used the waiting list chapter. None asked for more information on waiting lists to be published.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a patients charter standard for the length of time a patient waits between out-patient consultation and decision to admit. [38567]

Mr. Hague: It would be difficult to develop a standard that would allow for all the clinical factors that sometimes give rise to a delay between the out-patient consultation and the decision to admit. However, the total waiting times guarantee includes this period of time and encourages hospitals to adopt best practice.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the reasons for the fall in the number on hospital waiting lists for first out-patient appointments between 31 March 1994 and 31 March 1995; and what percentage of the change occurred because of increased number of patients seen by consultants. [38573]

Mr. Hague: The out-patient waiting list can fall for a number of reasons, including changes in the number of referrals to hospital clinics, the number of new patients seen at these clinics and patients being taken off the list as they no longer require a specialist opinion.

During 1994–95, hospitals saw 25,000 more new out-patients than in the previous year, an increase of 4 per cent. Between 31 March 1994 and 31 March 1995, the total out-patient waiting list fell by 17,000. As information is held centrally only on the number of new out-patients seen, it is not possible accurately to assess what proportion of the fall in the total list is due to the number of people seen by consultants.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish (a) hospital waiting list data for the year ended 31 March and (b) quarterly data for the period up to 31 December. [38571]

Mr. Hague: Information relating to the number on hospital waiting lists at 31 March 1996 was published in the release of "NHS Wales: Quarterly Statistics" issued on 12 June 1996. Copies were placed in the House Library and the Vote Office. The publication of releases including information on waiting lists for June, September, and December 1996 is planned for 18 September 1996, 18 December 1996 and 12 March 1997 respectively.

General Practitioner Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has collated on the number of whole-time equivalent (a) GPs, (b) practice nurses and (c) other staff employed at GP surgeries at any date since October 1994. [38606]

Mr. Hague: The estimated whole-time equivalent number of unrestricted general medical practitioners, based on contractual commitment, was 1,628 and 1,632 at 1 April 1995 and 1 October 1995 respectively. Reliable information on practice nurses and other staff employed by GPs since October 1994 is not yet available.

Disabled and Elderly People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources he plans to make available to county social service departments in Wales, following recent court cases, to ensure that they can respond adequately to the establishment needs of disabled and elderly people who require additional services to enable them to live in the community; and if he will make a statement. [38562]

Mr. Hague: The Government are considering the implications of the recent judgment by the Court of Appeal in R v. Gloucestershire County Council ex parte Michael Barry and R v. Lancashire County Council ex parte (1) Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and (2) Beryl Gilpin.

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what money is made available through his Department for implementing the rough sleepers initiative in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [38566]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: There is not a rough sleepers initiative in Wales on the English model because the scale and distribution of rooflessness here requires a different approach. My Department can assist specific initiatives to tackle rooflessness under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 and we have agreed to support a project in Cardiff. An advisory group on rooflessness, which includes local authorities, voluntary organisations and the police, to help us to consider what further action is required to ensure that nobody in Wales needs to sleep rough, has also been established.

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consolations he has had with the chairman of the Gwent health authority concerning the commissioning of specialist legal advice by the health authority between 5 and 11 July; and when he was notified of the reasons for commissioning such advice; [38457]

(2) on how many occasions his special independent observer attended meetings of the working party of the non-executive directors of Gwent health authority considering the appointment of a senior manager in January 1996; how many meetings occurred in her absence; how many of these she was invited to attend; and what recommendation she has made to him. [38482]

Mr. Hague: My Department has been kept informed of the inquiry's progress, including the views of the independent adviser which are of necessity confidential. Information on her attendance at meetings is not held centrally. It is a matter for the authority to decide on the legal advice it requires, and I have had no discussions with the chairman.

Development Land (Caernarfon)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now take urgent steps to release the strip of land owned by the Welsh Office in the vicinity of Pool-side in Caernarfon, to enable this redevelopment plan for that area to go ahead. [38560]

Mr. Hague: I understand the land in question is in the ownership of Gwynedd county council. I have received an application from the authority under section 123 of the Local Government Act 1972 seeking my agreement to its disposing of the land at less than market value. My officials have written to the authority seeking information which will enable me to make a decision.

Health Statistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of Wales when he proposes to publish health statistics to bring his provisional 1994–95 hospital activity figures for 1992–93 and 1993–94 new patients equivalent to those published for 1990–91 and 1991–92 and provisionally for 1994–95. [38607]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I hope that final information on hospital in-patient day case activity for 1994–95 will be published during September 1996. Figures on new out-patients for 1992–93 and 1993–94 have not been published due to inconsistencies in data definitions at NHS trusts in the former health authority area of Dyfed. These problems have now been rectified. In future, data for new out-patients will be published at the same time as in-patient and day case data, but it is not possible to amend past data.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurses have received back-dated pay awards following successful appeals against re-grading decisions (a) eight, (b) seven, (c) six, (d) five, (e) four, (f) three and (g) two years late. [38458]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not held centrally.

Benefits Agency (Welsh Language Freeline)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will intervene with the Benefits Agency to safeguard the Welsh language telephone freeline. [38561]

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. I understand, however, that arrangements have been made to ensure customers receive appropriate advice in the language of their choice from either their local office or the office which handles any existing benefits.

ENVIRONMENT

Asbestos

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to provide assistance to Bermuda in respect of the disposal of asbestos waste. [37573]

Mr. Clappison: Decision on the disposal of Bermuda's asbestos wastes are matters for the Government of Bermuda. I understand that a number of options are under consideration, including seeking disposal on land in the United Kingdom, but no final decisions have been taken.

Should Bermuda wish to export asbestos waste to the United Kingdom for disposal on land, this would require a formal agreement between the two Governments for the purpose of the Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous waste and their disposal.

Any request from Bermuda for such an agreement would be considered on its merits, in accordance with the policies set out in the United Kingdom management plan for exports and imports of waste, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites in the United Kingdom licensed to take (a) blue, (b) brown and (c) white asbestos waste. [37571]

Mr. Clappison: This information is not held by my Department. The Environment Agency is required to maintain a public register of waste management licence applications made to it and of licences which it has granted. Whether or not a particular site would take asbestos waste would depend on the terms of the licence granted by the agency.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the imports of asbestos for disposal into the United Kingdom from (a) OECD and (b) non-OECD countries in each of the last of 10 years. [37572]

Mr. Clappison: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of his Department's agencies the cost of printing (a) all publications and (b) the annual report in the latest available year. [37808]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible for three agencies of the Department of the Environment and for Ordnance Survey, a separate department and agency. For the four agencies, the information requested is set out in the table. The expenditure is in respect of the 1995–96 financial year.

| | All publications £ | Annual report £ |
|---|---|---|
| Building Research Establishment | 21,000 | 21,000 |
| Planning Inspectorate | 14,953 | 3,295 |
| Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre | 12,263 | 12,263 |
| Ordnance Survey | 425,000 | 2,500 |

The Building Research Establishment's technical publications are published by Construction Research Communications Ltd., CRC is a commercial organisation which is jointly owned by EMAP Architecture and the Secretary of State for the Environment. The cost of printing such technical publications is not included above.

Statistical Forms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the forms his Department issues annually to businesses to gather statistics, indicating the number of each distributed. [37809]

Sir Paul Beresford: The forms the Department of the Environment issues on a regular basis[1] to businesses to gather statistics and the number of each distributed are shown in the table.

[1]The table excludes ad hoc surveys not repeated on a regular basis. The number of ad hoc surveys varies from year to year: 39 were undertaken in 1995.

| Survey title | Number of forms distributed in a year |
|---|---|
| Merseyside Development Corporation Employment and Investment Survey[1] (Annual) | 2,000 |
| Plymouth Urban Development Corporation: Survey of Economic Activities[1] (Annual) | 32 |
| Teeside Urban Development Area: Survey of Economic Activities[1] (Annual) | 800 |
| Minerals Raised Inquiry (Annual) | 2,400 |
| Building and Civil Engineering Work Overseas (Annual) | 40 |
| Small Firms Enquiry—Construction Activity (Annual) | 150,000 |
| Making a Corporate Commitment: Top Management Campaign Evaluation (Annual) | 500 |
| Making a Corporate Commitment: Signatories Research (Annual) | 1,600 |
| ECO Management and Audit: Pre-Promotion Research (Annual) | 800 |
| Tyne and Wear Development Corporation Business Survey[1] (Bi-Annual) | [2]not available |
| Building Materials Inquiries (Quarterly/Monthly) | 3,300 |
| Firm Based Enquiry: Construction Activity (Quarterly) | 66,000 |

| Survey title | Number of forms distributed in a year |
|---|---|
| Quality of Service of the Rural Development Commission[1] (Quarterly) | 1,440 |
| Project Based Enquiry: Construction Activity (Quarterly) | 9,200 |
| New Orders Enquiry: Construction Activity (Monthly) | 66,000 |
| Survey of Mortgage Lenders (Monthly) | 2,220 |

[1] Surveys undertaken by the department's agencies and non-department public bodies.

[2] In 1996 this survey will be undertaken as a sample rather than a census. Size of sample not yet determined.

Planning Permission

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that outline planning permissions over 10 years old which have been commenced only technically shall be permitted to go ahead only if (a) the local planning authority or (b) the Secretary of State confirms their validity. [38563]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government do not consider it reasonable to impose a general time limit for completion as there could be many valid reasons why development could take longer than envisaged.

However, section 94 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 empowers a local planning authority to serve a completion notice in an individual case. Such a notice, which requires the confirmation of the Secretary of State, terminates a planning permission at the end of a specified period if the development is not completed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce the arrangements that will govern the handing over of Hong Kong to the Chinese authorities; and if he will make a statement. [37784]

Mr. Hanley: The 1984 Sino-British joint declaration provides the legal basis for the restoration of Hong Kong to China. We are still discussing with China arrangements to mark the handover at midnight on 30 June 1997.

Working Holidaymakers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for entry clearance as working holidaymakers have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused in (i) India, (ii) Bangladesh, (iii) Australia, (iv) Canada, (v) Nigeria, (vi) Ghana, (vii) Pakistan, (viii) Sierra Leone, (ix) Gambia and (x) Jamaica during 1995 and 1996 to the latest convenient date. [38056]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I refer the hon. Member to the letter I sent him on 30 January 1996.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for entry clearance as working holidaymakers have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused in (i) India, (ii) Bangladesh (iii) Pakistan, (iv) Australia, (v) Canada, (vi) Ghana, (vii) Nigeria and (viii) Malaysia during 1995 and 1996. [38077]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I refer the hon. Member to the letter I sent him on 30 January 1996.

Immigration

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children were waiting in each queue in respect of entry into the United Kingdom at each post in the Indian sub-continent on (i) 1 January (ii) 30 June and (iii) the latest convenient date. [38063]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance on 31 March or the latest convenient date at each post in the Indian sub-continent could expect to wait, in each queue, for (a) a first interview, (b) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (c) a decision after first interview and (d) for the explanatory statement prepared by the post in the case of appeal against a refusal to be dispatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom. [38057]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I refer the hon. Member to the letter that I sent him on 30 January 1996.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present waiting times to first interview for each category of applicant in respect of entry into the United Kingdom in (a) each country and at each post in the Indian sub-continent, (b) Bangkok, (c) Manila, (d) Lagos, (e) Accra, (f) Kingston, (g) Addis Ababa, (h) Sana'a, (i) Moscow and (j) Warsaw. [38064]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I refer the hon. Member to the letter that I sent him on 30 January 1996.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance for settlement at the British post in (a) Manila, (b) Accra, (c) Lagos, (d) Kingston, (e) Nicosia, (f) Cairo, (g) Bangkok, (h) Rabat and (i) each post in each country of the Indian sub-continent on 30 June or the latest convenient date could expect to wait for (i) interview, (ii) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (iii) decisions and (iv) an explanatory statement prepared by the post in the event of an appeal against a refusal to be dispatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom. [38055]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I refer the hon. Member to the letter that I sent him on 30 January 1996.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, columns 423–24, when decisions are to be taken on the passport applications made by Tahira Jabeen, Fazal Ur Rahman Hussain and Noor Ur Rahman Hussain by the post in Islamabad; if the report requested from the Home Office was received at the post in November 1995; and if he will make a statement. [38449]

Mr. Hanley: The report has been received from the Home Office. However, the passport officer in Islamabad is not yet in a position to take a decision on these applications. Further inquiries are necessary it is hoped that the matter can be resolved before the end of the year.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons Her Majesty's Government have not supported self-rule for the Serbian minority in Bosnia-Herzegovina. [38002]

Mr. Hanley: We fully support the general framework agreement for peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, under which Bosnia and Herzegovina consists of two entities—the Federation and the Republika Srpska. Each entity has extensive governmental functions and powers, as set out in article III of the constitution agreed at Dayton.

DNA Tests

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his Department's funded DNA tests to prove family relationships for immigration purposes have been carried out, by country, in each country apart from those of the Indian sub-continent, in each year since the inception of the scheme; and in how many tests the applicant was found to be related as claimed to (a) both parents, (b) one parent and (c) neither parent. [38062]

Mr. Hanley: In view of the amount of detail needed to answer this question, I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Burundi

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of the proposal of the United Nations Secretary-General for a United Nations contingency force for Burundi. [38247]

Mr. Hanley: Contingency planning on Burundi is continuing in New York and in the sub-regional area. The most likely option appears to be a sub-regional peacekeeping force, though it is not yet clear on what terms. We are considering how we might help with planning.

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on plans for the expansion fo the international criminal tribunal for Rwanda to enable it to prosecute in Burundi. [38250]

Mr. Hanley: We are not aware of any initiative within the UN to expand the remit of the international criminal tribunal for Rwanda to include Burundi.

Any extension of the Rwanda tribunal's mandate would require a Security Council resolution.

Burma

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current policy of Her Majesty's Government towards imposing sanctions against the Burmese junta. [38248]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State the Member for Upminster (Sir N. Bonsor), to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 10 July, Official Report, column 396.

Dalai Lama

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to promote dialogue between the Chinese and the Dalai Lama. [38252]

Mr. Hanley: We consider that the best way forward for Tibet is through dialogue between the Chinese authorities and the Tibetans, including the Dalai Lama, without preconditions. We have consistently urged both sides to enter into such a dialogue without delay.

BBC World Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the value for money of the new structures in the BBC in respect of World Service programming relative to those that they replaced. [38484]

Mr. Hanley: We are in consultation with the BBC about the implications for the World Service of the proposed reorganisation of the BBC, including the financial implications.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the General Affairs Council and the intergovernmental conference ministerial meeting of 15 and 16 July. [38630]

Mr. David Davis: The A points in documents 9021/96—add.1 and add.2—which will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as they are available, were approved.

The Council noted the resolutions adopted by the European Parliament in documents EP 8001/96 PE-RE45, 8162/96 PE-RE51 and 8751/96 PE-RE56.

The Council began with a televised debate on the Irish presidency programme. The President of the Council, Irish Foreign Minister Dick Spring, presented his priorities, including preparation for European monetary union, employment, EU enlargement, the intergovernmental conference and work on the third pillar. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs highlighted the need to get down to discussion of specific IGC treaty language to press ahead with reform of the common agricultural policy and the structural fund which is necessary for enlargement, and the importance of progress in the middle east peace process.

The Council acknowledged Slovenia's letter of application for EU membership.

The Commission gave a progress report on relations with Switzerland. The Council reaffirmed the EU's wish to conclude negotiations as soon as possible.

The Council had a wide ranging discussion on the Former Yugoslavia, including an exchange of views on the future of the EU's presence in Mostar. The Council approved a joint action on Mostar and agreed the appointment of Sir Martin Garrod as EU special envoy in Mostar.

The President of the Council and Commissioner Van den Broek reported on their recent visit to the region.

The Council agreed conclusions on Former Yugoslavia which note among other things that the requirements of the Florence European Council declaration on the peace process, including that for the removal of Radovan Karadzic from the Republika Srpska political scene, had not yet fully been complied with.

The Council reached political agreement on the MEDA regulations on aid to countries in the Mediterranean.

The Council adopted conclusions on the US "Helms-Burton" legislation on companies trading with Cuba, calling on President Clinton to waive the provisions of title III of the Act and identifying possible counter measures.

The Council held an exchange of views on the political situation in Russia, and adopted conclusions welcoming the successful conclusion of the presidential elections. The Council also reaffirmed its readiness to continue to contribute to the reform process and to complete ratification of the partnership and co-operation agreement, but decided to convey its concern about the recurrence of violence in Chechnya to the Russian authorities.

The Council discussed the middle east peace process.

The Council declared its concern over the continuing deterioration of the political situation in Burma and urged the State Law and Order Restoration Council to restore democracy and respect human rights. The Council reiterated its call for a full and satisfactory explanation from the Burmese authorities of the circumstances leading up to and surrounding the death in custody of James Leander Nichols.

The Council agreed a declaration welcoming the 10 July resolution of the Organisation of African Unity Heads of State and Government on Burundi.

The presidency announced the appointment of Ambassador Kester Heaslip as the presidency's special representative on Cyprus.

There was a general debate on preparation for the World Trade Organisation ministerial meeting in Singapore in December. The presidency drew procedural conclusions: the Council will return to the subject in the autumn.

On 15 July there was an IGC ministerial meeting. Foreign Ministers had a brief discussion on handling of the IGC. The Irish presidency confirmed that there would be a special European Council in October, and that it would prepare a draft revised treaty text for the second European Council in December.

There was also the customary briefing session with representatives of the European Parliament.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Internet

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to ensure that major publications from his Department are accompanied by a simultaneous electronic release of the text on the Internet. [37246]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service makes press notices available to the public on the Internet via the Central Office of Information. The Department has commissioned an internal study to assess the benefits of developing a separate connection to the Internet.

The Serious Fraud Office is exploring with the Central Computer Telecommunication Agency the use of the Government information service website.

The Treasury Solicitor's Department will assess the appropriateness of simultaneously releasing on the Internet the text of future major publications.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a list showing the number, nature and value of contracts awarded by his Department to Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG, Price Waterhouse, Ernst and Young, Deloitte and Touche, Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, BDO Stoy Hayward, Pannel Kerr Forster, and Robson Rhodes and their subsidiaries and associates, during 1995 and 1996. [37314]

The Attorney-General: The information with respect to the firms used by the departments and agencies for which I am responsible is as follows. It related to the financial year 1995–96.

2. Figures in brackets represent the number of new contracts entered into during that financial year. Information about the number of new contracts entered into by the SFO is not available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Banned Feed

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his Department plans to enforce legislation making it illegal for farmers to have outstanding stocks of banned feed on their premises when that legislation comes into force; and if he will make a statement. [37354]

Mrs. Browning: On 29 March, the sale or supply of any mammalian meat and bone meal, MBM, for the purposes of feeding to farmed animals, including poultry, horses and farmed fish, was prohibited. From 4 April, it has also been an offence to use any MBM, or feed containing it, for feeding to farmed animals.

The 4 April ban was set around a fortnight after the feed compounders announced an immediate voluntary ban on the incorporation of MBM in farmed animal feed. Advice from the industry supported our understanding that little MBM would, accordingly, be left on farms by 4 April.

Our enforcement strategy in ensuring that the prohibition from farms, feed mills and feed merchants of MBM and feed incorporating it from 1 August has three primary strands.

First, on 10 June we launched the Government-funded feed recall scheme to give farmers, feed compounders and feed merchants every opportunity to dispose of MBM and feed containing it before its presence on their premises became illegal.

By the end of this month we shall have collected over 10,000 tonnes of this material, mostly, as we expected from feed compounders, with only small residual amounts to be collected from farms.

Secondly, since the Government introduced temporary financial assistance to the rendering industry from 1 April, we have detailed information on the disposal or incorporation into pet food of all the MBM produced in the UK. Continued access to this information is to be confirmed in law from 1 August with the establishment of record keeping requirements on MBM produced in the UK or entering the UK from elsewhere, covering dispatch, transportation and receipt.

Finally, the State Veterinary Service inspects all rendering plants at least weekly which, combined with extensive inspection and sampling of feed compounders, should provide every confidence that no MBM is going to farms, feed mills or feed merchants and that no feed being produced contains MBM.

Beef Exports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many beef meat animals, under industry defined categories, separately, were exported (a) live and (b) in carcase form to each (i) European Union country and (ii) non-EU country in each of the last two years. [29618]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 16 May 1996]: I very much regret that the hon. Member has had to wait so long for a reply.

Provisional figures for exports of live beef meat animals as recorded in the overseas trade statistics are as follows:

Number: Thousands

| | 1994 | 1995 |
|---|---|---|
| EC Countries | | |
| France | 238 | 227 |
| Netherlands | 161 | 138 |
| Belgium/Luxembourg | 79 | 55 |
| Irish Republic | 1 | 1 |
| Non EC countries | 0 | 0 |

The number of beef meat animals exported in whole carcase form are not separately available. However provisional figures for the weight and value of exports of whole and half carcases as recorded in the overseas trade statistics, are as follows:

Phosmet

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which other (a) EU and (b) Organisation for Economic Co-operation countries (i) have used and (ii) continue to use phosmet. [37717]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The Government do not hold any information on the use, either in the past or at present, of veterinary medicines in other countries. This is a matter for the appropriate regulatory authority in any particular country. However, we understand from the industry body, the National Office of Animal Health Ltd., that phosmet is currently authorised for use as a veterinary medicine in several countries including France and the Republic of Ireland, which are members of both the EU and the OECD, and Australia and New Zealand, which are also members of the OECD.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what veterinary products (a) phosmet has been used since 1966 and (b) continues to be used. [37718]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 July 1996]: There are currently three authorised veterinary medicinal products available in the United Kingdom containing phosmet. These are listed below with their marketing authorisation numbers. Information on products which are no longer authorised is not readily available.

Poron 20 PL 1447/4007, Porect PL 11061/4001 and Vet-Kem Sponge-on For Dogs PL 12501/4003.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what times of the year, at what strength and at what frequency phosmet has been used in veterinary products in the United Kingdom in the last 20 years. [37719]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 18 July 1996]: Listed below are the veterinary medicinal products, currently authorised for use, that contain phosmet, with their recommended dosage rates. These products can be used at any time of year as required. Information on products which are no longer authorised is not readily available.

| Product name | Marketing authorisation holder | Authorisation number | Dosage and administration |
|---|---|---|---|
| Poron 20 | Young's Animal Health Ltd. | PL 1447/4007 | For use in cattle1. Treatment of warble fly infestation or mange—10ml/100kg bodyweight up to 350kg; over 350kg bodyweight—40ml. To be given as single dose.2. Treatment of lice infestation only—5ml/100kg bodyweight up to 350kg; over 350kg bodyweight—20ml. To be repeated after 10 to 14 days.3. Treatment of warble fly, lice and mange infestation—treat first at the warble/mange dose followed 10 to 14 days later by the louse dose. |
| Porect | Pfizer Ltd. | PL 11061/4001 | For use in pigs to treat and control mange and louse infestation.This product is in a ready to use form and should be applied at a dosage rate of 1ml/10kg bodyweight. |
| Vet-Kem Sponge—On For Dogs | Sanofi Animal Health Ltd. | PL 12501/4003 | To be used as a solution containing 30mls of sponge-on with 3.8 litres of water. Repeat treatment may be necessary after 14 days if treating for sarcoptic mange, or 16 days for the control of flea infestations. |

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tonnage of fishing vessels in England and Wales have been (a) permanently transferred to a third country and (b) permanently reassigned for purposes other than fishing in the waters of the European Community since 1993; how many of these would have been covered under article 8 of European Council regulation 3699/93; and if he will make a statement. [38343]

Mr. Baldry: No record is kept of the destination of vessels leaving the fleet without Government assistance. Under the Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning) Schemes 1993 to 1996, no decommissioned vessels have been either permanently reassigned for purposes other than fishing in the waters of the European Community or have been permanently transferred to a third country.

Service Delivery Targets

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department has made in meeting service delivery targets set out in "Commitment to Service". [39008]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The table sets out the performance achieved by regional service centres against the targets set in "Commitment to Service", second edition.

RSC performance data (percentage) for financial year 1995–96 unless otherwise specified

| | | Total[1] |
|---|---|---|
| Arable area payments scheme[2] | Payments | 86 |

| Strychnine permits | Applications | 99 |
| Agricultural wages | Complaints | 100 |
| Wildlife and Countryside Act | Applications | 95 |
| Correspondence | | 95 |

Nine complaints were received by the MAFF adjudicator, all of which were resolved.

[1] The total percentage has been calculated by setting the entire number of applications or claims cleared within the target time against the total number received. Applications and claims not cleared due to reasons beyond our control—such as incorrect information supplied by applicant—are not included as failures to meet target.

[2] The failures resulted from unforeseen administrative complexities in checking all claims to the exacting standards required under the integrated administration and control system—IACS—rules.

[3] The period covered is January to December 1995.

[4] The period covered is November 1994 to June 1995. The high number of failures was due to the payment round being initially delayed due to the regulation coming into force later than usual and because of problems with the digitisation of less favoured area land from 1994 IACS records which required the manual checking of over 35,000 individual fields.

[5] Final payments made by 30 April 1996.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed BSE cases in England for each of the past 36 months. [33306]

Mrs. Browning [pursuant to her reply, 10 July 1996, c. 245]: The number of confirmed BSE cases by date of confirmation in England for each of the last 36 months is:

| Month/year | Cases |
|---|---|
| July 1993 | 1,876 |
| August 1993 | 2,322 |
| September 1993 | 2,210 |
| October 1993 | 2,228 |
| November 1993 | 2,762 |
| December 1993 | 2,013 |
| January 1994 | 1,678 |
| February 1994 | 2,655 |
| March 1994 | 2,754 |
| April 1994 | 2,141 |
| May 1994 | 1,634 |
| June 1994 | 2,140 |
| July 1994 | 1,223 |
| August 1994 | 1,338 |
| September 1994 | 1,612 |
| October 1994 | 1,757 |
| November 1994 | 1,642 |
| December 1994 | 1,004 |
| January 1995 | 1,441 |
| February 1995 | 1,746 |
| March 1995 | 1,434 |
| April 1995 | 967 |
| May 1995 | 1,220 |
| June 1995 | 1,098 |
| July 1995 | 1,080 |
| August 1995 | 894 |
| September 1995 | 827 |
| October 1995 | 920 |
| November 1995 | 945 |
| December 1995 | 655 |
| January 1996 | 785 |
| February 1996 | 1,000 |
| March 1996 | 736 |

| Month/year | Cases |
|---|---|
| April 1996 | 545 |
| May 1996 | 515 |
| June 1996 | 939 |
| Total | 52,736 |

There is a delay of several weeks, while diagnostic tests are completed between the slaughter of BSE suspect animals and the confirmation of the case as being BSE. Procedural changes within the veterinary investigation service significantly reduced processing capacity from March to May, and the subsequent increase in June represents clearance of the backlog. A similar backlog resulting from public holidays and Christmas was cleared in February.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education and Library Boards

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the number and value of (a) mandatory awards, (b) discretionary awards and (c) educational maintenance allowances provided by each individual education and library board since 1988–89; [37207]

(2) what would be the cost of introducing education maintenance allowances at the same rates as (a) income support for young people and (b) training allowances paid to 16 and 17 year-olds on job skills programmes; [37169]

(3) what are the present administration costs of educational maintenance allowances. [37480]

Mr. Ancram: The information on mandatory and discretionary awards is:

| Year | Numbers (thousands) | Expenditure | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | Tuition fees and maintenance | | |
| | Academic year | | Financial year | |
| | Mandatory | Discretionary | Mandatory | Discretionary |
| 1988–89 | 19.7 | 1.9 | 37.4 | 3.8 |
| 1989–90 | 21.0 | 2.0 | 42.1 | 4.2 |
| 1990–91 | 22.6 | 2.5 | [2]56.2 | 4.6 |
| 1991–92 | [1]28.5 | 2.8 | [1]91.2 | 5.0 |
| 1992–93 | 30.5 | 3.2 | 110.9 | 5.8 |

| 1994–95 | 36.6 | 2.7 | [4]102.1 | 6.8 |
| 1995–96 | 37.2 | 2.7 | [5]92.1 | 6.8 |

Source:

Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95–1996–97 and 1996–97–1998–99.

[1] Includes teacher training and EC students from September 1991.

[2] Shift in institutional funding towards the fee introduced in September 1990.

[3] Shift of fees towards institutional funding from September 1993 and reduction of 10 per cent. in maintenance grant with effect from 1 September 1994.

[4] Reduction of 45 per cent. institution fees across fee bands and reduction of 7.7 per cent. in maintenance grant with effect from 1 September 1995.

[5] Reduction of 8.5 per cent. in maintenance grant with effect from 1 September 1996.

The information requested in part (c) of question 37202 and in question 37480 is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member when it becomes available and place a copy in the Library.

The information requested on the possible introduction of education maintenance allowances is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the advice of the working groups which evaluated the practicality of providing a range of education and library board services on a regional basis. [37218]

Mr. Ancram: Copies of the report of each of the six working groups which were established to examine the practicalities of providing a range of services on a regional basis have been sent to the education and library boards and the NI public service alliance, which had requested copies. Further work has been commissioned on grants and awards and on capital planning and construction services.

I will arrange for a copy of each report and the Department's response to be sent to the hon. Member and placed in the Library.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, columns 140–41, on cattle exports from Northern Ireland, how many of the cattle exported to Italy were calves under six months of age; and if the cattle exported to Spain were born in the United Kingdom. [37082]

Mr. Ancram: All of the cattle exported to Italy were calves under six months of age; 101 cattle exported to Spain were born outside the United Kingdom. The remainder of the cattle exported to Spain were calves under six months of age which were born in the United Kingdom.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the percentages of students in further education who received student financial support in the form of (a) discretionary awards, (b) mandatory awards and (c) educational maintenance allowances in each of the last three years. [37215]

Mr. Ancram: The information is not available in the form requested. Available information is that 6 per cent., 9 per cent. and 11 per cent. of students in further-education institutions received mandatory awards in the years 1993–94 to 1995–96 respectively.

Information on the percentages who received discretionary awards and educational maintenance allowances could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Student Unions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the funds received by each individual further and higher education student union over the past five years. [37216]

Mr. Ancram: Grants paid by the Queen's University of Belfast and the University of Ulster to their student unions over the past five academic years are:

| Academic year | Queen University £ | University of Ulster £ |
|---|---|---|
| 1990–91 | 630,000 | 632,000 |
| 1991–92 | 599,000 | 686,000 |
| 1992–93 | 683,000 | 751,000 |
| 1993–94 | 731,000 | 877,000 |
| 1994–95 | 757,000 | 807,000 |

The information is not readily available in respect of colleges of further education as they are currently closed for the July vacation. I will write to the hon. Member when this information becomes available and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Student Grants

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he applied policy appraisal and fair treatment processes to his decision to withdraw grants from students studying at private colleges in the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [37200]

Mr. Ancram: No formal policy appraisal and fair treatment appraisal was undertaken, though PAFT principles, with other factors, were considered in reaching the decision.

Postgraduate Awards

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of postgraduate awards and expenditure thereon in each of the past five years. [37210]

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

| Year | Number per academic year | £ millions expenditure per financial year |
|---|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 878 | 4.6 |
| 1992–93 | 825 | 5.6 |
| 1993–94[1] | 730 | 5.0 |
| 1994–95 | 682 | 4.8 |
| 1995–96 | 645 | 4.5 |

[1] Awards to NI students for postgraduate studentships in higher education institutions in GB became the responsibility of the British Academy and the research councils.

Incorporated Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the annual administrative costs of incorporated colleges; and what are the equivalent present administration costs under education and library boards. [37166]

Mr. Ancram: The Department, in conjunction with the education and library boards, is identifying current administrative and other costs associated with all aspects of further education. These resources will transfer to the colleges on incorporation.

It will be for the colleges to determine their management and other structures and to meet the costs from within their overall budgets.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the agencies for which his Department is responsible and the costs incurred by each for printing (a) all publications and (b) its annual report in the last year for which figures are available. [37462]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 16 July 1996]:

The information in respect of the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office is as follows:

| Agency | Year | Printing costs All publications £ | Annual reports £ |

[1] These agencies were established recently therefore no figures are available for printing costs of the annual report.
[2] 1994–95.

The Department of Finance and Personnel has three agencies, Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency, Valuation and Lands Agency, and Government Purchasing Agency. The chief executive in each of these agencies has written directly to my hon. Friend.

Letter from D. J. Court to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 16 July 1996:

You recently tabled a question asking the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the agencies for which his Department is responsible and the costs incurred by each for printing (a) all publications and (b) its annual report in the last year for which figures are available.

In answer to your question the Government Purchasing Agency has incurred £5,028 on the printing and publication of its Framework Document and Corporate and Business Plans. As the Agency was launched as a Next Steps Agency in April this year it has not yet produced an Annual Report.

Letter from D. J. Bell to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 16 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked that I write to you in my capacity as Commissioner and Chief Executive of the Valuation and Lands Agency to give the information requested in your Parliamentary Question of 11 July 1996.

This Agency has relatively few publications each year. However last year, the latest for which figures are available, the Corporate & Business Plan and the Annual Report were based on a single design format. I have apportioned this design cost between the two publications. The following is the specific information which you requested:

(a) all publications (excluding Annual Report)—£9,978.76

(b) Annual Report—£7,175.00

I trust this information is sufficient for your purposes, however if I can be of further assistance please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from Edgar F. Jardine to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 16 July 1996:

Sir John Wheeler has asked me to reply in my capacity as Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency to your Parliamentary Question on the printing costs incurred in the preparation of Agency publications.

The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency was established as an Agency within the Department of Finance and Personnel on 1 April 1996. The role of the Agency is to provide statistics and social research services to inform Government and the wider public, undertake the census of population in Northern Ireland and to administer the civil registration of births, deaths and marriages.

The cost of printing the Agency's Framework Document, Corporate and Business Plans and Charter Statement in 1995–96 was £7,760. The Agency will publish its first Annual Report after 31 March 1997.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to require the Department of Health and Social Services to supply social security information to (a) the Department of Education for Northern Ireland, (b) education and library boards and (c) private firms under the education voucher scheme; and what information will be supplied and for what purpose. [37793]

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the provisions in the proposal for a draft Education (No. 2) (Northern Ireland) Order 1996, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the (a) extra staffing and (b) full financial costs to (a) DENI and (b) education and library boards of his Department's education voucher scheme. [37794]

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Education proposes to make one permanent and four temporary additional appointments to the education and training inspectorate for the purpose of inspecting providers who wish to register under the scheme. No estimate has been made of the financial costs of the administration of the scheme to DENI or to education and library boards: it is expected that the scheme will be implemented through existing and projected administrative staff complements.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the administrative costs to the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment of his education voucher proposals. [37795]

Mr Ancram: It is estimated that costs of approximately £17,000 will be incurred by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment, NICCEA, in preparing and consulting on a pre-school curriculum for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the roles of the inspectorate and the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in respect of his Department's education voucher scheme. [37796]

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the proposals set out in paragraphs 4.3 to 4.6, and in paragraph 5.3 of the publication "Pre-School Education: The Voucher Scheme in Northern Ireland", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent private providers of nursery education under the voucher scheme will have to meet the (a) staffing and (b) health and safety requirements of the Department of Education or the Department of Health and Social Services. [37797]

Mr. Ancram: It is proposed that the staffing regimes of private providers of pre-school education under the voucher scheme will be subject to the requirements of the Department of Health and Social Services under the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. All providers of pre-school education will be subject to the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the (a) educational and (b) other differences between present courses of nursery education in Northern Ireland and those provided under the voucher scheme. [37798]

Mr. Ancram: No courses of nursery education have yet been provided under the voucher scheme. An assessment of any differences between current and future practice cannot be undertaken until after the completion, approval and implementation of the pre-school curriculum currently being prepared by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the cost differences per place between present nursery education and the proposed nursery voucher scheme. [37799]

Mr. Ancram: The average cost of a full-time nursery place in a nursery school based on education and library boards' planned expenditure for 1996–97 is £2,130. The value of a voucher under the pre-school voucher scheme will be set at £1,100 and is intended to cover the cost of five half-day sessions per week for three terms.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the education and training inspectorate will require the same standards from the providers of places for voucher holders as it does for present provision of nursery education. [37800]

Mr. Ancram: All providers who wish to register under the pre-school voucher scheme will be required to meet specified standards, some of which will be specific to particular types of provision. Private and voluntary sector providers will not therefore be expected in all respects to meet the standards required from nursery schools.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Earnings Disregard

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support are in receipt of part-time earnings at the level of the earnings disregard, where the disregard is (a) £5, (b) £10 and (c) £15. [36903]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Claimants/partners with part-time earnings

| | Number of cases with earnings |
|---|---|
| Part-time earnings of £5 per week | 5,000 |
| Part-time earnings of £10 per week[1] | nil |
| Part-time earnings of £15 per week | 3,000 |

Source:

Income support quarterly inquiry, August 1995.

Notes:

[1] There is no disregard at this level at the material date.

1. There are no cases on the August 1995 inquiry where both the claimant and partner have earnings of £5 each. Where a claimant and their partner are both working and have been in receipt of benefit for less than two years, they qualify for a £5 disregard on both sets of earnings.

2. The figures are rounded to the nearest thousand. Due to rounding, totals may not sum.

3. Part-time earnings includes cases with self-employed earnings, and may be the claimant's earnings, their partners, or both.

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of (a) adjudication officers and (b) clerical officers employed to work with the Benefits Agency medical service in each disability benefit centre. [36911]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the Benefits Agency medical services is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 18 July 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary questions asking if he will give the number of (a) Adjudication Officers and (b) clerical officers employed to work with the Benefits Agency Medical Service (BAMS) in each Disability Benefits Centre (DBC).

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because BAMS staff, both medical and clerical, work at Medical Services Centres (MSCs), most of which are located with DBCs. In the circumstances I have interpreted your question as asking for details of BAMS staff, rather than for staff at DBCs.

Adjudication Officers are not employed by BAMS, but by the Benefits Agency. Their relationship to BAMS is that of customers, for whom BAMS provides medical advice across a range of benefits.

Details of the number of BAMS staff in MSCs are in the enclosed table. I should explain that the Benefits Agency no longer employs clerical officers. The present equivalent is staff in Pay Band A4.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Staff in pay band A4 employed in medical services centres

Figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his estimates of the average difference between actual housing costs and the amount of eligible housing benefit as a result of the proposed Housing Benefit (General) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996. [35687]

Mr. Roger Evans: The proposed regulations would not have affected housing benefit eligibility as they were intended to import relevant case law into legislation. The representations that have been received indicate that significant amounts of housing benefit may be being paid in respect of personal services in supported accommodation. Sudden removal of this income would cause significant difficulties for vulnerable people in supported accommodation.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many students, for the academic years (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96, who did not attend their course for part or all of the academic year due to ill health were refused (i) income support and (ii) housing benefit during their period of absence, because they were treated as still attending a full-time course for the purposes of the Income Support (General) Regulations and the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations. [38570]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available.

Statistical Forms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the forms his Department issues annually to businesses to gather statistics, indicating the number of each distributed. [37807]

Mr. Burt: The Department carries out one annual statistical survey which involves business—the Contributions Agency's customer satisfaction survey. This year, some 6,500 customers will be interviewed, of whom is expected that approximately 60 per cent. will be self-employed or employers. From this year, this survey will no longer be carried out on an annual basis, but will instead take place every two years.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of his Department's agencies the cost of printing (a) all publications and (b) the annual report in the latest available year. [37806]

Mr. Burt: The information is as follows:

Cost of printing external publications by agency in 1995–96

| | Cost £ |
|---|---|
| Benefits Agency | 3,814,497 |
| Contributions Agency | 2,961,502 |
| Child Support Agency | 365,669 |
| Information Technology Services Agency | 11,933 |
| War Pensions Agency | 162,597 |
| Resettlement Agency | 8,835 |

Cost of printing 1995–96 annual report

| | Cost £ |
|---|---|
| Benefits Agency | 8,765 |
| Contributions Agency | 13,013 |
| Child Support Agency | '8,562 |
| Information Technology Services Agency | 7,950 |
| War Pensions Agency | '6,720 |
| Resettlement Agency | '7,718 |

' Estimated figures.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the suitability of the Mumbles weather station in assessing cold weather payments for pensioners; and on what proposals he has decided in respect of next winter's assessment. [38483]

Mr. Roger Evans: Representations have been received from two hon. Members, one borough council and one member of the public.

The review of last winter's scheme is under way and will be concluded shortly. Any proposals to change the existing weather stations or post code links will be laid before the House in the autumn.

Benefits Agency (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake an investigation into the manner in which the Benefits Agency has published a consultation document on its Welsh language policy, with particular reference to the accuracy of its description of current policy; and if he will arrange to meet the chairman of the Welsh Language Board to discuss this matter. [38564]

Mr. Roger Evans: I am satisfied that the procedure adopted by the Benefits Agency, BA, for publishing a consultation document on its proposed Welsh language policy was carried out in accordance with the guidance provided to the agency on 22 May 1996 by the Welsh Language Board.

The consultation document does not cover the BA's current voluntary Welsh language policy, which has been in operation since 1990, but states its intended policy under the requirements of the 1993 Welsh Language Act.

Since publishing the document on 14 June 1996, the BA has decided to withdraw all its freeline services from 15 July 1996. This decision has impacted on that part of the proposed scheme which refers to general benefit advice and information available from the Welsh language freeline service. The BA's policy statement that all customers who contact the agency by telephone may use the language of their choice—either English or Welsh—is unchanged, as are the arrangements for providing this service.

All other measures outlined in the consultation document accurately state the proposed Welsh language policy to be adopted by the BA.

I will be happy to meet chairman of the Welsh Language Board.

Widows (Child Benefit)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many widows with (a) one child and (b) two children are currently in receipt of child benefit. [38447]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

As at 30 September 1995, there were 27,880 widows receiving an increase of widowed mothers allowance for one child, and 16,160 widows receiving an increase of widowed mothers allowance for two children. To receive an increase of widowed mothers' allowance, the widow must be entitled to child benefit.

Of all widowed mothers allowance recipients, about 10,000 have a youngest child aged 16 or over.

Note:

Figures exclude the small number of widowed mothers who receive child benefit but do not qualify for widowed mothers allowance.

Departmental Efficiency

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further measures he is planning to improve the efficient running of his Department. [38987]

Mr. Lilley: In February, I launched the change programme to achieve a step change in the effectiveness of the Department of Social Security and all its agencies. It will involve streamlining benefit processes, introducing new information technology and greater involvement of the private sector.

I have today approved three initiatives involving greater collaboration with the private sector as the next stage of the Department's drive to review and improve the delivery of social security.

The first initiative will involve an invitation to the private sector to submit proposals for taking over the operation of the child benefit centre in Washington, Tyne and Wear. This will involve the administration of child benefit, one-parent benefit and guardian's allowance. The intention is that staff working in these areas will be taken on by the appointed contractor.

The second initiative will involve three private companies, or consortiums, appointed following open competition to work in conjunction with the Benefits Agency in running benefit delivery in three of its 13 areas—Yorkshire, west country and east London and Anglia area directorates—for 12 months. All three companies will assist the Benefits Agency with the development of new business processes and information technology. They will be invited during the 12 month period to submit proposals for any elements of the agency's business which could be run differently, including the possibility of further parts of the operation being run by the private sector.

The third initiative is to launch the procurement process for an information systems/information technology strategy to enable greater sharing of data between benefit systems, working closely with the private sector to provide the most up-to-date technologies, expertise and funding.

These initiatives are designed to improve the administration of the benefit system. They will not change any individual's benefit entitlement.

Income Support

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to review the income support direct payments scheme for fuel and water. [39007]

Mr. Lilley: I have asked my officials to consider with the regulators the fuel and water companies and with appropriate consumer bodies the scope for improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the direct payments scheme.

The scheme was introduced for fuel in 1976 and for water in 1991 as a last resort measure to help prevent disconnections. The number of direct payment deductions has steadily increased, from around 100,000 in the late 1970s to over half a million now, yet in recent years, although water prices have increased, fuel prices have fallen or remained stable. There have been significant improvements to the range and quality of payment schemes provided by all the utility companies and there has been a vast reduction in the number of disconnections. Technological advances, such as the benefit payment card due to be launched later this year, create new opportunities for providing alternative methods of payment for customers. I believe it is time to review the operation of the scheme to ensure that, in protecting the supply of fuel and water for people receiving income support, the right balance is struck between the companies' own payment and collection schemes, the responsibility of the individual, and the role of the state.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if she will list all the members, past and present, of the United Kingdom Sports Council together with the number of times they have attended meetings, including those who have not attended a meeting; [37087]

(2) how many times the United Kingdom Sports Council has met. [37086]

Mr. Sproat: The formal establishment of the UK Sports Council is subject to the granting of a royal charter. In the meantime, a UK sub-committee of the Sports Council has met formally nine times. Sir Ian MacLaurin, chairman, has attended all nine meetings, Mr. O. Wheatley, eight; Mr. C. Reedie, Mr. G. Simmers and Dr. S. Springman, seven; Sir Rodney Walker, six; Mr. D. Allen, five; and Mr. C. Lloyd, one. Mr. R. Andrew and Mr. G. Lineker have been unable to attend any of the meetings. Official of the Sports Council were present as necessary. An observer from the department of National Heritage and observers from the home country sports councils and the British Olympic Association have also attended.

World Heritage

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what financial contribution Her Majesty's Government have made to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation as a participant in its world heritage programme; what contributions will be made in the future; and if she will make a statement on the value for money to the UK of such contributions; [37970]

(2) if she will list all sites and monuments in the United Kingdom which have been preserved as part of the world heritage convention; [37969]

(3) what action Her Majesty's Government have taken to establish Greenwich as a world heritage site under the UNESCO convention concerning the protection of world cultural and national heritage; what advantages would attach to Greenwich of such recognition in terms of preservation and culture; and if she will make a statement. [37971]

Mr. Sproat: Last month, my right hon. Friend submitted a formal nomination to UNESCO to have maritime Greenwich inscribed in the list of world heritage sites. Inscription in the list is essentially honorific and no additional statutory controls follow. It does, however, highlight the outstanding international importance of a site as a material consideration to be taken into account by those deciding planning and listed building consent applications. A full statement of our policy for world heritage sites is set out in planning policy guidance note 15 "Planning and the Historic Environment" UNESCO's world heritage committee places great importance on the production of management plans for all inscribed sites, and the Government will shortly be consulting interested parties about the development of such a plan for Greenwich. The Government pay an annual subscription to UNESCO's world heritage fund; in 1996, this was £126,000. Our contribution helps UNESCO support endangered sites throughout the world. There are currently 16 sites for which the UK has responsibility.

Sport in Schools

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what priority she attaches to competitive sport in schools; and if she will make a statement. [38219]

Mr. Sproat: Competitive sport in schools is extremely important. It teaches valuable lessons which last for life. Last July, we published "Sport: Raising the Game" which aims to promote sport, especially competitive sport, in schools and beyond. The revised physical education curriculum, introduced last August, places greater emphasis on team games. From this summer, in all standard inspections, Office for Standards in Education inspectors will report on games, including competitive team games, which are offered as part of the physical education curriculum. The inspectors will also report on extra-curricular sporting activity.

Rugby Union

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals she has to call together representatives of the governing bodies of the four home nations rugby unions to discuss the threat to the future of the five nations championship; if she will list the five nations championship as listed events under the Broadcasting Acts; what representations she has received on the matter; and if she will make a statement. [37982]

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will take steps to resolve the dispute over the financial arrangements for the broadcasting of the five nations championship. [37917]

Mr. Sproat: The five nations championship is an historically important event in the sporting calendar, which is enjoyed by many. However, the sale of broadcasting rights is a matter for the relevant governing bodies to determine, and it is not appropriate for my Department to become involved in what is a private contractual matter. The question of listing the five nations championship cannot arise until the future of the tournament is clearer. I have received no recent representations on this matter.

Works of Art

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if, pursuant to her answer of 11 July, Official Report, columns 250–51, relating to export licences for works of art and museum objects temporarily withheld by her, she will provide equivalent information in respect of the final five cases listed as unresolved in her answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 512. [38196]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The information is as follows:

| Description of item | Valuation (£) | Outcome |
|---|---|---|
| A painting The Holy Family with the Infant Saint John, by Fra Bartolommeo (1472–1517) | 14,000,000 | Export licence granted |
| A painting Lord Willoughby de Broke and his family at breakfast, by Johan Zoffany, c. 1766 | 3,500,000 | Export licence granted |
| A lady's secretary by Thomas Chippendale (1718–1779) | 570,000 | Acquired by the National Trust |
| An archive of manuscripts relating to the editing of Principia Mathematica by Sir Isaac Newton, c. 1726 | 400,000 | Export licence granted |
| A collection of architectural drawings for Trentham Hall signed or annotated by Sir Charles Barry and others, 1834–1914 | 75,820 | Acquired by Stoke on Trent City museum |

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 11 July, Official Report, column 250, if the valuations of the works of art listed are equivalent to the figures which have to be offered by a United Kingdom museum or gallery in order to warrant a definitive withholding by her of an export licence, or whether the sums required may be varied; and if she will list the items where the figure may vary indicating the factors underlying the variation. [37805]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The valuations listed in the answer of 11 July are the fair market prices accepted by Ministers following recommendations made by the reviewing committee on the export of works of art. The principle behind each price is that the vendor should receive a compensating offer from a UK buyer which should not put him in a worse position than had he sold to a foreign buyer. Offers to purchase by a UK museum or gallery must accord with this principle. The listed valuations exclude any value added tax liability, and they may be varied by additional elements including the buyer's premium, the dealer's commission and reasonable conservation costs. They may also be varied by agreement between the parties. My Department is aware that there is a VAT liability to be added to the valuation of the "ideal" bust by Antonio Canova. A private treaty sale may also be negotiated between a vendor and a UK museum or gallery for a figure different from that listed. My Department is aware of negotiations for such a sale in the case of the Il Guercino painting "Erminia finding the wounded Tancred".

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many grant-maintained schools there are in each London borough. [37862]

Mrs. Gillan: The requested information is in the table:

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 15 July, Official Report, columns 397-99, from which funds allocated by his Department local education authorities award discretionary educational maintenance allowances; on what occasions such allowances have been independently assessed in respect of value for money over the last five years; what conclusions were drawn; and if he will make a statement. [38444]

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities pay discretionary educational maintenance allowance from the general funds available to them, including revenue support grant. The Department does not make any specific payments in support of such allowances, although we take account of them in education standard spending assessments.

I am not aware of any assessment in the last five years of the value for money of educational maintenance allowances.

Teacher Training

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the (a) actual number and (b) percentage of unfilled places on initial teacher training courses for each year since 1987–88, including 1996–97 (i) in total and (ii) for (1) maths, (2) english, (3) science, (4) geography, (5) religious education and (6) modern foreign languages. [37865]

Mr. Robin Squire: The number and percentage of unfilled places on initial teacher training courses for the academic years 1988–89 to 1995–96 are given in the table. Data for 1996–97 are not yet available.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how much was spent on administration, separately identifying staff costs in cash and real terms (a) by the Teacher Training Agency in the current year and (b) by the Higher Education Funding Council for England in discharging its teacher training functions in the final year before the transfer of those responsibilities to the Teacher Training Agency; [38334]

(2) how many (a) full-time equivalent staff have been employed by the Teacher Training Agency in the current year and (b) full-time equivalent staff were employed by the Higher Education Funding Council for England involved in discharging its teacher training functions in the final year before the transfer of those responsibilities to the Teacher Training Agency. [38336]

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1995–96, the latest year for which accounts are available, the Teacher Training Agency, TTA, spent £2.414 million on administration costs, of which £1.303 million was spent on staff costs. The average number of full-time equivalent—FTE—staff employed by the agency in 1995–96 was 42.

The academic year 1993–94 was the last complete year in which the HEFCE had responsibility for the administration of teacher training allocations and quality assessment. The HEFCE estimates its administration costs for the allocation intake targets and funding in respect of teacher training were some £80,000, of which £66,000 relates to staff costs. The FTE of staff involved in work on teacher training in 1993–94 was 2.5.

In addition to developing the functions transferred from the HEFCE, the TTA has taken on tasks which were previously the responsibility of the teaching as a career unit, the Council for the accreditation of Teacher Education and the then Department for Education, as well as a number of new functions under the Education Act 1994.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the efficiency of the Teacher Training Agency in discharging its duties under the Education Act 1994. [38333]

Mr. Squire: The Teacher Training Agency's objectives and targets are published annually in its corporate plan and progress on them is recorded in its annual report. The Department will carry out a financial management survey during the current financial year, in accordance with Cabinet Office guidelines, to consider the agency's system of financial management and control. This will include an examination of performance measures, targets and other indicators of efficiency in accordance with standard practice. The results will be published.

Higher Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the working groups established by the national committee of inquiry into higher education chaired by Sir Ron Dearing, and the members and chairmen of each group. [38335]

Mr. Forth: The national committee of inquiry into higher education expects to announce details of the working groups and their membership at the end of July. I shall place a copy of that announcement in the Library.

Teachers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was (a) the target and (b) the actual intake for teachers in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools, broken down into subjects, in each year from 1990–91, with such figures as are available for 1996–97. [37782]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The number of teachers who entered teaching in mainstream nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales for the first time each year from 1990–91 to 1993–94 are given in the table. The Secretary of State does not set targets for entrants into teaching.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students, in the academic years (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96 under provisions of the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulation 26 (3) (a), (i) had their student grant withdrawn, (ii) had their grant reduced and (iii) had their grant continued at the rate awarded, because they were unable to attend their course due to illness. [38569]

Mr. Forth: The information required is not collected centrally. The administration of mandatory awards is a matter for local education authorities, who make decisions on individual cases according to the relevant regulations.

Schools Renewal Challenge Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to take a decision on the submission from Bradford local education authority to the schools renewal challenge fund; and if she will make a statement. [38094]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 18 July 1996]: I expect to announce decisions on all the 400 bids which were submitted to the schools renewal challenge fund very soon.

HEALTH

HIV

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the infectivity of HIV. [37190]

Mr. Horam: Most Government-funded HIV research is commissioned by the Medical Research Council. The Department has not commissioned any recent research into HIV infectivity as the main transmission routes for HIV are well established. HIV is transmitted by unprotected intercourse, through infected blood—which in the United Kingdom is usually a result of injecting drug use—and from an infected mother to her child.

Mental Health

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that effective controls are in place to protect mental health patients from injury or death while undergoing (a) electroconvulsive therapy and (b) powerful drug therapy; and if he will make a statement. [37180]

Mr. Bowis: Guidelines have been issued by the Royal College of Psychiatrists in the second report of the special committee on electro-convulsive therapy and in the consensus statement on the use of high dose antipsychotic medication. Copies are available in the Library.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) of 2 July, Official Report, column 371, if he will list (a) the names, qualifications and affiliations of the members of the advisory panel for the interim report on residential provision for people with learning disabilities, (b) the criteria used to choose the advisory panel (c) the number of times the advisory panel met; and what assessment he has made of the degree of unanimity in agreeing the report. [37433]

Mr. Bowis: The members of the advisory panel were:

Professor David Felce PhD. Professor of Research in Learning Disabilities, University of Cardiff;

Dr. Margaret Flynn BA Hons. Psychology, PhD, Assistant Director, National Development Team, Prince of Wales Fellow Royal College of General Practitioners;

Professor Sheila Hollins MB BS FRC Psych, Head of Department of Psychiatry of Disability, St. George's Medical School; Chair of the Learning Disability Executive of the Royal College of Psychiatry;

Professor Martin Knapp BA, MSc, PhD, Professorial Fellow and Director of the Personal Social Services Research Unit, London School of Economics and Political Science; Professor of Health Econometrics and Director of the Centre for Economics of Mental Health, Institute of Psychiatry;

Professor Jim Mansell MSc.(Econ) AFBPsP CPsychol, Director of the Tizard Centre, Professor of the Applied Psychology of Learning Disability, University of Kent at Canterbury;

Professor Norma Raynes, BA MSc PhD, Professor of Social Care in the School of Human and Health Sciences, University of Huddersfield;

Professor David Sines PhD, BSc (Hons), RMN, RNMH, FRCN, Department of Nursing and Health Visiting, University of Ulster; Chair of Learning Disabilities Coalition; and

Dr. Lorna Wing MB BS FRC Psych, Psychiatric Consultant to the National Autistic Society.

Members of the panel were selected on the basis of their academic standing and expertise in learning disability. They were asked to help ensure that the literature review took account of all research studies on the topic published since 1980. The advisory panel was not asked to meet formally, nor was it essential for members to reach unanimity on all aspects of the research findings. The researchers were able to look to the panel for professional and academic input into the wide range of issues covered. This has been an important strength of the research.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) of 2 July, Official Report, column 371, if he will set out the terms of reference for the report on residential provision for people with learning disabilities; and what was the cost of the report. [37428]

Mr. Bowis: The first phase of the evaluation of the costs and outcomes of various types of residential provision for people with learning disabilities was in two parts. First, a review of literature on residential provision for people with learning disabilities. The terms of reference were:

"to assess the state of knowledge about effectiveness and cost-effectiveness of different forms of residential accommodation for people with learning disabilities."

Secondly, an analysis of available information on the costs of village communities. The terms of reference were:

"to analyse and compare any information which is readily available on the financial costs of village communities and other forms of residential provision for people with learning disabilities".

Phase one of the evaluation cost £26,471.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the relationship between the NHS executive and community health councils; and if he will make a statement. [37843]

Mr. Malone: The position is set out in guidance issued by the Department last year as EL(95)142, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Health Advice Telephone Lines

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what health advice services are offered by the NHS over the telephone; and what best practice the Department recommends on the use of health telephone lines to reduce pressure on general practitioners. [38016]

Mr. Horam: Health authorities have a responsibility to ensure that a freephone health information service is available to their local population. The service must be provided in line with health service guidance HSG(5)44, copies of which are available in the Library. Additionally, the Health Education Authority sometimes provides for helplines on health promotion issues in its campaigns.

Hospital Readmissions

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 585, by what date the NHS executive has asked for returns about patients between 16 and 64 years (a) discharged within the previous 90 days and (b) re-admitted to hospital within 90 days of discharge to be provided; and when the information will be published. [38435]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 18 July, Official Report, column 650.

Research Establishments

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made with prior options reviews of public sector research establishments which his Department sponsors. [38988]

Mr. Horam: As indicated by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in his announcement of the timetable for prior options reviews on 26 January 1996, Official Report, columns 421–23, the outcome of the reviews of the National Radiological Protection Board, National Biological Standards Board, and the Public Health Laboratory Service are due to be reported to Ministers by December 1996.

Work is drawing to a close on the first of these reviews relating to the National Radiological Protection Board. Reviews of the National Biological Standards Board, and the Public Health Laboratory Service have recently commenced, and will be formally announced in the August edition of "Government Opportunities". Views are being invited from any interested parties, with a direct approach being made to key organisations and individuals.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the annual report of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority to be published. [39051]

Mr. Horam: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority will be publishing its fifth annual report on Monday 22 July. Copies of the report will be available in the Library on that day.

Operations (Waiting Times)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hip replacements, (b) hysterectomies, (c) cataract extractions, (d) tonsillectomies, (e) kidney transplants and (f) hernia operations were carried out by the NHS in England and Wales in each of the last three years; and what was the average waiting time for each operation in each year. [37496]

Mr. Horam: Figures for kidney transplants are set out in the table:

| Year | Number of kidney transplants performed in England |
|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 1,445 |
| 1993–94 | 1,401 |
| 1994–95 | 1,461 |

Source:

The United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority.

Waiting times for kidney transplants depend on the availability of suitably matched kidneys and information on average waiting times is not comparable with other waiting times available.

Questions relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average cost to the NHS of (a) a hip replacement, (b) a hysterectomy, (c) a cataract extraction, (d) a tonsillectomy, (e) a kidney transplant and (f) a hernia operation. [37499]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Mr Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received open-heart surgery within (a) one month, (b) three months, (c) six months, (d) nine months, (e) 12 months (f) 15 months and (g) 18 months in the most recent year for which figures are available. [38042]

Mr. Horam: Information on times waited for various cardiac procedures is given in "Hospital Episode Statistics, Volume 2". The latest year for which information has so far been published is 1993–94. Copies are available in the Library.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by charging procedure the costs for personal social services that were recouped through charging in the last year; and what proportion of personal DSS expenditure this entailed. [37996]

Mr. Bowis: In 1993–94, the latest year for which information has been published, approximately 10 per cent. of gross current expenditure by local authorities on personal social services was recouped through fees and charges, including charges to clients. Data on amounts raised for each charging procedure are not held centrally.

Statistical Forms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the forms his Department issues annually to businesses to gather statistics, indicating the number of each distributed. [37813]

Mr. Horam: The information requested in respect of forms for which the primary purpose is statistical is given in the table. This does not include administrative forms that can be used in preparation of statistics.

Annual statistical surveys of businesses carried out in 1995 by Department of Health

| Survey | Business type | Number of forms issued |
|---|---|---|
| Dentists' status—non associates | Dentists | 1,500 |
| Dentists' status—associates | Dentists | 10,500 |
| Discount inquiry | Pharmacies | 325 |
| Container cost inquiry | Pharmacies | 300 |
| Study of GP accounts | GPs/accountants | 700/100 |
| Sight tests volumes and manpower | Optometrists and ophthalmic medical practitioners | 1,400 |

South Manchester University Hospitals

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will urgently reconsider the question of access for the South Manchester community health council to the findings of the inquiry report of an investigation into the recent financial difficulties at South Manchester University Hospitals NHS trust; and if he will make a statement; [37879]

(2) what representations he has had from the South Manchester community health council in relation to obtaining the findings of the inquiry report of an investigation into the recent financial difficulties at South Manchester University Hospitals NHS trust; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement; [37878]

(3) what fees have been and are being paid by South Manchester University Hospitals NHS trust to the Audit Commission; what role the Commission played in finding the financial accounting error that led to the trust's recent financial difficulties; what role was played by the trust's own audit; and if he will make a statement. [37881]

Mr. Horam: I responded on 9 July to a letter from the community health council, stating that the question of access is a matter for the trust itself to decide, taking legal advice into account. The Audit Commission played no part in discovering the recent financial error.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are currently waiting for open-heart surgery in each health region. [38041]

Mr. Horam: Waiting list information is collected on the basis of clinical specialities and not individual procedure level.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have received backdated pay awards following successful appeals against regrading decisions (a) eight, (b) seven, (c) six, (d) five, (e) four, (f) three and (g) two years late. [38459]

Mr. Malone: Almost all the 100,000 appeals against clinical regrading lodged in 1988 have now been resolved. Information held centrally does not record the time at which payments were made.

Ethnic Minority Staff

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of NHS trusts and health authorities have included in their business plan a local objective to increase the proportion of ethnic minority staff in areas and grades where they are under-represented within a specified time scale; [37095]

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress made towards the eight goals set out in the NHS executive publication, "Ethnic Minority Staff in the NHS: a Programme of Action"; [37040]

(3) what guidelines for training for NHS employees he has issued relating to particular needs of members of ethnic minorities. [37028]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 12 July 1996]: It is for trusts and health authorities to implement the goals of "Ethnic Minority Staff in the NHS: a Programme of Action" locally, in accordance with advice issued by the national health service executive and as set out in the priorities and planning guidance, copies of which are available in the Library.

Racial Harassment

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys he has conducted into the extent of racial harassment in NHS workplaces. [37139]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 12 July 1996]: The Department of Health commissioned the Policy Studies Institute report "Nursing in a multi-ethnic NHS", which was published in autumn 1995. Copies are available in the Library.

Extra-contractual Referral Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what revisions he proposed to the extra-contractual referral scheme; if he has issued a consultation paper to trusts and health authorities; and when he proposes to make a formal announcement. [37609]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 16 July 1996]: The efficiency scrutiny into the burdens of paperwork in national health service trusts and health authorities consulted trusts, health authorities and general practitioners on ways in which the extra-contractual referral system could be streamlined.

We have consulted and will continue to consult, health authorities, trusts and other interested parties as detailed proposals for implementing the recommendations are developed.

Health Authority Expenditure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average expenditure per head for each health authority, and the average for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, in the current financial year. [37515]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 15 July 1996]: The average per capita expenditure figures for the current financial year will not be available until all health authorities have completed their annual accounts after the end of the financial year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Economic Development (North-East)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much (a) his Department and (b) the European Community provided to (i) south Tyneside borough council, (ii) North Tyneside borough council, (iii) Gateshead borough council and (iv) Newcastle upon Tyne City council in terms of funding for economic development in each of the last three years. [37740]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 17 July 1996]: The figures are as follows:

(a) Nil;

| | Financial year | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | 1993–94 £ | 1994–95 £ | 1995–96 £ |
| (i) South Tyneside borough council | 2,549,274 | 1,533,604 | 224,890 |
| (ii) North Tyneside borough council | 2,039,790 | 2,394,670 | 1,542,919 |
| (iii) Gateshead borough council | 2,054,573 | 1,947,557 | 448,802 |
| (iv) Newcastle-upon-Tyne city council | 4,313,249 | 3,115,628 | 1,091,056 |

My Department is not the primary source of funding for local authorities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment makes provision for the local authorities in his estimates.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of his Department's supervisory bodies have responsibility for (a) Jersey and (b) other Channel Islands. [37830]

Mr. Oppenheim: The recognised supervisory bodies for auditors and the recognised professional bodies for insolvency practitioners have no responsibility under UK law for Jersey and the other Channel Islands. However, the bodies are responsible to the Secretary of State for supervising the audit and insolvency work of their members in matters relating to the Companies Act and the Insolvency Act 1986 respectively, regardless of the location of those members.

South-West Industrial Development Board

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 458–59, if Mr. A was a member of his Department's south-west regional office at the time of (i) the regional selective assistance grant to company L for the second project and (ii) the grants to company N since 1991; if Mr. A was a director of these companies at the time of the offers of financial assistance; and if Mr. A subsequently became a director of these companies. [35265]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: Mr. A's period as a member of the south-west industrial development board spans the dates of the grants mentioned. Mr. A was a director of company L when the application for assistance for the company's second project was considered and therefore saw no departmental papers relating to the application and absented himself from the relevant discussion by the industrial development board. Mr. A has also been a director of company N since 1987, but none of the grants to that company—because they were not regional selective assistance—were considered by the industrial development board.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those employees and external advisers that took part in the assessment of the regional selective assistance grant offered to Porthcurno Management Company Ltd. in December 1993; how many of these subsequently acted as directors of this company; and on what date they became directors. [35221]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 1 July 1996]: Departmental officials principally involved in the assessment were John Bowder, Mike Twomey and Nalem Iqbal all of the south-west office; Margaret Nimmo, economics and statistics division, and Iain Osborne, industrial competitiveness division. As I explained in my answer of 29 April, Official Report, columns 363–64, Kenneth Holmes, an external accountancy adviser, was also involved in the assessment.

The case was also considered by the south-west industrial development board.

Of the individuals named, one—Mr. Holmes—subsequently became a director of the company on 22 February 1994.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates his Department's south-west industrial development board has met since 1990. [37641]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 17 July 1996]: The south-west industrial development board has met on the following dates:

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 461–64, what potential conflict of interest obliged Messrs Jordan and Harris to absent themselves from the meeting of his Department's south-west industrial development board discussing the application of Magrathea (Pendennis) Ltd. for financial assistance. [37648]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 17 July 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 463.

Insolvency Practitioners

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints against insolvency practitioners were received by his Department and the regulatory bodies sponsored by his Department since 1990 if he will indicated the outcome of each complaint. [37338]

Mr. Oppenheim: Detailed information about the number of complaints to my Department and the recognised professional bodies about insolvency practitioners is not available prior to 1992. Since that date, the figures are as follows:

| Year | Complaints |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 391 |
| 1993 | 532 |
| 1994 | 587 |
| 1995 | 567 |

Information about the outcome of each complaint is not available. However, in the period from 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1995, 21 insolvency practitioners had their authorisations revoked or their application for renewal of their authorisation refused. The recognised professional bodies also took appropriate regulatory action in other cases, but the majority of complaints, after investigation, revealed no evidence of misconduct.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for (a) 1975, (b) 1979 and (c) 1995 in terms of current and constant values United Kingdom imports and exports of footwear with (i) leather soles and (ii) uppers of leather or composition leather. [38174]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of the change in the real value of sterling since the second half of 1973 on the reduction in output and employment in the footwear industry. [38173]

Mr. Oppenheim: To isolate the effects of currency movements from other influences on the output and employment of individual industries would be a major research task, which the Department has not undertaken.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value in constant prices of United Kingdom imports and exports of footwear in 1975, 1979 and 1995. [38172]

Mr. Oppenheim: Information in constant prices is not available. Current price figures for United Kingdom imports and exports of footwear are published by HM Customs and Excise in "overseas trade statistics of the United Kingdom" which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the effect on the level of (a) imports and (b) exports of footwear of the change in real value of the pound since the second quarter of 1993. [38175]

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on the levels of United Kingdom trade in footwear, and the real effective exchange rate since the second quarter of 1993 are given in the table. To isolate the effect of exchange rate movements from other major influences on UK trade would be a major research tasks, which the Department has not undertaken.

Financial Services Practitioners

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when members of his Department last met representatives of (a) Price Waterhouse, (b) Ernst and Young, (c) Bank of Credit and Commerce International depositors and (d) Maxwell pensioners to discuss auditor liability. [37826]

Mr. Oppenheim: Members of my Department have had no such meetings. Investigations of the auditors' role in the BCCI and Maxwell cases are in the hands of the joint disciplinary scheme, and my Department is kept informed of progress regularly.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many practitioners are regulated by each of the bodies acting as regulators under the Insolvency Act 1986; and what plans he has to merge them. [37827]

Mr. Oppenheim: The number of practitioners authorised by each of the recognised professional bodies as at 31 December 1995 was as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Chartered Association of Certified Accountants | 112 |
| Insolvency Practitioners Association | 283 |
| Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales | 914 |
| Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland | 78 |
| Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland | 185 |
| Law Society | 195 |
| The Law Society of Scotland | 27 |

In addition, the Secretary of State also authorises 145 practitioners.

There are no plans to merge the regulatory responsibilities of the bodies in relation to insolvency practitioners.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on limitation of liability for partners in audit firms; what further limitation he proposes in respect of (a) those firms and (b) other businesses; and what safeguards will be put in place to protect consumers. [37831]

Mr. Oppenheim: My Department has recently carried out a consultation into the law of joint and several liability as it affects providers of professional services, including auditors. The 134 responses to the consultation represent a wide range of views and are currently being analysed. Any proposals arising from the consultation will of course take into account the balance of interests between all concerned, including the preparers and users of accounts as well as the auditors.

Directors' Remuneration

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals to allow employees to vote on the size of director remuneration. [37225]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government do not intend to require companies to allow employees to vote on directors' remuneration arrangements.

Output Increases

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the average annual increase since 1972 in output per head in (a) manufacturing and (b) non-manufacturing in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) Germany. [37486]

Mr. Oppenheim: For the UK, the average annual increase since 1972 in output per person employed is 1.8 per cent. for manufacturing industries and 3.2 per cent. for the whole economy. Comparable information for Germany is not available.

Auditing Requirements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the average annual cost to British businesses as a percentage of turnover, of the annual auditing requirements. [37381]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have made no such estimate. To extract this information from the audited accounts of even a statistical sample of companies could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Export Guarantees Advisory Council

Mr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Export Guarantees Advisory Council (a) publishes its advice to Government and (b) publishes an annual report; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [37903]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 July 1996]: The Export Guarantees Advisory Council is a purely advisory body appointed under the terms of the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991. Its function is to advise the Secretary of State, at his request, in respect of any matter relating to the exercise of his functions under the Act. Its members receive no remuneration.

The answers to both the specific questions are no.

Agency Printing Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each of his Department's agencies the cost of printing (a) all publications and (b) the annual report in the latest available year. [37811]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am asking the chief executive of each DTI agency to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 19 July 1996:

The President of the Board of trade has asked me to reply to your request for details of my Agency's cost for printing (a) all publications and (b) the Annual Report in the last available year.

(a) The cost of printing all publications in the financial year 1995–96 was £402,959.26

(b) The cost of printing the Agency's Annual Report for 1994/95 was £9,218 (in addition the Agency produced a Business Review for 1994/95, the cost of which was £10,735).

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 19 July 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to rely on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about the cost of printing (a) all publications and (b) the annual report in the latest available year.

In 1995/96 this Agency's costs of printing were:

(a) Publications £2,420.00

(b) Annual Report (1994/95) £5,426.00

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr Anthony Steen, dated 19 July 1996:

I am responding in relation to the Patent Office to your Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade about the cost of printing of publications and annual reports. The information requested is set out in the following table:

| 1995–96 | £ thousands |
|---|---|
| Publications for sale and office use such as the official journals, reports on patent cases, and specifications | 435 |
| Free literature distributed by our marketing and information service | 211 |
| Annual report and accounts | 16 |

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 19 July 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about the cost to The Insolvency Service of printing its publications, including its Annual Report, in the latest available year.

During the 1995–96 financial year The Insolvency Service spent £9,897 on the printing of its Annual Report and £19,325 on the printing of its other publications.

Letter from John S. Holden to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 19 July 1996:

You recently asked the President of the Board of Trade for information about printing costs. I am replying in respect of Companies House.

The figures for the financial year 1995/96 are as follows:

Overall printing cost for publications: £257,000

Cost of printing 1994/95 annual report and accounts: £14,300

I should explain that the annual report figure is included in the overall print figure. It may also help if I explain that over three-quarters of the remaining printing cost are accounted for by notes for guidance that Companies House issues free of charge to help people understand their obligations under the Companies Act, and various aspects of our procedure.

DEFENCE

1238 Anti-tank System

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement regarding the contract for the 1238 anti-tank system. [38454]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I expect an announcement to be made shortly.

Burundi

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military equipment Her Majesty's Government have sold to the Government of Burundi in the last 12 months. [38246]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Disposal Sales Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Keith Ellender to Mr. Gerry Sutcliffe, dated 19 July 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about sales of military equipment to the Government of Burundi. This matter falls to me as Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency.

There have been no sales of military equipment by my Agency to the Government of Burundi in the last 12 months.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the total number of (a) members of the public, (b) civilian employees of his Department, (c) defence contractors and (d) service dependants who at present come into contact each week with the Ministry of Defence police based at (i) Chilwell and (ii) Chetwynd. [38340]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief constable and chief executive of the Ministry of Defence Police. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. V. Comben to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 19 July 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Ministry of Defence Police at Chilwell/Chetwynd Barracks, as it falls into the area of responsibility of the Chief Constable and, in his absence on duty, I am responding on his behalf.

The MOD establishment at Chilwell was renamed Chetwynd Barracks on 10 June 1995. Currently some 300 civilians are employed by the Ministry at the site and there are about 550 Service dependants in the Quarters there. At weekends there are approximately 300 Regular and Territorial Army soldiers additionally accommodated at the Barracks. Visitors to the site vary in number and include members of the public, MOD employees from other sites and contractors, who are estimated to total around 150 each week. The Ministry of Defence Police could come into contact with all of these people as the officers go about their various duties. Records are not kept of every contact between MDP and other individuals.

Greenham Common (Accident)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the study conducted in 1987 by W. N. Saxby at the safety division of the atomic weapons research establishment at Aldermaston, into the accident that took place at Greenham common on 28 February 1958. [38238]

Mr. Soames: There is no record of any study of this kind on Greenham common by a Mr. Saxby in 1987. Copies of a 1986 report concerning Greenham common have recently been placed in the Library of the House.

Brunei

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are presently serving in Brunei; and what is the estimated annual cost of this deployment. [38239]

Mr. Soames: There are currently 1,005 British military personnel serving in Brunei. The cost to the British Government is currently some £4 million per year to cover the British jungle training team there. All other costs are met by the Brunei Government.

Military Provost Guard Service

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the legal powers and jurisdiction of the Military Provost guard service over (a) members of the public, (b) civilian employees of his Department, (c) defence contractors and (d) service dependants. [38339]

Mr. Soames: In the absence of special legislation or other emergency powers, members of the Military Provost guard service, like all service personnel in Great Britain, have the same general powers as a private citizen when dealing with crime or when helping the civil police. They may also have powers in respect of any person committing an offence under Military Lands Act 1892 byelaws if so authorised by those byelaws.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds Chilwell station was selected as a site for the pilot study into the Military Provost guard service. [38341]

Mr. Soames: The sites chosen for the Military Provost guard service pilot scheme were selected as representative of the different types of Army establishments at which it is proposed to replace Ministry of Defence police employed only on guarding duties with Military Provost guard service personnel.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the Military Provost guard service to function outside the perimeter fence of an MOD establishment in (a) an unarmed capacity and (b) an armed capacity. [38337]

Mr. Soames: Military Provost guard service personnel, like other service personnel, would undertake general security patrols off-base as required by the unit's commanding officer. There is close co-operation with the local police over security arrangements for protecting Defence property and personnel. Armed patrolling by service personnel off-base takes place only if specifically authorised by the local chief constable.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have taken place between his Department and the chief constable of the Nottinghamshire constabulary regarding (a) the replacement of Ministry of Defence police stationed at Chilwell with the Ministry Provost guard service and (b) the planned role and tasking of the Military Provost guard service, (i) within and (ii) outside the perimeter fence of Chilwell station and Chetwynd barracks. [38338]

Mr. Soames: None so far. There will, however, be full discussions with the Nottinghamshire constabulary about security and policing arrangements to protect Defence personnel and property in the Chilwell area.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the advantages of piloting the Military Provost guard service scheme at locations where the level of security is not so great as to require constabulary powers. [38342]

Mr. Soames: The pilot scheme sites have been chosen to reflect the different types of Army establishments at which the Military Provost guard service could be deployed. There would be no advantage in confining the pilot scheme to locations at which there is no requirement for constabulary powers. At those sites where a civil police presence is required, it will continue to be provided by the Ministry of Defence or the local police.

1236 Stand-off Missile

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement regarding the contract for the 1236 conventionally armed stand-off missile. [38455]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I expect an announcement to be made shortly.

Landing Platform Dock Replacements

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement of the order for the landing platform dock replacements for HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid. [38452]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 18 July our decision to place a contract with GEC-Marine to build two replacement landing platform docks.

Maritime Patrol Aircraft

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement for the contract for the replacement maritime patrol aircraft. [38456]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I expect an announcement to be made shortly.

AWE Aldermaston (Accident)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the causes and consequences of the plutonium contamination accident at atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston at the beginning of July. [38450]

Mr. Soames: During a routine analysis procedure on 4 July, a member of staff at AWE Aldermaston inhaled a microscopic quantity of radioactive material. The amount was a fraction of the safe limit. The relevant area of the site was closed immediately and the Health and Safety Executive, informed. There was at no time any danger to other employees or the public. The incident is the subject of an AWE investigation in which staff representatives and the HSE are involved. The latter has indicated that it is satisfied with the actions taken to date.

Eurofighter

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the number of Eurofighter aeroplanes to be ordered by his Department. [38453]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to table 9 of the 1996 "Statement on the Defence Estimates", Cm 3223, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 281

SESSION 1995–96

8th July—19th July 1996

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
